TH E R E is something in the Nature of Controversial Writing so Corruptive of Morality, so apt to destroy some of the Noblest Graces of a Christian Life, that I look upon the Case to be much the same in That, as it is in Other Wars, and that nothing less than an absolute Necessity ought to engage a Good Man in Either. What Temptations it ministers to Pride and Passion; to Malice and Uncharitableness; to Falseness and Insincerity; and what Occasions it too often affords to Those who do not come with a large Portion of Calmness and Integrity to the Management of it, for the most indecent Miscarriages, in Some, or All of these Particulars, I shall not need to say: I would to God our Own Times had not given us too many Instances of it; to the Scandal of our Religion, as well as to the just Censure of Those who have allow'd themselves such Liberties as nothing can Excuse; and 'tis to be hoped, when they shall seriously reflect upon what they have done, They will be Themselves the most forward of any to Condemn.

But of all the kinds of Controversies, as there are usually none more unreasonable, so neither are there any which a Man would less desire to be engaged in, than those which arise among such as are Members of the same Church, as well as of the same Civil Society; and have thereby the strictest Obligations lying upon them to Love and Unity with One Another. In such Disputes as these, every good Man would desire the Office of a Peace-maker, rather than of a Litigant: And account it a greater Honour, as well as Happiness, upon any Reasonable Terms, to put an End to a Debate, than to obtain a Victory, which, whatever other Circumstances it might have to recommend it, would still want This, (without which all the rest would be of little Value) that the Breach continues; the Brother is not gain'd; and so Religion suffers, tho' the Particular Matter in Dispute should be never so clearly or solidly proved and determined.

What Melancholy Thoughts these Reflections have sometimes occasioned to my self, in the Prosecution of the following Work; what Restraints they have kept me under, those who are truly Charitable and Unprejudiced, and who alone are proper Judges in such a Case, will easily apprehend; and I hope the following Treatise its self will shew. Often have I been tempted with St. Clement to cry out, Ἐὰν δὲ ἡμῶς εἰσὶν, καὶ ἑτεροὶ, καὶ χρίσματα, ἐκχωρῶ ἅπασιν: If the Contention be upon my Account; If by throwing me into the Sea, the Storms which have been so unhappily raised among us may be appeased, let me be given up; (a) μόνον τὸ ποίμνιον τῷ κυρίῳ εἰρηνεύειω, μετὰ τῶν καθεσταμένων (a) Clem.

ders who are set over it. And now that I am come to the End of my Laborious Undertaking, and do flatter my self that I have produced some Things upon this Occasion, which were not so well known, at least not sufficiently attended to before; yet ten thousand times rather would I not only suppress, but destroy All that I have done, than send it abroad into the World, could I but thereby procure the Peace of the Church, tho' with some Prejudice to the Truth, and with much more Detriment to my own Private Interest or Reputation. But as this is a Happiness not to be expected; so neither without an apparent Injury to the Cause which I have undertaken, as well as to my own Innocence in the Defence of it, can I any longer forbear the Publication of what I have again written for the Support of Both. Hitherto the necessary Enquiries which were to be made, the Extent of my Subject, and the Importunity of my other Affairs, (which I could neither without giving up a great part of my Time to them discharge, nor yet with a good Conscience neglect) have kept me from appearing in my own just Vindication. And this Advantage I may hope to have gotten by it, that many may perhaps be disposed more impartially to read and consider what is presented to them now, than they would have been, had it come much sooner into their Hands. But to delay it any longer, would be to seem to desert a Good Cause; at least to put off the Defence of it so long, as to prompt some to believe it could not be maintain'd; and even the most favourable to think, that either it should have been sooner asserted, or not have been at all revived.

To prevent any such Surmises on the one hand, such Complaints on the other, I now freely publish what I have farther to offer, with relation to the present Controversie: And may God so give his Blessing to it, as he knows me to have proceeded not only with a strict Integrity, but with all due Regard to the Honour and Interest of the Church of England; and particularly of our Bishops and Clergy in it: Whose Rights, Powers, and Privileges, as I am sure no one can have a more zealous Concern for than my self; so I am verily perswaded (and I think I am not deceived) I have here done more to assert and secure them, than Dr. A. after all his loud Pretences, has endeavoured; or, without forsaking the Principles which he has laid down, I dare boldly say, will ever be Able to Do.

When the Letter to a Convocation-Man, the Piece which began this unhappy Controversie, first came Abroad, the Notions of it appear'd to me so very singular, so different from what I had been accustomed to, that I could not but think it a pardonable Curiosity to enquire into the Truth and Reasonableness of Them. What I thus began for my own private Satisfaction, I was soon determined to pursue by some, whom my own Inclinations disposed, as well as my Duty obliged me, to Obey. The Subject was not only Difficult, but New: My Time was very short; my Business sufficient for my whole Strength; and in the midst of my Work, a severe Distemper fell upon me, and for several Days took me off intirely from all the Thoughts of it. Under these Disadvantages I publish'd my first Book in Answer to that Letter: A Treatise, of which, if I may be permitted to speak my own Thoughts, the worst that can justly be said, is this; That its Principles were generally true, and agreeable to the constant Sense and Doctrine of the Church of England, tho' its Matter was but Common, and its Historical Facts not always Exact. And yet, as to the last of these, the Mistakes were neither very many, nor very great; and in the most of them I was misled by some of our Best Historians; Whose Guidance I supposed I might securely have follow'd, and from whose Authority I hoped I should if not always have reported things aright, yet always have found a sufficient Apology for my involuntary Errors.

To this Book, begun and finished in about Three Months time, after Three Years Labour and Examination, an Answer came out under the specious Title of The Rights, Powers, and Privileges of an English Convocation Stated and Vindicated, &c. The Distance of Time; the Bulk of the Book its self; and the Number of its Quotations; the familiar References which it every where made to our Manuscript Records, as well as to our Printed Historians; raised in me, at the first View, a more than ordinary Expectation from it: And prompted me to conclude, that in it I should certainly meet with somewhat to instruct, as well as much to correct me; and have my own Wish thus far accomplish'd, as to see this Subject fully Exhausted by Another hand, which I had freely acknowledged, as I had good Reason to do, I wanted both Leisure and Materials to finish.

In this Opinion I was the more confirm'd, upon my first Perusal of the Preface to it. I saw a Spirit of Wrath and Uncharitableness, accompanied with such an Assurance of the then unknown Author's Abilities for such an Undertaking, as I had hardly ever met with in the like degree before. I perceived that he desired, in the direct Reverse of what I had profess'd, to be look'd upon to have written with Care and Deliberation; to have fully search'd into his Subject, and to have been no less plentifully stored with Materials of all kinds for the perfect Clearing of it. And tho' I do not think a Man of Pride and Arrogance, Full of Himself, and a Despiser of all Others, to be generally the best qualified to know either Himself, or the Truth; yet I hoped I should here find somewhat to Clear the One, and thereby to Attone for, if not to Justifie, the Other.

With this Expectation I came to the Reading of this Book; let me add, and with a full Resolution too, howsoever I should be treated, to judge with all the Indifference I could of the Performance; and either freely to acknowledge the Truth, if I should be convinced that I had been mistaken; or else as freely to vindicate both my Self and It, if it should appear, that after all I was in the Right. (a) For as I account an Obstinacy in Error, be the Subject what it will, to be little less than Heretical, I am sure to be very Criminal, on the One hand; so do I esteem it to be no less a Meanness of Spirit on the Other, to desert the Truth, or to be afraid to own it; tho' never so much clamour'd against by Ignorant, or Designing Persons; for the sake of which Ease, Interest, Reputation, Friends, and even Life its self, in many Cases, ought to be despised.

What the Result of my Examination of this Book was, the following Treatise will abundantly shew. I found in it enough to commend the Wit, tho' not the Spirit, of Him who wrote it. Life and Vigour, Quick Thoughts, expressed in a brisk turn of Words, run through the most part of it. One thing indeed I desired, (and even that too, for ought I know, was not the least Evidence of the Artifice of its Author) that a General Darkeness and Obscurity was spread over the whole Performance; so that it was not easie, even upon a careful Reading, to determine either what his Principles were, or by what Arguments or Authorities he supported those Principles.

To settle the Former of these, his Principles, I more than once went through the whole Book, and reduced every part of it to the best Order and Method that I could: And by comparing the same things, treated of (as they commonly are) again and again in the several parts of it; and that, for the most part, with the very same Proofs and Authorities; I endeavour'd, with all possible Care, to discover what they were, and to bring them to the best State that I was able. If in this I have sometimes been mistaken, I ought the less to be blamed, not only upon the account of the Difficulty of the Task, but because, to say the Truth, I believe that sometimes the Author himself did not well know his own Meaning; I am sure, did not design that any body else should know it. And for the Latter, I set my self to enquire with all Diligence, from our Registers and Records, how the Matters of Fact had stood, that so I might be enabled with the greater Certainty to judge of that part of his Work also.

In this troublesome Employ, several Months pass'd before I could resolve what I had to do: Whether, upon the whole, I was to own my Mistakes, and yield to the Truth of what this Writer had advanced; Or whether I should proceed to Justifie my Principles, and to answer what he had offer'd in Contradiction to them. The Latter of These was what I finally resolved upon; and I resolved upon it with this Perswasion, which neither Prejudice, nor Indignation at the Rudeness or Confidence of my Adversary, but the meer Justice I owe to Truth, obliges me to declare; that in all my Life I never met with so many or such gross Mistakes, (for I am unwilling to call them by any harder Name) of Matters of Fact, as well as Errors in all kind of Principles, as I found in this Book; scarce a Leaf of which will bear a Rigorous Scrutiny, and but few that will stand the most Favourable Examination. But so it must needs be, where an Author writes in the dark out of Other Mens Collections; and appeals to Registers and Records, not only without ever seeing of them, but from such short Hints, which tho' the first Transcriber may possibly have understood, yet a raw Compiler, who knows nothing at all of the Matter, can hardly be supposed capable of making any wise or pertinent Use of them. This is an Excuse which Dr. A. I confess has no Right to, because he pretends to have been himself the Gatherer, as well as Digester, of the Materials of his Book: But I am well assured that this was truly the Case; and 'tis the most favourable Apology I know how to make for a great many of his Errors.

Having thus determined to proceed in my Own just Defence, the next thing was to resolve after what Manner I should proceed in it. And here I needed not any long Deliberation: The Controversial way way was not only the least Instructive, but of all others the least Agreeable to my own Nature and Disposition. I determined therefore to pursue my Subject in an Historical manner; and to meddle no farther with my angry Adversary, than as he should necessarily fall in my way; and for the Remainder of his Book, to leave it to the World to judge as they pleased of it.

Accordingly having in my first Chapter shewn what the several Kinds of Publick Assemblies of the Clergy heretofore were, and in part still are; and in the Second offer'd a large Variety of Arguments to prove the real difference both in Law, and Fact, between the Provincial Convocations, and the Parliamentary Convention of the Clergy; (a Point of such Moment in this Controversie, that Dr. A. himself confesses the whole Dispute in a manner to turn upon it; and the want of distinguishing whereof as a very learned Person truly observed, Bishop Stillingfleet, Duties and Rights of Paroch. Clergy, p. 254, 255. has been the Occasion of most of those Difficulties and Prejudices which many good Men have labour'd under with relation to this Matter) and by both these clearly settled the Subject of the Questions under debate: I proceed, in the Third Chapter, to state my own Opinion in the former of Them, concerning the Right of the Convocation to Meet, Sit, and Act, ALWAYS and ONLY in Time of Parliament; the sum of which is briefly this, That our Bishops and Clergy have a Right to be Assembled, in Convocation, at Any, and All Times, whenever the Affairs of the Church require their Consultation, or any Benefit may be likely to accrue to Religion thereby; but have no Obligation to Attend at all upon the Parliament, much less to be forced to continue their Attendance during every Session, at the Pleasure of that Great Council, when there is either Nothing for them at all to Do; or nothing to Countervail the Trouble and Charge of such an Attendance.

In opposition to this Opinion, which I still conceive to be for the Honour and Liberty of the Church and its Assemblies; Dr. A. has advanced another, and I think a very dangerous Hypothesis; (a) That (a) Rights, &c. p. 49, 67, 68, 75, 216, 355, &c. the Bishops and Clergy may not be Assembled in Convocation, but only at such times as the Parliament is Sitting; and that then it is their duty, not only to be formally Called, but to Meet and Sit too: In his own Words, They are obliged to Attend the Parliament; and the Parliament has a Right to be Attended by Them. So that, in short then; whether there be any thing for them to Do or No, yet during the Session of every Parliament they must Meet, and Attend; but at any other Season they may not be so much as Assembled, tho' there should be never so Great, or so Pressing an Occasion for their coming together.

The Arguments which he brings in proof of this Assertion are, in general, Three: The first taken from a pretended Right of the Convocation, as a proper Provincial Council, to Meet once every year, by virtue of the antient Canons; and particularly of that of the Fourth Lateran Council, which he chiefly founds his Claim upon. To this I have given a short, but sufficient Reply, in my IVth Chapter; and indeed, I cannot but think it a little strange, that a Divine of our Reformed Church should, in asserting the Rights and Liberties of an English Convocation, build upon the Authority of so late, and so exploded an Assembly as that. A Council of which our Popish Historians speak with very little respect; Whose Canons are still disputed, and deny'd by the best Writers on all hands to be of any Authority; to be sure were never received in our Church, and therefore should not have been alledged as of any moment in the present Case.

With what Design, or for what End, this Writer where he treats of this matter, forsaking his present subject, diverts to shew, that Presbyters had from the beginning an equal Right of Place, and Authority of Voice, in the Councils of the Church, with their Bishops;

(a) Omnia per singulas Aetates communia Ecclesiae Negotia per Solos Episcopos & nonnullos subinde Presbyteros, Episcoporum suorum loca tenentes, in Conciliis congregatos transacta sunt. Dr. Beverege Codex. Can. Vind. Proem. num. iv.

confounding thereby both the Power and Dignity of the Episcopate and Priesthood, I cannot tell. (a) This was not wont to be accounted the Church of England Doctrine, nor can it tend to any thing less than to shake the very Foundation of our Constitution, and to furnish the Presbyterian with a new Argument against it. But be the Design what it will; having this part of my Book in hand, it was a Service I thought due both to our Church, and her Bishops, to shew the Falseness of such a Principle; and to answer, as I have done, what had been offer'd in Proof of it.

His next, and chiefest Argument, to prove the necessary Meeting of our Convocations ONLY and ALWAYS in time of Parliament, is taken from the Nature, and Form of our Constitution; by vertue whereof Dr. A. pretends that these Church Assemblies always have been, and ought to be, Attendants upon that Great Council: That thus they were wont, from the very times of the Saxons, to meet with it; and thus have continued to Assemble together to this last Age.

In answer to this Assertion, which chiefly depends upon Matter of Fact, I have diligently traced the History of these Assemblies, in their several Periods, from the time of the Saxons to our own days. I have shewn that neither in the 400 years next before the Conquest, nor the 250 years after it, to the 23^d of K. Edward the 1st, were the Lower Clergy wont, either in Convocation, or otherwise, to be Convened, as any proper, or necessary Members of the Great Councils of the Realm: That only the Bishops and Prelates first; afterwards such of the Clergy as either held some Lands of the Crown, or as the Prince thought fit by his special Summons to call to it, came to Parliament: But none else, Such only excepted, whose Places or Employs required their presence there.

When King Edward the 1st settled our Parliament upon that form which has continued ever since, the Lower Clergy were summon'd to it by the same Writs with their Bishops, and from thenceforth became a part of the Estate of the Clergy there. But neither in that, nor in any of the following Reigns, to the time of King Henry the 8th, did the two Convocations Attend upon the Parliament, nor was it accounted their Duty, or as Dr. A. (I know not why) calls it, their Right and Privilege, so to Do. This I have particularly shewn in my Vth, VIth, VIIth, and VIIIth Chapters; and have thereby effectually proved, in contradiction to his Second Argument, that neither have the Convocations an Obligation, by vertue of our Constitution, to Attend upon the Parliament, nor the Parliament any Right to be Attended by Them.

Having thus fully examined this Pretence, (the fairest and most plausible that could have been urged in favour of such an Hypothesis) there remain'd but one Argument more to be consider'd for the finishing of this first Point, that of Custom. An Argument of great great weight in Matters of this Nature, and which therefore deserved a particular Consideration. Accordingly I have in my IXth Chapter fully discuss'd this Point. I have enquired, first; whether, supposing it to have been the Custom for our Convocations to Meet, Sit, and Act, with every Parliament, since the time of King Henry the viiith, (for in the foregoing Reigns there is no room for any such supposition) that Custom shall be sufficient to limit both the King's Prerogative, and the Metropolitan's Power; and to destroy the Liberties of the Clergy themselves too; so as to make it both Necessary for them, at such Times, to Meet, Sit, and Act; and to render it Unlawful for them either to Assemble, or Do any thing, at any Other Times: And having, I think, pretty plainly proved that Custom, had there been any such, would not have had any Legal Force in this Case; I have, secondly, enquired how this matter has stood in Fact; Whether the Convocations, for a hundred and seventy years past, have constantly Met, Sate, and Acted, with every Parliament, as Dr. A. affirms, without ever presuming to Meet, or Do any Business, but only in Time of Parliament.

In this Method have I pursued the first, and main point, in debate: As for the Other, which concerns the Power of the Bishops and Clergy, when met in Convocation, to Make Canons or Constitutions Provincial or Synodal without any License from the Prince so to do, it depends upon the Interpretation of the Act of the 25 H. 8. c. 19. which was made in Restraint of their Power in that particular; and the Practice of our Convocations since the passing of that Statute. This therefore I have discuss'd with relation both to Law and Fact. I have shewn what I take the plain Meaning of the One to be; and how, as far as I can judge, the Other has stood. I have impartially weigh'd what Dr. A. has urged, in both Respects; and as well answered his Arguments, as offer'd such Reasons as I conceive to be decisive in favour of what I had formerly Asserted. This is the Subject of my Xth and Last Chapter, and Concludes the whole Book.

To pay what is due even to an Adversary; It must be allow'd that Dr. A. has done all that a Man of forward Parts, and a hearty Zeal could do, to defend the Cause which he had Espoused. He has chosen the most plausible Topics of Argumentation; and he has given Them all the Advantage that either a spritely Wit, or a good Assurance could afford them. But he wanted one thing, He had not Truth on his side: And Error tho' it may be palliated, and by an Artificial Menager, such as Dr. A. without Controversy is, be disguised so as to deceive sometimes even a wary Reader, yet it will not bear a strict Examination. And accordingly I have here shewn him, notwithstanding all his other Endowments, (in which, if he pleases, he shall have my free Consent to stand above Me) to have deluded the World with a meer Romance; and from the One End of his Discourse to the Other to have deliver'd a History, not of what was really Done, but of what it was his Interest to make it believe had been done.

But besides these two Great Points upon which our Controversy began, Dr. A. has thought fit to touch upon some Others of a lesser moment; in the most of which I have no less dissented from him than in the principal matters in debate; nor, I suppose, any less shewn him to have been mistaken in the One, than in the Other.

i. The

1. The Places in which the Parliamentary Clergy, and the House of Commons, were antiently wont to Sit, was a piece of Curiosity which He thought fit to oblige his Reader withal. He has delivered his Opinion freely in Both, and is very severe upon me for having honestly own'd my Ignorance in this particular. Yet, after all, it is certain that He is utterly mistaken in the latter of these; and I believe no less in the wrong for condemning my Conjecture (it was all I pretended to) as to the former.

2. The History of the Præmunientes, its Rise, Efficacy, Execution, and Continuance, is another point of a more than ordinary moment in such a Dispute as this, and has been no less triumphantly managed by Him. My Ignorance is here again made the Subject of his scorn and contempt. Yet in the whole account which he has given of it, he has shewn himself to have been utterly in the dark; and in one main Circumstance, that which concerns the Continuance of its Execution, has own'd his Error, which otherwise I should have more fully confuted.

3. The Parliamentary Privileges of the Clergy which once they enjoy'd, but which he thinks they at present have no right to; nor, to say the Truth, ought to have any, was another Bye-Point of no small importance in a Book written expressly in defence of the Parliamentary Rights and Liberties of the Clergy. But in these also, as I conceive, he has not only been mistaken in his Opinions, but Unkind in his Concessions; and too easily given up some Privileges, which we may still at least keep on foot a Claim to.

4. I have already taken notice of another of Dr. A's Positions, concerning the Ancient Authoritative Members of Provincial, and indeed of all other Church Councils; That meer Presbyters had, by virtue of their Character, an Equal Right of Voice and Place with their Bishops in Them. This he earnestly contends for; asserts it positively, and pursues it heartily. He quarrels with one of our most Eminent Canonists, for being of another Opinion: And yet, after all, is here again no less Erroneous in his Assertion, than Injurious to our Constitution; and has not so much as the Colour of any Argument that will bear an Examination, to support his Pretence.

5. The Form of our Great Councils in the Saxon Times, and of the German Colloquia upon which he supposes Them to have been framed; and what Interest the Lower Clergy had in Both; was a Point of the utmost Concernment to have been truly stated, in order to a right understanding of the Polity of those Ages both in Church and State. Accordingly he insists with all seeming Exactness upon it; and Dr. W. is again arraign'd, according to Custom, for his Ignorance of these Matters. Yet in his whole Account of Both these he is so wretchedly deceived, that one would wonder how he could possibly fall into such Errors himself; or hope to persuade any one, who understood the History of those Times, to give any Credit to his Inventions.

6. The Notion of mix'd Councils, of Clergy and Laity, in which the chiefest Affairs of the Church were transacted during the Saxon Times, if not for some Reigns after the Conquest, is another of his New and Unaccountable Pretences. How little such an Assertion is either for the Honour, or Interest of the Church, I shall leave it to

to any true Friend of the Ecclesiastical Authority to judge. It is enough that I have shewn that in this too He is utterly mistaken; and that in those Times, the proper Conciliary Affairs of the Church were transacted in proper Church Synods, not in mix'd Councils; by the Bishops and Prelates alone, not by a Conjunction of the Laity with Them.

7. About what time the Lower Clergy began to be summon'd to Parliament, is another Point in which Dr. A. thought fit to be at some Pains to inform us. How much of his Book is spent upon this One Subject; with what Rudeness and Scorn he has treated one Learned Writer, now a Reverend Bishop of our Church, (but whether written out of Reputation into Preferment, I shall leave it to him to determine) and how freely he has upon this Occasion, tho' not precisely as to this Particular, pronounced against another eminent Defender of our English Monarchy, the Industrious Dr. Brady, I shall not need to say. Yet at last he is here too in the same Condition that the (a) Strikers out of new Paths commonly are, all over Mistake; and the Old Opinion before establish'd, when All is said against it that can be, will still appear to be the Truth.

Pref. p. xxvi.

8. How the Method which from thenceforth obtain'd of Summoning the Deans and Archdeacons in Person, the Chapters by One, and the Diocesan Clergy by two Proctors, both to Parliament and Convocation, was first settled, and in which of the two it was first practised, was a Nicety in which, when I before wrote, I durst not adventure to determine any thing. For this, Dr. A. severely corrects me: He insults over my Ingenuity; and then pronounces as positively in the Case, as if he had been of Council to King Edward the First in framing the Premunientes Clause, and dictating a Form for all succeeding Ages to follow. But I have now shewn, that tho' he had his Choice to take which side he would, and Time sufficient to examine into such a Matter, yet his wonted Fate over-ruled him; He determin'd wrong, and only shew'd his own Ignorance, by his eager Zeal to expose mine.

9. The End for which our Provincial Convocations were first introduced, and Generally Summon'd, I had truly affirm'd to be for the Supply of the Prince's Needs: That they might therein obtain the like Aids of their Clergy, which they received from the Laity in Parliament. It is hardly to be express'd with what an impetuous Fury this Author falls upon me for this Assertion: With what a blind Rage he lays about him; as if I had subverted the Foundation of Christianity, and deserved my self that Fire which he so often calls for; and, I believe, hoped he had effectually kindled for my Book. Yet after all, what I affirm'd is most demonstratively true, and I have now proved it so to be; I boldly affirm it, I have proved it beyond the Power of all his Sophistry (in which I nevertheless freely own him to be a Master) evermore to disguise it.

10. The History of the Parliament, 25th Edward the First, in which the great Disputes arose between the King and the Clergy, with the other Circumstances which depend upon it, is another Point particularly laboured by Dr. A. and for Misrepresenting of which, I am call'd to a more severe account than ordinary by him. But his Fortune is still the same: He is mistaken himself in almost every Particular for which he has thought fit to Censure me; and I have now by Contemporary Writers (such as he appeal'd to, but thought they could not have been had) proved him so to be.

11. The Provincial Summons of the Clergy to Parliament, begun by King Edward the Second, and continued for some time by his Son King Edward the Third, and then entirely laid aside by him, and never resumed by any of his Successors, was another part of our History, which ought in such a Discourse as this to have been fully and clearly delivered. I would willingly suppose that Dr. A. understood not either what the Nature of this Summons was; for what End it was Used; or how long it Continued. This I am sure, that he has given a very wrong Account of it; tho' such a one as must be confess'd to answer his Purpose a great deal better than the True one would have done.

12. The Dependence of the Province of York upon this of Canterbury; and that not only in Spiritual, but Secular, Affairs; is a Matter of such great Moment, that One would have thought a Man should have taken Care to be very well assured of it, before he had adventured with too much Confidence to Assert it. How far Dr. A. has carried this Subjection, I have had frequent Occasion, in the Course of my following History, to observe. But on what weak, what mistaken Grounds, he has built, in this, as well as in too many other of his Notions, I have, in Justice to the Rights of that injured Province, as well as in Acknowledgment of the Generous Assistance I have received from thence in the Prosecution of my present Work, sufficiently shewn.

13. In what Capacity our Provincial Convocations were Obligated by our Constitution to Attend upon the Parliament of England, Dr. A. found it necessary to acquaint us. But how to express himself, or what Account to give of it, he could not tell. Sometimes he was willing to have it thought, that the Clergy in Convocation were One of the Three Estates of the Parliament. But because that looked too big, and might have been liable to the Exception of Some to whom he particularly designed to recommend both Himself, and his Performance, he rather chose to moderate the Boldness of his Assertion; (tho' by so doing, he made nothing but Jargon and Confusion of his Point) and then they were not an Estate of Parliament, but an Estate of the Realm Assembling jointly with the Parliament. It is after the same odd manner that he plays with another Phrase, and tells us in what Sense the Two Convocations are a Member of the Parliament. But in all this, his Principles are as Erroneous as his Proofs have been defective: And how little there is in Them to Warrant any of these dangerous Assertions, I have in the following Discourse abundantly shewn.

14. Ingratitude towards Cardinal Woolsey, to whose Munificence, he tells the World, I owe my Comfortable Summer Retirement, was another Charge very proper for an Angry Writer to load an Innocent Adversary withal. But in the whole Management of this Calumny he has not only proceeded without any thing to support his Allegation, but shewn himself so strangely Ignorant of the History of a Society of which he was for many Years a Member, that were I a great deal more his Enemy, than really I am, I could not have wish'd him to have done any thing more effectually to shame himself, himself, than what he has written upon this Occasion to Defame me.

15. And now I have mention'd that great Cardinal, I must not forget another Charge, in which Dr. A. has been pleased to fall with his accustomed Scorn and Severity upon me. The Question is concerning the Ground of the Clergies Præmunire, 22 Henr. viii. One great Cause of which, I agree with him, was for complying so far as they did with the Cardinal in the Exercise of his Legantine Authority. But when he restrains it to that alone, he as grossly mistakes himself, as he pretends me to have done: And I shall leave it to any Impartial Person, when he considers the Evidences I have produced for my Assertion, to judge between us, which of us gave the truest Account of that Transaction.

These are some of those Bye-Points which seemed necessary to be Clear'd by me in the Prosecution of the following History. Many of them are of the utmost Consequence to be well understood; and None of them were so difficult to be examined, but that by a reasonable Diligence it might have been discover'd on which side the Truth lay. Yet in all these (not to say any thing of many more which will occur of the like kind) Dr. A. has not only adventured positively to determine, and always on the wrong side; but in the most of them has insulted over my Ignorance, tho' all the while it appears in the end, that it was for his Own Mistakes.

When I first resolv'd upon this New Undertaking, I design'd to have added some other Chapters to it, and in Them to have Examined all the Exceptions of any Moment, which Dr. A. had any where advanced against me. But as what remains may well enough be omitted, without the least Prejudice to the Points under Debate, so I doubt not but the Reader will easily excuse my Omission of them; and I hope Dr. A. himself will have no Cause to Complain of it. That which is the most considerable, may, I suppose, be reduced to these two Charges; the One with relation to my Self, the Other to my Book; * That I wrote against my Conscience; * And that, to Set up an Unreasonable Authority in the Prince, I have gone upon such Notions as naturally tend to the Overthrow of our Constitution both in Church and State.

As to the former of these; That I wrote against my Conscience; Rights, &c. Pref. p. xi, xii. That as little as I knew of these Matters, yet I knew enough to have kept Ibid. Book, me from engaging on that side of the Question I did, had not some very p. 170, &c. powerful Motive come in to determine me, with a great deal more to the Addit. Pref. same purpose; I shall content my self to say thus much, That this p. xiv, &c. was more than he could possibly know to be True, and Christian Charity should have prompted him to hope it was (as indeed it was) utterly False. To God; to my Superiors, from whom this Powerful Motive, had there been any such, must have proceeded; and who are therefore but little less concern'd than my self in the Scandal of this Imputation; To my Manner of Life; And (I speak as a Fool, but this Author has compell'd me) to my particular Conduct, with relation to those Powerful Motives of which he so feelingly writes, I Appeal for my Justification in this Particular: That I enter'd upon this Debate, not only with a full Conviction of the Truth of what I wrote for, but with a firm Perswasion of the Seasonableness of my Asserting of it. Other Infirmities enough there were, which Dr. A. might might have charged me withal; which I neither could have justly disown'd, nor would I have deny'd. But for the Villany of Writing against my Conscience; and which is yet a higher Aggravation of it, of Sacrificing the Rights and Liberties of the Church; my own Reason; and even my Salvation its self, to the little Profits, or Honours, of the Present Season; 'tis so uncharitable, as well as false and groundless a Slander, as ought not to have found an Entertainment in the Heart of a Good Man, much less to have been so often, and confidently, Alledged by a Minister of Christ: And would almost prompt one to fear, what yet I hardly dare mention, and do hope I should be mistaken in; That it could not have been so readily Imputed by Any One to Another, who was not capable of being Guilty of it Himself.

To his Other Objection, (a) That I have set up an Unwarrantable Power in the Christian Prince; and particularly have given such a Sovereign Authority to Our Own, as naturally tends to Overthrow our Constitution both in Church and State; it will be time enough for me to return a more particular Answer, when he shall please to shew that I have indeed advanced any other Notions than what (b) I have proved, and am ready, if need be, more fully to prove, our Church of England Divines, ever since the Reformation, to have constantly maintain'd before me. Let him look into the Writings of our Reverend Bishops, Jewell, Bridges, Bilson, Whitgift, Bancroft, Andrews, Usher, Bramhall, Davenant, Taylour, Sanderson; Or if he had rather I should refer him to those of his own Order, let him see what our Nowell, Sutcliffe, Feild, Mason, Heylin, Falkner, and many Others have written in defence of the Royal Supremacy and Authority of our Kings. If he can, after this, justly charge me with any New Doctrines; If he can truly shew that I have gone upon any Principles which These have not maintain'd and defended before me; let him call as loudly as he can, not only upon the Parliament for (c) FIRE; and upon the Convocation for (d) Censures; but upon Heaven too (if he thinks such Addresses will find an Admission there) for all that Vengeance which he appears so heartily to wish might fall upon me. If he cannot, let him say with what Conscience he inveighs against me for Asserting no other Authority either in the Christian Prince, or in our English Sovereign, than what our Laws allow; our Convocations have defined; our Greatest Writers asserted; our Universities have declared to belong to them, and We our selves have more than once been obliged to teach and to maintain.

In the mean time, as it is my Principle, and has been my solemnly avow'd Opinion, that the Constitution of our Government is an essentially limited Monarchy, in which the Laws and Customs of the Realm are the stated Measure both of the Prince's Prerogative, and of the Subjects Rights; so I am perswaded that no King, or Queen, of England, can justly claim or exercise any other Sovereignty either in Church, or State, than what those Laws and Customs do allow of. This was my Opinion when I wrote before; This is my settled Notion still. I am not aware, after all (e) Dr. A. has done to enlighten me, that I have advanced any Principle contrary to this Opinion. If unwarily I should have done so, I do here solemnly revoke it; and whensoever I shall be particularly convinced, which as yet I am not, wherein I have done it, I will be as ready to make a particular Renunciation of it.

Were I now minded to Recriminate, and shew in how many Instances this pretended Church-Advocate has set up such Notions, as, being fairly pursued, must tend to the Destruction not only of our Synodical Rights and Liberties, but of our very Episcopal Constitution its self, I should not need to look far from them. The Doctrine of Attendance, which he is so fond of, and builds the greatest part of his Book upon, is its self a Principle of Slavery, recommended under the Name of Right and Liberty: And equally injurious to the Clergy on either side; both as it Obliges them to a Constant Attendance when ever the Parliament meets, and as long as it shall continue to sit; and deprives them of all Power to Assemble, or Act, at any other times, when that Great Council is not held. And how far that Presbyterian Notion maintain'd by him, That meer Presbyters have by Primitive Practise and Institution, an Equal Right of Place and Voice with Bishops, in the Councils of the Church, may be improved to confound the Powers and Authorities of Both, I shall leave it to every real Friend of our Ecclesiastical Polity to consider.

Many other Principles there are scatter'd up and down in his Book, which I might here bring together, were I disposed to take the like Method with him, which he has done to prejudice his Reader against me. But this is a way which as I do not need, so neither am I at all desirous to make use of it. My Business is not to raise Prejudices against Any, but if it may be to Convince and Persuade All. And the worst I wish even Dr. A. himself, is but this; That God would endue him with a better Disposition to receive the Truth, and with a more Christian Temper in the Defence of it. As for Those who without any other Design, but a meer Zeal for the Rights of the Church, and perhaps out of an over-great Dependance upon some whom they supposed to have gone upon the same Principle, have been too easily engaged into an Approbation of what they had not sufficiently either Examined, or Understood; I would only beseech them impartially to weigh what has been now offer'd on both sides; and then let them freely take that Part which they shall find to be the best supported with Truth, and to make most for the real Honour and Liberty of the Church of England: A Church, to whose Doctrine and Government, I have always inviolably adhered; and from whose Rights, Powers, or Privileges, no Motives or Considerations shall ever induce me willingly to detract.

It was a Fancy of Dr. A. (but like most of his other Notions, false and groundless) that when I publish'd my first Book, I thought my self secured either by the Subject, or the Dedication of it, against any Reply to it. Had these Considerations had any such Powerful Influence on other the like Occasions, the Suggestion might have been made with the greater Shew of Truth, and therefore with the more Excuse, supposing it to have been, as here it was, utterly False. But when not only the Rights of Princes have been as boldly opposed by some, as they have been solidly maintain'd by Others, but even Princes themselves have had their Answerers, who have neither regarded their Persons, nor revered their Authority; why a Private Writer, of a very moderate Degree, should have expected such an Immunity as Crowned Heads have not been able to obtain, I can-

I cannot imagine : Sure I am, I neither Wrote nor Printed with any such Prospect or Presumption.

To prevent any future Mistake of this kind, I do now, not in any way of Boasting, or Challenge, but out of a sincere Desire that the Truth may be discover'd, freely invite every Reader in General, and Dr. A. himself in Particular, to examine what I here publish to the uttermost. If he finds my Principles to be erroneous ; my Proofs defective ; my Facts mistaken ; or my whole Scheme ill-laid ; let him, on God's Name, Correct me whereinfoever I am in the Wrong. If he do's it, according to the Apostles Rules, Of speaking the Truth in Love ; and doing all Things in Charity ; He shall have not only my Approbation, but my Thanks too. But if this he cannot do ; if he be not able so far to overcome an unhappy Disposition, improved by an unbounded Liberty of Writing after another manner, as not to mix a Spirit of Pride and Contempt ; of Bitterness and Detraction ; of unjust Suspicion, and of that kind of Wit which of all others the least commends the Parts, as well as the least becomes the Character of a Scholar, a Christian, and a Minister of the Gospel ; let him take his own way, ἕξει καὶ ζουμένους ἀξιωματεῖν. Whatever he do's, as I shall, for my part, still continue my Endeavours to improve my Knowledge in these Matters, and be ready to correct my own Errors, if I shall have the good Fortune to be better inform'd ; so am I no less desirous that these Matters should be thoroughly search'd into by All Others. For as I resolve not to be wanting to my Own just Defence, by whomsoever I am attacked, whilst I am perswaded that I do assert the Truth ; so neither will I be obstinate in retracting my Mistakes, as soon as I shall be convinced, by whatever Means it be, that I have been guilty of Any. Of this I have given a small Earnest in the Corrections which I have already made of my own Work ; and I will continue to give a farther Testimony of the same Sincerity, if I shall hereafter meet with the like just Occasion so to do.

The following Book having not only been almost intirely written, but a great part of it printed off before the Death of my late Royal Master, of Glorious Memory, I cannot but be sensible that many Expressions may occur in it, which are not so suitable to the present Times. For these the Reader will please to make a due Allowance ; and consider what it was proper for me to say then, not how I might more fitly have express'd my self now.

To give the greater Authority to some of the main Parts of my History, and at the same time enable Others to judge the more surely of them, I have, at the End of my Book, added a large Appendix of Instruments and Records, very few of which were ever Publish'd before. Of these, many were Copied by other hands ; and in some which I transcribed my self, I found the Registers oftentimes Defective. I have printed them as exactly as I could ; and in some of the Sheets which I corrected my self, have added my own Conjectures in the Margin ; which being generally no more but Conjectures, and made in haste, as I was overlooking the Proofs, the Reader is desired to take, or reject them, as he shall think them probable or not : For I ought not to impose that upon Another, with which I was not always thoroughly satisfied my self.

Amongst

Amongst these Instruments I once designed to have placed the Statute of the 25th of Henr. viii. chap. 19. as I took it from the Record; and to have exactly follow'd both the Words, and the Punctuation, as I found it there. But I have had so many Occasions to Copy it in my Book, that I thought it would be needless to Repeat it again in the Appendix.

And now it remains only for me to acknowledge by what Helps I adventured upon this long and difficult Work, and to whom I am chiefly indebted for Them. (a) Dr. A. has thought fit to set a general Mark of Contumely upon All such, especially of our own Profession, as should have either the Courage, or Good Nature, to be Assistant to me in it. But the Persons to whom I have been obliged, are above the Reach of his Censure; and are too well known, both for their Integrity, and Good Affections to the Church of England, to be in danger of suffering by any Character that he is able to fix upon them. (a) Addit &c. Pref. p. ix, x, xi.

To our most Reverend Metropolitans I must, in the first place, crave leave to pay my most thankful Acknowledgments, for their singular Encouragement and Assistance in this Undertaking. Not only the Registers of the See of Canterbury, and the Manuscripts of His Grace's Library at Lambeth lay open, at all times, to my own Inspection; but those of his Metropolitan Church of Canterbury were, by his Favour, carefully Examined for me. As for Those of the Other Province, They were, by my Lord of York's particular Permission and Encouragement, so diligently search'd by two of the worthy Dignitaries of his Church, that I could scarce have profited more, had I had the Opportunity, which Dr. A. hastily gave himself, of collecting them with my Own hand.

To the Reverend the Bishops of Worcester, Eli, Sarum, Norwich, Chichester, and Carlisle, I owe the Accounts which I had from the Registers of their respective Sees, and Churches. Several of their Lordships were so kind as to examine them for me Themselves; The rest caused them to be carefully looked into, whensoever I either needed, or desired, to profit by them.

What Help I had from the Registers of Winchester and Durham, I owe to the Favour of the Reverend and Honourable Deans of those Churches, who took care to have them examined for me. Those of Lincoln, the Reverend Precentor and Chancellour of that Church, from time to time consulted, as I had need of them. So did one of the Pious and Reverend Canons of the Church of Litchfield, those of that Place. The rest I obtain'd by the Favour and Pains of several other Learned and Diligent Persons, whom tho' I do not particularly mention, yet I ought not to conceal my great Obligations Them.

The Rolls of Parliament, with some other very considerable MSS, I had the Use of by the Favour of the Reverend Mr. Stillingfleet. They were part of his worthy Fathers, the late most Learned Bishop of Worcester's Collection: A Person of whom how slightly soever Dr. A. has thought fit to speak, yet will he always be Reverenced as One of the chiefest Ornaments and Defenders of our Church, its Doctrine, and Discipline, by All who knew Him, and do not utterly forget Themselves.

Some

Some other Manuscripts were freely communicated to me (as they were also to Dr. A.) by the Reverend the Lord Bishop of Norwich: Particularly the two Registers of Canterbury and Hereford, so often mention'd, and I think to so good Purpose, in the following Book.

It may possibly be expected, that while I am making these Acknowledgments to Others, I should not wholly forget Dr. A. himself; who tells the World, not only that He had sent a very proper Information to Me, but that I did thereupon make some farther Enquiries than I had done before. But the Truth is, the Person whom He instructed with this Favour, deceived both Him and Me: And tho' I have made the best Enquiry I could about it, among our few Common Friends, yet am I still at a Loss to know either by what hands the Intimation He speaks of was sent, or indeed that any such Intimation was ever sent to Me at all.

What other Manuscripts I have used, and where they may be found, I have particularly noted in the Catalogue of Them, subjoin'd to this Preface. By these Helps, and the Advice of some Learned Persons, whom I took the Liberty of Consulting withal, when any Difficulties occurred to Me, as I thought my self qualified to handle this Subject in a more full and ample manner than had ever been hitherto done, so did I the rather choose to do it in an Historical way, that I might thereby avoid the very Shew of Controversie as much as possibly I could: And where I could not help engaging with my Angry Adversary, I have yet endeavour'd to oppose him with the least Offence that I was able; and do hope that I have (generally) so watch'd my self, as not to return upon him any part of those Injuries, which he has thought fit, with such an industrious, unrelenting, Scorn and Malice, to cast upon me. For, indeed, I should be very sorry to be Guilty of That my Self, which I take to be so highly Blameable in Him. But if after all, I should chance to have been any where surprized into any Reflections contrary to this Rule, (which yet I hope I have not) I must bespeak at once both the Pity and Excuse of my Reader: Who may from thence discern how unfortunate a thing it is to be Obliged to Converse with some Persons; from the Contagion of whose Examples, tho' a Man watch himself never so carefully, yet he cannot be Always, or Absolutely, secure.

As for the Matters of Fact which I have Reported, I doubt not but that they will appear to have been generally very exact. I know whom I have to deal with; and had I no Concern otherwise for Truth, yet I should not have been willing, by departing from it, to give so Vigilant and Merciless an Adversary any Advantage against me. Not that I suppose but that in running through so large a Series of History, where such an infinite Number of Things and Circumstances are brought to light, which before were either not at all, or but very little understood, several Mistakes may have been Committed, for which I must expect no Quarter from Those whose Concern it is, at any rate, to run down my Performance. I have written under a Continual Distraction from Other Affairs which were not to be Neglected. Many Things I have been forced to take upon the Report of Others; and in Those which I have Examined my self, I may justly fear I have sometimes been mistaken.

Such

Such Errors as these, tho' I have used my utmost Care to prevent Them, yet I dare not pretend to be altogether free from Them. Our most accurate Historians have labour'd under the like Misfortunes: And till Writers cease to be Men, these Instances of Human Frailty will more or less appear in their Best Performances. This I can with great Sincerity profess, and having said it I shall have done; I have not willingly Mistaken, much less have I Misrepresented, any Matter of Fact: I have not knowingly Concealed any thing that made against Me: I have Asserted nothing but what I verily believe to be the Truth: And I have defended it with nothing but what after a diligent Examination I take to be True. Under this Assurance I cheerfully commit my Self, and my Cause, to the Judgment of all Wise, and Charitable, and Indifferent Persons. For the rest, and particularly for Dr. A. they have their Liberty; let them Think; let them Speak; let them Write as they please of Me.

4. The Lower Clergy properly Members of Convocation, Sect. 59. p. 28

5. The Convocation had (commonly) some Respect to the Parliament, tho' not held together with it, Sect. 60. p. 29.

Three Consequences from these Premises.

1. The Convocation and Council totally different in their Design and End from one another, Sect. 61. p. 29

2. Our Provincial Councils, not the Convocation, our proper Church-Synods, Sect. 61. p. 29

The First Question stated: What Authority our Kings have, by Law, to allow the Convocation, when called, to Sit and Act: Or to Prorogue it from time to time, without suffering it to Sit and Act, as They shall think fit.

The Summ of the 1st Question stated:

1. The Convocation cannot legally Assemble, but by Authority of the King's Writ, Sect. 6. p. 83
2. The King is not determin'd to any Certain Times of Calling of it, S. 7. p. 84
3. Tho' by their own free Choice, our Princes have generally Assembled their Convocations about the same time with their Parliaments, since the 32d of K. Henry the viiith, Sect. 8. p. 84
4. The Convocation being Assembled by

- Authority of the King's Writ, the King may lawfully command the Archbishop to prorogue it when, and as often as, he pleases, Sect. 9. p. 85
And grant them a License, or not, to Act as he sees fit, ibid.
5. This Power the King is obliged in Conscience to use for the Good of the Church; so as not to refuse the Clergy either the Liberty of Sitting, or Acting, when it would be for the Benefit either of the Church or Realm, that they should Sit and Act, Sect. 10. p. 85
 6. Should the Prince neglect his Duty in this Particular, the Archbishops and Bishops would be in Conscience obliged to Admonish him of it, and to desire his Leave to Sit and Act, S. 11. p. 86
 7. If the Prince, being thus Admonish'd, and Requested by them, should still continue to refuse them the Liberty they desire; and the Necessities of their coming together, so great as to require it; it would be their Duty, nevertheless, in such a Case of Extremity, to Assemble; and run any hazard of their own Persons, or Fortunes, by so doing, S. 12. p. 86

The Argument drawn from Canonical Authority Examined. That the Canons which require any Stated Times of holding Provincial Synods never were constantly Observed here, and are now utterly Abrogated by the 25th of K. Henry the viiith. The Rights of the Bishops vindicated against the Levelling Principles of Dr. A.

That Provincial Synods ought to be held as often as the Necessities of the Church call for them, Sect. 1. p. 87

The Second Argument entred upon; Of the Convocation's being an Attendant upon the Parliament. That it do's not sufficiently Prove his Point, supposing what he asserts to have been True: That if it did, yet in Fact, it is utterly False. The state of the Publick Assemblies of the Church during the SAXON Times.

That our Convocations being not properly Church Councils, all that Dr. A. has alledg'd in the foregoing Chapter is not only false, but would have been nothing to the Purpose had it been true, Sect. 1. p. 118.

Dr. A's last Argument to prove the Right of the Convocations to Sit and Act in Time of Parliament, drawn from C U S T O M, proposed and stated. The Insufficiency of it shewn, supposing that there were such a Custom as he pretends: The Matter of Fact Examined, Whether there has been any such Custom, or No?

T*He State of the Clergy being One* of the Three Estates of the Parliament, proves, that by our Constitution they were in that Capacity only to come to it, Sect. 1. p. 430.
The Argument from CUSTOM proposed, and the Method laid down for the full Examination of it, Sect. 2. p. 431.
Two things premised for the better understanding of the Points in debate:
 1. What that Right is, which Dr. A. contends for, in behalf of the Convocations? Sect. 3. ibid.
 2. Upon what Grounds he builds his Claim of this Right? Sect. 4.
 p. 432.

Dr. A. not constant to himself in this matter of Custom, Sect. 5. p. 434.
That there is no Pretence for Custom in this Case, before the 25 Henr. viii. S. 6.

OF

CHAP. I.

Of the several kinds of the Assemblies of the Clergy of England : And particularly, Of 1. Their Parliamentary Convention. 2. Their Provincial Convocation. 3. Their Diocesan Synods. And, 4. Their Provincial Councils. And how all these differ from One Another.

THE Design of the present Undertaking being to give an Account of the Rights, Powers, and Priviledges of an English Convocation ; Two things there are that will be needful to be Stated by me ; without a right Understanding whereof, it will be impossible to bring this Matter to any Certain and Rational Conclusion :

First, What that English Convocation, of which we are now Discoursing, is ? And,

Secondly, What those Rights, Powers, and Priviledges are, which we either affirm, or deny, to belong to it ?

For the better clearing of the former of these, I must observe, that tho' the Word CONVOCATION be, in its self, of a general signification, and may indifferently be applied to any Assembly which is Summon'd, or Called together after an orderly Manner ; yet Custom (which in these Matters is wont to prevail) has determined its Sense to an Ecclesiastical Use, and made it if not only, yet principally to refer to the Assemblies of the Clergy ; of which some Account therefore, must in the first place be given by me.

That the Bishop of every Diocess had here, as in all other Christian Countries, a Power to Convene the Clergy of his Diocess, and in a Common Synod or Council with them transact such Affairs as specially related to the Order and Government of the Churches under his Jurisdiction, is not to be question'd. These Assemblies of the Clergy were as Old almost as the first Settlement of Christianity amongst us : And, amidst all our other Revolutions, continued to be Held to the very time of King Henry the VIII. Something of this kind there is still continued in the Church of York ; whether in any other, I cannot tell.

Councils.

What the Bishop of every Diocese did within his own District, the Archbishop of each Province, after that Greater Division was made among us, did within his proper Province. They called together first the Bishops, afterwards the Prelates of their Province; and, by degrees, added to these such of their Inferiour Clergy too, as they thought needful, for Counsel and Advice, and with their leave, sometimes even for Voice and Suffrage.

In these two Assemblies of the Clergy (the Diocesan Synods, and the Provincial Councils) only the Spiritual Affairs of the Church were wont, for a long time, to be transacted. So that in this Respect therefore there was no difference between the Bishops and Clergy of our own, and of all other Christian Churches. Our Metropolitans, and their Suffragans, acted by the same Rules here that they did in all other Countries: They held these Assemblies by the same Power; Convened the same Persons; and did the same Things in them.

National Councils.

When the Papal Authority had prevailed here, as in most other Kingdoms and Countries of Europe, by the leave of our Kings, and at the Command of their Legats sent from Rome, another and yet larger sort of Councils, were introduced among us, of the Bishops, and Prelates of the whole Realm. These were properly National Church-Councils, and were wont to be held for some special designs, which either the Pope, the King, or Both, had to promote by them.

Sect. 2.
Of the State Assemblies of the Clergy.

But besides these Synods common to Us with all other Christian Churches; and which were in their Nature and End, as well as Constitution, properly and purely Ecclesiastical; Two other Assemblies there were of the Clergy of this Realm, peculiar to our own State and Country; in which the Clergy were Convened not for the Spiritual Affairs of the Church, but for the Good and Benefit of the Realm, and to Act as Members of the one as well as of the other.

Now the Occasion of these, was this: When the Faith of Christ was thoroughly planted here, and the Piety of our Ancestors had liberally endow'd the Bishops and Clergy of the Church with Temporal Lands and Possessions; not only the Opinion which they had of their Prudence and Piety prompted them to take the most Eminent of them into their Publick Councils, but the Interest which they had by that means in the State, made it expedient so to do; and to commit the direction and management of their greatest Offices and Affairs to them. Hence our Bishops first, and then some of our other Prelates, were very early brought into the great Councils of the Realm; and there, together with the Laity, consulted and acted in them.

Thus were the greater Clergy first brought into our State-Councils, and made a constant, stablish'd part of them. But, in process of time, our Princes began to have a farther Occasion for them: For being encreased in Number, and with that in their Wealth too; not only our Kings, but the People, began to think it reasonable that they should bear a part in the publick Burdens, as well as enjoy their share of the Publick Treasure. Hence our Saxon Ancestors, under whom the Church was the most free, yet subjected their Lands to the threefold Necessity of Castles, Bridges, and Expeditions. William the Conquerour changed their Tenure, and laid the Burden of a further Service upon them. And the following Princes, in their Parliaments, Taxed a great part of their Temporal Possessions, after the same manner, and at the same time, that they did those of the Laity.

Sect. 3.

But still this reach'd but to a small Number of the Clergy, and to a part only of the Revenues of those whom it did affect: The Body of which was yet, in great measure, exempt from these Charges; and was therefore by some other way to be brought under the same Obligation. In order hereunto several Measures were taken, till at last they settled into that Method, which finally obtained, and set aside the necessity of any other way. First, the Pope laid a Tax upon the Church, for the Use of the King; and, both their Powers uniting, the Clergy were forc'd to submit to it. Next, the Bishops were prevailed with, upon some extraordinary Occasions, to oblige their Clergy to grant a Subsidy to the King, in the Way of a Benevolence: And for this, Letters of Security were granted back by the King to them, to ensure them that what they had done, should not be drawn into Example, or Consequence, against them. And these Concessions were sometimes made by the Bishops in the Name of their Clergy; but the common way was, that every Bishop held a Meeting of the Clergy of his Diocese: There they agreed what they would do; and empowered first their Bishops, afterwards their Arch-deacons, and finally Proctors of their own, chosen for that End, to make the Concession for them. Thus

Thus stood this matter, till about the time of King Edward the First, who not willing to continue at such a precarious Rate with his Clergy, took another Method; and after several other Experiments, fix'd at last upon an Establishment, which has in some sort been continued ever since to this very day. The Method he resolv'd upon was this: Having Summon'd his Parliament, and issued out his Writs, as usual, to the Bishops and Prelates to come to it; he inserted a New Clause into the Bishops Writs, which from the first Word of it is called the Præmunientes Clause, by which he required them to Cite such of their Inferiour Clergy to come along with them to Parliament as he there specified, and thought sufficient to Act for, that is, in Truth, to Grant him Aids in the Name of, the whole Body of the Clergy.

Here therefore began a New Assembly, for I cannot properly call it any thing else, of the Clergy of the Realm: A National Collection summon'd to Represent the whole Body in Parliament; and to Act as the Estate of the Clergy there. In this Capacity they were from thenceforth commonly Cited to that great Council; and consider'd as one of the first, and chiefest Estates of the Realm in Parliament. Sect. 4.
The Parliamentary Convention.

I shall not need to say how unwilling the Clergy were to be drawn into a part of these Great Councils, or what good reason they had for such their unwillingness. A late Author has referr'd this to their Love of their Priviledges, and an over-tenacious adherence to their Spiritual Rights, which exempted them from the Obligation, as they thought, of being summon'd by any Lay-Power. But this was at most but the pretence: The true cause was, that by coming with the Laity to Parliament, they foresaw they should also be Tax'd with them there; and be forced to bear as great, perhaps a greater proportion, of those burdens, than the Laity themselves would do.

It was for fear of this, that they first applied to the Papal Authority to cover them from these Impositions. When that would not do, they recur'd to other Methods. Sometimes they quarrell'd with the manner of their Summons: At others, they came but in small Numbers to Parliament, and then pretended they could do nothing in the absence of the rest of their Brethren. Sometimes they brought such limited Powers with them, as restrained them in a manner, from Acting to any purpose there: At others they had double, or treble Letters of Proxy; some more limited, to shew above-board, others more large to proceed upon in case of an extraordinary Exigence; and to avoid such Inconveniencies as an absolute Refusal to do what was required of them, might be likely to bring upon the Clergy. But the most common and reasonable Excuse was, that the Persons call'd by the King to Parliament, were but a small part of the Body of the Clergy; and therefore instead of Granting what was demanded of them there, they pray'd that they might meet together in a larger proportion in their own Provincial Assemblies, and there in a fuller Body agree upon what they should do.

In this the King was contented to indulge them: So that he carry'd his Point, and had his Aid, he was willing to leave them to their own Way, in the granting of it. And the Clergy, who hoped by these means in time to recover their Liberty, by breaking off from their Parliamentary Attendance altogether, the more readily complied with the King's desires in the one, that so they might be the more easily Excused from the other.

These Provincial Assemblies of our Bishops and Clergy, Convened for these Ends of Supplying the King's Needs, either by confirming what had before been conditionally granted in Parliament, or by granting that here, which they had refused to do there, are what we properly call Convocations; and which at first differ'd from their Provincial Councils, not only in the Members of which they were Composed, and in the manner of their Call to them; but especially, in the end and purpose for which they were Summon'd, and the Business that was done by them; the one being held for State, the other for Church, Affairs. In the one they were called to act as the Ministers of Christ in things pertaining to the Doctrine and Worship of the Church: In the other to Treat as Members of the Commonwealth; and for the good of the Church, as it was incorporated with the State; and thereby exposed to all the Evils and Dangers which should any time fall upon it. Sect. 5.
The Convocation.

At first these Convocations were called by our Metropolitans, at the desire or instance of the King, without any particular Writ or Commission to that purpose.

pose. But when the Method began to be once settled, so that the Clergy would not grant any thing out of their Spiritualties to the King in Parliament, but only in Convocation; then the King thought it needful to fix upon a more certain Way, whereby to secure their meeting in these Assemblies for this End: And so by his Writs to the Archbishops, he as much required their meeting in Convocation, as by those to the Bishops he had required their coming to Parliament before.

Sect. 6.

Thus were these State-Conventions of our Clergy first settled, and their Assemblies fix'd for Civil Matters as well as Ecclesiastical. And their Provincial-Convocations were at the first as distinct from their Provincial-Councils, as their National-Assemblies in Parliament, from their National-Assembly in a Legantine, or Church-Synod. But in process of time a Confusion ensued: And as the meeting of the Clergy in Convocation, and doing that there from the time of K. Edward II. for which K. Edward I. had called them to Parliament, soon lessen'd their Appearance, and lost their Interest there: (The King and the Clergy being in a manner agreed, the one not to come to Parliament, the other not to concern himself whether they came or no, so long as they did his Business elsewhere:) So their frequency of Assembling in Convocation, by degrees, very much lessen'd, tho' it never totally broke, their Meeting and Acting in Provincial-Councils; and put them upon transacting the Business of both, in either. The first beginning of this was Owing to the Exigences of the King's Affairs; who, when the Clergy were met in Council for the proper Business of the Church, began early to send his Commissioners to them, and desire an Aid of them; and which rather than be obliged presently to come together again for that end in Convocation, they were oftentimes content to grant in Council to him.

But our Archbishops kept up the distinction yet longer, on the other side; and either transacted no proper Conciliary Affairs in Convocation; or, if they had any such to transact there, they issued out Conciliary Letters together with their Convocation-Mandates, and caused their Clergy to meet under a double Capacity, by a double Call, for the double Work that was to be done by them when they came together. But even this too, in time, was omitted; and the Archbishop thought it enough, when they were Assembled in Convocation, either by his Authority to require, or by his Consent to permit them to Act in a Conciliary manner also. By this permission or command of his, he made them a Council as well as a Convocation; and that as effectually as by his Letters of Summons, he had been wont to do it before.

Thus the Case stood, when the Act of Submission in the 25th of K. Henry VIII. was passed. Since which the Clergy being restrained from making any Canons or Constitutions, in their Convocations, without the King's Licence; the Power, as to this particular, which was before lodged in the hands of the Metropolitan, is now put into the hands of the Prince: Who having summon'd them as a Convocation for State-purposes (as his Writ shews) has it now in his own Breast, whether he will let them Act at all as a Church-Synod, or no. They are a Convocation by his Writ of Summons; but a Council, properly speaking, they are not, nor can they Legally Act as such, till they have obtain'd the King's Licence so to do.

Having said thus much, in general, with relation to the several kinds of Assemblies of the Clergy of our Church and Realm; I will now go on more particularly to Enquire into the Nature, Rights, and Powers, of the Chiefest of them, and that in this Order:

First, I will Consider what may be necessary to be known, with Relation to the two State-Assemblies of the Clergy:

1. The Parliamentary Convention, and
2. The Provincial Convocation.

Secondly, Of the two more common Ecclesiastical Assemblies:

3. The Diocesan Synod, and
4. The Provincial Council.

1. Of the Parliamentary Convention of the Clergy.

Sect. 7.

I shall not need to say, that when the King designs to hold his Parliament, he is in Order thereunto, to issue out his Writs some convenient time before, for the Summoning of such of the Members of it, as are obliged to pay a Personal Attendance there; and for the Election of those, who are to represent the rest of the Kingdom in it. In pursuance of this Method of calling his Parliament, liament, the King sends a distinct Writ to every Bishop of England, (the Bishop of the Isle of Man only excepted) in which having first declared the Cause of his holding of it, and appointed the time and place of its Assembling; he requires that laying aside all other Affairs, every such Bishop should take care to be personally present at the time and place prefix'd, Nobiscum & cum ceteris ¹ Quibusdam Pralatis, &c. ² arduis & ur- ³ gentibus Nego- ⁴ tiis, &c. ⁵ To Treat and Advise together with himself, and with the rest of the ⁶ Nobiscum ac ⁷ cum Pralatis, ⁸ Magnatibus, ⁹ & Proceribus ¹⁰ prædictis, super ¹¹ actis Negotij, ¹² tractaturi, ve- ¹³ strumq; Consili- ¹⁴ um impensuri. ¹⁵ Brev. Parliam. ¹⁶ Prelates, Great Men, and Nobles, upon the Affairs, which are there to be consulted about.

And thus far the Writ concerns the Bishop alone; and is in substance the same with that of every other Peer, who is summon'd, in like manner, to Parliament. But the Bishop is not only concern'd to come to Parliament himself, but is required to premonish his Clergy to come along with him. And therefore to his own Summons, a farther Clause is added, to Empower and Command him to Summon them: ¹ That he should premonish the (Prior or) Dean and Chapter of his Cathedral Church, the Archdeacons, and all the Clergy of his Diocese; that they the said (Prior or) Dean, and Archdeacons, in their proper Persons; the Chapter by one, and the Clergy by two fitting Proxies, sufficiently Empowered by the said Chapter and Clergy; should by all means be present at the Parliament with him, (to Do) and Consent to those things, which by the blessing of God shall by their common Advice, happen to be Ordained, in the matters aforesaid: And that this he should by no means omit.

Such is the Command which every Archbishop and Bishop receives from the King, with relation to this matter: I cannot tell whether I ought not to observe; ² See Prymmer's Register, p. 7, 8. Part. 1. that in the Diocesses of Coventry and Litchfield, and of Bath and Wells, the Priors and Covents of Coventry and Bath, as well as the Deans and Chapters of Litchfield and Wells, being required heretofore to come to Parliament, they were both put into the Premunitory Clause; and Summon'd after the same manner that the Deans and Chapters of the other Diocesses were. But I must not omit, that in case a Bishop were abroad in any foreign Parts, so that the King's Writ could not be directed to him, nor executed by him; it was wont ³ See Prymmer's Register, p. 9. ib. Electo Menevensi, vel ejus Vices gerenti ipso agente in Partibus transmarinis. to be sent to his Vicar-General, to act in his stead; and by him, the Clergy of every such Diocese were premonished, after the same manner that they should have been by the Bishop himself, if he had been at home.

Nor was there any less care used in the Vacancy of a See, than in the Absence of the Bishop; The Writ ⁴ See Summo- ⁵ nit. 24. Edw. I. being directed to the Dean and Chapter, as Guardians ⁶ Custodi Archie- ⁷ piscopatus Ebor. of the Spiritualties, in the one case, as it was to the Vicar-General in the other. So that still the Clergy of the Diocese were sure to be Summon'd to Parliament; ⁸ Sede Vacante. and required to attend the King in it. ⁹ Sic. 27. Edw. I.

The King's Writ being thus directed to, and received by the Bishop, it was communicated by him, in this manner, to his Diocese: Copies of the Writ were made out, and directed to the Prior, or Dean, of the Chapter, and to the Archdeacons of the Diocese; and a Mandate added to this Effect: That he did by Vertue of the recited Writ, premonish them, and by them the Chapter, and Clergy, that they themselves in Person, and their Chapter and Clergy by their Proctors, should take care to be present at the day, and place, mentioned in the King's Writ, for the Ends and Purposes therein required of them. ¹⁰ Custodibus Episcopatus Lincol. sede Vacante: & Capitulo Ecclesie B. Petri Ebor. Custod. Spir. ejusdem Dioc. sede Vacante— ¹¹ &c. Prym. p. 11.

To secure their Obedience, in this respect, both to their own Mandate, and to the King's Writ; the Bishops sometimes were wont to Command their Clergy, that they should some convenient time before the Session of Parliament, account to them what they had done in pursuance of both. And then the return ¹² Ven. in Christo Patri, &c.— ¹³ Mandatum Vestrum nuper suscepimus in hac verba— ¹⁴ Hujusmodi igitur ¹⁵ Mandato Vestro ¹⁶ in omnibus pre- ¹⁷ rebinus, ut con- ¹⁸ venit. A. 1295 which was made was commonly after this manner: They recited in their Certificate the whole Mandate as sent to them by their Bishop, with the King's Writ included; and added that they would pay a due Obedience, as it befitted them, to his said Mandate: ¹⁹ Regist. Henr. Prior. Cant. fol. 67. which was a kind of Discharge to the Bishop for his having duly Executed the King's Commands, according to the Tenor of the Writ directed to him.

The Clergy having thus made their Return to the Bishop; the Bishop did in like manner certify the King of what he had done, in Obedience to his Command. Of this I have met with an Instrument as low as ²⁰ Append. ad An. 1539. King Henry the Eighth's time; which may serve to shew at once both the ancient Practice, and the occasional continuance of it, in this Particular.

Being thus Summon'd both by the King, and their Bishop, to come to Parliament; the next thing to be done was, to meet together for the choice of their Proctors that were to be sent thither. For this the Dean, or Prior, held his Chapter, and the Archdeacon his Synod; in which the Proctors being chosen; they were sent up up to the Parliament at the time appointed with procuratorial Letters, from the Chapter and Clergy, to Empower them to act in their Names, and on their behalf, in it.

These Letters were directed, for the most part, to the King; tho' sometimes they were only prefaced with a General Address to All Persons whom it might Concern: But still the substance of them was, "To Make, Ordain and Appoint, the "Persons who were sent by them, their Proctors, to appear on their behalf in Parliament; there to Treat with the Prelates, and Great Men, of the Realm, of the "things to be debated in it, for the good of the King and Kingdom; and to con- "sent to what should be agreed to, on their behalf; and to engage themselves "to abide by what their Proctors should do, under the Caution (many times) of "all their Goods."

Of these procuratorial Letters (if we may give Credit to that ¹ formulary of calling the Clergy of England to Parliament, enter'd in the Register of Archbishop Arundel, almost 300 years ago) there were usually two Copies seal'd to every Proxie; one of which he was himself to keep, the other was to be delivered to the Clerk of the Parliament, to be Enrolled by him. And sometimes besides these Ordinary Proxies, which were wont to be more restrained, they had ² one or two of a larger Power, which were secretly committed to them, and not without great need to be either shewn, or used, by them.

Having thus received their Commissions to attend upon the King in Parliament, it is not to be doubted, but that accordingly in the time of King Edward I. they did do it. How long they continued to meet and act there, is a Question which I shall not undertake to determine. The Conjecture of our learned ³ Heylin (a Person well versed in these matters) is what at present seems to me the most probable; that about the time of King Henry VI. they began to leave off being made use of in any business; till at length by degrees they were not enquired after, nor did come at all to it. To this we may presume the Clergy themselves gave encouragement; who always look'd upon their Parliamentary Attendance as a Burden and a Grievance, and were therefore glad, to get free from it; tho' in this they are thought by some of our modern Church States-men, to have been out in their Politicks.

But tho' the Lower Clergy therefore seem not to have come to Parliament for above 200 years past, yet the King has nevertheless still continued to keep up his Right to their Attendance; and the Bishops have upon Occasion continued to pay Obedience to his Writ, by their Execution of it. The premunitory Clause is still the same, (excepting where the Reformation made by King Henry VIII. has alter'd it as to the Priors of the Cathedral Churches now all turn'd into Deans) that it has been for Three hundred years past: And that Clause has continued to be, more or less, Executed, down to the very last Century. A late Author ⁴ has furnished us with Instances to shew, that not only the Bishops sent their Mandates to their Deans and Archdeacons, but that they Obeyed them too; by choosing their Proctors, and Empowering them to Act for them, to the end of King Henry the Seventh's Reign. From the Records of the Church of York ⁵ it appears that they continued to do the same to the latter end of King Henry the Eighth. In those of the Church of Norwich ⁶ we have the like Evidence, for the time of Queen Elizabeth. And in ⁷ Litchfield, an instance of the Bishops Executing this Clause at the latter end of King James the First's time. In the Church of ⁸ Lincoln we find this Clause to have been Executed yet later, by the Authority of Archbishop Laud, Anno 1640. Whether any notice since that hath been taken of it, I cannot tell: But as the Authority upon which these Persons Acted is the same now that it ever was, so it cannot be doubted, but that every Bishop to whom such a Writ is directed, may legally proceed after the same manner in it; tho' a long desuetude, added to the great Change which has been made in the Reason of the thing it self, seems to have rendred it not only needleless, but inexpedient, so to do.

While the Proctors of the Clergy were not only chosen for the Parliament, but were required to Attend upon it, and Act in it; they were sometimes wont upon their return, to account to the Clergy what they had done in pursuance of that power which they had granted to them. ⁹ To this end the Clergy were again Assembled, at the end of the Parliament, to hear, receive, and put in effectual Execution, what had been ordained and done, by the Prelates, Archdeacons, and their own Proctors. But the backwardness of the Clergy, in granting Aids to the King in Parliament, which in a little time brought the giving of Subsidies wholly within the Power of their own Provincial Convocations, soon put an end to this Practice; of which, therefore, not many Instances, I conceive, remain upon Record to us.

And thus have we seen how by the Bishops Writs alone, the Clergy of the Realm were generally call'd to Parliament. There is yet one part of it remaining to be accounted for, I mean the Regular Prelates; the number of which that were Personally called to Parliament, as it was not very great, so it may suffice to say, that they were commonly Summon'd thither by several Writs specially directed to each of them; after the same manner (excepting the Premunitory Clause) that the Bishops were wont to be.

But tho' this therefore were the Method first settled by King Edward the First, and which has still continued to be the stated manner of Summoning the Clergy to Parliament; yet a time there was, in which this alone was found not to have been sufficient, to oblige them to a due Attendance upon the Service of the King, and the Affairs of the Kingdom, in it. And therefore to strengthen these several Summons made by the Premunitory Clauses in the Bishops Writs, a farther Care was taken, to issue out two Provincial Parliamentary Writs to the two Archbishops; requiring them to add their Mandates to the Clergy of their Provinces, not to fail to do, what the King had, by his other Summons, required of them. The Sum of these Writs was this: "That the King having resolved at such a "certain time to hold his Parliament, upon the Account of divers great Affairs, which especially touched himself, and the state of his Kingdom; and therein to Confer, and Treat with the Archbishops and the other Prelates and great Men, and Nobles of his Kingdom; had thereupon sent his Writs to the several Bishops of his Province, and commanded them that (at the Day and Place appointed) they should not fail to be personally present, to Treat with the other Prelates and great Men, upon the said Affairs, and to give their Advice with relation thereunto: And that farther he had commanded them, to premonish the Deans, Priors, and Chapters of their Cathedral Churches, the Arch-Deacons, and all the Clergy of their Diocesses; That their said Priors, Deans, and Arch-Deacons, in their own Persons; their Chapters by One, and their Clergy by Two Proxies, sufficiently empowered by their respective Chapters and Clergy, should, together with their Bishops, attend at his Parliament; to do, and consent to what should there be Ordained, with relation to the Affairs before-mentioned. Which Recital being thus made, it then follow'd to the Archbishop to this effect: "That the King being unwilling that his Affairs, to be Treated on in the said Parliament, should be hindred by reason of the Absence of the said Deans, Priors, and Arch-Deacons, did therefore command and intreat him, That he should cause the Deans and Priors of the Cathedral Churches, and the Arch-Deacons of his whole Province, to come in their proper Persons; and the Chapters of the Cathedral Churches by One, and the Clergy of every Diocese by two Proctors a-piece, to the Place, and at the Time appointed; to treat of, and consent to, what should there be ordered in the Premises.

This was the Form of those Writs which were sometimes sent to the two Archbishops,² or to their Prior and Chapters, if the Archbishopricks themselves were Vacant; to secure the Attendance of the Clergy at the Parliament: The Archbishops having received them, did issue out their *Mandates*² to the several Bishops of their Provinces accordingly; requiring them peremptorily, to Cite those of their Diocesses, whom it concern'd, to obey the King's Orders; and to certify them of the Execution of this their Mandate, and return to them at the Day and Place appointed, the Names of those whom they had Cited to come to the Parliament in pursuance thereof.

When these kind of Summons to Parliament first began, and how long they continued, I shall not pretend exactly to define: The most early which I have met with, was that directed to Archbishop Winchelsea, in the Fifth of Edward the Second; (probably the very first of this nature) as the last was that of the Fourteenth of Edward the Third; after which, if Mr. Pryn⁴ has been exact in his search, there are no more upon Record; and therefore we may conclude, That about that time, the King began to omit them; being little concern'd whether the Clergy came duly or not to Parliament, so long as they both came to, and did his Business, according to his desire, in their Convocations.

Parliament, were obliged with great Exactness to attend upon it; and that at the Day on which the King had appointed it to begin. Infomuch that the Bishop of Worcester¹ being detained by some necessary Business of his Church, which he feared might hinder him from coming to the beginning of it, he was forced to send his Excuse in a very Dutiful manner to the King, by a special Messenger, Mr. Nicholas de Bore; "who was Empower'd to give his Majesty a more full account of his Concerns, and to beseech him to bear with a short delay; the Bishop engaging himself to consent to whatsoever should be ordained in that Assembly, before his Arrival.

Sect. 8.

If any Bishop or Prelate were under such Circumstances that they could not come in Person to the Parliament at all, in that case they were wont to appear and act by Proctors deputed in their stead. These were Empowered by Procuratorial Letters, directed sometimes to the King himself; sometimes only pre-faced in general; but still the substance of them was,² "To Commission the Proxies who were constituted thereby, jointly and separately to appear on their behalf before the King in his Parliament; and to treat with him, and the Nobles and Great Men, and Prelates of the Realm; and to Consent in their Names to what should be ordain'd, by the King, his Nobles and Council; and to alledge upon all Occasions the Cause of their Absence, and make Excuse for it.

How the Lower Clergy (being thus assembled) acted in Parliament, and in what Affairs their Consent was thought to have been necessary, it is not easy to Determine. If in a matter so Obscure, I may be allow'd to offer my present Thoughts, I conceive that the Bishops and Clergy, like the Lords and Commons, deliberated of such Matters in which they were properly concern'd, in a separate Assembly, by themselves; which having done, they left it to their Archbishops and Bishops to deliver their Sense, and to give or refuse their Assent, for them, in Parliament. For, to the best of my Observation, I cannot find that they were wont to appear Personally there like the Lay-Commons, to transact their own Affairs; and in many cases 'tis evident, that they referr'd it to their Bishops to Petition, and Act for them.

Rot. Parl. 3.
Rich. II.
Num. 38.

As for the things to which they were called to Consent, they were chiefly, if not only, those which concern'd their own, or the Churches legal and proper Rights. In other matters, their Consent was so little expected, that their express Dissent, was not thought sufficient to put a stop to them. Of this, we have a famous instance in the Third of Richard the Second, in which, when it was resolved to enlarge the Powers of the Justices of Peace, and the Prelates and Clergy made express Protestations against it, that it had not, nor should ever pass with their Consent;—Answer was made for the King, that the King would not forbear for their Protestations to make his Justices as he was wont, and by his Coronation-Oath was obliged to do. And even in matters of a more near relation to the Church, yet if the Interest and Liberties of the State were no less concern'd, the King and his Parliament did what they thought needful to the support of it, notwithstanding their Remonstrances against it; as in the Cases of Mortmain, Provisions, Ecclesiastical Courts and Causes, Tythes, &c. might easily be made appear.

And thus have I given such an Account as was needful to clear the nature of this first sort of the Assembly of the Clergy; and which, by this time, I suppose, will not be thought to have been improperly called by me, their Parliamentary Convention: It being indeed a proper part of the Parliament of England; and making up one of the first and chiefest Estates of it. I shall only stop so long, as to offer a few necessary Observations upon what has been Discours'd, as to this matter, and so go on to the other kind of Convocation, which I am in the next place to consider.

First Then, From what has been said, it is plain, that this Assembly was a Convention of a civil Nature, tho' composed of Ecclesiastical Persons. For besides that the other two Estates, the Nobility and Commons, are meerly Lay; this Meeting, as I before said, was clearly a part of the High Court of Parliament, which surely is far from being an Ecclesiastical Council. Nor is it any Exception against this, that possibly Ecclesiastical Affairs may sometimes be found to have been transacted in it; and with which the Other Estates have not medled. For tho' since the time of King Edward the First, (that is since the time that our Parliament was settled into that form under which we are now considering of it) this has but rarely happen'd; yet would that only prove that the Archbishops and Bishops Bishops, took the Opportunity of their being called together to the Parliament, to transact some Affairs among themselves, in a Conciliary manner; and in that acted not by vertue of the Kings Writ, but at the Archbishop's command, or by a voluntary consent among themselves, in what they did. But considering this Assembly as called by the King's Writ, and meeting upon his Business with the other Estates of the Realm in Parliament; and acting in their Parliamentary Capacity there; tho' (as the two Houses now do) they might, and I conceive they did, separately meet and debate by themselves, yet was it still as a part of that great Council; and so their Assembly must even then be look'd upon as a Civil, and not as an Ecclesiastical, Assembly.

Secondly, As this Convention was in its Nature and End, a meer Civil Assembly, so was it, in the next place, a National Convention. It was called from all Parts of the Realm; and that in order to represent the Whole Clergy of the Realm, and to Act on their behalf there. And accordingly it appears, that while the Premunitory Summons was not only issued out by the Prince, but was actually Obeys'd by the Clergy, they came from both Provinces alike to the Parliament, in the same manner that the Bishops, who were Assembled by the same *Writ*s, continue at this day to do. Sect. 13.
So also Rights, &c. p. 226, 228.

As therefore the High Court of Parliament is in its Frame and Constitution, a National Assembly; so must the Clergy which were Summon'd to it be look'd upon as designed to Represent the whole Body of the Clergy of England; and not those of One Part, or Province only, as, in their other Convocations, we shall hereafter see that they did.

Thirdly, From what has been said, it evidently appears, that as the Parliament is, in general, the Great Council of the King and Kingdom; so this Assembly of the Clergy, thus called, must be accounted to have been the same; a part of the Council of the King and Realm, as the Lords and Commons are. Sect. 14.

Hence we see that the whole Direction of it, is seated Originally in the King, and entrusted to his Management. 'Tis he who Summons it, who appoints both the place and time of its Assembling; and when he sees fit, either Prorogues it to a farther season, or wholly Dissolves it. Whenever he pleases he comes, and sits in it: He requires all the three Estates to Attend upon him; commands their Resolutions to be laid before him; and by his supreme Authority either Confirms them into Laws, or utterly disannulls them, as he sees cause to approve, or not, of their Deliberations.

In this Council, neither the Clergy, nor either of the other Estates can conclude of any thing by themselves. They may debate asunder, may transmit their Resolutions to one another; but every part must consent before any thing can be done to bind the whole Kingdom, or be so much as presented to the King for his Royal Assent in Parliament.

And from all which the Conclusion is plain and certain, that this Parliamentary Convention, was only a part of a much greater Body; which could Establish nothing by it self, but was to Treat and Consent, together with the other Estates of the Realm, in Parliament, and to Act in Conjunction with them; and, at last, to be ruled by the Royal Authority which called them together, and without which all their Debates were of no Force. Let us now see, what the Nature of that Other Assembly of the Clergy is; which, to distinguish it from this I have hitherto been speaking of, I before called

2. The Provincial CONVOCATION.

That the Realm of England, with relation to its Ecclesiastical Politie, is divided into two Provinces, under the Power and Conduct of two Metropolitans, the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, every one knows, who knows any thing at all of the Estate either of our Church or Kingdom. Now the Assembly of the Prelates and Clergy of either of these Provinces, under their respective Archbishop, for the dispatch of such Affairs as the King requires them to meet about, and proposes to them being Assembled, and which relate to the Church as it is a Part and Member of the State; is what I call our Provincial Convocation, and what since the disuse of the other before-mentioned, and of our Provincial Synods, hereafter to be Considered, is, in General, denoted by the Word CONVOCATION. Sect. 15.

How these Convocations have been Assembled; of what Persons they have Consisted; after what manner they have Acted; and how their present Constitution, does in all these particulars differ from what it was before that Submission of the Clergy Anno 25th of Henry the Eighth, of which I shall hereafter speak, are points not only in themselves very fit to be Considered, in such a Discourse as this; but are withal so necessary for the true stating of the Questions under debate, that I shall not think it at all beside my purpose, to insist particularly upon them.

Sec. 16.

It is not to be doubted, but that our Archbishops had heretofore a sufficient Power of their own, to Summon the Clergy of their Provinces, at such times as either the Canons of the Church directed, or the Necessities of the King's Affairs, required them so to do. This, we are sure, they did do, and our Princes readily allow'd of it: But especially from the time of which I am now discoursing, and from which I have dated the Establishment of the other Convocation, the Reign of K. Edward the First, the power of the Metropolitan to Assemble his Provincial Clergy, was so well settled, that should the Prince have opposed it, he would not only have been thought therein to have invaded the Liberties of the Church, but would probably have been treated by them as one that did so.

Indeed so proper a part was this accounted of the Archbishop's Prerogative, that even the King himself could no otherwise call one of these Convocations, than by making use of his Authority in the doing of it. And tho' when the King Comanded the Archbishop to hold a Convocation, he was, for the most part, regularly Obey'd in it; yet, should a Dispute have risen, and the Metropolitan have refused to Summon his Clergy in Obedience to his Writ, such was the power of the Church in those days, that we may confidently Conclude they would not have dared to come together, without his Leave, or against his Will.

An eminent Instance of this we meet with in the time of King Richard the Second,¹ when the Commons having granted to the King, Two Fifteenths upon this Condition, that the Clergy should, in their Convocation, give two Tenths; the Archbishop in open Parliament protested against such an Imposition; and declared that he would never more treat with his Clergy about granting any Subsidy to the King, or call a Convocation to any such purpose, till that Condition in the Grant of the Commons, were rejected, and razed out of it.

The King comply'd with the desire of the Clergy, and caused that whole Clause to be razed out of the Grant of the Commons; and the Clergy thereupon agreed to a Tenth; the one half absolute, the other under some certain Limitations. This was done the 19th of December 1384. Upon the 15th of January following the King wanting a farther Supply, issued out a new Writ to the *Archbishop*² for another Convocation to be held before the Mid-Lent following. The Archbishop being Grieved at this, wrote with great Instance not only to the King, to withdraw his Writ, but to the Chancellor and Treasurer, to the Bishop of Landaffe the King's Confessor, and the other Court-Bishops, to perswade him so to do:³ Concluding, that he would rather be ruined himself, then expose the Clergy to such Exactions; And I believe, says he, that the Clergy cannot be called together, unless I write to them to that purpose.

'Tis true either his Courage fail'd him in this particular, or he was prevailed with to change his Resolution: For the Convocation met, tho' the King got nothing by it. But however this shews what the Archbishop's Opinion was; and we need not doubt but that he well understood a matter in which his Metropolitanical Authority was so highly concern'd.

As for the Clergy, they were so far of the same Opinion, that Archbishop Reynolds having once inserted the King's Writ, at length, into his own Mandate; tho' he call'd them together by his Ecclesiastical Authority, yet being met, they enter'd their Remonstrance against⁴ this, as well as against some other particulars; affirming that it was an Injury to their Ecclesiastical Liberty, and tended to the subversion of it, to have the King at all to meddle with their Assembling: And Cited no less than a Provincial Ordinance, made before in the time of Archbishop Winchelsea, to the same purpose; That no Convocation should be held in time coming, upon the pretence of any such commands.

It is therefore certain, That these Convocations, tho' not strictly in their own Sect. 18. nature Ecclesiastical Assemblies, yet have always been convened by an Ecclesiastical Authority; nor is there, I believe, so much as a single Instance to be given of their having been call'd by any other: And tho' the King has been always in possession of a right, to require the Archbishop to summon his Provincial Clergy, whenever he has thought it for his service so to do; yet the very Terms in which he was wont to require this of him, plainly shew by what Authority the Convocation was accounted to meet; ¹ We intreat and command you, says he, to call together the Bishops of your Province, to appear before you, in such a Place, and at such a Time as you shall think fit. So the Old Writs generally ran; and the Archbishop thereupon required the Bishop of London, by his own Ecclesiastical Authority, to Summon them accordingly: ² Quocirca, &c. to confirm all, the Bishop of London having received the Archbishop's Mandate, to this purpose, took no other notice of the King's Writ, than barely to recite it, as it lay in the Archbishop's Mandate; and so went on: ³ "By Vertue and Authority of the most Reverend Letter (the Archbishop's Mandate) peremptorily to Cite each Bishop of the Province to appear, at the time and place appointed therein for their Assembling."

And accordingly all the other Instruments which relate to the Calling of these Convocations, agree in this particular; and shew, that even when the King required such a Convocation to be held, yet it was by the Archbishop's Authority that it was called, and held: For the Bishop of London having, in Obedience to his Primate's Command, issued out his Mandate to every Bishop of the Province to come himself, and to bring his Clergy along with him to the Convocation; each Bishop in his Diocese, sent to his Dean and Chapter, and Archdeacon, or Archdeacons, thereupon; And required them to put the Archbishop's Orders in Execution; and then 'certified the Archbishop of what he had done in this manner; "That by the Authority and Force of his Letters which he there recited, or rather of his most reverend Command; he had summoned his Clergy, and would come himself, as he was required." And the Bishop of London returned his Certificate at the meeting of the Synod in these Terms: "That by Authority of the Archbishop's Letters, he had summon'd the Bishops of the Province, to the Day, Business, and Place expressed in the said Letters; And by the same Authority had commanded and enjoined them, &c. and all this without taking the least notice of the King's Writ, or of any thing done by him, by vertue thereof."

Hence in all the Acts of these Convocations, when met, it appears that they were called, and carried on, as the Archbishop's Convocations; And so they were stiled too, and that by the King himself, in all those Instruments in which he had any occasion to speak of them. And to put it beyond all question, that these Convocations were wont to be held, not by the King's Writ, but the Archbishop's Mandate; whenever he pleased, he not only prorogued them from time to time, but, by his own Power, dissolved them too; and that tho' call'd and held by him at the King's command.

Such is the Authority, by which these provincial Convocations were wont to be Assembled heretofore; and by the very same Authority it is, that they continue to be held now. Nor has the Statute of the 25th of Henry the 8th, had any other influence on the state of these Assemblies, as to this matter, than only this; That whereas before, the Archbishop might, whenever he pleased, without any other Direction, by his own proper Motion, have summon'd his Clergy to his Synod; now he may not do it, but by the King's Writ to warrant him therein: But as for the power of calling of them, that is still left to him as it was before; the Mandates run in the same Form; and by his Summons it is, and by no other, that our Convocations do assemble at this day.

let us, in the nextplace, enquire into the Method of calling of them. I have already observed, that since the Act of the 25th of Henry the 8th, the first step toward the assembling of one of these Convocations, must proceed from the King; without whose Writ the Hands of the Metropolitan are now tied up, so that he is no longer at liberty (as he once seems to have been) to call the Bishops and Clergy of his Province to him at his own Will. I must now add, that when the King does by his Writ, require the Metropolitan to Assemble his Convocation, he is, by the same Law, oblig'd to do it: The intention of which being to transfer the whole power of Assembling the Convocation, which was before divided between the Prince and the Primate, to the King alone; It must therefore be understood, not only to restrain the Archbishop from summoning of it without the King's leave, but to oblige him to do it, at his Command. Nor indeed is this any more then what the King was in possession of long before: The Clergy in their submission confess it, and our History clearly delivers it to us. For, notwithstanding the struggle of the Clergy against our Princes meddling at all in this Matter, which I before mentioned, and of which I shall give a more full Account hereafter; yet certain it is, that both Archbishop Peckham and Winchelsea had summon'd these sort of Convocations at the command of King Edward the First; and that all the following Archbishops, from Archbishop Reynolds downward, did continue in like manner so to do. ¹ As for Archbishop Peckham, he not only inserted the King's Letter at large into his Mandate, Anno 1282 (which so much offend- ed the Clergy in the Case of Walter Reynolds) but professed himself in Obeying the King in that Matter, to do no more than what he thought he was in Duty bound to do. ² And which ought to be more consider'd in a Man of his Character; he not only thus summoned his Clergy at the King's command, but for the more speedy and sure Assembling of them, he broke through the Formality of executing his Summons by the Bishop of London, to whom that Office belong'd; and left it to the King to send his Letters by his own Messengers to them, ³ and to add his own Royal command in this Case to the others Ecclesiastical Authority.

Sect. 22.

'Tis true, Archbishop Winchelsea was more stiff, both in opposing that King, and in Exalting the Ecclesiastical Authority; but yet ⁴ Instances we have still remaining upon Record to shew, how far even he comply'd with his Demands in this Particular: And tho' under a weak Prince, and a new Archbishop, a stand was made, and some endeavours used by the Clergy to free themselves from all pre- tence of Convening at the King's command; yet in a little time, they setled again upon the Old Bottom: Insomuch that from King Edward the Third's time downward, I have not met with any one Archbishop who refused to call his Clergy together, whenever the King insisted upon it, and by his Writ required his so doing.

How the King's Writ to the Archbishop in this case was penn'd, I have in part before observ'd. The usual Form was this; Having first declared the Rea- sons, for which he thought such an Assembly was necessary to be held; in the next place, "To desire and command the Archbishop, That considering the pressing Needs and Occasions before-mentioned; he would cause his Suffragans, &c. to be cal- led together in the usual manner, to appear before him, in the place there mentioned, or any other which he should judge to be more expedient; and that with all convenient speed. To which oftentimes was added, an Engagement to him to press his Clergy, "by the best Arguments he could use, to a liberal supply of his Needs, and to certifie "into the Exchequer, the quantity, and Circumstances of what should be granted by "them.

This was the substance of the King's Writ to the Archbishop: Indeed as to the Circumstance of Time, that began, by degrees, to be more limited. For First, the King prescribed a certain Term, within which he should cause his Convocation to be Assembled: Afterwards he appointed the very day to him. But in this, the Archbishops heretofore took their own Liberty, and fixed upon another day, or some longer time than what had been prescribed to them. Howbeit, by de- grees, even in this too, the King's Authority prevailed; and the Royal Writ, not only assigned the very day for the Clergy to meet upon, but was punctually o- beyed in it.

When therefore the Statute of the 25th of Henry the 8th, put the calling of the Convocation under the direction of the King's Writ; it restrain'd indeed the Metropolitan from convening it by his own power, without the Prince's Authority and and Allowance, as he had sometimes been wont to do before; but it made no other change in the manner of assembling it: The whole process of which continues in the same Method, and almost in the very same Words, that before were used; And what that Form was, I now proceed to consider.

In the Province of York, the Archbishop having received the King's Writ, immediately sends out his Mandates to his Suffragan Bishops, to come to his Convocation, at the Time and Place appointed by it; and to summon their respective Clergy to do likewise. But in the Province of Canterbury, a more solemn method is used: The Archbishop sends his Mandate to the Bishop of London, (or in his absence, to his Vicar-general) reciting the King's Writ; and commanding him thereupon in his Name, and by his Authority, to require all the several Bishops of his Province, to appear before him at the Time and Place which he thereby appoints; and to summon their Clergy, who are to come to his Convocation, to be ready in like manner to appear before him. Sect. 23.

The Bishop of London; (or in the Vacancy of that See) the Bishop of Winchester; or in case of a Vacancy in both, which has sometimes happen'd, the Bishop of Lincoln; having received this Mandate from the Archbishop, forthwith dispatches a Copy of it to the Bishop, or Vicar-general of every Diocese within the Province of Canterbury. And then adds, Quarum, &c. "That by the Vigor and Authority of the most Reverend Letters before re-cited, he does by the Tenor of these Presents, cite the Reverend Father, (to whom he sends them) and by him, All and singular the Persons specified in the said most Reverend Letters, as far as concerns himself, his City and Diocese; to appear at the Day and Place before-mentioned, to do and receive, as the said most Reverend Letters denote. And further enjoins him, by the Authority aforesaid, at the Day and Place appointed, to certify the most Reverend Father, or his Commissaries, of what he has done in this matter, by his Letters Patents, containing distinctly and openly, the Names of the Persons that have been cited by him thereupon. *Regist. The Bishop of every Diocese, having received this Mandate from the Bishop of London, in Obedience thereunto, presently takes care to have it Obey'd, either by Executing it himself, or by sending a Copy of it to his Official; and then "Committing it to him, and requiring of him, to Execute it, according to the whole Force, Form, and Effect of it, with all convenient speed: And to certify him within a certain time, which he thereby limits, of what he has done, or caused to be done in the Premises. This the Official, or his Commissary-General does; and so the Persons are all duly Cited to, and Chosen, for this Convocation. Sect. 24.

Who they were that, of old, were wont to be summon'd to these Assemblies, the Forms of the Writs by which they were called, will not suffer us to doubt: In which the Archbishop requires the Bishop of London to Cite, first, the Bishops of every Diocese within his Province; "and by them the Deans or Priors of their Cathedral Churches, and the several Chapters of the same; the Archdeacons, Abbots and Priors, having Convents under them; and other Prelates of Churches, Exempt, and not Exempt, together with the Clergy of their Diocesses: And that the said Bishops or Vicars general, the Deans, Abbots, Priors, Archdeacons, with the other Prelates of Churches Exempt and not Exempt, should appear in their proper Persons; Each Chapter by One, and the Clergy of each Diocese by Two sufficient Proctors, to act for them. These were the Antient Members of our Convocations, from the time that they were called by the King's Writ: And the same still continue so to be; only with this difference, that there being now no Priors of Cathedral Churches, the Deans only are mentioned; and the Regular Clergy, which before made a considerable part of these Assemblies, since the dissolution of their Religious Houses, are totally omitted. Sect. 25.

The day of the Convocation being come, the Archbishop was with great state and solemnity attended to, and received at, the Place where it was to be held. This, in the Province of Canterbury, has commonly been St. Paul's Cathedral, London; where Mass being said, and a Sermon preach'd, the Convocation was commonly begun in the Chappel of the Virgin Mary, at the Head of the Quire of Sect. 26.

of that Church, and from thence adjourn'd to the Chapter-House, and continued there.

And here, first of all, the Bishop of London was wont to exhibit his Certificate to the Archbishop himself, of the Execution of his Mandate, in Citing of all Persons concern'd to appear before him in Convocation: Which being Read, the Archbishop usually appointed some Commissioners to receive the Certificates of the other Bishops; and to examin the procuratorial Letters of the Chapters and Clergy, and assign'd a time for the doing of it.

Sect. 27. How these Proxies differ'd from those which were sent up to the Parliamentary Convocation; the several Forms, still remaining of them, sufficiently shew. I shall only observe, That as those were commonly directed to the King; so these were, in like manner, to the Archbishop: As those empower'd their Proctors to act with the Bishops, Great Men, and Lords in Parliament; so these empower'd them to treat with the Prelates and Clergy in Convocation; and to consent to such things as should be concluded by them. And, as in the other Convention, if any who was required to come in Person to it, could not appear there, he deputed some one in his stead, to alledge the cause of his absence, and to act on his behalf; so in this Convocation, if any Prelate, Dean, or Archdeacon, came not himself, he sent up his Proctor to act for him; and desired, in this Case, the Archbishop, as in the other, the King, to allow of him.

Sect. 28. These Preliminaries being over, if any Persons concern'd to come to the Convocation, neither appear'd at it themselves, nor deputed any others to Act in their stead, the Archbishop pronounced them Contumacious; and Decreed that the Convocation should proceed in its Business, notwithstanding their absenting of themselves from it.

And now the Archbishop, as President of his Convocation, usually declared to them for what Reasons he had call'd them; and required them to debate maturely concerning them: And then, for the most part, the King sent his Commissioners to them, to lay before them the Necessities of the Government, and to Exhort them to a ready and liberal supply of them.

To deliberate of these things, the whole Convocation, at first, both met, and debated together: If any greater difficulties arose, the Archbishop directed them, to go aside into several Committees, and consider with themselves what was fit to be done, and to report their Opinions to him. Thus in the Convocation of 1296,¹ They divided into IV Bodies, and consulted; the Bishops by themselves; the Deans, and Archdeacons by themselves; the Religious Clergy, Abbots, Priors, and other Prelates by themselves; and the Proctors of the Clergy by themselves. Afterwards, they divided into III Parts²: And this continued to be the more common Method for some time. But still they were only occasionally dismissed by the Archbishop to some part of the Church, to advise together, and agree what they would do, upon some more difficult Matters, and so they came together again.

How they managed their Debates upon these Occasions, tho' we are not particularly inform'd, yet may we reasonably Conjecture; They agreed upon some proper Person to be, for that time, the Chairman of their Committee,⁴ and by him were both directed in their Consultation, and made Report to the Archbishop, and Bishops, of their Resolutions. Of this, the Acts of our Ancient Convocations give us several clear Intimations; in which the Dean of the Arches, or some other of the Archbishops Officials, is commonly found reporting the Conclusions of the Clergy to the Archbishop, without any manner of Choice mention'd, or Title extraordinary given him upon that Account. Sometimes two Persons together⁵ have been employ'd to this purpose; and sometimes, in the procees of the same Convocation,⁶ two distinct Prolocutors have been appointed to discharge this Office for them.

Whilst the ¹ Regular Clergy continued to deliberate by themselves, they also had their Chairman, as well as the Seculars, to moderate in their Committees, and to make report of their Resolutions. But for any certain Person solemnly chosen to manage the Debates either of the one, or of the other, as a distinct part, or body, of the Convocation, we meet with no instance of it, till Archbishop Chicheleys time, that is, till near the middle of the Fifteenth Century. In effect, the first Convocation, in which I have yet observ'd any Prolocutor of the Lower Clergy to have been chosen, at the beginning of their Session, is in that of 1425; in which the Acts of the Synod ² tell us, "That the Archbishop having declared the ² Convocat. Anno 1425. fol. xl. b. Regist. Chicheley A. C. cause of the Convocation the Second day of its Assembling; the Deans, Archdeacons, and Proctors of the Chapters and Clergy, at the command of the most Reverend Father, withdrew into the Lower-house, under the Chapter-house, to Treat of the said Causes, and to chuse out from among themselves, one Referendary, or Prolocutor, who, in all their stead, might deliver their Sence, and carry back the Answer that should be made to them. And the famous Lyndewood, was the Person who, upon this Occasion, was chosen by them.

But tho', in this Convocation, they, at the Archbishop's Command, chose a Prolocutor, yet did not this make it a constant Custom for them from thenceforth so to do. In the very next Convocation, ³ Lyndewood in the name of the Clergy, intimated indeed to the Archbishop what their Opinion was: but there is no Account that any choice was made of him, for any such purpose as before; nor is the Title of Referendary, or Prolocutor, here given to him, as it was in that other Convocation. In several Convocations after, either no notice is taken of any such Person at all; or none of any that was chosen, by the Archbishop's direction, to be a constant Prolocutor to them. And that none was so appointed, we have this Argument to assure us, that in the Convocation of 1438, Mr. Thomas Beckinton ⁴ is mentioned as their Prolocutor, in their first Session; and in the next Session of the same Convocation, both the Office, and Character, is ascribed to another Person, Mr. Jo. Lindefield, Bekynton being still alive, and a Member of their House. Which therefore, as I conceive, does evidently shew that they had only made choice of Bekynton, as they had been wont to do of others, to be their Chairman for that Occasion: And that now, he being absent; or, for some other reasons, which at this distance we cannot Judge of, they agreed upon the other, for the same purpose, and after the same manner.

Thus stood this matter during the whole time of Archbishop Chicheley; and so it continued in that of his Successor, John Stafford; as far as I can judge by the only Convocation, of which I have met with any Acts, during his Presidency, ⁵ Anno 1444. and in which, tho' Mr. William Bycomill, Official of the Archbishop's Court, be stiled Prolocutor of the Clergy, and Officiated as such; yet there is no intimation given of his Election to that Office, or any Command recorded of the Archbishop to any such purpose.

But what was hitherto a matter of private choice, rather than of publick notice, now became a standing Act of the Convocation. The Proctors of the Clergy, which before had only gone aside Occasionally to consult among themselves in some matters of a more than ordinary Importance; and, for the rest, transacted their Affairs together with the Bishops and Prelates; and even in Archbishop Chicheley's time, pass'd some whole Convocations, without ever separating, or going aside at all, now began to act in a Body by themselves; tho' still subject to the direction of the Archbishop and Bishops, and ready upon all Occasions to attend upon them, and make report of their proceedings to them. For this they had been wont to agree upon some of their own Members to moderate their debates, and to transact their Affairs with the Archbishop and Bishops in their Names; and the Archbishop and his Brethren, instead of opposing, had seem'd rather to give countenance to it. And now under the next Archbishop, the Custom began to be solemnly introduced, which has ever since continued: Who not only commanded them to go to their own House, and chuse their Prolocutor, but having so done to return and present him to him. ⁶ Vid. Act. Convoc. 1452. Registr. Kemp. fol. 219. &c. This they first did, as far as I have observ'd, in the Convocation ⁶ of 1452. when Mr. John Stokeys, Official of the Archbishop's Court, was both chosen and presented by them to this Office; and so continued to be Elected, and admitted to the same Employ in their following Convocations, for Eleven years together.

How this, at first, was done, we may in some measure learn from what is recorded of it in the Acts of our Convocations. In the Convocation of 1460, the Rules of chusing and presenting the Prolocutor ⁷ were either not yet perfectly Settled, or not yet sufficiently understood : For it is there said that the Archbishop having commanded the Clergy of the Lower-house, in the Third Session, to go to their House and chuse their Prolocutor ; in the next Session, they came up to the Upper-house, and conferr'd with the Archbishop, of, and concerning, certain Articles touching the Election of a Prolocutor. In conclusion of which the Archbishop commanded all those of the Lower-house, that they should repair thither and chuse a Prolocutor. This they did, and chose Mr. John Stokelys, Official of the Court of Arches, and presented him to the Archbishop, Bishops, and Prelates. He would have disabled himself for the Office ; but at the command of the most Reverend Father, he accepted of it.

cat. ib. fol. 18. a.

In 1463, the most Reverend the Archbishop ⁸ commanded the Deans of the Cathedral Churches, the Archdeacons and Proctors of the Clergy, to go to the Lower-house, under the Chapter-house, the place assigned to them, and that where they were wont to sit, to chuse a Prolocutor : And Mr. John Stokelys was again chosen by them and presented to the most Reverend Father, and his Brethren, by William Say, Dean of Pauls ; which Presentation the Archbishop admitted of.

⁹ Registr. Morton. Arch.
Cant. fol. 34.

In Archbishop Morton's Convocation 1486, the most Reverend Father ⁹ pro Tribunali sedens, sent away the Clergy to chuse themselves a Prolocutor ; which being done, and the Person chosen presented before the most Reverend Father, and his Brethren, he was admitted, and accepted of, by the Archbishop.

How this Election and Admission has been transacted, since the time of King Henry the Eighth, the Formulary of Archbishop Parker, and the Acts of those Convocations which yet remain to us, sufficiently shew. The Archbishop still requires, as he was from the beginning wont to do, the Clergy of the Lower-house to retire to their place, and agree upon some pious, learned, and trusty Person, for that Employ, and solemnly to present him the next Session, to himself, with the Bishops in the Upper-house. Which having done, the Archbishop admits him to, and accepts of him for that Office.

Seft. 32.

Who they are that now constitute these Two houses of Convocation (since the dissolution of the Religious Houses) is easily resolved ; the Archbishop and Bishops alone remaining in the one ; and the Deans, Archdeacons, and Proctors of the Chapters and Clergy, continuing to constitute the other. As for their State immediately before, the Original Subscriptions of the Convocation of 1536, in the Cotton Library, ¹⁰ clearly represent it to us ; in which the Two Houses separately subscribe ; those of the Upper-house by themselves, and those of the Lower in like manner. And from whence it appears that at that time, the one consisted of the Bishops, Abbots, and Priors ; the other of the same kind of Members, of which it is now composed.

And this seems to have been the Constitution of these Two Houses for above a hundred years before : For in the Convocation of Archbishop Arundel, ¹¹ Anno 1408, the INFERIOR CLERGY being divided apart from the greater Prelates, and sitting in the Schools of Divinity under the Convocation-house, according to the appointment of my Lord the Archbishop, after their usual manner ; the Archbishop of Canterbury, with the Bishops, Abbots, and Priors, in the other house, went on to the business then under consideration.

fol. 18. b.

The same was the Division in his Successor Archbishop Chicheley's time, as appears by the Acts of the Convocation ¹² of 1419. When the most Reverend Father, having declared the Causes of the Convocation, " Appointed the Deans, "
" Archdeacons, and Proctors of the Clergy, that they should repair to their usual "
" house, and there treat, and communicate, of, and concerning, the matter afore- "
" said ; to the end, that having deliberated of, and upon, the Premises, they "
" might by the Authority of the Council finally conclude, and unanimously or- " " der concerning them. Upon which they forthwith retired from the *Chapter- "
" house*, to the place assigned them ; the most Reverend Father, with his Bre- " " thren the Bishops, the Abbots and Priors of his Province, remaining, and treat- "
" ing together.

It were an easy matter to bring several other the like Authorities in proof of this ; but I suppose these are sufficient. I will only observe, That tho' the Abbots and Priors continued ordinarily to sit, and deliberate together with the the Bishops, in the Upper-house after it, became customary for the other Clergy to debate a part from them; yet still upon any particular emergency, they divided too; and the Religious (as well as the other Clergy) went together to Consult and Treat of what they had to agree upon. ¹ Of this I shall offer but one Instance (and that later, in time, than those I before mentioned to shew their sitting together:) in the Convocation of the same Archbishop Chicheley Anno 1438: In which a debate arising concerning the promotion of Graduates in the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge; they concluded that certain Statutes being reform'd, which were set down in a Cedule presented by the Abbot of Gloucester, the Prolocutor of the Religious, they would agree to the Constitution made, with relation to that affair, in the Convocation of 1421. ^{Regist. Chicheley ibid. fol. 105. a.}

Having thus considered how the Convocation has been wont to meet, and prepare its self for Action; it will now be time to enquire how it has been wont to go on, and to Treat and Conclude of those Affairs for which it was Assembled. It cannot be deny'd but that before the time of King Henry the Eighth, the Convocation was in full liberty of debating and determining any thing that fell under its proper Cognisance, without any restraint, or limitation to hinder it in that respect. How far the Statute of the 25th of that King, c. 19. has limited them in their power of making, as well as of promulging, and executing, Canons and Constitutions, I shall hereafter particularly consider. In the mean time, we will enquire what the State of the Convocation was, in this respect, before the passing of that Act: And that will enable us the better to Judge, both of its Powers, and Privileges, at this day. ^{Sect. 33.}

That the Archbishop was wont, as President of the Synod, to declare to the Prelates and Clergy, the Reasons of his Assembling of Them, and wherein he desired their Advice and Assistance; I have before observed, and all the Acts of our Convocations, of which great numbers still remain to us, concur to shew it. Nor is it less evident from the same Acts, that of the things, so proposed to them, by the President of the Convocation, both the Prelates and Clergy were obliged, in the first place, to Treat and to Conclude. They represent the Archbishop as Acting in a very Authoritative manner in this respect; and directing them not only in the matters of which they should Debate, but oftentimes after what manner they should proceed in the debating of them. It would be too long to multiply the several Instances in this place, which occur to prove this to us; and I shall have a more proper Occasion hereafter to take a particular notice of them. I shall only add here, that excepting in the Conditions which accompanied their Grants of Subsidies, (and in which they oftentimes took occasion to represent such Grievances as they desired some Remedy of from the Government) it will be hard to find any Instances wherein the Clergy in Convocation, have, of themselves, debated of any thing without either the general Leave, or the particular Direction, of the Archbishop, as President of the Synod, so to do; or a previous Petition presented to him, for his Consent to them, to proceed in such matters as they were willing to Consult about. ^{Sect. 34.}

The Subject of their Debates being thus fix'd, the next thing will be to enquire how they proceeded to Debate upon it. Now this anciently they did All together, in One Common Body: If the matter were of a more difficult Nature, but especially if it concern'd the Property of the Clergy; (as in Grants of Subsidies, which I must still beg leave to say was the great Business these Convocations met about;) the Archbishop, in that case, usually required the several Orders of the Convocation, to Consult by themselves, and to Agree on what they thought fit to do. But still the Resolution was finally made by the whole Synod together; which for that reason generally began and ended every Session in a common Body, however they might afterwards divide into distinct Companies, for the better Treating and Debating of their Affairs. ^{Sect. 35.}

The Convocation being come to an Agreement in any matters, the Archbishop, as President of it, was wont finally to give his Assent to it; and so it became an Act of the Convocation; or rather to speak more conformably to the Words of their Records, an Ordinance of the Archbishop and Convocation. Hence we find the Authority by which their Constitutions were made, thus express'd in the publick Acts of their Assemblies: 'The Archbishop with the consent of the Prelates and Clergy, hath Established and Ordained: The Archbishop with the Conthat they neither gave any thing to the King, against his Will, and but seldom opposed what he insisted upon to be granted by them.

Thus in the Convocation⁶ of 1369, the Archbishop proposed to the Clergy the granting of a very large Supply, a Triennial Tenth to the King, and commanded the Religious to go apart to one side of the Church; the Clergy to another; and to consult about the Grant which he had mentioned to them; and report their Resolution to him in the Chapter-house the next day. This they did, and mutually agreed to give Two Tenths; the one, absolutely; the other, upon certain Conditions; but would by no means consent to give any more. Having made their Report, the Archbishop still insisted upon his first Proposal, and earnestly pressed them to comply with it; and then directed them to go aside once more, and think better of what he had desired for the King of them. Upon this second Division, the Proctors of the Clergy stuck to their first Grant; but the Religious so far comply'd, as to retrench the Conditions upon which they had before given the Second Tenth; but for a Third, they both excused themselves from complying with it.

Upon this the King sent his Commissioners again to the Synod, to declare the urgency of his Affairs, and shew them how that the Two Tenths proposed by them, would not answer his Occasions: And therefore exhorted them, that as the Bishops had Consented to a Triennial Tenth, so they would do likewise. When the Clergy heard this, they excused their Proceeding, by alledging that they knew not what the Prelates had done; whose Example they now presently followed; and after all their stiffness, yielded to what was demanded of them.

Sec. 38.

As for the manner of passing such Grants, the Forms in which they proceeded were usually these: The Clergy of the Lower-house drew up, and presented their Grant to the Prelates: If they approved of it; then their part was to Consent: Which having done, the Archbishop, last of all, Accepted of it, and Confirmed it.

Among

Among the other Subsidies which pass'd in Convocation, One, not uncommon heretofore, was a Charitable Benevolence, or Subsidy to the Archbishop himself; in the Passing of which, the Phrase was somewhat alter'd, from what was used upon the other Occasions. I shall need only to offer one Instance for all, of this, in the Convocation of 1486, in which the Clergy granted to the King a great Subsidy of twenty thousand Pounds, and two Subsidies to the Archbishop; to which when the Bishops, and other Prelates had expressly yielded their Consent, and Assent; and unanimously granted, as much as in them lay, the said Subsidies; the Archbishop finally gave his Consent also to the One, and thankfully Accepted of the Others.

fol. xlv. a.

Thus were the Acts of this Convocation pass'd; and being thus ratifi'd by the Archbishop, they became thereby compleat and perfect; and neither needed, nor looked for, any other, or farther Authority. In the business of Subsidies, the matter is clear, beyond all Exception: For the Archbishop having certified to the King, the Grants of the Clergy, he presently issued out his Writs for the Collection of them; which was all that he either did in this case, or thought he had any need to do; plainly thereby acknowledging their Authority, and that their Acts were Valid by their own Power, and needed not any Ratification from without, to give force to them. And for their Ecclesiastical Canons, and Constitutions (to take in them also on this Occasion) the Civil Power medled not at all with them; unless they had chanced to go beyond their Bounds: but the Clergy having agreed to them, and the Archbishop ratified them; they were forthwith Published as his Provincial Ordinances; and all such within his Province, to whom it belong'd, were bound to take notice of them, and yield Obedience to them.

Sect. 39.

Indeed, if in any thing they had Exceeded their proper Bounds, and determined in such Cases as did not belong to them, to the Prejudice of the King, his Crown, or Dignity; in that Case their Constitutions were not only accounted void of all Force by the Laity, but they were sometimes required themselves to repeal them. So Peckham did his Constitutions, made in his Provincial Council, Anno. 1279. Which, in the next Parliament, he himself revoked.

Sect. 40.

n. 45.

The Convocation having done what it was summon'd for; the Archbishop, who, during its Session, had by himself, or his Commissioners, prorogued it according to his own pleasure; now, by the same Authority, was wont to dissolve it; and that without any Writ or Licence from the King so to do. And this he did, not only in the Synods which he called at his own proper Motion, but in the Convocations summon'd by him, in Obedience to the King's Writ. But in this, his Authority has since been abridged; so that now, as he cannot Assemble a Convocation but by the the King's pleasure, so neither having Assembled it, can he Dissolve it without his Permission: Nay, and even the Prorogations, and Continuances of the Sessions, are oftentimes made by Writ from the King; tho' in these, the Archbishop still continues to enjoy, if not all, yet, at least, a good Part of his Ancient Prerogative.

Sect. 41.

But, tho' in this respect therefore his Power is much lessen'd; yet in the other Parts, which relate to the Government of his Clergy in Convocation, he has the same Authority he ever had. By vertue of this, he has still the sole Power of giving leave to any Members of the Synod to be either altogether absent; or, to retire before the Synod is ended. By the same Power he pronounces those, who neglect their Attendance, without his permission, Contumacious; and proceeds by Ecclesiastical Censures against them. Of all which, we have a clear Evidence in the Convocation of 1605; in which, three Members of the Lower House retiring from the Synod, without the Archbishop's Licence in that part, first sought and obtain'd, were suspended from the Celebration of Divine Service, and from all manner of Exercise of their Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, Active or Passive; and in their several Churches, were publickly proclaim'd so to be.

Sect. 42.

³ Regist. Bancroft. Arch. Cant. fol. cxxxviii. cxxxix.

And here then let us stop, and from the Account which I have hitherto been giving of this second sort of Convocation, let us consider what the nature of it is, and how widely it differs from that which I before describ'd. And

1. It may be observ'd, That this Convocation is a perfect and entire Assembly of it self; whereas the other was but a part of a greater Body; one of the Three Estates of the Realm in Parliament. Now this the very Writs themselves, by which these two Convocations are assembled, plainly shew: In the one of which, the Clergy are summon'd to appear before the King in Parliament, to (do, and) consent to such things, as by the Common Advice of the Other Estates, should be concluded upon; in the other, they are called to Debate, Conclude, and Establish by themselves, without either mention or concurrence of any Others. And the same their very Acts themselves declare; which, in their Provincial Convocation, they were wont to pass entirely by themselves, within their Own Body; and were so far from asking the Consent of the Lords, and Commons, that before the time of King Henry the Eighth, they needed not even the King's Authority to enforce them. Whereas, in Parliament, they could only begin such Affairs, as they desir'd to have pass'd, by Petition, like the other Commons: And without the Assent of the great Men first; and then of the King in Parliament; their Own Agreement signified nothing, as to the giving of any force or validity to what they did.

As much therefore as a part of an Assembly only, differs from a compleat and perfect Meeting; as much as an Assembly which can Conclude effectually upon Nothing, nor give Authority to their Resolutions, without the Consent of the other parts of the same Body; differs from an Assembly which is endowed with full Power and Authority to Conclude by it Self, its own Acts; so much must the One of these Convocations be granted to differ from the Other; and the Provincial Synods of the Clergy, be confess'd to have been; and, in some measure, still to be, more Perfect, and Authoritative in their kind, than their Parliamentary Conventions.

Sect. 44.

2. From what has been said, it appears, That these latter sort of Convocations are not National, but Provincial: They consist of the Clergy, of but One of the two Provinces; and their Ordinances, and Constitutions reach no farther than the Bounds of that Province for which they Act; but have no Power to Oblige without the Limits of it. And in this again, this Provincial Convocation Essentially differs from the Parliamentary; which, whatever Defect it may have in other respects, is yet a part of a National Assembly; consists of the Clergy of the whole Kingdom; and by its Acts, when pass'd according to the Rules of its Constitution, binds the whole Realm to a Submission to them. Now this, as to the One Part of it, the Persons summon'd to these two Convocations, is again evident from the Writs by which they are Assembled: Which in the One are sent into both Provinces, and equally Cite the Bishops, and Clergy of them both; in the Other, are sent into One alone; and neither directed to, nor pretended to be sent any farther. And as for the other part, which concerns the Authority of its Acts; the very Name of Provincial Ordinances, by which they are called, and the Archbishop's Directions of them, and Mandates concerning them; all shew the Orders of these Convocations to be limited to the Provinces, by whose Prelates and Clergy they were made: And I need not say, that Acts of Parliament oblige the whole Realm, and are of equal force in one Province, as in another.

Sect. 45.

3. These Provincial Convocations are (tho' not strictly) Ecclesiastical Assemblies; yet much more so than their Conventions in Parliament. The Persons of which they consist, are generally Ecclesiasticks: If any Others (as the Dean of the Arches, and possibly some other priviledg'd Persons of the Archbishops Courts) are admitted to be Chosen into them, yet are they such only as either Exercise, or are qualified to Exercise, an Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction; and are upon that account allow'd to be Members of Them. Their Affairs of which they are Authorized to debate, are of an Ecclesiastical Nature, tho' in Order to State Purposes; concerning the Security of the Church; the Priviledges which belong to it; and the Goods and Profits of the Clergy: And all which, as our Law-books tell us, even their very Subsidies themselves are Matters of a Spiritual nature, as long as they continue under the Debates of the Convocation; and are not passed by them into Lay-hands. Whereas in the Parliamentary Assembly all is quite otherwise: There the Persons are divided according to the Three Estates of the Realm; and so two parts are meerly Lay, to One that is Otherwise. Their Constitutions, indifferently take in Ecclesiastical and Civil Affairs: And of which soever it be that they determine, their Acts are good in Law; nor will any Exception, in that respect, lie against them, for having medled beyond their Bounds, and concluded of Matters which did not belong to them.

' Mich. 21.

Sect. 46.

4. In these Provincial Convocations, before the Clergy's Submission, the Authority of the Archbishop was Chief. He called them sometimes without any Writ at all from the King to authorise his calling of them. He appointed, for the most

most part, both the Time and Place of their meeting: He presided in them: He prorogued and dissolved them at his own Will: He gave force to their Acts; and, in effect, did the same in his Convocation, that the King was wont to do in his Parliament. And within the Limits of that Statute of the 25th of Henry the 8th, c. 19. and in subordination to the King's direction, he still continues to exercise a great part of that his Ancient Jurisdiction as to these Matters. But in the Parliamentary Convocation, all this Power is lodged in the King. He Calls, he Prorogues, he Dissolves his Parliament: He passes its Acts; and the Archbishops had no more to do in any of these matters, than the meanest of their Suffragans that was summon'd thither. All that they were entituled to, was, when the Clergy debated together, as a separate Estate of Parliament, upon any Matters, to be Chief in the Committees of the Clergy of their respective Provinces; and to make report of their Resolutions: But for any Authority in Parliament, when the whole Body met together, they had none at all; the King alone Order'd, and Govern'd, and presided in it.

And from all which, the difference between these two Convocations is clear, even to demonstration; That that Assembly which consists of the Clergy of one Province only; whose Constitutions bind only that Province for which they Act; which admits only of Ecclesiastical Persons, and can determine only of Ecclesiastical Affairs; in which the Archbishop of the Province had anciently the ultimate Power, and by virtue thereof, presided, order'd, and govern'd in it; must be altogether of a different Nature and Constitution, from such an Assembly, in which all these were quite otherwise: In which the Clergy of both Provinces met together; whose Acts bound the whole Realm; which consisted chiefly of the Laiety; and had Authority in all kind of Matters, without Confinement or Limitation: In which, Lastly, The King had the last concluding Power; and did finally Order, Rule, and Govern all; Summoned it by his Writ, and Dissolved it at his Will.

But 5thly, and to conclude these Remarks: This Provincial Convocation, however, for convenience and freedom of Debate, it is usually now divided into two Houses, is yet together but One Assembly, consisting of the Bishops, and Clergy of the Province, with their Metropolitan at the head of them.

Thus heretofore they both met and acted together, and pass'd several whole Synods without so much as once separating, or debating asunder from one another. When afterwards they divided, for the better managing of their Deliberations, it was only Occasionally, upon some greater Emergency, that they did so; and then they went aside for an Hour or two, treated by themselves, and so return'd to the Place of Assembly, and deliver'd their Opinions, and there came to a common Resolution. And tho' it be now become the Establish'd Method of this Convocation, when they sit and act, to deliberate asunder in two houses; yet this cannot alter the Nature of their Assembly, which is still called by the same Writ, that it was before this Division was thus settled into. By virtue of that Writ it meets, and acts; and from the Terms thereof, therefore, it must still derive its Nature and Constitution. Now in the Writ for the Convocation, not only the Bishops, but the Deans, Archdeacons, and Proctors, are all equally summon'd together; not only to meet in the same place, and before the same Person; but to treat so too: Quod compareant, &c. are the words; 'to appear before us, or before our Commissaries in St. Paul's Church, and to treat with Us: And therefore, tho' for the better dispatch of Business, the Clergy of the lower-house, commonly sit together, and debate among themselves, yet they then properly Act as a Convocation, according to the tenour both of the King's Writ, and the Archbishop's Mandate, when they come up to the Upper-House, and there agree with the Prelates, before their Metropolitan, of what they have to do: Whereas their debating by themselves, is but a preparatory deliberation, like that of a Committee of Parliament, for the better dispatch of their Affairs when they come together; and to fit Matters for a common Resolution.

Hence it is, that the Archbishop still acts as President, not of the Upper-house alone, but of the whole Synod. He prorogues the Convocation from one Session to another: And, if by the Archbishop's Direction, or Consent, the lower Clergy have sometimes been required, or allowed, to meet in the interval between Session and Session; yet the Convocation has nevertheless been looked upon as prorogued, tho' they have sate; and the Sessions have been computed, not from those meetings, but from

from the Archbishop's, or his Commissaries, appearing, and the Convocation's assembling before him.

Sect. 48.

And this shews either the Ignorance, or Error of some Men, who look upon the Convocation as an imperfect body, 'till the two Houses be separately met, and a Prolocutor chosen; without which, they almost question whether it may properly be called a Convocation at all. And in all which, they do not consider how much they prejudice that very Constitution, which they would be thought so zealous to defend. For, according to this Account, tho' the Convocation, for the last ten Years, has been constantly called, prorogued, dissolved; yet having never solemnly met in its two Houses, and chosen a Prolocutor, we have, in truth, had no legal Convocation at all; and so the Parliament has sat all this while, without any Convocation assembled with it.

Nay, but this President will go yet farther: For so it met in King James's time too; so in the three last Parliaments of King Charles the Second, which carries the Prescription still farther. But, God be thanked, whatever some Mens Notions may be, the Law considers these Matters at another rate. And the Convocation in the Eye of That, is as fully Assembled, to all intents and purposes, the first Hour that it meets together, in the Place, and at the Time appointed by the King's Writ, and the Archbishop's Mandate, under the Presidency of the Metropolitan, or his Commissioner; as if it were put into the most solemn Form, which these Men desire. And thus much the Publick Acts even of these last Con- vocations shew: Which, by the King's Writ, have been continued from one Session to another; have been Prorogued, Dissolved; and in all these, have been addressed to by the King, as a legal Convocation, duly assembled, and actually sitting too; and thereby solemnly acknowledged by him as such.

The same has been testified in the Archbishop's Commissions; who, for the Execution of these Writs has formally deputed One of his Suffragan Bishops in his stead, to Prorogue, Continue, and Dissolve them; as true and legal Convocations, duly met, and qualified for his Commission, and the King's Writs, to be directed unto. All which must be look'd upon, not only as a Vain Formality, but even as an Error in point of Law too; if these Convocations, for want of a Sermon, and a Prolocutor of the Lower House, have, in truth, never been legally assembled at all; nor, by consequence, ever been put in a capacity of being thus continued, or dissolved by the King; or of having a Commission granted by the Archbishop, for the Execution of his Writs to that purpose.

But to remove all doubt as to this matter; let it only be consider'd from what time the Convocation, even when it does sit and act, dates its Beginning, and computes its Sessions; and whether it does not act as a Convocation, before either the Houses separate, or any Prolocutor at all be chosen. Now, so it must be confess'd to do; or the Return of the Bishop's Certificates; the pronouncing of the Absent Members Contumacious; the direction of the Clergy of the lower House, to chuse their Prolocutor, and the appointing of a Day to present him upon, (all which are usually done at the first meeting of it) must be said to be no Synodical Acts; Nor that first Assembly a proper Session of Convocation; unless the Metropolitan tarries while the Clergy go down, and chuse their Prolocutor, and have him confirm'd, before he prorogues it; which they will very rarely find him to have done.

Were it needful to pursue this matter any farther, I might instance in some whole Convocations which have met, and adjourned, for a whole Session of Parliament

ment together, and yet (having nothing to do) never chose a Prolocutor; till at their next Assembling, having a Commission to do Business, they then thought it needful to have One, for the orderly managing of it. So did the Convocation of York in 1603: Which tho' it met, (as that in the other Province did;) yet doing nothing that Year, * it had no Prolocutor till 1605, and never thought it self the less a Convocation for Want of One. But I will rather mention an Instance nearer home, and within the memory of many who are still living, and able to bear Witness to it.

* See their Convocation-Book, ad An. 1605.

In the Convocation which sate in 1677, Dr. Sancroft, then Dean of St. Paul's, being Prolocutor of the Lower-house, was nominated by the King to Succeed Archbishop Sheldon in the See of Canterbury. He was confirm'd Archbishop, January the 24th. On the 29th of January the Convocation which had been prorogued from the 16th of the same Month, met; and continued sitting from thence to March the 14th, without any Prolocutor: Upon which day Dr. Stillingfleet, who succeeded that Reverend Person in the Deanry of St. Paul's, was also by the Clergy in Convocation, made his Successor in the Office of Prolocutor. In this Interval, there were Six Sessions of Convocation, and all in time of Parliament. Upon March the 14th, the Acts of that Convocation tell us, "That the Clergy of the Lower-house appearing personally before the Lords Bishops, and being required to repair to their own proper House, and chuse a fit Person from among themselves to be Prolocutor, or Referendary, into the Room of the last, lately promoted to be Archbishop of Canterbury, chose Dr. Edward Stillingfleet. Here now near two Months pass'd, in which the Convocation was held on, and yet no Prolocutor chosen. If this were to all intents and purposes a good Convocation, in Law, notwithstanding any such defect; then I see no reason, why any other Convocation may not be so, as well as that. If it were not; then seeing they continued to Sit and Act without any New Writ of Summons, from the King, any new Election of Proctors for the Clergy, or any other Authority to make up any defect in Law, which for want of being a compleat Convocation (in these Mens Opinion) they might have incurr'd; we must conclude all their Proceedings from thenceforth to have been Irregular, if not void in Law, (even the choice and admission of their new Prolocutor not excepted) And how that whole Synod, came to fall under so gross a mistake, and yet neither the Bishops nor Clergy, to know, or suspect any thing of the matter, I shall leave it to those who advance, or comply with, such strange Notions, in their turn to Consider.

And this may suffice to shew what the Nature of these Two Assemblies is, and how they differ from one another. I now proceed to the other sort of Assemblies, of which somewhat must be said for the better clearing of my Subject, tho' otherwise we have at present, but little to do with them; I mean, the proper Ecclesiastical Synods, and Councils of our Church; and of the Bishops and Clergy of it.

Sect. 49.

Of these the lesser in Number and Extent, but of most ancient Institution, were those, which I shall therefore first begin with:

3. The Diocesan SYNODS,

Of the Bishops and Clergy, of every Diocese, who by their joyn't Counsel and Authority (committed to them by Christ) order'd the Affairs of their respective Diocesses, before any other Councils were settled, or assembled in the Church.

By what Authority these Synods met; of what Persons they consisted; what Powers they had; and for what Purposes they were assembled; tho' it may seem a little foreign to my present Business to shew, yet neither ought I wholly to pass it by, upon so fair an Occasion.

That the Bishop of every Diocese has, by Divine Commission, a power to Govern the Church of Christ, over which he is placed; and, in order thereunto, to Call together the Presbyters which Minister under him, was the constant Sense of all the ancient Councils, and Fathers of the Church. They have not only allow'd of this Power, but have directed the Exercise of it, and Commanded the Bishop, from time to time, to put it in Execution.

How often every Bishop was Obliged to Assemble his Diocesan Synod, the Canons of the Church inform us: Which generally ordained that these Councils should be held at least Once every year, and obliged the Clergy, under the severest Penalties, to appear at them. In the ancient Formulary for holding of these Synods among us, the order is, that they should be Convened twice in the year; and this seems to have then been the ancient measure of them. ² The Synod of Calcyth, settled it betimes here; And if we may rely upon the Worcester Copy of the Synod of Winchester ³ Anno 1076, we must look upon this to have there again had a publick Determination. 'Tis true in the Cotton MS. the Decree is more general; That every Bishop should hold a Synod every Year; And yet, above 200 years after, in the Constitutions of the Bishop of Durham, ⁴ Anno 1312: The Proportion of 2 yearly Synods was not only Established as a rule for that Bishoprick, but was said to have been Established according to the Canonical Sanctions, which therefore seem to have yet continued in a general force among us. But the common Direction of the ⁵ Canon Law was to have such Synods held Once in the year: And this ⁶ Lynwood seems to deliver as the rule of our Church too; and there is this reason to believe that by this time it was become so, that when the Reformation was made of the Ecclesiastical Canons, then in force in this Church; ⁷ this was the Proportion which we find was intended to have been continued by those, to whom the review of those Canons was committed.

To this Synod all the Clergy, who had any Benefice within the Diocese, were obliged to come: ⁹ And so were the Regulars too, as well Abbots as Monks; excepting only those who, in process of time, were Exempted from the Episcopal Jurisdiction. And even those, ¹⁰ if they had any Benefices, by reason whereof they became subject to the Authority of the Bishop, were obliged upon the account of such their Benefices to come likewise. In the Constitutions of the Bishop of Durham, ¹¹ the Members of these Synods are thus computed; Abbots, Priors, Archdeacons, Provosts, Vicars, and Parochial Chaplains: And that this was nothing peculiar to that Diocese, the Reformation of our Ecclesiastical Law ¹² shews, which was gathered out of the Canon Laws, then in Practice among us; and (omitting only the Regulars, who were now suppressed) enumerates the rest much after the same manner, the Bishop with his Presbyters, Parochial Ministers, Vicars and Clerks.

If the Diocese were small, and had but one Archdeaconry in it; the whole Clergy met together at once for these Synods. If it were more large, the Bishop sometimes divided his Synods, according to the Number of his Archdeacons; and held his Diocesan-Council at several times, and in several places. But still the Method of proceeding was the same in all; and the same Business done in the One as in the Other: And what that was, must next be Enquired.

Now the first thing that was usually done on these Occasions, was for the Bishop to make his Synodical Enquiries; ¹³ of which the ancient forms still remain to us. Then the Synodical Causes were heard: Every one who had any proper Complaint to make, was permitted to speak; and for this end, not only the Clergy, but the Laity too, were suffered to be present at these Synods, and to speak in Them.

In these Synods, the Bishop was wont to declare to his Clergy what had been decreed in the Larger Synods of the ¹⁴ Province: In these, he was directed to Charge his Clergy to have a Care of their Ministry, and to lay before them the main branches of that Duty, which was incumbent upon them, in their respective Places to fulfil.

And lastly, in these Synods, the Bishop published his Own Diocesan Constitutions: Which being Read, and Agreed to by the Synod, were from thenceforth of force within the Diocese; provided they were not contrary to what had been Decreed in some Superiour Council of the Province. Of these we have several Collections already published in the Volumes of our Councils, and many more there are still remaining in the Registers of our Churches, which witness the same to us.

¹⁵ Leo IV. Epist. ad Episc. Britanniae. apud Labb. Concil. Tom. 8. col. 31. Ord. Rom. in Pontificali. lib. III. fol. 189. Edit. Venter. An. 1561. Lynwood. de Appellat. l. 2. Tit. 7. cap. In Consilio, verb. Statutum. Francise. Leo prax. for. Eccl. par. 2. cap. 9. Sect. 15.

How they proceeded in the Celebration of these Synods, the ancient Orders framed for the holding of them, inform us; The Clergy in solemn Procession came to the Church where they were to meet, at the day and hour appointed by the Bishop, and sat according to the time of their Ordination.¹ Then the Deacons and Laity (even Women not excepted) were admitted. The Bishop (or, in his absence, his Vicar) being come in, and the stated Prayers ended; made a solemn Exhortation to them. Then (by the Roman Order) a Sermon was to be preach'd; after which, if any Clergy-man had any Complaint to make, or any thing else to Offer, he was heard by the Synod.
Sect. 52.
Vid. Ord. Mss. Bibl. Cotton. Supr. Cit.

The Complaints of the Clergy being over; the Laity, in the next place, were permitted to make theirs. Then the Bishop proposed his Diocesan Constitutions to them. After which, if nothing farther remain'd to be done, he made a large Synodical Exhortation, in the way of an Injunction, to his Clergy; and so all concluded with solemn Prayers suited to the Business for which they were assembled.

For the Dispatch of all this, the common time allow'd, was Three or Four² days: And a several Rubrick was Establish'd to direct the proceeding in every one of them. But if the Business of the Synod could be done in lesser time, the Assembly was to be continued no longer then was necessary for the finishing the Affairs that came before it.³
Sect. 53.
Vid. Ord. Supr. Cit.
Reform. leg. Eccles. loc. cit. Cap. 23.

Such was the Nature of these Councils; which accordingly were continued in Use among us to the time of King Henry the Eighth. The Names by which they were called were various: Sometimes Concilium Episcopi & Concilium Episcopale * from the Authority which the Bishop had, both to call and to preside in them. Sometimes Specialis Synodus cum Presbyteris habita;⁴ in Opposition to the more large Assemblies of the Bishops of the Province; to which Presbyters were not wont to be admitted: Sometimes Civile Concilium from the City in which the Episcopal Seat is fix'd; in Opposition to that of the Province, which takes in the Bishops of all the Cities of it: And lastly, if without Offence I may add it; in some of the most Ancient Rituals, it was term'd, Provinciale Concilium; tho' since the Reformation of the Roman Offices by order of the Council of Trent; that Title is changed, and the Word Provinciale struck out of them.

Having thus accounted for these Synods as they were pure Ecclesiastical Assemblies; give me leave to add yet one thing farther, concerning them, That like our Provincial Convocations before mentioned, these also were sometimes Convened for Civil Purposes; to supply the Prince with Money by their own Grant, or to Empower others to do it for them. Of the former of these we have an Instance in the year 1279, in which the King, and Archbishop of *Canterbury*⁶ jointly require the Bishops of every Diocess to call their Clergy together in Order to the granting themselves what was desired of them: — Of the latter, we have an Example about Three years after, in which the Archbishop directs every Bishop to call his Clergy together, and to declare the King's Request to them; that so they might Empower their Proctors (who were now first agreed to be sent to the Provincial Convocation) to Consent to such a Subsidy as the rest of the Bishops and Clergy, when they came together, should conclude to grant to him.⁸

But to leave these Synods, now grown into disuse among us; and pass on to the last kind, in which the present Argument is more immediately concern'd,

4. The PROVINCIAL COUNCILS of our Church:

Which I have before said, and shall now shew to have been different in many respects from the PROVINCIAL CONVOCATIONS of the Clergy, before Considered.

For, First, The Convocation, tho' it be Provincially Summon'd, and with respect to each Province, is a proper Provincial Assembly, yet is it in the intention of the Law, a National Convention of the whole Clergy of England, in two Provincial Convocations: Whereas the proper Ecclesiastical Synod, was purely a Provincial Council; was Summon'd by One Archbishop, without any relation to the Synod of the Other; and has been often held in One Province, when none has been either Called or Assembled in the Other.

Hence we find that when the King issues out his Writs for a Convocation, he evermore directs them to both the Provinces; And Assembles the Whole Clergy, not only at or about the same time, but in the same form of Writs, and for the same Ends. And tho' I will not say there were no Exceptions at all in this Case heretofore; yet I believe upon Enquiry it will be found, that the King has not often Call'd the Convocation of one Province, without Summoning about the same time that of the Other, or at least without some relation to an Antecedent, or Consequent Calling of it.

It is upon this Account, that those who give the most accurate account of our Ecclesiastical Assemblies not only State such a Difference as I am now speaking of, between the Convocations of the Clergy, and their Provincial Synods; But give the former the Preference to the latter; and place it as the first, and highest, of all the Ecclesiastical Courts of this Realm. I shall instance only in two Persons, but those of such Eminence in the Laws and Antiquities of our Country, that they may well pass instead of many; The one our Learn'd Mr. Cambden, who tells us that, "Our Chief Spiritual Courts are, the Synod which is called a Convocation, and is always held at the same time that a Parliament is; and the Provincial Synods in both Provinces. The other our Famous Mr. Lambard,² who is yet more full to the same Purpose, "Ecclesiastical Courts, says he, be many in Number, and diverse in Nature, whereof the greatest is the Convocation of all the Archbishops, Bishops, and whole Clergy of both the Provinces of Canterbury and York; the which is always Summon'd by the King's Writ, and can Do NOTHING without the Royal Assent first had and obtained.—— The next to those, be the two Provincial Synods of Canterbury and York.

Sec. 57.

And this points out a second difference between the Convocation, and a Provincial Synod, viz. That the former was wont to be generally Called by Order of the King's Writ; whereas the other was Assembled by the sole Ecclesiastical Authority of the Metropolitan of each Province.

There are, I know, some Instances late upon Record, in which the Convocation seems to have been Summon'd by the Archbishop alone, without any Authority of the King's Writ, as 'tis Confess'd at first they commonly were. But then as it may reasonably be presumed, that the Metropolitan, in that Case, had his Command for what he did, tho' not in the solemnity of a Royal Writ; so I have some reason to believe that in many of those very Instances, there was a Writ issued out to the Archbishop, tho' he sometimes thought fit to Suppress the mention of it in his Mandate, and thereby seems to have acted by his own Authority in it. I cannot tell whether ever any Archbishop took a greater Liberty than Arundel did, in this respect: The Circumstances of King Henry the Fourth, especially in the beginning of his Reign; the Sufferings of the Archbishop under King Richard the Second; And the Interest which those Sufferings gave him with the New King, and the Influence they had upon that Revolution which set the Crown upon his Head; all encouraged him to a freedom, which would not perhaps have been endured in another Person, and under a more steady Government. And yet that even he rather concealed the mention of the King's Writ, upon these Occasions, then acted wholly without it, let the following Instances suffice to shew.

fol. 4. a.

In the Convocation which met at London, October 21. 1402. There is no manner of notice taken of any Writ, but the Archbishop's, made use of for the Assembling of it. On the contrary in the Preamble to his own Summons, he tells his Clergy that "the urgent and difficult Affairs which concern'd the State of the Universal Church, did in a manner compell him at that time, tho' unwilling, contrary to his own Resolution, to call together the Prelates and Clergy of his Province. No notice of the King's Command; no mention of the Realm of England, and its Needs. Here now is all the appearance in the World of a meer Ecclesiastical Authority in the Calling of this Convocation. And yet after all, in this Archbishop's own Register,⁴ we meet with the very Writ by which the King Commanded the Summons of it: Teste'd, July 20th, Regni Tertio. And thereby are admonish'd not to conclude too hastily that the Archbishop had no Writ to Summon his Convocation, because in his form of Summons, he sometimes takes no Notice of any.

What we have here a positive Proof of, we may fairly presume to have been the Case of the Convocation which met about two Years after, Nov. 24. 1404. The Parliament had just been sitting at Coventry, and the Clergy were Assembled but ten days after, at St. Paul's, London. The Archbishop in his Mandate Mandate, ¹ says only, that he called it at the King's request, and at the instance of his Lords and Nobles. But the Archbishop of York dealt more openly in the Case: He own'd ² the Assembling of the Convocation of his Province, Decemb. 11th. the same Year, to have been the effect of the King's Writ, dated in his Parliament at Coventry, Novemb. the 2d. And thereby gives us just reason to believe, that the Convocation of Canterbury met by the same Authority: There being no reason to doubt, but that a Writ was issued out for both Provinces alike; and that the Clergy came together by the same Call in the One, that they did in the Other.

And the same I must beg leave to conclude, 'till I shall be better inform'd, of the Convocation summon'd by Archbishop Warham an hundred Years after, Anno 1509: For, besides that the Form it self runs, at last, in the usual manner of the King's Writ: Super arduis & urgent. Negotiis; and that it does not appear, that any other Business than what was proper to a State-Convocation was done in it: I cannot imagine how the whole Convocation of the Clergy, could have acknowledged in their Submission, that their Convocations always had been summon'd only by the King's Writ, had they at the same time known, that the very Person who then presided over them, had within the Reign of that very Prince, to whom that Acknowledgment was made, called them together merely by his own Authority, without any Writ, or Order from the King so to do.

But be this as it will; This is certain, that generally speaking, the Convocation was not summon'd by the Archbishop, but at the King's Command, testified by his Writ to him, to Authorize him so to do: Whereas the Provincial Synod was held by the sole power of the Metropolitan; the King might sometimes approve of, or advise the Calling of it; but I believe it will be hard to find out, any one Instance, wherein he required the Archbishop by any Royal Writ, to assemble such a Council.

This was, in fact, the Practice to the very time of King Henry the Eight; and if we enquire into the reason of it, we shall thereby meet with a third Difference between the Convocation (as we now consider it) and a Provincial Synod, viz. That the former was Originally design'd for Civil Purposes; the Latter was principally held for the Spiritual Needs and Affairs of the Church.

See. 58.

I am sensible, that I shall displease some Persons, by repeating here, what they have pretended to be elsewhere so highly offended withal: But it is indeed the Truth, and I am neither afraid, nor ashamed to own it: That the Original Ground of Assembling the Convocation; and, but for which, the Clergy had, in all probability, never been called to it, was to supply the Necessities of the Government. This the King often declared in the very Writs of Summons: This was what he sent his Commissioners to the Convocation, when met, to demand of them: And I still affirm, what I before truly alledged, in despite of all the Endeavours that have been used to calumniate me for it; that this was what the Crown especially aimed at, in Convening of it. The Grievances of the Clergy, and their Petitions for Redress, were the natural Results of their Subsidies on their part. They laid hold on the Opportunity of giving their Money to obtain an Enlargement of their Priviledges; or some Consideration of such things as they thought themselves to be aggrieved in. They prefer'd Bills against Hereticks, Condemned their Errors, and sometimes judg'd them too in these Meetings; and, by degrees, they drew the Cognizance of most other Ecclesiastical Matters, (such especially in which the Polity, and Government of the Church were concern'd) under the Cognizance of these Assemblies. But these were not the Ends for which the Prince originally called them together; nor was a Convocation needful for the obtaining of them. The One might have been done, for many Reigns, in Parliament; the Other, to the last, in their Provincial Councils. But a Subsidy could no where have been so effectually granted, as in a Convocation; and for that therefore our Princes, generally called the Clergy together to these Meetings.

As for the proper Ecclesiastical Synod of each Province, the Business of that was of another Nature. To make Canons and Constitutions, for the Faith and Discipline of the Church; and to remedy any Disorders which they found to be crept into it. If they were a Body capable of such an Act, and that being met for other Purposes, the King took the Opportunity of demanding Money of them; they oftentimes chose rather to give it there, than by refusing it, to be put to a New Charge and Trouble of Meeting again in Convocation for the doing of it. But still this difference there was in the Case; the Convocation, tho' it sometimes did other Business, was yet assembled properly for a Civil, or State-End: The Provincial Council, tho' it often gave Subsidies to the Prince, being met, was yet call'd for another purpose; to consider of Church Affairs, and to do the Work of an Ecclesiastical Synod.

Now the different Ends, of these two Assemblies produced another considerable Difference between them, in a fourth Respect; and that is, of the very Persons who were called to the One, and to the Other.

The Convocation being intended to meddle with the Property of the Clergy, and to Charge the Revenues of the Church; it was necessary, that all who were to bear a part in the Subsidy, should also give their Consent to it. The whole Body of the Clergy were therefore to be called to this Assembly, either in Person, or by Representation. The Diocesan Clergy had no less right to meet, and dispose of their own Mony, than the Bishops and Prelates had to give theirs. And accordingly, we find that they were by the express tenour of the King's Writ, all along call'd to it.

But in the Provincial Council the Case was very different: Here the Bishops only were, of necessity, to be summon'd. The Government of the Church was, by Divine Authority, committed to them; when as yet there were no Regulars in the World; nor had the Lower Clergy learnt the New Doctrine, of being Vested with an equal Right in the Spiritual Legislature with them. Accordingly we find, that our Ancient Councils knew no other Members, but Bishops. When afterwards the Regular Prelates were admitted; yet was it neither constantly, nor with any Opinion of any Right they had to be called to them. Much less were the Parochial Presbyters accounted any proper, or Authoritative Members of these Synods. If the Archbishop thought their Attendance needfull, he Cited them to it: Otherwise, he either totally Omitted them, or left them at liberty to come or not, as their Affairs and Occasions should prompt them to do.

Thus the Case continu'd for a very great while among us, and I shall hereafter make a particular proof of it. In the mean time, I shall add yet one Difference more to be observed between these two Provincial Assemblies,

Sect. 60.

5thly. That the Convocation being design'd for State-Ends, was accordingly summon'd for the most part with some respect to a Parliament, either before Assembled, or afterwards to be held, or to meet concurrently with it: Not that there was any necessary Connexion, by the nature of our Constitution, as some have fondly Imagined, between the One and the Other; but only for the better answering of the King's purposes in both: Whereas the Ecclesiastical Council had no manner of respect to it; nor, (unless for the Convenience of the Bishops of the Province, in which the Parliament met, and that but very seldom) was it at all Assembled with it.

It is true, that for an Age and half last past, our Princes have thought fit to Unite their Parliaments, and Convocations very near together: Nor has the One been ever Assembled by them, but that the Other has been call'd concurrently with it. But then both the Preceding Practice, and the Original Establishment of these two great Assemblies, sufficiently bespeak their mutual Independance on Each Other; and shew the Parliament to have its full Integrity without a Convocation; and the Convocation to be perfect in all its Parts, without the Addition of a Parliament, to compleat the nature of it.

That therefore these two Meetings have had any Relation to one another, we are to ascribe it not to any necessary Dependance of the One upon the Other, but meerly to the pleasure of our Princes; who have thus thought fit to Summon both; and to the Convenience which they found in it, for the better advancing of the Common Ends of both. But, for the Ecclesiastical Provincial Councils, as they have been call'd by a different Authority, and were design'd for another sort of Affairs, so have they, for the most part, been held at other Seasons; and sometimes been prohibited by our Kings to be held in time of Parliament, least they should put a stop to those other Affairs, in which the Chief, if not only Members of them, were there to be Engaged.

Sect. 61.

These then are the Main Circumstances in which our State-Convocations, and our Ecclesiastical Provincial Synods heretofore, differ'd from one another. As for for the manner of Meeting and Acting in them, it was much the same in both; and therefore what has been said of the Former, may suffice to shew the Methods of proceeding in the Latter.

And thus have I given such an Account of the Nature of these several Assemblies of the Clergy, as seem'd necessary to prepare the way, for the better understanding of what I am hereafter to offer concerning them. I shall but just mention some few Remarks which will farther arise from the Difference now observed between these two kinds of Provincial Assemblies; and so conclude this Chapter. And,

1st. From what has been said it may appear, That the Convocation, tho' it be a true Provincial Meeting of the Clergy, and so, in that respect, an Ecclesiastical Assembly, was yet Originally design'd for State-purposes; and Conven'd by our Princes, not for Matters of Doctrine or Discipline; but to Counsel and assist them in the difficult, and urgent Necessities of the Church and Realm. So both the Writs, by which they have been wont to be summon'd, run; and so the Business which our Kings have employed them about, sufficiently speak to us. The Defence of the Kingdom and the Church of England; has been the constant Subject concerning which they have been called to treat; and the supplying of the King's Needs, and the Enabling him thereby to defend both, have been the general Means whereby they have, in these Meetings, contributed to the Defence of both.

This has been the Business of these Convocations; for this they were first Invented; and to this end they have all along chiefly employed their Counsel, and Assistance. If being met together upon this Account, they have, at the same time, consider'd of any other Matters, either Civil or Religious; yet that has been for the most part at their own Motion, and for their own Interest, or Convenience: But still our Kings have Assembled them for the Purposes now mention'd; from the tenour of whose Writs, and the nature of whose Affairs, proposed by their Commissioners to the Clergy, when Assembled in their Convocations, we must date the Original Design of their Meeting, and determine what it was that moved our Princes to call them together.

2^{dly}. It is evident from what has now been observ'd, That our proper Ecclesiastical Synods, were those which the Archbishop was wont to call by his own Authority, for Ecclesiastical Purposes; and which being called, were wont to be employ'd, only or chiefly in order to that End.

Señ. 62.

Nor is it any Exception at all against this, that sometimes we find even those also to have debated of other Matters, and to have done the Business of a State Convocation; seeing this was not the End for which they were Assembled, but only an Occasional Use, which (being met together) the Prince thought fit now and then to make of them. And it may as reasonably be said, that the Bishops, when they are summoned to Parliament, by the King's Parliament-Writs, are called to an Ecclesiastical Council; because that sometimes, (as for Instance in the Parliament of Gloucester, the Second of Richard the Second) being met together upon the Affairs of the Kingdom, they have taken that Opportunity to Resolve themselves into a Church Synod, and to Act, and make Constitutions among themselves, as such; as that either the Convocation, is a proper Ecclesiastical Council, because it has sometimes proceeded by the Authority of the Metropolitan, when Assembled to do Church-business; or that the Provincial Synod was not such a Council, because that now and then, at the King's Request, they have Acted as a Convocation; and granted Subsidies for the supply of his Occasions in it.

But 3^{dly}, and to have done: These Ecclesiastical Councils, as they never had any Relation to a Parliament, but were occasionally summon'd by the Metropolitan, before the 25th of Henry the 8th, whenever he thought it to be expedient for the Church's service; so I do not see, but that with the King's Authority, testified by his Writ to that purpose; the Metropolitan may still hold his Provincial Synod at any time, that he shall think it needful so to do.

There has, I know, been an Opinion advanced by some who have not wish'd well to our Church, to the contrary; and (which is wonderful) that Opinion has lately been espoused by a profess'd Advocate for the Rights, and Liber-ties of the Clergy; for what Reason it is not difficult to guess. But upon what ground of Law, they build their Opinion, I must own my self at a loss to find find out. Sure I am, there is not one Word in that Statute; the 25th of Henry the Eighth, which ties up the King in this Case, or lays any other restraint upon the Metropolitan, except that of proceeding by the Authority of the King's Writ. And when, by vertue of that very Statute, Two and Thirty Persons of the Clergy and Laity were chosen to Reform our Ecclesiastical Laws, and to chuse out such as were agreeable to the Statutes and Customs of the Realm, and (in their judgment) profitable to the Government of the Church; they still continued the Use of those Provincial, or Episcopal Synods, as it had before been practised, with no other Change but what that Act required, of Recurring to the King's Authority for the holding of them.

This I take to be a demonstrative Proof, that those Wise and Learned Men, chosen out of the most able Members both of Parliament and Convocation, for so Nice a purpose, knew nothing in the Continuance of such Provincial Synods, that was contrary to Law then: If it be since become so, I shall be glad to know what Statute it is, that has abridged the Authority of the King, and the Liberty of the Church in this Particular. Till that be shewn, I must conclude that such Synods as these, with the King's Concurrence, the Metropolitan may still hold; and pity it is, but that the Use of them, should, from time to time, as Occasion requires, be Restored among Us.

CHAPTER II.

That the Parliamentary Convention of the Clergy, Summon'd by the Premunitory Clause in Bishops Writs, and the Provincial Convocations, Summon'd by the King's Writs to the Two Archbishops; are Two different Convocations, both in Law and Fact, from one another; and have different Rights, Powers, and Priviledges, as such.

THo' from the Account which has been given in the foregoing Chapter, of the several Convocations of the Clergy, and the Nature of them, it be sufficiently Evident, that they are Two distinct Assemblies, and have their different Rights, Powers, and Priviledges as such; yet so strong is the Power of Prejudice, that it has sometimes led even those who pretend to have the best knowledge of our Constitution, to confound them, as if the One were but a different Name and Character of the Other. There was a time when some of our greatest Men were as zealous to run down the Parliamentary Rights of the Clergy, as others would now be thought to uphold them. And to these the Premunitory Clause in the Bishops Writs, tho' as plain a Summons of the Clergy to Parliament, as the Other part confessedly is of the Bishop, and as Authoritative too; was only a Summons of them to Convocation, and proved nothing of any Parliamentary Right in them. The Method is the same which some now make use of, to prove the quite contrary, only turn'd the other way,² as the nature of the Subject required it should be: Whilst to prove the Convocation to be a part of the Parliament; and as such to have a Claim to Parliamentary Rights and Priviledges; 'tis said, that the Provincial Writ, is only a second Summons sent forth to strengthen the Premunitory Call; but that they both relate to the same Assembly. In the mean time, in this, they Agree, that these two Convocations are, in effect, but One, and the same Assembly: And this as it was observ'd by our learned Bishop Stillingfleet: ³(than whom no one had better consider'd the Constitution of our Government, or better understood it) has been the true Grounds of that Confusion which has of late appear'd in some Mens minds, about the Rights of the Convocation.

To clear this matter, and shew how widely different, both in their Own Nature, and in the Eye of the Law; nay, and even in Fact too, these two Convocations are from One Another, I shall here enter on a particular Examination of this matter; and in that, lay a solid Foundation for the clearing of those Points which are to be the Subject of our present Debate.

Many

Many are the Grounds from whence these two Assemblies may be shewn to be altogether different from One another: I shall distinctly consider the chief of them, under these three Heads.

(1.) Of those Differences which arise from the Publick Writs, and Instruments which relate to Them.

(2.) From the different Rights, Powers, and Priviledges, of each of them. And

(3.) From some particular Arguments in point of Law, and History, which prove a manifest difference between them.

But before I proceed to these Remarks, it may not be improper to Observe, that in Asserting the Difference of these two Assemblies of the Clergy, I advance no New Opinion, but follow the Examples of some of our highest Church-men; and that in their Books which they expressly wrote in defence of the Rights and Liberties of the Clergy.¹ This was the Case of our Learned Advocate, Dr. Heylin: And the Persons who would have Confounded these two Assemblies together, are represented by him, as no Friends to our Constitution; but to have set up the contrary Opinion, on purpose to undermine the Parliamentary Rights of the Clergy. But he doubts not to call it a gross Mistake: And from the different Writs, by which these Convocations are assembled, thought he had effectually proved it to be so.

What regard, those, whom I have now to do with, will pay either to the Judgment, or the Authority of our late Eminent Bishop Stillingfleet, I cannot tell: But as I doubt not, but that all unprejudic'd Persons will allow a just deference to his Opinion in this Case; So he having freely given it, with respect to this very Debate, I ought not to pass it by, without taking a particular notice of it. The sum of what he says is this.² That a distinction is to be made between Convocations called by the King's Writ to the Bishops; and Convocations called by the King's Writ to the Archbishops. The not distinguishing of which two Writs, He tells us, had caus'd so much confusion in some Mens Minds about the Rights of the Convocation. For they imagine, that the Convocation, as it treats of Ecclesiastical Matters, sits by virtue of the First Writ; which is in the Bishop's Summons to Parliament: But that related to them, as one of the Three Estates of the Realm, whose Consent was then required to their Own Subsidies, which were distinctly granted, but confirm'd by the other Estates. But the other Writ was directed to the Archbishop, by which the Bishops, and inferiour Clergy, were strictly required to appear, and then to understand the King's further Pleasure, as appears by the most ancient Writs for a Convocation.

³ The difference of these Writs will best appear by the instance of the Convocation Anno Domini 1640. In the year 1639, about the first of February, the Parliament-Writ was issued out to the Bishops for calling their Clergy to Parliament, and this only Ad Consentiendum iis, quæ tunc ibidem de Communi Concilio Regni nostri contingerint Ordinari. The other Writ, for the Convocation to the Archbishops, was issued out the 20th of February, and had this Clause, Ad Tractandum, Consentiendum & Concludendum Super præmissis & aliis quæ sibi Clarius exponentur ex parte mea. The Parliament being dissolved, it's certain the Convocation, sitting by virtue of the Writ to the Bishops, must fall with it. But a great Question arose, Whether the Convocation sitting by the Writ to the Archbishops was dissolved, or not? And the greatest Judges and Lawyers of that time were of Opinion it was not.

³ Ibid. p. 367.

Such was the Judgment of that great Prelate in this particular, and that in one of his last Pieces; when he had the best considered these things, and could have neither any design to Byass, or Prejudices to blind him, in his Determination concerning them. And that he had good reason thus to distinguish between these two Assemblies, how muchsoever some have thought fit to scoff at it, I come now to shew;

⁴ Rights, &c. p. 261.

(1.) From the Nature of those Writs which relate to them.

Sect. 3.

That the Parliamentary Convention of the Clergy, was Assembled by a Writ wholly distinct from that by which the Provincial is called, I have already shewn, in the Account which I have before given of each of them. I shall at present make such Observations upon both; from whence I conceive it will evidently appear, That the Convocations so Assembled by them, as I have said, must be altogether different from one another, and have different Rights and Priviledges belonging to them.

1. And here in the first place, it must be observ'd, That the Parliamentary Convention now is, and always has been Assembled by the King only: It is a part of his Royal Prerogative to Call together the Estates of the Realm; and by the nature of our Constitution, no other Person, but the Prince alone, and that by his Sovereign Authority, can do it.

p. 17.

But this is not the Case of our Provincial Convocations which have always been Summon'd by the Power of the Metropolitan: ¹ And tho' our Princes from the beginning have generally interposed in the Calling of them, yet has it been only so far as to require the Archbishop to Summon them; but still the Authority by which the Clergy have met, has been that of their Primate, and so, I conceive, it continues to this day.

Sect. 4.

p. 245.

Now these two Powers are not only very different in themselves, but bespeak such a difference in the Assemblies so called by them, as, in my apprehension, can never be got over. The Parliamentary Convention is, confessedly, a part of the Parliament of England; ² A Member of the Parliament, says a late Author, in the most proper Sense of that Phrase. If the Provincial Convocation be the same, then has the Archbishop of each Province a joynt Power with the King to Assemble the Parliament: And the one must be look'd upon to have as much Right to Convene the Ecclesiastical, as the other to Call together the Lay Estates of it. But if this be such an Authority as our Law has not entrusted in the hands of any Subject; If it be a Branch, (indeed one of the chiefest Branches) of the Royal Prerogative, to Assemble the Estates of Parliament together: If our Constitution makes no distinction between the Secular part of that High Court, and the Ecclesiastical, as to the Business of Summoning of it, but commits the whole Power of both, to the Supreme Civil Governour; Then it must follow, that the Bishops and Clergy Assembled by the King's Writ, in Parliament, are not only a different Assembly from the same Bishops and Clergy (if yet they be the same) called by the Archbishop's Mandate to a Provincial Convocation; but of a very different Nature in the Eye of the Law too. The One, such an Assembly as the King only has Authority to Call; the Other, such as the Archbishop of each Province, if not by his own Power alone, yet by virtue of the King's Writ, has a right to Convene.

Sect. 5.

And accordingly it is to be observed after what a different manner the Writs, which relate to these two Assemblies, are Issued forth, and Executed. The Writs for a Parliament, proceed out of one Office; Those for a Convocation come from another. In the Parliamentary Writs, the King himself Summons every Bishop of England, to come to Parliament, and to premonish the Clergy of his Diocese to come with him: In the Provincial, he sends to the Archbishop to cause his Bishops and Clergy to be called together; and then, leaves it to him to issue out his Mandates for their Assembling. In the Execution of the King's Writ, the Bishop of each Diocese Summons his Clergy, in the King's Name, to Parliament: In the Execution of the Archbishop's Mandate, he Summons them in the Name, and by the Authority of the Metropolitan to the Convocation. And, lastly, having Executed both; They return their Certificates of the One to the King, to shew what they had done in Obedience to his Writ; but those of the Other to the Archbishop, to assure him of their having fulfill'd his Mandate.

Either therefore these two Assemblies, thus called after such a different Manner, and by two such different Powers, must be in their Nature different Assemblies; and the Provincial Convocation be acknowledged to be no part of the Parliament of England, as the Parliamentary Convention of the Clergy certainly was: Or it must remain, that the Power of Assembling one of the Chiefest Estates of the Parliament, is lodged in the hands of the Archbishop of each Province; and that all the King has to do in it, is, to command them, (and that too, with Submission) to Assist him with their Authority in the Calling of it. ³

But what if the Archbishop should at any time be perverse, and refuse to Call his Clergy, being required by the King so to do? That in that Case, the Clergy could not lawfully have met in Convocation without his Mandate, I have shewn ⁴ was the Opinion of an Eminent Archbishop of Canterbury heretofore. Nay, so Confident he was in it, that in open Parliament he profess'd he would never more Call a Convocation for the Supply of the King's Needs, unless a certain Clause in a Bill, sent up from the Commons, which he thought Injurious to the Liberties of his Clergy, were razed out of it. Now, not to enquire how far the Archbishop's Authority, in this Case, did extend then, or at present does reach, with respect to the

the Summoning of the Convocation: Can it with any reason be supposed, that it should have been in the Power of a Subject, to tie up the Princes hands, so that he should not have been able to have held his Parliament without his Consent? Yet thus it must have been, supposing the Provincial Synod, and the Parliamentary Convocation, of the Clergy to have been all one: For this Power Archbishop Courtney most certainly thought himself to have had over the Clergy of his Province, that being not Summon'd by his Mandate, they could not lawfully meet together without it; No, not at the King's Command.

But indeed in his time the Case was plain; and the Parliamentary Assembly was very easy to be distinguished from the Provincial Convocation. For then they were not only Called, but they Came too, upon the King's Summons, to the Parliament. They Acted together with the Lords and Commons, as a State of it: Whilst the Provincial Synod commonly both met at some other time, and was composed of other Members; and was, therefore, as easy to be distinguished from the Parliamentary Conventions, as any other Assemblies are to be known from one another. But, 2dly, These two Convocations were not only Assembled by different Persons, and different Powers; but were composed of different Members too: And this sure must be allow'd to be a Demonstrative proof of a Real, and not only a Notional distinction between them.

The Provincial Synod, called by each Archbishop, consists only of the Bishops, and Prelates, and Clergy, of each Province: None else are Summon'd by them; none else, if they were Summon'd, would obey, and come to it. But in the Parliamentary Convention, all the Bishops of the Realm are Cited to appear; the Deans of the Cathedral Churches of both Provinces are call'd alike: The Archdeacons and Proctors of the Clergy, of both, are Summon'd. And they all anciently came to Parliament, in Obedience to this Summons; and continued to make their Returns, in acknowledgment of their Duty to Attend, when they had left off to make their Personal Appearance at it. And, to this very day, the Bishops of both Provinces (who are call'd by the same Parliament Writ now, that they have ever been) do, in Vertue of it, still sit in Parliament together: Whereas in the Convocation of the Province, the Archbishop and Bishops of the other Province are neither Cited to appear; nor, (tho' attending together with the rest of their Brethren in Parliament,) have they any right to sit in it. And how those Assemblies can be either in Law, or Fact, the same Assembly; in one of which all the Bishops of England, according to their Summons, both Meet and Act together; and to which the Clergy have ever been, and are still Nationally called; in the other, neither do the Bishops of one whole Province sit, or Act, or have a right to do either; nor are the Clergy of the other Province, ever called to it; is, I confess, beyond my capacity to comprehend.

Nay, but even in the same Province, the Members of these two Assemblies, are not the same; and this will yet more clearly prove the difference between them.

Whilst the Regular Clergy continu'd to be call'd both to Parliament, and Convocation; Great was the number of the Abbots, and Priors in the One, in comparison of what was in the Other. Insomuch, that when once only the Parliamentary Prelates were called by the King and the Archbishop, to a Synodical meeting; they not only refused to Act for want of the rest, but remonstrated to the Archbishop concerning it, in these very Terms; That the Religious, so Omitted, made up the greatest part of the Body of the Clergy of his Province.¹

In the Parliamentary Assembly; the number of these Prelates is computed to have been usually about Thirty, out of the whole Realm: In the Provincial Synod, of the Province of York only, they were above *Fifty*²; and how much more numerous they must have been in that of Canterbury, the Proportion between the two Provinces, will enable us easily to conclude.

And as the Number of these Regulars was much greater, in the One of these Assemblies, than in the Other; So several others of the Body of the Clergy there were, who were ordinarily Summon'd to the Provincial, but were never at all called to the Parliamentary Convocation. Such were the Collegiate, Conventual, and Capitular Churches, and Bodies; which were not Cathedral; and which alone amounted to a considerable Number. And tho' since the dissolution of the Religious Houses, and Collegiate Churches, the difference in the Province of Canterbury, between these Assemblies, be not so discernible; yet is it still enough to Warrant me to dissent from an Assertion, which has, I think, been too hastily advanced, 'as if they were at present composed intirely of the same Members; and to bespeak them, upon this account alone, if there were no other, to be wholly different Convocations.

I do not believe that the Dean and Chapter, and Archdeacon of the Collegiate Church of Westminster; the Dean of Windsor; and the Dean and Chapter of the Collegiate Church of Woolverhampton; have (since the present Establishment of those several Churches) been wont to be Summon'd by the King to Parliament. But to the Provincial Synod they have been, and I suppose, are still Cited by the Archbishop. And for the Province of York, not only the Collegiate Churches of Southwell, and Rippon, with the Clergy of the Jurisdiction of the former of these; but the Keepers of the Peculiars of Howden, and Allerton, (as well that part which belongs to the Bishop of Durham, as to the Dean and Chapter) with the Clergy of their several Jurisdictions, still continue to make a part of their Lower-house, of Convocation; but the Bishop of the Isle of Man, was also wont to be called and received among them, as a Member of their Upper.

And now I have mentioned the other Province, let me add the particular Custom of it, to admit not only the Archdeacons, but their Officials too; and the Proctors of every several Archdeaconry to their Convocation: I enquire not by what Authority they have done this; that it was not by the Custom of Canterbury, we are very sure, which herein they do not follow, whatever they may be bound to do in other Matters. But be that as it will; It is enough for me, that of all these, in the latter end of King Henry the Eighth's time, their Provincial Synod was wont to Consist: And that thereby (after that the Regular Clergy were no longer Summon'd) their Convocation amounted to above Fifty, when, at the same time, their Part of the Parliamentary Assembly was not full Thirty.

Nor do these two Conventions of the Clergy consist only of different Members, but the very same Persons Sit under a different Capacity in the one and in the other. In the Provincial Synod the Bishops Sit and Act only as Prelates of the Church. Under that Capacity they are Summon'd to it by their Metropolitan, and Subject to his Orders and Directions in it. But in the Parliament they Sit not only as Bishops, but as Barons too. ³ They act in common with the Baronage of the Realm; and claim their equal Priviledges with the other Lords. They are Summon'd by special Writs from the King, like the rest of the Barons; and that both to Treat of the great Affairs of State with them, and to give their Advice to him concerning them.

And accordingly the very Titles given them in their Publick Acts, bespeak the several Capacities under which they come to these several Assemblies. In the Convocation as they Act under a Spiritual Character; so Prelati is the Name ⁴ that they are constantly call'd by there. But to the Parliament they are called as Lords Spiritual: As such they Act in it, and by that Title therefore they are usually denominated in the Laws and Statutes which are made there.

As for the Regulars, who once sate in the Upper-house of Parliament, they also continued to be call'd to it, upon the account of their Baronies; ⁵ And like the Bishops, Acted under that Capacity. Those who had no such Tenure, pleaded their Case, and were discharged of their Attendance. But to the Convocation they came as Heads of their Religious Houses: If they had a Covent under their Government, and no Superiour over them; tho' for want of a Barony, they were discharged by the King from attending upon his Parliament; yet, they were not dismissed by the Primate, from coming to his Convocation.

Even the Proctors of the Clergy, as they were chosen by a different Writ, for the Parliament and Convocation; and were very often different Persons, and that within the same Province in which the Parliament sate; so were they severally Empowered, and under different limitations, to Act in the One, and the Other. For the Parliament, they had a Proxy to appear on the behalf of their Chapter, and Clergy, "In the Parliament of the most Serene Prince Edward the Illustrious King of England; for the Convocation, before the most Reverend Father in God the Archbishop of Canterbury. By the One, they were to "Treat with the Prelates, Great Men, and Nobles of the Kingdom of England; By the other, "with the Archbishop, and the rest of the Prelates and Clergy of the Province of Canterbury, "in the Convocation to be held by the said Archbishop. With the One, they were to Treat of the great and difficult Affairs of the Kingdom: With the Other, properly, of such Affairs only as concern'd the Church, and of the Affairs of the Kingdom, dom, no farther than as the Safety and Welfare of the Church, was concern'd in that of the State. In short, in the one, they were Empowered only "To Treat and Consent; In the other, "To give their Advice and Assistance too, and farther "to do and receive what was to be done or received in the Meeting to which they were deputed. Let me add yet one thing more, that when the Prelates and Clergy sent their Proxies to these Assemblies, they commonly left them under a greater Liberty of Acting in the Provincial, than in the Parliamentary Convention. For the one of which, they gave them but one general Procuration; But for the other they often delivered them two or three of a different Extent; that so, by concealing those which endued them with the largest Powers, they might have a Pretence at hand for not Consenting to such things as the King might sometimes chance to require of them, for want of sufficient Power so to do; and yet rather than be sent home for a New Commission, or otherwise run themselves, or the Clergy, into any great streights, might have another Instrument at hand, to enable them to Comply with what should be demanded of them.

What other Influence the several Circumstances, before Observed, may have had upon the Acts of these two Convocations, I shall not now particularly consider. This great and evident one, I must not pass by; That the Provincial Synod, being composed only of the Clergy of One Province, neither its Grants, nor Constitutions, had any force to Conclude those of the Other. Whereas what was done in their Parliamentary Meetings, extended to the whole Realm; and being legally Established in that high Court, Obligated the Clergy of Both Provinces alike.

And now I shall leave it to any indifferent Person to say, whether it can with any Colour of Reason be affirm'd, that these two Assemblies of the Clergy, are, in effect, but one and the same Convocation; which are composed of such different Members; and in which the same Persons act under such different, and almost opposite, Capacities. Yet for affirming this, it has pleas'd a late Witty Author, to fall (after his usual way) very briskly upon me. His Words are remarkable, and I shall, for more than one Reason, transcribe them as they stand in his Book. ¹ The Letter Writer therefore (says he) is utterly mistaken, &c. And Dr. Wake, is yet farther from Truth, when in his Fantastick way of Speech, he tells us, that the Convocation called by the Provincial Writ, IS Consisted of another sort of Persons, than the Parliamentary Assemblies, summon'd by the Præmunientes Were: Since it is certain, that both these Assemblies WERE Originally CONSISTED of the very same Persons, and were really but One Assembly of Men, under a double Capacity: And as CERTAIN also, that they have BEEN again thus CONSISTED for the last CLX Years. I am really at a loss to determine which of the two is more absurdly False, the Doctrine he here lays down, or his manner of Expressing it.

As for the Doctrine which I have laid down (to use his own Odd, I will not say, Fantastical Expression) I have already accounted for it: And do again affirm that these two Convocations neither now do, nor ever did, consist of the same Members; nor where the Persons were the same, did they ever Act in the same Capacity in both. How Fantastical my Expressions were, will be best seen by the Words themselves, in which I delivered my self; and which the Reader will excuse me; if I therefore take the liberty to transcribe ².

In Answer to an Argument drawn from the Præmunitory Clause in the Bishop's Writ, to prove a Parliamentary Right of Assembling, and Acting in the Provincial Convocation; I thus express my self. I do readily agree, that when the Præmonition to the Bishop to Summon his Clergy to Parliament, was first put into the Writ, the Clergy thereby summon'd, had as much right to meet by vertue of it, as the Bishop himself had. And it is accordingly, by our best Antiquaries, acknowledged, that, in Ancient Times, the Inferiour Clergy were a Member of the great Council of the Nation, as well as the Bishops and Abbots. But then this is a Convocation, that for many Years past, has had no Existence; and the Convocation, of which we are now Disputing, is quite another thing: Is summon'd by another kind of Writ; and Consisted of another sort of Persons; As by comparing the Ancient Writs of both may evidently be discerned. These are my Words; and in which I am yet to discover any thing that can justly be excepted against. If to render them Ridiculous, or as he phrases it, Fantastical; he has thought fit to insert, or to transfer an is, where he found none; He must be content that the fantasticalness, as well as Faults, should be laid at his Own Door: And give me leave to Conclude, in the reverse of his Censure; that my Expressions as little deserve the One part of it, as I shall convince him before I have done, that my Doctrine does the Other. And for this I shall submit it to every unprejudic'd Person to judge betwixt us.

Sect. 10.

3. As the Persons who are the Members of these Two Conventions, plainly shew Them to be different Convocations; so, in the next place, do the Time and Place of their Assembling: Nor can any thing, I think, be more conclusive, in a Matter of this Nature, than this Argument; that those Meetings which are called at different Times, and to different Places from One another, must needs be different Assemblies: Especially, when to these, shall be superadded those other Considerations which have been Already offer'd; that they are Assembled by different Powers, and Consist of different Persons.

Now for this I shall need only to Appeal to the Writs, and Mandates, by which these several Convocations have been summon'd; and from the Authority of which, as they derive all their legal Power of Convening; so from thence, we shall best be able to judge of the Nature of those Assemblies which are convened by them.

That in the Parliament-Writ, the King does ever more expressly determine both the Time and Place of its sitting, is certain; nor can it be deny'd by any. And this has so strict an effect in Law; that neither can the Parliament meet at any other Time, or Place, than the Writ has appointed; nor the King himself otherwise than by a New Writ, under the Great Seal, prorogue it to any other.

¹ And even in that Case, a Competent number of Persons must meet at the Time, and Place first appointed, to hear the Second Writ read, and the Prorogation made according to the tenour of it. It has, I know, been told us, by a diligent Searcher into our Records², That this is not necessary; how rightly, I am not able to say. But still a New Writ, even by his Own Confession, there must be issued out to revoke the First; and without which the King himself cannot hold his Parliament but at the Time, and Place appointed by him for that purpose.

If therefore the Parliamentary Convention of the Clergy, be (as 'tis confessed that it is) a proper Member of Parliament: If by the King's Writ, it be so determined to meet at a certain Time, and Place, with the other Estates of Parliament; that it cannot lawfully Assemble at any Other: Then it must, I think, of necessity, follow, That this Assembly cannot, either by the Terms of our Constitution, or by the Laws of Parliament, be the same with such a Convocation, as is neither called at the same Time, nor to the same Place with the Parliament; nor did ever agree in both with it; and but seldom, if ever, in either.

Now, that such is the Case of our Provincial Convocations, that they are summon'd at different times, and held in different places, from the Parliamentary Conventions; will easily be made appear.

³ Rights, &c. p. 47. 48.

For, First, As to the former of these Circumstances; that of Time: It is allow'd, ³ that heretofore the Provincial Synods met not only at different times from One Another, but Both at different times, from the Parliaments of those Days, sometimes they preceded, but generally they follow'd them a Week or two: On purpose, (says my Author, as I apprehend) That the Bishops and Abbots might be at Leisure to attend both those Meetings. I cannot tell why this Gentleman, who is otherwise so Zealous for the Rights of the Lower Clergy, has here left them out of the Parliamentary Convention: Seeing, at the time of which he here speaks, they were not only summon'd to Parliament; but, as I conceive, did actually come to it, as well as the Bishops and Abbots. This therefore being added on their behalf; and the Period admitted, to which he refers his Remark; namely, to Richard the Second's time; I think the Conclusion that will issue from thence, is plain; that those must needs have been different Assemblies, which were not only held at such a distance of Time from One another; but had that distance assigned to them on purpose, that those who were obliged to attend in both (as, by this Gentleman's leave, not only the Bishops and Abbots, but the Priors and Deans of the Cathedrals, and Archdeacons were) might be in a Capacity of going to both. And this, we are told, was the Case of the First Age of our Parliament,⁴ to Richard the Second's time, about the space of 100 Years.

⁴ Rights, &c. p. 48.

In King Henry the Fourth's time, the distance between these Assemblies, he says, began to be ENLARGED: Tho' they still kept pretty near to one another. For in, and after this time, the Clergy held their Assemblies, during, and near the Sessions of Parliament, but not thoroughly concurrent with them. The Archbishop, it seems, affecting independency; and the King, who above all things, desir'd to stand well with the Clergy, favouring him, and them, in that respect; and giving way to their being called later, or dismissed sooner than the Laity. And this (we are told) was the state of the next Age of our Provincial Convocations.

And here we have again the matter of fact confess'd; That the Provincial Convocations were not thoroughly concurrent with those of the Parliament: But the Clergy were either called later to, or dismissed sooner from their Synods than the Laity from their Parliamentary Assemblies. And the Reason given for it, is no less Observable; that the Archbishops, who summon'd the Provincial Convocations, affected Independency; and the King, who above all things, desir'd to stand well with the Clergy, favour'd them in their Affectation. From whence I shall take the liberty again to Conclude; That if the Convocation sate at a different time from the Parliament; and if the Reason why it did so was, that it might not be thought to depend upon it: Then certainly, the Archbishops and Clergy must have lookt upon their Convocations to have been Meetings of a very different kind from that of the Parliament; and by consequence from those Assemblies of the Clergy, which were never doubted to be in the strictest sense, a part of it. Nay, it will follow yet farther; That they thought their Provincial Convocations, not only to have been different Convocations from the King's Parliamentary Assemblies; but held them at another time, on purpose that they might not so much as seem to have any dependance upon his Parliament: Of which, the other has ever been look'd upon to have been a Principal Estate and Member.

But to go on to the last Period: ¹ About the Entrance of the last Age; when the Prerogative began to recover the Ground it had lost to the Church, we find these Meetings of the Clergy and Laity (so he calls the Parliament, and Convocation) more closely United: The Dates of Henry the Eighth's Convocations being all One, or a few days before or after, (if not altogether the same with) those of his Parliament. And from Edward the 6th to this Reign, the Clergy have, I think, met always, and parted within a Day of the Parliament: The Day it self, on which the Parliament sate, and rose, being not judged so proper for this purpose, because the Bishops were then to ATTEND THE HOUSE OF LORDS: But since the late Revolution, the Business of these two Meetings not interfering, the same Day has served to open both of them; or rather, to open the One, and shut up the Other. ² There have been no Deviations from this Rule, that I know of, except in a Legantine Synod or two (which are no Presidents) and one in the Convocation of 1640.

This Author will Excuse me, if I take the liberty to tell him here, what I will fully prove hereafter, that he is altogether mistaken in his matter of Fact. This Rule, as he calls it, has not pass'd so currently without Exceptions, as he represents it to have done. But however, to take it in his Own Way; and suppose that the Provincial Convocations, have, for the last Age and half, sate within a Day after the Parliament. Even this is enough to prove it to be a Meeting wholly distinct from it; and by Consequence, from a Convocation that is, confessedly, a part of it. For 'tis not the distance of Time that, in this Case, we are to consider; but whether it be absolutely the same. And if by their several Writs of Summons, the one of these Convocations is appointed but a Day before the other, it is the same thing in the Eye of the Law, as if it had been a Month, or a Year.

For Proof of which, let us suppose the Parliament to be called to meet (as once it memorably was) upon the 5th of November: In that Case it must be granted, that the Parliamentary Convention, summon'd by the King's Writ to the Bishops, must have begun the same Day. But the Provincial Convocation which was appointed to be held the 6th. had as yet no Being; nor could its Members, tho' they had been all present, have legally Assembled themselves in such a Convocation. Upon the Fifth of November then, the Parliamentary Body of the Clergy was Conven'd; and, by being so, was, in the Eye of the Law, actually Assembled. The Bishops, the Principal Members of it, attended upon the King at Westminster: The Deans, Archdeacons, and Proctors of the Clergy, Chosen and Empowered by Vertue of the same Writs; should have been present too; but the Provincial Convocations, which were to sit the next Day at Paul's and York, were not yet in Being: Nor could the Bishops and Dignitaries, and Proctors of the Clergy, have lawfully met their Archbishops that Day at those Places; nor without a Præmunire, have sate in Convocation with them. Now, if this be good Law, as I am pretty confident it is; then, as little as I know of Logick, I will venture to conclude, That the Convocation which met at Westminster, upon the Fifth of November, was altogether a different Assembly from that which met at London and York upon the Sixth: And that we may, consistently enough, with our Church, give God Thanks for delivering the One, from the Designs of the Papists against it; tho' I cannot yet think it reasonable to bless him for delivering the Other, which should have assembled at so Great a distance upon 6th of November, from being blown up at Westminster, upon the Fifth.

Sec. 13.

To clear this Matter yet more; if in so plain a Case, it be possible to do it; let me add, That as the King summons these two Convocations by different Writs, so in those Writs, he appoints this difference of Time too: And the Archbishops in their Mandates, Obey him in the Execution of the One, as both they, and the rest of the Bishops do, in that of the Other. So that upon receipt of these double Writs, a double Summons is issued out by them; a double Return is made by the Clergy upon them; and either different Proctors are chosen for these two Convocations, (as in the Province out of which the Parliament meets) Or the same Persons are Commissioned in a double capacity, as is the common practice in that in which it is held.

This has been an occasional practice to the very time of our last Civil Wars:

Infomuch, that when that unfortunate Parliament ¹ was to meet in 1640; The Archbishop of Canterbury, being then Guardian of the Diocese of Lincoln, sent his Mandate down to the Dean and Chapter, to summon the one to appear in his own Person; the Others by their Proctor, as well in the Parliament to be begun at Westminster the 13th of April next, as in the Convocation of the Clergy of England, in the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, London, the 14th Day of the same Month. And the Chapter order'd a Proxy to be seal'd to Dr. Robert Meers, Chancellor of their Church, to appear as the Proctor of the Chapter, according to the Tenour of the said Mandate.

ad Ann. 1623.

Thus the Minute is enter'd in the Dean and Chapter's Book there: And for the Form it self, in which this Præmonition for Parliament is made; I shall set it down as I find it, in another Church, at the latter end of the fore-going Reign: Where the Bishop having recited the King's Parliament Writ, with the Præmonitory Clause, for a Parliament to be held at Westminster, February the 12th, thus goes on to his Dean and Chapter thereupon: ² "By Vertue and Authority whereof, We, by the Tenor of these Presents, do Warn, and Peremptorily Cite you the Dean aforesaid; that at the Day, and Place, before mentioned, you be Personally present to treat about the difficult and urgent Affairs, which concern the State and Profit, the publick Good and Defence of the Realm of England, and the Subjects thereof, to be then and there more seriously laid before you, and to consent to such things, as upon common Deliberation, shall chance to be wholsomly Established to the Honour of God, and profit of the Church. And further to Do, and Receive what the nature of this Affair shall demand, or require. We do also commit it to you, and injoin you firmly, and command you, that you peremptorily Cite, or cause to be Cited, all and singular the *Canon*s and Prebendaries of our Cathedral Church aforesaid; that they appear personally before you or your Commissaries, at a Day and Place by you to be appointed; to Chuse and Nominate One fitting and sufficient Person; and to Give and Grant to the said Person sufficient Power to appear in the Name and stead of the said Chapter before Us, or our Vicar General in Spiritual Matters, or any other Commissary in that behalf, in the Cathedral Church of Litchfield, in the Usual Place there, upon Thursday the 5th of February next, after the Date of these Presents, to Chuse, Ordain, and send one fitting and sufficient Proctor for the Chapter aforesaid, after the Form above mentioned; and to Order his Wages, &c. And take care to Certifie us, &c. of what you shall have done in the Premises.

This

This Mandate the Dean and Chapter were wont to Obey, as the Archdeacons in like manner did. And the Proctors for the Parliament being chosen both by the Chapter and Clergy; the Bishop made his Return of what he had done, by his Certificate to the King in this manner. "To the most excellent Prince, &c. "We have with all reverence receiv'd your Brief, and Mandate, for coming to your Parliament, by Vertue and Authority whereof, we have caus'd to be premonish'd, according to the Tenour of it, the Dean and Chapter of our Cathedral Church, the Archdeacons, and all the Clergy of our Diocese; that they, and every of them, appear in Parliament at the said time and place; the Deans, and Archdeacons in their proper Persons; the said Chapter by one, and the Clergy of the Diocese by two fitting Proctors, having full and sufficient Power from the said Chapter and Clergy, to Consent to such things, as shall, by God's Grace, happen to be ordain'd by the Common Council of your Kingdom.

I have the rather set down these forms at large, to shew, that, when the Clergy were Summon'd to the Parliament, the Bishop proceeded in the Execution of the King's Writ, in a form altogether different from that of the Archbishop for a Provincial Convocation. That the Dean and Chapter were Cited to appear at the day that the Parliament was opened, not upon the day that the Convocation began; At Westminster, not at St. Paul's; and that the Proctors of the Clergy were, accordingly, doubly Chosen, and Commissioned, for these two Assemblies. And from all which, it evidently appears, that they are two distinct Congregations called by several Writs, at several times, to several Places; and have their several Powers, and Privileges, accordingly.

But I must not conclude these Remarks without taking Notice of the reason that is given why the Provincial Convocation, has been wont to meet a day after the other: Because that on the day of the Parliaments sitting, the Bishops were To ATTEND THE HOUSE OF LORDS. ² Where this Gentleman Learn'd this Doctrine, ² Rights, &c. I cannot tell; but sure I am, the Bishops are not much beholden to him for it: pag. 48. For whose utter Exclusion from the House of Lords, he has hereby laid a fair foundation; whenever that Honourable House shall please to resolve, that they have no longer need of their ATTENDANCE. I verily thought that the Bishops had been Summon'd to SIT WITH the Lords in Parliament, not to ATTEND upon THEM: That both as Barons, and Bishops, they had a Right (a double Right) of Acting and Voting in that High Court. But, it seems, I have been mistaken; these Clergy-Lords are only Spiritual Attendants upon the Upper, as he would have the Clergy-Commoners to be upon the Lower-house of Parliament. A Proposition not much for the Honour either of the One, or the Other: Who both together have ever been accounted one of the Three Estates of the Realm in Parliament, and by the King's Writs (the standing, legal foundation of their Parliamentary Rights and Privileges) are at this day solemnly acknowledged, and declared so to be.

However, let us admit of his Reason, tho' with a little Correction of his Crude Expression; that the Bishops being to Attend upon the King with the Lords and Commons, at the opening of the Parliament, that day was not so proper for the Provincial Synod to meet upon. Now the Bishops attend there by vertue of the same Writ, by which the Inferiour Dignitaries and Clergy are Summon'd thither. They attend in Obedience to the King's Summons, and as the remaining part of that Estate, which once more fully attended with them, and is still call'd by the King so do. They therefore so attending, are All of the Parliamentary Convocation, that now do actually attend there. And the reason given, upon this true foundation, why the Provincial Synod, cannot well begin the first day of the Parliament is this, because that the Bishops are then accusom'd (as the rest of the Clergy are call'd) to attend upon the King in their Parliamentary Capacity, in another place; which I think still helps to Corroborate that difference, which from this, and the other Reasons I have before mentioned, there plainly appears to be between them.

And thus much we may conclude from what has been granted to us, concerning the different Times of these two Assemblies meeting. I shall only observe, that as they are allowed to have their several days of opening, so it is farther granted, that they have their several times of rising too: And this no less than the other, proves an apparent difference both in Law and Fact between them. For the Parliament being dissolved, or prorogued by the King's Command, the Convention of the Clergy called by vertue of the Parliamentary Writ, must of necessity be dissolved, solved, or prorogued together with it. If therefore the Provincial Convocation be not affected thereby; if it still continues to sit (tho' never so short a time) after the Parliament is risen; and needs another Writ to determine its Session; Then it must be concluded, that it hereby also appears to be a different Assembly from the other; as different as an Assembly actually and legally sitting, is from an Assembly that is actually and legally dissolved; and so has no being in Law, nor can legally meet, or do, or establish any thing.

Solved,

But these are not all the Reflections, which this Circumstance of time will afford us, to shew the difference of these two Assemblies. There are some other Particulars, which must not wholly be overlook'd; tho' I shall insist as briefly as possible upon them.

For, First, Whereas the King by his Writs constantly determined the time of the Parliament's sitting, and in that of the Parliamentary Convention's meeting with it, nothing was more usual heretofore, in the Provincial Convocation call'd by the King's direction, than to leave the Archbishop wholly at liberty in this particular; To assemble it when he thought fit: Only with a general Clause, that he should do it, with all convenient speed; ¹ but as for the precise time of its meeting, that was committed to himself to determine. When afterwards this liberty began to be retrenched, and a time was limited, within which the Convocation should be Summon'd by him; yet still the day was submitted to his own Nomination; and the Archbishop not only appointed that, but (as has been already observed) frequently exceeded the bounds of that time that had been prescribed to him. Nay, when the very day it self was fixed in the King's Writ, yet he did not think himself so far concluded by it, as not to have the power of changing it, for his own Convenience, which accordingly he oftentimes did do.

Now what can be more unreasonable than to think that this Liberty should either have been given by the King, or taken by the Archbishop, had the Provincial Synod, and the Parliamentary Convocation been but one, and the same meeting. ² Or what can be more clear, then that an Assembly whose time is fix'd; and that by the Royal Authority, (which alone indeed has power to determine it) must be a different Assembly from that whose time of meeting is left at large by the King, and is determined only by the Ecclesiastical Power.

Secondly, As for the Dissolution of the Provincial Convocation, that also shews its necessary distinction from the Parliamentary. To say nothing of that Custom which has confessedly obtain'd for an Age and half past, of proroguing or dissolving the one some time, tho' but a short one, after the other; which I have before taken notice of. The account which is given us, of the Convocation and Parliament which were sitting at the time of King Henry the Fourth's Death, sufficiently speaks the difference between them. ³ The Parliament, and with that the Parliamentary Convention of the Clergy, was dissolved by the King's Death, March the 20th; and a new one Summon'd, two days after. But the Provincial Convocation, as it was not call'd by the King, (tho' in pursuance of his Writ) so neither was it dissolved by his Demise, but continued to sit on, notwithstanding the dissolution of the other; and therein manifestly shew'd it self to be a quite different Assembly from it.

I shall conclude this Argument with another, and much later instance, of the same kind, and which may be one proof, out of many, before hand, of the great Mistake of that Assertion, which has been lately with so much positiveness advanced; viz. that our Convocations have been always call'd and dissolved, within a day of the Parliament, for these last 150 years. In the 19th of King James the First, a Writ was sent to the Archbishop of York, Dated February the 9th, for the Dissolving of that Convocation: And by vertue thereof upon the 27th of the same Month it was dissolved. But the Parliament of that same year had been before dissolved by Commission, February the 8th, and with it the Parliamentary Convention, put to an end, almost Three Weeks before the Provincial Convocation.

This I take to be as plain a Demonstration of the actual Distinction of these two Assemblies, as can possibly be given; and I make no doubt but that all indifferent Persons will join in the same Opinion with me. But,

Sett. 17.

Secondly, From the former of those Circumstances which I here proposed (under this head) to consider; let us go on to the latter, that of Place; and see whether we may not from thence also derive another plain demonstration of the difference which I affirm to be between the Provincial, and Parliamentary, Conventions of the Clergy of England.

I have before observed that when the King calls his Parliament (of which the Bishops and Clergy are one chief Estate) he prefixes not only the time, but the place too, of their Assembling: And this being done under his Great Seal, and in the Writs of Summons which are issued out for the Convening of it, cannot be changed by any lesser Authority than that which first appointed it. In like manner, when a Convocation is to meet, the King either absolutely determines the place, or mentions some particular place for it's meeting, with a liberty to the Archbishop to chuse any other, that he shall think to be more convenient for it. The Archbishop having issued out his Mandate, upon this Writ, and therein appointed the place where the Convocation is to begin; that also is now settled, not only by Ecclesiastical, but by Civil Authority too; and at that place, and no other, the Clergy must appear.

If therefore these two Conventions of the Clergy, thus Summon'd by the Parliamentary and Provincial Writs are call'd not only at several times, but to different places; If the legal determined place for the meeting of the one be (for Example) Westminster; for the other London and York; Nay, if sometimes the distance be yet more considerable, as in the last Parliament of King Charles the Second it was, when the Parliament was Summon'd to Oxford; the Provincial Convocation of Canterbury to London; and that of the other Province, to York; and all these were by vertue of their several Summons, determined in Law to Meet, Sit, and Act, in those several places: I do not see how it is possible to confound all these Assemblies into one; and in despite not only of Law, but of Common Sense it self, make the Parliamentary Convention legally called to sit at Oxford, and no where else, to be in fact the same Assembly with the two Provincial Convocations, appointed to sit at London and York, and not Commissioned or Authorized in Law, to meet in any other place.

But here then a difficulty has been started, in which tho' the present Argument be not much concerned, yet it may not be improper, to take some notice of it, upon this Occasion. That the Bishops and Clergy, who are called by the King's Writ to Parliament, like the Lords Temporal, and Commons, are, by vertue thereof, required to attend upon the King at the place appointed by him for the holding of it; whenever he requires the three Estates to come together, and particularly at the beginning of every Parliament, is not to be questioned. But as the other Estates, at other times, separate from one another, and sit by themselves, and debate asunder upon such matters as come before them; so the Clergy were in like manner wont to do. For this they had their several places of Assembling; and what the place was, in which the Parliament-Clergy were antiently wont to meet, whilst they continued to act in their Parliamentary Capacity, is a point that has raised some dispute: Let us see how a late Author has resolved it.

"In what place the Clergy, call'd to Parliament, met, Dr. Wake professes himself not to have found: But he thinks it not improbable, that it may have been at St. Paul's; (i. e. when the Parliament met at Westminster;) BECAUSE their other Convocations were usually held there. My Words are these, "In what place the Clergy used to meet, I have not found. But As their other Convocations were usually held at St. Paul's, so it is not improbable but that upon these Occasions, they may have sate there also. I assign not their sitting there in their other Convocations as any necessary, or sufficient reason, why they should meet there in these, but barely offer it, as no improbable Conjecture, in a matter where I had little to Guide me; that it was likely they might have sate, and deliberated there in one kind of their Convocations, (not BECAUSE, but) as well as we are sure, they did so, in the other.

But this, it seems, was no such probable conjecture as I supposed, but rather was very improbable: "That while they were STRICTLY SPEAKING, a MEMBER of PARLIAMENT, they should meet so far from the place where it open'd, and sate--- Westminster-Abbey was somewhat nearer, and more convenient. I readily grant that Westminster-Abbey was a great deal nearer to the Court, than Paul's: But was it not as much nearer when the Convocation sate in its Provincial Capacity, as it was when it sate in its Parliamentary? And yet for all that, the Clergy then chose St. Paul's Cathedral, rather than Westminster-Abbey; tho' the Archbishop, Bishops, and Prelates, attended in Parliament as duly at Westminster then, as both they, and the Clergy could have done before. And if the inconvenience of the distance of that place from Westminster weigh'd not with them in the one, why should we suppose it to have been of any such mighty Consideration with them in the other.

Westminster-Abbey was an Exempt Jurisdiction: The Clergy did not care to be call'd thither, neither by the Archbishop nor King; as this Author knows very well: ¹ And 'tis not improbable but that the Archbishop may have as little liked to sit in such a place himself, as they to attend upon him. Now the Clergy in their Parliamentary Meetings consulted together Provincially: ² Their very Deputations ran in that form; That their "Proctors should do, and consent to such things as should happen to be ordain'd by the Common Council and Assent of the venerable the Archbishop, and of the Prelates and Clergy of the Province." And I think it much more probable, That the Archbishop should advise with them in a place where he had an unquestionable Jurisdiction, rather than in One where he had none; but might perhaps have been troubled with Protestations on both sides; of the Clergy, for drawing them thither; and of the Abbot and Convent, for coming to sit there.

But still this is but conjecture on both sides, and proves nothing certainly on either: To come therefore to something that is more decisive; he adds; We may reasonably believe, That the Clergy were accommodated with some Room in that Monastery: As indeed they anciently were. ³ He means before the time of King Edward the First, (for so his Instances shew) that is to say, before the time of which we are now speaking. This indeed is very strange; that the Clergy should have held their Parliamentary Conventions at Westminster, a Hundred Years before they were called to Parliament. But however, let us consider his Authorities. As for the Three First, they all relate to other Matters: ⁴ One to an Extraordinary Meeting of the Archbishop and Clergy, to Excommunicate some Disturbers of the publick Peace: ⁵ The next to a National; the Third ⁶ to a Legantine Council; but not One of them relates to a Great Council, or Parliament.

The next Instance is thus far to the purpose, that it relates to a Great Council, and that Council assembled in Refectorio Westmonasteriensi: ⁷ From whence the Lay-Nobility retiring, left the Prelates to debate by themselves. The Parliament being broken up, after six days sitting, and nothing done of what the King desired; he prevailed with the Prelates to assemble once more, which accordingly they did in the Chappel of St. John, within the Infirmery; ^{*} but retir'd without any change in the Resolutions they had before taken. This is the truth of that Story: But how this proves the customary place of the Clergy's separate Conventions for Parliamentary Affairs, to have been within the Abbey of Westminster, I am yet to seek. For, in this Parliament, no other Clergy met, but the Bishops and Prelates, whose place was to sit with the Lords in Parliament, and not in a separate Body by Themselves; as it still continues to be at this day.

And yet as little as this makes to his purpose, his next Instance is still less: ⁸ The meeting on St. Matthew, being only a meeting of the Clergy, without the Laity; (who assembled by themselves the morrow after St. Martin, ⁹ Nov. 12. at above seven Weeks distance;) which, I am sure, this Gentleman himself, upon second thoughts, will not affirm to be sufficient to make a Parliament.

Hitherto then we have advanced but little in our Enquiries; Let us see whether his next Attempt be any better. ¹⁰ Upon the Division of the two Houses, says he, the Commons sate in the Chapter-House of the Abbot of Westminster. Dr. W. Observes, that this is mention'd there as the Accustom'd or (rather as the Roll it self speaks) the Ancient Place of their Assembling; which implies them to have sate there, probably from the time of their separation. Not many Years after this, They seem to have exchanged this place with the Clergy, and to have sate themselves in the Refectory of the same Abbey: For in the 9th of Henry the 5th, the Chapter-House appears to have been the place of Reception for the Convocation-Clergy, &c. I could have wish'd this Gentleman would have taken a little more pains to put the Clergy in Possession of the Refectory of the Abbey of Westminster, for the place of their Parliament Debates, before he had brought them to Exchange it with the Commons for the Chapter-House: But he has taken his Own Way, and I must follow him; And Enquire,

(1.) Whether the Commons did sit in the Chapter-House at Westminster, 'till the 50th of Edward the 3d. And,

(2.) Whether then, or not long after, they Exchanged it with the Clergy for the Refectory.

(1.) As for the former of these, the place where the Commons sat before the 50th of Edward the 3d. The most Early mention I have observ'd of it, in my small Acquaintance with the Parliament Rolls, is in the 17th of that King: And then I find them not in the Abbey of Westminster, but much nearer the Lords, in the Painted Chamber.¹ Here, I suppose, they continu'd in the following Parliaments, 'till about Eight Years after, having Commission'd a certain number of their State, to transact the Affairs of that Parliament, with a suitable number of Lords; and these (probably) meeting in that Room, the rest were order'd to retire to the Chapter-House within the Abbey.² But this gave them no settlement there; for within three Years after we find them again in the Painted Chamber; and there they continu'd to sit, 'till the 40th of the same King.³

In the 42d of Edward the 3d, the Place was changed; and the little Hall (of the Palace, as I take it) was assigned to them.⁴ How long they sat there, I cannot say: But in the Parliament, five Years after, in the 47th of Edward the 3d. We meet them again in the Painted Chamber,⁵ where they had formerly been wont to sit. The next Parliament after this, was in the 50th of Edward the 3d; when (as before I observ'd) they were sent to the Chapter-House at Westminster, which this Gentleman tells us, had been the usual Place of their Assemblies, from the time that they became a separate House: How truly we have now seen. In effect, there is but One single Instance, that I know of, upon Record, that ever they sat there, before the 50th of Edward the 3d, and that was upon an extraordinary Occasion: So that if the Chapter-House were their Ancient place of sitting, it must at least be confess'd to have been an Antiquated one too; for 'tis plain, that for near forty Years preceeding, they had made but little Use of it. Let us see,

(2.) How it appears, that not long after this, they Exchanged this place with the Clergy, for the Refectory of the same Abbey. In the 51st of Edward the 3d, they continued to sit in their New Place, the Chapter-House.⁶ During the first seven Years of King Richard the 2d, We meet with no determinate Place, but are only told in the general, That they sat within the Abbey of Westminster.⁷ But in the Parliament held the 8th of that King,⁸ we are expressly told what that place within the Abbey of Westminster was, viz. The Chapter-House, to which his Grandfather King Edward the 3d. had sent them.⁹

Thus the matter stood 'till about ten Years after; the same King (for what Reason I know not) left them to their Choice,¹⁰ to sit in the Chapter-House, or in the Refectory, which they would: And by this liberty it was, not by any imaginary Exchange made with the Clergy, of which there is not the least intimation in the Record, that they removed into the Refectory, where we find them sitting the next Parliament,¹¹ the 21st of Richard the 2d.

In this place they continued during the Reign of King Henry the 4th,¹² and in the beginning of his Son, King Henry the 5th: In the fourth of whose Reign, as this Gentleman rightly observes, the Chancellor assigned them une Maison appelee le Froitour.¹³ After this, there is little to be found upon the Rolls as to this matter, more than in general terms; that they sat in their accustomed place, the House in which they had anciently been wont to meet; and for which Phrase, this Gentleman needed not to have gone so low, as the 6th of Henry the 6th.¹⁴ He might have found the same Language three Years before, under the same Reign: And in the preceding Reigns, we meet with it, in effect, as high as the 5th of Henry the 4th; and possibly it might be carried yet higher, did the Argument need any curious search after it.¹⁵

And thus have we at last agreed upon the place in which the Commons were wont to sit, when they came to Parliament. The only Question is, How this Author proves that the King, who left them first to their Choice, of the Refectory, or Chapter-House, as they liked best, turn'd the Clergy out of the Refectory, to bring the Commons into their place?

Why? for that he refers us to Walsingham, and 'tis the only Authority which he alledges, or, indeed, seems to have had, to prove that the Clergy did ever make use of the Chapter-House in Westminster-Abbey, for the place of their Parliamentary Sessions; and that above Twenty Years after the Commons had left it to them. Let us hear therefore what Walsingham says as to this point:¹⁶

¹ Reg. Mem. Hen. Bugherh. Episc. Linc. fol. 275. Ut compareant coram nobis (sc. Arch. Cant.) seu nostris Commissariis in Ecclesia D. Pauli, is an accurate Writer, as this Author allows; and in that, I do assure him, there will be no Controversie between us. He tells us, that about the time of the Parliament, Anno 1421, the Order of the Black Monks were by the King's Edict called in great numbers together: That there were present Sixty Abbots, and Conventual Priors; besides three hundred and more Monks, with their Doctors and Proctors: That the King had been inform'd that they had deviated very much from their Institution; and that a Reformation could not be made by any other but himself: That being met together in the Chapter-House at Westminster, the King, with only four Attendants, came thither to them.

festum Exalt. S. Crucis, ad Traſand. ſuper Arduis & Urgent. Anglicanæ Ecclesiæ at- que Regni Negotiis, in dicto Parlamento diffusius pertractandis. And is this at last the Authority on which we are to determine the Chapter-House of Westminster, to have been the Customary Place of Meeting for the Parliament Clergy? A Congregation of Monks, turn'd into one of the Three Estates of the Realm. Surely our great Author Nodded here with a witness. I will not pretend to affirm St. Paul's to have been the constant place of their sitting upon these Occasions: But this I will undertake to say, that there they sometimes did meet to treat together of their Parliamentary Affairs; and I see no reason yet to doubt, but that it was their usual Custom so to do.

Sect. 19. King Edward the Third having summon'd his Parliament to Westminster, the Monday after the Exaltation of the Holy Cross, Anno 1334; and as the manner then was, the better to secure the Clergy's Attendance upon it, added a Provincial Writ, to his premunitory Summons: The Archbishop of Canterbury, in the very Execution of it, required the Parliament-Clergy, Ut compareant, &c. ¹ To appear before him in St. Paul's Church, upon the said Monday, there to Treat of the difficult and urgent Affairs of the Kingdom, and Church of England, which in the said Parliament were more at large to be treated of.

Ibid. The Archbishop's reason for calling this Convocation so near to the other, is observable. Nos igitur super contentis in Brevibus supra-scriptis cum quibusdam nostris Fratribus & aliis multis personis tractatu habito diligenti, Nolentes quantum in Nobis est, Nos & alios prelatos & Clerum nostræ Provincie occasione præmissorum duplicatis Expensis & laboribus satigari, & Opantes vestrum & eorum delictis criminibus quantum possumus obviare, Convocationem hujusmodi: (cum minori vestro quo possumus incommodo) & eorum, fore Censuimus faciendam. It is not improbable, but that a Person who has so much desire to Confound the Parliamentary, and Provincial, Assemblies of the Clergy together, may be willing to think, that this was a Mandate, not for the Parliament, but for a Convocation. And the rather, because it is expressly call'd to treat with the Archbishop at Paul's. To prevent any such Mistake, he may please to know that the King had, at the same time, Order'd the Archbishop to call a Convocation of the Clergy of his Province, much after the same manner as it is still done at this day. And in Execution thereof, the Archbishop distinctly commands the Bishop of London, to Cite all the Bishops, Deans, Abbots, Priors, &c. ² (the Members of the Provincial Assembly) to appear before him in the same place, (but not upon the same day) the Monday after the Feast of St. Matthew, there to treat, in their accustomed manner together.

E. Reg. Wigorn. Monast. Vol. ii. fol. 3. Now, as this double Provincial Summons assures us, that there were two different Assemblies to be call'd, for which a double Writ was necessary from the King, and a double Mandate from the Archbishop; so the Clergy in their return, plainly shew that they understood it so to be. And therefore the Prior and Chapter of Canterbury, by their Proxies dated the 20th of September, 1334. Granted double Powers to their Proctors ³: 1st. For the Parliament, to appear before the Venerable Father John, Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, in the Church of St. Paul, London.—To treat of the difficult and urgent Affairs of the Church, and Realm of England in the Parliament at Westminster, Monday next, after the Feast of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross.—And 2dly, For the Convocation, to appear before the said Father in the Church of St. Paul, Monday next after the Feast of St. Matthew the Apostle, to treat, &c.

From which Instrument of Procuration, which this Author had in his Hand, would he have been pleased to have made a right Use of it, we may again infer these two things: 1st. That these two Convocations were really (in Fact) distinct Assemblies, from one another: And, 2dly, That the Parliament-Meetings of the Clergy, as well as the Provincial, were held before the Archbishop; not at Westminster Abbey, as this Author Dogmatically pronounces, but at St. Paul's Cathedral; as I supposed them to have been.

³ Regist. Eccl. Cant. K fol. 32. b. The Case, with respect to the Parliament, was the same the next year after: The Writs, the Mandates, the Proxies are all alike: ⁴ And which is more remarkable; I cannot yet find that any Convocation then sate with it. So that we may the rather conclude, that St. Paul's was the usual Place, in which the Parliamentary Clergy met, when they sate asunder from the other Estates; and that they did not do it, for the Convenience of the Other Convocation, which was held concurrently with it the Year before. Such

Such early Evidence have we to prove that St. Paul's Cathedral was the Place of the Clergy's meeting for their Parliament, as well as Provincial Assemblies. And if we may take the Word of an Eminent Professor of the Law, 'so it continued to be: Insomuch that speaking of the Commons of England represented in Parliament; he tells us, they consist of the House of Commons at Westminster, and the Clergy, who (says he) assemble themselves at Paul's. For, to suppose that by the Clergy there, he meant the Provincial Synod of Canterbury, would be to make him speak after a very absurd manner: As if those of York had no part in the Common Priviledges of Parliament; which, as meanly as our Author thinks of that Province, yet I believe he would not care himself to assert.

² But tho' the Place of their Meeting puzzles me, yet the time it seems does not: For as to that, he says, I inform them, that the Clergy, who met by vertue of the Convocation-Writs in Parliament-time, came together heretofore on some other day, than that on which the Parliament began. Well, and is not this true? That is not deny'd. But where then is the Fault? Why, I know not it seems that they have done so of late too. What, under the present Government? No, that he confesses they have not. But to the late Revolution they did so; tho' since it has been otherwise. Then, I hope, Dr. Wake may still have been in the right, when he said, That heretofore the Convocation began on some other day than that of the Parliament's meeting; tho', at present, the Method be changed, in that Particular, and they now begin both on a Day. But,

4thly. To proceed: The next thing to be observed in the Publick Instruments relating to these two Convocations of the Clergy, is, The Persons before whom they are called; and who are considered as the Chief Directors, and Governours, of these several Meetings.

Now this, the Writs themselves by which they are summon'd, and the Returns which are made upon them, will best inform us; And from these therefore we will begin our Consideration of this Point.

In the Parliament-Writ, by which the Bishops and Clergy are summon'd to that State-Assembly; the words are to this Effect: "That the King having, by the Advice and Consent of his Council, resolved to hold his Parliament at Westminster; Commands the Bishops (to whom they are directed) that laying aside all Excuses, they should take care to come in Person thither, there to Treat together with him, and with his Lords and Nobles, premonishing, &c.

In the Executions of these Writs, in the Returns upon them, in all the other Instruments which relate to them, still the Parliament is called the King's Parliament: And before him it is, that all the Members of it are said to appear there. But the Convocation is the Archbishop's Convocation; so the King himself owns it, in his Writs, to be: It is summon'd before him; and all the Instruments which relate to it, bespeak him as the Head, and Governour of it.

Nor is this an empty, or honorary Title, but such as has a real influence upon the Persons and Actions of these Assemblies; and thereby plainly shews the Difference between them.

To say nothing of what has been already observed, of the Authority of the Archbishop, in summoning his Provincial Convocation; and its difference in this respect Alone from the Parliamentary. The Members of both being summon'd; the Archbishop, as President of the one, has in himself the Power of Receiving the Excuses of such as cannot appear at it; and of remitting or punishing the Defaulters in such a case. To him the Proxies of the absent Members are directed; and by his Commissioners, the Executions of the Provincial Summons, and the Returns which are made upon them, are examined. In the Province of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, at the first opening of the Convocation, makes his general Certificate to the Archbishop; and then all the other Bishops give in theirs for their respective Dioceses.

But in the Parliamentary Assembly, all this was wont to be done to the King, and his Officers in Parliament. To him the Proxies were directed; to him Excuses were sent; he only had the Power to Punish or Remit the Defaulters: And tho' he may have left it sometimes to the Archbishop, to execute the Penalty upon the Ecclesiastical Members of his Parliament; yet still it was by the King's Authority, and in Obedience to his Command, that he did it.

In the Ecclesiastical Convocation, the Archbishop opens the Assembly: He declares to them the cause of their Meeting; he governs their Sessions; continues them them by his Authority, and Summons the whole Clergy, whenever he sees fit, to come before him. In the Parliamentary, the King, or his Commissioners do this: He opens the Sessions; he declares, or orders to be declared to them, the Causes of their Meeting; he governs in it; Calls all the Estates at his pleasure before him; he prorogues the Parliament (and with that every part of it) at his will.

Sect. 20.

⁴ Vid. Stat. 5. Rich. 2d Stat.

The Convocation having, upon Debate, Agreed upon any Thing; the Archbishop heretofore solely confirmed their Acts; and being ratified by him, they became Provincial Ordinances; and oblig'd all whom they concern'd, within the Province, to Obedience. In the Parliament, the King does the same, that the Archbishop did in his Convocation: Nor were the Acts of the Clergy in Parliament ever of any Authority, until both the Lords had concurr'd, and the King added his Confirmation to them.

Lastly, The Convocation having done the Business for which it was called; the Archbishop by his own Authority Anciently dissolved it; and by that determined its Session: But the Parliamentary Assembly never was dissolved but by the Royal Authority; nor had the Archbishop ever any Power in that particular.

This has been the Difference, and in good measure still is, between the Provincial and Parliamentary Convocation; And the Argument which arises from it, is, I think, plain and conclusive: That those two Convocations must needs be altogether different Assemblies, the one of which is a part of the King's Parliament: The other is the Archbishops Convocation. The one of which is called before the Civil Magistrate, is order'd and govern'd by him; the other before the Ecclesiastical, and subject to his direction. In the one of which the King gives the last force to all the Acts of it, which have no Authority without his Concurrence; In the other, the Archbishop had the last concluding power, and without any other Authority, made them as Valid, as the Acts of such an Assembly could be. In short, the one of which, as it was called, so was it continued and dissolved too, by the Civil Power; the other was both Summon'd, Continued, and Ended, by the Ecclesiastical.

But that which will give farther light to this matter, will be to consider the different forms of procuracion that were wont to be granted for these several Conventions. And I shall the rather do it, because I look upon a late Writer to have been not a little mistaken in the account which he has given of them.

That when a Parliament was call'd, the Bishops and Clergy, who either could not attend, as they ought to have done, in Person, or were required to appear by their Proxies, did return their Proxies accordingly; may from the undoubted accounts we have yet remaining of these Instruments, and from the Copies which are still upon Record of the very Proxies themselves, be evidently made appear.

That if a Convocation were Summon'd at the same time with a Parliament, and so the Clergy obliged to assemble under a double Capacity, they deputed either double Proxies, or the same Persons by double Instruments; or, which is all one, gave them a distinct double Power, in the same Instruments, is from the same Records no less apparent.

Now as this alone may be sufficient to shew, that these two must have been accounted very different Assemblies (for else, what room could there have been for different Proxies; or what need would there have been of different Powers to the same Persons?) so if we look into the several forms of them, they will yet more confirm the manifest distinction, which I am now asserting betwixt them.

The Proxies for Parliament, were commonly directed to the King, by whom it was Summon'd, and before whom they were called to appear. Those for the Convocation, to the Archbishop, by whom they were in like manner Summon'd, and before whom they were required to present themselves.

The Proxies for the Parliamentary Assembly, were usually to appear in the Parliament to be held at such a time; there to Do according to the Tenour of the King's Writ; and to Consent to such things as by the Common-Council of the Prelates, Great Men, and Lords, and of the Clergy of the Province, should be ordained. The Proxies for the Provincial, were to appear in the Congregation of the Clergy to be held at such a time; there to Treat, Provide, and Ordain, with the Prelates and Clergy of the Province, in their Provincial Council; and to Consent to what should be provided by them; And farther to do and receive, as Law should require.

From all which put together, it must, as I conceive, follow, that those must needs be different Assemblies, to which the Persons Summon'd not only returned their distinct Proxies, but gave to those Proxies such different Powers of acting, as 'tis evident, from the Circumstances before noted, out of the Instruments themselves still remaining, they were wont to do.

It

It is true, one case there was, and the only one it is which has yet occur'd to me; in which the Parliament Proxy was directed anciently to the Archbishop, viz. at such times as the King required the Metropolitan in each Province to strengthen his Parliamentary Writs, to the Bishops and Clergy, with a Provincial Writ to the same effect. For then being Call'd to Parliament, by both Powers, the Civil and the Ecclesiastical; they did also return their Proxies to both, and Excuse themselves, in case of a Non-attendance, to their Spiritual, as well as to their Lay-Superiours. But still the Proxy it self related wholly to the Parliament, and not to the Provincial Convocation: And the Person who made it, return'd his Letters of Excuse to the King, for not attending upon him according to his Pre-munitory Summons by the Bishop, as well as to the Metropolitan, for not obeying his Provincial Summons, to the same place, and at the same Assembly.

But here then we must stop, and consider what has been lately Offer'd to us upon this subject. ² "When the Procuratoria were drawn in Relation to the Premuniens alone, they ran (as that did) Ad faciendum & Consentiendum; or Ad Consentiendum only. When they were drawn in Relation to the Premuniens ONLY; that is, to the Convocation call'd by the Parliament-Writ. Now if by this he would Insinuate (as 'tis plain that he would) that sometimes the same Procuratoria were drawn with relation to the other Convocation too; I must beg leave to say, That he is herein utterly mistaken himself, or would impose upon others: For except in the Case of a double procuration granted in the same Instrument, but with the same distinctness of the different Places, Assemblies and Powers, to which their Proxies were sent, and with which they were to Act, as if they had been in Two distinct Deeds; I may challenge this Author to produce but One single Instance of the same procuration granted to any Persons, in the same Terms, to sit in both these Congregations.

And this, indeed, he seems to have been sensible of, and therefore thus warily (but withal insignificantly) goes on: "When the Provincial Summons went out also (i. e. for an Ecclesiastical Convocation, for otherwise upon the Parliament Provincial Writ there was no difference) the Clergy's power ran, Ad Tractandum cum Venerabili Patre, Prelatis & Clero, nec non ad Consentiendum, which answered both the Citations. In which again I must beg leave to say, he is mistaken: For tho' their Powers were indeed large enough to have answered the end of both Citations, yet they were nevertheless restrained in the Exercise of them; for their Commission was to Treat, not in any place, or with any persons, but only in the Provincial Synod, at the place to which it was Called, and where it should be Continued, with the Archbishop, Prelates, and Clergy only, not with the Lords and Great Men. So that tho' the Powers here were in one respect larger than in their Parliament Procurations, because indeed the Clergy had a greater Authority of Acting in one of these Assemblies than in the other; yet the Exercise of them was limited to the Provincial Convocation; there only they were empowered to make use of them, and not in the other Convention.

Now this our Author could not but have known from the very Instruments to which he refers; And I think he should not have concealed it. But let us see how he goes on: "Sometime (says he) double Instruments of Proxy were framed both for the Parliament and Convocation; (Yes, always either double Instruments, or double Clauses in the same Instrument:)" "And different Proctors appointed for each of them. And this I conceive was as often as the Parliament was held out of the Province, and the Clergy were at the same time to meet Provincially at home, and do business; for they could not then Assemble with the Parliament, or near it, and sent their Proctors therefore to testify their Consent to what should be done in it. In this Case therefore, I hope he will allow the difference to have been clear enough between these two Conventions. When the same Persons were called to sit in their Parliament-Capacity in one Province; and in their Provincial, or Convocational, in the other: And to do this, were forced either to substitute double Proctors; (which was the Case of the Chapters and Clergy) or to sit themselves in one, and to Commission their Proctors to sit for them in the other; As those who were Summon'd to a Personal Appearance, were wont to do. Now this must have been the constant Case of one of the two Provinces, as often as the Parliament and Convocation, were both called at the same time. And when they were not; then I conceive the same Persons sitting first in the one, and afterward in the other, may have served as evidently to infer the same difference.

" And the same thing, says he, I have observ'd to be done sometimes in that Province where the Parliament met; if the Archbishop of it did then solemnly hold his Provincial Council: (And I hope this Gentleman would not have had Proxies deputed to it, if he did not:) for in this Case also different Proxies were returned To THESE SEVERAL MEETINGS. So that now then at last, the Parliament-Meeting, and the Provincial, are two SEVERAL MEETINGS; which have had their several Proctors return'd to them; When they have both been held, whether in, or out of the same Province, at the same time. I am sensible that this last observation, is not much to be depended upon, because it is certain that the same Persons were wont by different procuratorial Letters, or Clauses, to be Commissioned for both these Assemblies, no less when they were held at the same time, then when they met at the greatest distance. They were as well able to attend upon both these Convocations at once, as the Archbishop and Bishops were: And for the Ease of the Clergy, who not only sent, but paid them too for their Attendance, the same Proctors did generally serve for both. But I can easily Excuse our Author such a Mistake, who has here so ingeniously Confessed that Truth, which he elsewhere takes somuch pains to disguise.

P. 238.

Dr. A. in his Addend. p. 81. has sufficiently proved his own mistake in this Conjecture, & yet (I know not why) lets it still stand with very little difference from what he had said before. The whole is p. 56. ["and of dropping by degrees (as they did afterwards, some sooner, some later) the Instruments of Proxy which they framed in Obedience to the Lay Summons.] But the truth is, nothing, that we can find, was innovated at that time in this matter. The dropping of the Execution of the Premunientes had begun before; as is plain from the defect of Entries in our Registers. It still went on, and at last came into an (almost) total disuse.

What therefore I had before written, may still stand as an Answer to this ill-grounded Conjecture, of which he neither before, nor now, has offer'd us the least proof.

How long this Custom of returning Proxies to Parliament continued, this Author professes himself not to be satisfied. He has shewn the Succession of them down to the latter end of K. Henry the Eighth's Reign; and found, that the Premunientes was executed in form, as low as the 33d and 36th years of King Henry the Eighth, and Returns, therefore he thinks, were for some part of his Reign, very probably made to it.

" Not many years after this, says he, the Custom of returning Proxies to Parliament in form, did, I believe, Cease: And if a Conjecture may be allow'd in a matter of this Nature, where with some Care, and Search, one might be certain, I should chuse to fix the time of this Total Disuse not far off the Sixth or Seventh of Henry the Eighth; when the Disputes between the Spirituality and Temporality, about the Exemption of Clerks, growing loud and warm, and the Clergy with a high hand asserting their Priviledges, might take up thoughts of setting themselves free also in another instance then that which they contented about, * and agree generally to frame no more Instruments of Proxy, in Obedience to the Lay-Summons. Will this Gentleman excuse me, If I presume once more to say that he is here also all over Mistakes. For that neither is his Conjecture true, nor his Reason of any weight. As for the return of Proxies to Parliament; certain it is, that the Premunitory Clause has continued to be executed down to the very last Age: And I shall hereafter produce either the Instruments themselves, or Authentick Memorials of them, in proof of my Assertion. And for his reason, it is indeed a very strange one: That in a time when (as himself tells us) the Government grew stronger, and the Prerogative began to recover the ground it had lost to the Church; The Church should begin to get ground upon the Prerogative, and set themselves free from a Submission, which neither in the Reign of K. Henry the Fourth, who desired above all things to hold well with them; nor of his Son K. Henry the Fifth, the Priests own King; nor in the weak and troublesome time of K. Henry the Sixth, they ever pretended to do. That K. Henry the Eighth should let the Church grow too hard for him; and that at the very point of time, in which the whole Convocation truckled to him, and had like to have been all brought under a premunire, for but meddling, by the by, with his Prerogative.

But I shall not insist upon the improbability of his Conjecture: It is enough that we are sure it is false; and can guess at the reason too, that made him so desirous to fall in with such an Opinion, without making those Enquiries here, which he has elsewhere been commendably diligent in doing. His business was to transfer (if he could) the Rights, &c. of the Parliament-Convocation to the Provincial. For this, he was to make the one succeed into the place, and powers, of the other. And the main ground of Proof, was to be drawn from some publick Evidences, that seem to speak of the Convocation as a part of the Parliament. Now to have own'd, that as the Bishops are distinctly Summon'd both to Parliament and Convocation, and are thereby Members of both; so the Inferiour Prelates and Clergy, being not only Summon'd to the same Assembly, but deputing too their Proctors to appear in it, and Empowering them for it, did thereby still keep up a Parliamentary Right, tho' in fact, they were not Ordinarily called to Act in that Capacity, would have been at once to have Overthrown all his Remarks. For this would have shewn that the Clergy of the Lower-house of Convocation may justly be accounted Members of Parliament, and be spoken of as such, tho' by a long disuse, they were not ordinarily admitted to do any business in it. And so all that he has produced (and which shall hereafter be fully considered) may well enough be applied to them, as they are Called by, and Empowered upon the Parliament Writ; and yet the Provincial Convocation be far from having ever the more Relation to that State-Council; or the Clergy from being intituled to any Parliamentary Powers or Priviledges, (that one excepted which the Act. 8. Henry the Sixth has given them) as they are Members of it.

And this is indeed the plain Truth of the Case: And I think the Clergy are but little beholden to this Author for thus easily giving up that real Interest which they still have in the Parliament, only to serve a New Hypothesis of his own, by which I am confident they will gain nothing; I wish that, in the end, they do not lose by it.

I shall conclude this Argument, taken from the several kinds of Procuratorial Letters, to shew the difference of these two Convocations, with this one farther Observation; that in returning of Proxies to the Parliament Assemblies, not only the Bishops, but the other Clergy, sometimes gave their Power to meer Laics, to meet and to act for them; as by the Instruments themselves yet remaining it does plainly appear. ¹ They look'd upon the Parliament to be (as indeed it is) a State-Meeting; and that a Lay-Proctor therefore would not be at all unsuitable to appear on their behalf in it. But I have not found that ever any such thing was done in the Provincial Synod, (unless perhaps in the Case of the Judges, or Advocates of their own Ecclesiastical Courts) who were usually Clerks. The late Rules of Convocation, are directly against it; ² and our Common Lawyers affirm the contrary, that a Lay-Man cannot be a Member of the Provincial Convocation: And therefore, till I am better inform'd, I must beg leave to offer this too as another proof of that real difference there was heretofore accounted, and ought still to be look'd upon to be, between these two Assemblies.

But I enlarge my self too far in the proof of so plain a Point: I shall therefore but just mention two other Marks of Distinction, which arise from the Writs themselves by which they are Summon'd, viz. Of the Persons whom they are Summon'd to Treat with in these two Assemblies; And of the Affairs which they are called to Treat about; and the Manner of Treating concerning them.

5thly, Then: In the Parliament Writ by which the State Assembly of the Clergy is Summon'd; the Clause to the Bishop runs thus, "That the King having resolved to hold his Parliament, and to Treat with the said Bishop, and the rest of the Prelates, Lords, and Great Men of his Kingdom; requires him to come in Person to such a place, and at such a time, (as the Writ determines) and to premonish his Dean and Chapter, his Archdeacons, and Clergy, to be there at the same place and time, (to *do and) to Consent to such things, as by their Common Council shall there be Established. Accordingly the Chapters and Clergy having chosen their Proctors for this Convention, Empower them to Act in these, or the like, Terms: "That they do Ordain and Constitute them by the Procuratorial Letters which they grant to them, their Proctors to appear, and be present in their Names, before the most Excellent Prince the King of ENGLAND, in his Parliament, to be held at such a time and place; there to Treat with the Prelates, Lords, and Great Men of the Kingdom of England; and to Consent to all and singular such things as shall by their Common Council be there Treated of, and Ordain'd.

The Persons therefore with whom the Parliament Clergy were to Treat, and to whose Ordinances they were call'd to Consent, were the Prelates, the Lords, and Great Men of the Realm. They were summon'd to appear with these before the King; and with these they Commissioned their Proctors to Act.

But in the Provincial Convocation, both the Writs and Proxies; and with them the Practice too, runs quite otherwise. The King by his Writ to the Arch- bishop, requires him to Call together the Bishops of his Province, the Deans of the Cathedral Churches, with the Archdeacons, Chapters, and Colleges, and Clergy of every Diocese within his Province, to appear before himself, at the time and place which shall be appointed for that purpose. These Persons, and these only, the Archbishop Summons: And the Proxies for these Meetings run to the same Effect; That they Empower their Proctors to appear before the most Reverend the Archbishop of the Province, or his Commissioner, in his Provincial Council, at such a time and place to be Assembled; there to Treat with him the said most Reverend Father, of the Business for which the Convocation is held; and to give their Counsel and Assistance upon the same.

In this Convocation therefore the Persons with whom the Clergy are to Meet and Treat, are the Archbishop and his Provincial Clergy. Here the Lords and Great Men, and Commons have no place; they are neither Summon'd to Meet, nor Commissioned to Treat with them.

Sec. 27.

Nay, but this is not all, the very Ecclesiastical part of these two Assemblies is here also different, and proves the Assemblies themselves thereby to be so too.

In the Parliament, they are called to Meet and Consent with the Prelates: And who those Prelates are, the Writs issued out for that Assembly plainly shew; They are the Bishops of both Provinces; and with them anciently the Parliamentary-Abbots, and Priors, which continued to be call'd to that Great Council.

But by the Convocation Writ, they are to Treat only with the Archbishop of the Province, and his Suffragan Bishops: The others have no place in these Assemblies, nor are to partake in their Consultation. And for the other Prelates (besides that those of the other Province were in like manner excluded;) they were to Treat not only with all those within the same Province, which were called to the Parliament Assembly; but with all the other Abbots and Priors who had Convents under them, and no Superiours above them; which again makes a mighty difference in the Nature and Constitution of these two Bodies, and argues a manifest distinction between them.

For since no Proctor can lawfully Act on the behalf of another, any farther than he is by his Procuratorial Letters Empowered so to do; and since those Procuratorial Letters determine not only what power of Acting they shall have, but in what place, and with what persons they shall Exercise that power: It must follow, that the Proctors of the Clergy deputed to Act with the Archbishop and Clergy in the Provincial Synod, cannot, by vertue of such a procuration, act with any other persons, or in any other place; (as for Example with the Lords and Great Men in Parliament:) Nor can the Bishops, and those of the Clergy who are personally Summon'd to Meet, and Act with the Archbishop, and his Provincial Clergy, in Convocation, any more by virtue of that Summons, Act for themselves with the Lords, and Clergy of the other Province in Parliament. And sure then those must needs be different Assemblies in fact, as well as otherwise; in which those who are Empowered by the King, and intrusted by the Clergy to Act in the One, and who may therefore lawfully do so; have no power to Act in the Other; nor can (as Members of the one) either meet with it, or do any thing that will hold good in Law in it. But,

Sec. 28.

6thly, And to have done with these first kind of Arguments; As there appears to be a manifest difference, between the Parliamentary and Provincial Convocation, upon the several Grounds already mentioned, so may it no less be shewn, lastly, from the different Ends for which these two Assemblies are Convened, and the business that properly belongs to each. For tho' in these the Writs being generally worded do not make so plain a distinction, as in the foregoing Particulars; yet the nature of the Assemblies themselves, the manner of their Acting, and the Work that has been done in them, sufficiently explains what the proper Business of each of these Convocations is.

That the Provincial Convocation is properly an Ecclesiastical Assembly, the nature of its Summons, the Persons of which it consists, and the manner of their Acting in it, sufficiently shews. That therefore its business must have been to Consult of the State of the Church; and of the Affairs of the Realm no otherwise then as the Welfare of the Church, and the Liberty, and Priviledges thereof are concern'd in them; must I conceive be allow'd too.

But in their Parliament Capacity, the Clergy heretofore, while they continued to come to Parliament, as the Bishops still do, acted as one of the States of the Realm:

Realm: They Treated of the same Affairs that the other Estates did; and had no Limitation put upon their proceedings in it. Nay, and even in the same Affairs, they acted after a different manner in the one and the other. In the Parliament they Treated of Ecclesiastical as well as of Civil Matters, in a Parliamentary Capacity, in order to a determination of them by Civil Laws and Constitutions; whereas in the other, they Treated wholly in their Ecclesiastical Character, and enforced, what they Concluded upon, by their own Provincial, i. e. by a Canonical and Church Authority.

To make this more clear, let us Instance in that which in Truth was their main Business as a Convocation; and may be the most liable to raise any difficulty in this Particular; the Business of granting Subsidies. Sect. 29.

That this, tho' in Order to a mixt End, the defence of the Realm, as well as of the Church of England, was yet a matter of proper Ecclesiastical Consideration, is plain, from the practice of our Ecclesiastical Courts at this day, which still Claim the Knowledge of such matters as pertain to the Revenues and Goods of the Church to belong to them. And of these only the Clergy granted Subsidies in Convocation; not of any Lay-Estates, that any of their Order might otherwise be possess'd of. Nay, the very Lands themselves belonging to the Church, which were of a later donation, and accrued to them after the 20th of Edward the First, were tax'd not in Convocation, but in Parliament: As from the Rolls of the Parliament, and the Books of their Subsidies, it does evidently appear. And that they granted them in an Ecclesiastical manner is also Evident; for they granted them under such Conditions as themselves thought good: And the King, if he would have the Aid, must have taken it under the Limitations with which they granted it. They made their own Orders for the Collecting and Payment of them: These they enforced by Ecclesiastical Penalties; and they were not only the Clergy who granted them, and out of whose Church-Revenues, or Stipends, they were to be raised; but the Bishops of each Diocese appointed Church-men to Collect them too; and so all was done within themselves, by their own Ecclesiastical Authority.

It was a famous Case argued in the Exchequer-Chamber, Michaelmas, the 21st of Edward the 4th with relation to the Abbot of Waltham. The King by his Letters Patents, had exempted the Abbot from being a Collector of the Subsidies of the Clergy: The Convocation, (of which the Abbot was a Member, and to whose Acts he had concurr'd) ordain'd, that the Bishop should return his Collector, and that being return'd he should serve, notwithstanding any such Letters Patents to the contrary. The Bishop return'd this Abbot for one; and the Question was, whether the King's Letters should hold good to discharge the Abbot, notwithstanding the Constitution of the Convocation to the contrary; And judgment was given for the Abbot against the Bishop. Mich. 21.
E. 4. fol. 44.

In the arguing of this Case, several Points were alledged, and allowed of by the Judges, which will deserve to be taken notice of in this place. "That the Clergy could bind themselves by an Act of their Convocation, as well as the Temporality themselves by an Act of Parliament: So Pigot. "That the Convocation has not power to oblige in temporal things, but only in spiritual; As to ordain Fasting-days, or Holy-days; and they are meerly Spiritual Judges: So Vavifour. "That the King could not compell the Clergy to grant him a Tenth, but that it proceeded wholly from their own good Will: And (which comes nearest of all to our present purpose;) "That tho' the Convocation be spiritual, and all the Acts of it spiritual; yet as soon as their Act is certified into the Exchequer, the Tenth granted is from thenceforth meerly Temporal. The same had been alledged and agreed to, on the like occasion, in the 20th of Henry the 6th, fol. 12, 13. and thereby plainly shews what the Sense of our Judges, and Sages of the Law was, as to this Matter.

The result of all is this; That in granting of Subsidies, the Clergy acted in their Spiritual Capacity; and all their Proceedings in it, while it passed in Convocation, and 'till their Act was certified from thence by the Archbishop into the Exchequer, were Ecclesiastical.

Since the 32d of Henry the Eighth; tho' the Clergy still continu'd to Grant their own Subsidies, in their Provincial Convocation; yet another Method has been taken for the Ratifying of them, and to secure, more effectually, the payment of them. For the Instrument of Grant being drawn up in the Convocation, and Sect. 30.

Seal'd by the Archbishop of the Province, and presented to the King, with all the Limitations and Circumstances under which they thought fit to grant it; was, at the request of the said Clergy, transmitted by the King to his Parliament; and so ratified as an Act of Parliament, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons there.

Now here we may clearly see how the Bishops (and with them the rest of the Clergy) have acted in their two distinct Capacities, in Convocation, and in Parliament. In Convocation they passed their Act of Subsidy, as Members of their own Provincial Assembly, and Confirm'd it as far forth as they had there Authority to do. They certifi'd the King by their President (the Archbishop of their Province) of what they had done: How the Prelates and Clergy of the Province of Canterbury (for Example) in their Holy Provincial Synod, or Convocation, Had granted such a Subsidy, under such Conditions; "And that for the sure and true Payment of it, according to the tenour, purport, and effect and true meaning of their Grant, they did most humbly desire his Highness, that their said Gift, Grant and Subsidies, and every Matter, Sum of Money, Petition, Clause, Provisions, and Sentence therein contained, concerning the said Subsidy, might be ratified, established, and confirmed by the Authority of his Highness's Court of Parliament.

Accordingly the Parliament Confirm'd, and Establish'd their Grant: What was only an Act of Convocation, and so an Ecclesiastical Constitution before, they made a Statute, and so a Civil Law, Now. And, which is observable, the Bishops (under the Character of Lords Spiritual) in Parliament, Confirm'd their own Grant, which they had before made (as Prelates) in Convocation. Nay, farther; the Bishops of each Province, who in Convocation had no Authority beyond the Bounds of their own Province, nor could do any thing to oblige the Clergy of the other, yet, in Parliament, Confirm'd the Subsidies of both; and by the same Act, tyed the whole Clergy of the Realm to make good, what the Bishops and Clergy of their several Provinces, had granted only for themselves before.

"Wherefore for the true and sure payment of the said Subsidy, granted by the said Prelates and Clergy of the said Province of Canterbury, according to the tenour, Effect, and true meaning of the said Instrument, (of Grant.)

"Be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, with the Assent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons in this present Parliament assembled; and by the Authority of the same, that the said Gifts, Grants, and every Matter, Sum of Money, Petition, Provision, Clause, and Sentence in the same Instrument contain'd, shall stand and be ratified, established, and confirm'd, by the Authority of this present Parliament.

From which constant solemn method of passing the Grants of the Clergy in Convocation, for more than 150 Years last past; these two things do, I humbly conceive, plainly follow: First, That the Bishops and Clergy in Convocation, act in a different Capacity, with relation to the same Affairs; as well as Treat of different Matters, in their Provincial Synod, from what the same Bishops (the only present acting Members of the Parliament-Clergy) do in Parliament. And therefore Secondly, That the two Assemblies of the Prelates and Clergy in Parliament and Convocation, are wholly different Assemblies, and of a quite different Nature and Constitution, the one from the other; and have their different Rights and Powers belonging to them accordingly.

Sect. 31.

I have now pass'd through the first kind of Arguments, by which I propos'd to shew the Convocations of the Clergy, assembled by the Parliament and Provincial Writs, to be altogether different from one another. My next sort of Proofs will carry me yet farther; and shew that they are not only different Assemblies; but that, 2dly. They have their different Rights, Powers, and Privileges; as such.

As for the First of these; the Rights of these two Convocations: I must in the first place observe, That as the Prelates, and Clergy, have, for above these 400 Years been summon'd by the King's Writs to Parliament, so have they thereby been declared to be a proper Part and Member of that great Council: And therefore, that the great Right of this Civil Convention is to be summon'd with the Other Estates to Parliament; and with them to make up the Body of it.

Accordingly

Accordingly we see that as often as any Parliament has been summon'd, they have been duly call'd to it: At first indeed, with some few Interruptions, before the Constitution settled entirely into its present Establishment; but for above 300 Years past, without any Instance (except in the time of our unfortunate Civil Wars, which signifies nothing) that I know of to the contrary.

By virtue of this Right, the Clergy for a long time came to the Parliament, and acted together with the other Estates in it: And tho' through their own Unwillingness to be drawn to those Civil Assemblies; by sitting and acting by themselves when they did come, and seldom appearing or doing any thing in their own Persons, with the other Estates, in Parliament; and by the tacit Consent of our Kings, to excuse their attendance; the Lower Clergy, by degrees, forbore to appear there, and by so doing were, in time, look'd upon to have so far lost their Right to it, that when they would have resumed it, they could not obtain the Liberty so to do; yet still they were summon'd by the *King's Writ*s to it. In consequence of these *Writ*s, they were entituled to be still a legal part of it. The Chapters, and Clergy, chose their Proctors, and Empowered them to Act in their stead in it: And thus far, both they have kept up their Parliamentary Right, and the Government has continued to allow of it, to this very Age.

But what the other Clergy by their own Negligence lost, the Bishops and Prelates, continued still to maintain. The Abbots and Priors both sate and acted in Parliament, to the very last. The Bishops do the same at this Day: And as they have a double Title to their Place there, so accordingly they sit in both their Capacities, under the Character of Lords Spiritual; and by so doing make up the only now acting part of the Estate of the Clergy in Parliament.

This therefore I take to be the undoubted Right of the Parliamentary Convocation at this day: To be summon'd with every Parliament, as One of the Three Estates of that Great Council; and, in some measure, to Act too in it, if not in that entire Body they were at the beginning wont to do; yet, at least, by the principal Part of it, the Archbishops and Bishops there. But now the Provincial Synod has no such Right; nor is thus much even pretended to on its behalf. They who, following their mistaken Notions, (as shall hereafter be shewn) set the most up for the Parliamentary Rights of it, yet profess themselves not to account it a proper part, or Estate, of that great Council; and thereby manifestly establish this wide difference between the One, and the Other of these Assemblies; that whereas the One (by the Nature of our Constitution) by the King's Writ, and by the constant practice of the Parliament, is properly a Member and Estate of it; the Other is Not, but only entituled to some kind of Parliamentary Rights, of which it is yet disputed, whether any such Rights do truly belong to it, or No.

And as the difference on this side is apparent, so will it be no less evident if we take it on the Other. The great Right of the Provincial Convocation; especially after it began to Act as a Provincial Council too;¹ was to Charge the Spiritual Revenues of the Church, for the defence of the state of it; and by fit Constitutions, in such Cases wherein the Church and Realm were mutually concern'd, to provide for the just Rights and Interests of it. And therefore when the Commons in the third of King Henry the 6th. complain'd to the King concerning Pluralities, and Non-residence; and desir'd that All Parsons, and Others, having Cures, and not resident thereupon, might forfeit the Value of their Benefices, the One half to the King, and the other half to the Patron: The Answer was, That the King (by the Advice of his Council) had deliver'd the Bill to my Lord of Canterbury, charging him to purview of remedy for his Province, and semblably would write to the Church of York for that Province.

What Authority the Civil Magistrate (to whom the Care of the Church, as well as of the State, within his Dominions, is Committed by God) has in this respect, I shall not here dispute. It is confess'd, that as the Law now stands, no Canons made in our Convocations, can be either promulged, or Executed, without the King's consent first had, for the Publishing and Executing of them. And, I think it is as plain, that neither can any such Canons be made there, without his License first had, to empower the Clergy so to do. And how far, he may alone, or together with his Parliament, proceed in Church-Matters, without any other Ecclesiastical Concurrence, than that of his Bishops there, is a point too nice nice for me to presume to meddle withal. Thus much I may affirm, and that is all I shall need to say to the present Argument; that it was always accounted the proper Right of the Clergy, in their own Provincial Synods, and not in their Parliamentary Convocations, to make Ecclesiastical Canons, and Constitutions; and that upon Enquiry it will appear, that while they sate, and acted in both Capacities, in those only they did make them.

I do not deny, but that being met together in Parliament, the Bishops and Clergy may have taken that Opportunity to transact some of their Church-Affairs at that time. So Archbishop Peckham did in the Parliament of 1286.¹ When calling a competent number of Suffragans to his Assistance, who were then assembled upon the Account of the Parliament, he condemn'd eight erroneous Opinions of Richard de Knapwell, a Dominican; as our Antient Histories inform us. The same was the Case in the Parliament of Gloucester, Anno 1378. The Archbishop of Canterbury and his Suffragans, there assembled upon the occasion of it; made a Provincial Constitution about the Salaries of Priests: But then this they did as an Ecclesiastical Synod, not a Parliamentary Body; by their own and their Metropolitan's Authority, not by Virtue of the King's Call. But that the Bishops and Clergy in Parliament, acting as a State of the Realm, and in their Parliamentary Capacity there, did ever frame Articles, or make Canons, or Condemn Heresies, as they were wont in their Provincial Assemblies to do; this I deny, and must beg leave, 'till I am better inform'd, to affirm that they did not.

If therefore these two Assemblies had their different Rights belonging to each of Them; so that what was the proper Business and Claim of the One, was not at all pretended to, nor did belong to the Other: If the Right of the One, was to meet and act Nationally as an Estate of the Realm in Parliament; of the other Provincially, as the Ecclesiastical Assembly, or Convocation of the Province: If in consequence thereof, the Business of the One was to Treat of the great Affairs of the Church and Kingdom with the Lords and Commons; and by Civil Laws to provide for the Welfare and Government of both; of the Other, to consult among themselves for the Needs of the Church, as it is a Member of the State, to contribute towards its Defence, and to make Ecclesiastical Orders and Constitutions for the Peace, and Safety, and Government thereof; Then it must follow that these Assemblies thus claiming their several Rights, and severally acting in pursuance of them, must needs have been altogether different Assemblies, and that the One cannot with any Reason, be said to be either in Law or Fact, the same with the Other.

See. 33.

So different were the Rights of these two Assemblies heretofore, while they both continued to meet, and act: Nor Secondly, Were their Powers any less distinct.

The Convocation assembled by the Parliament Writ, was a proper part of the Parliament of England; and its Powers were therefore Parliamentary. But the Provincial Convocation was (within its own Bounds) a complete Ecclesiastical Assembly, and acted by its own Ecclesiastical Power and Authority. And how great a difference this made between them, a few Instances will suffice to shew.

For 1st, The Parliamentary Convention (as the Parliament it self) had a Right to Debate; and, with the concurrence of the Other Estates, to Offer to the King, any thing which it thought fit to establish for the Good of the Church. It lay under no restraints, nor ran any hazard of meddling with Matters that did not belong to it. But in the Provincial Convocation, the Clergy were tied up to Ecclesiastical Causes, and Things: they were not permitted to meddle with any other; or if they had, even in the highest Exaltation of their Church Authority, they would have been forced to recede from, and to annul their Own Acts.

Let me in Proof hereof, offer only one Instance, from the Acts of the Convocation of 1452,² when the Clergy seem to have left off coming to the Parliament; and to have Assembled only, as now they do, in their Provincial Capacity. In the Fourth Session of this Convocation, the Prolocutor of the Lower House being asked by the Archbishop, whether he had any thing to propose in behalf of the Clergy, which needed Reformation in the Church of England; instanced in many things in a learned Oration which he made thereupon. And being Commanded by the Archbishop to put them in Writing, and so tender them to the Fathers; in the Eleventh Session of that Assembly, they came to this Resolution concerning them; That for as much as those things which needed Reformation in the Church of England, concern'd the King's Majesty, and the Laws of the Realm, and so were not at all subject to the Definition and Sentence of the said Council; the most Reverend the Archbishop, and the right Reverend the Bishops and Prelates there present, should be intreated in behalf of the Clergy, effectually to press the King, with the Lords and Commons, for a Reformation of them, in the Parliament, which was in a few days after to begin at Reading: And Four of their House were pitched upon by them to solicit, and inform the Archbishop, Bishops, and Prelates concerning the Affairs so to be Reform'd in Parliament.

This is, I suppose, a clear Proof of the Difference between these two Conventions, the Provincial, and Parliamentary: And shews that the One had power to Treat of, and Reform such things, as the Other was restrain'd from meddling withal.

2dly. The Parliamentary Convention, as it consisted of the Clergy of the whole Realm, either in Person, or by Representation present at it; so its Acts obliged both Provinces indifferently. But the Provincial Synod obliged only its own Members; and neither acted for, nor had any power to conclude any, beyond the Bounds of its own Province.

3dly. The Parliamentary Convention, as it was summon'd to act with the Other Estates, so tho' it might Debate by it self, yet could it not establish any thing without them. The Lords, at least, were necessarily to consent to their Acts; and even then they signified nothing, unless the King, by his Authority, Gave Life and Force to them. Hence, in the Rolls of Parliament, we meet with the Petitions of the Clergy; which were, indeed, their Resolutions upon such Matters as they desir'd to have passed into Acts. But the Provincial Convocation, acted wholly within it self: It Debated, Concluded and Established all by its own Authority; and 'till the 25th of Henry the 8th, needed no concurrence, of either King, Lords, or Commons, to give force to its Constitutions.

4thly and Lastly, The Acts of the Parliamentary Convention being pass'd in a Parliamentary manner, became Laws of the Land: They had a Civil force; they oblig'd the Laity as well as the Clergy; and Entituled them to such a Right, as nothing but an Act of Parliament could Repeal. Whereas the Acts of the Provincial Convocation, were at last but Canons, and Constitutions Ecclesiastical: They concluded the Clergy only; they had no other Power but what the Church could give them; and how much less that was than the Authority of an Act of Parliament; this one thing may convince us, that if at any time they were contrary to the Rights of the Crown, or to the Laws and Customs of the Realm; they were thereby look'd upon to be of no force, but were utterly rejected by the Civil Magistrate, as void of all Obligation¹.

These are some of those Differences which plainly distinguish these two Assemblies from each Other; with respect to the Power of Acting, which they either of them had in times past: To which if we add, Thirdly, The several Privileges too, which belong'd to both; we shall, I think, need nothing more to prove a manifest distinction between them. Now the Privileges of the Clergy in these Assemblies may be consider'd under a double respect; as they relate either to their Persons, or to their Actions: We will take a brief Notice of each of them.

Señ. 34.

That the Members of the Parliamentary Convention always enjoy'd the same Parliamentary Privileges for themselves, and their Dependants, that the other Members of Parliament did; may, from several undeniable Instances, plainly be made appear.

If we look back as far as the time of King Edward the 1st, by whom our present Constitution seems to have been brought to a Settlement; we shall find a notable Proof of this in the Case of Oliver Sutton, Bishop of Lincoln; ² who gave Letters of Protection dated 6 Cal. February 1291, to Robert Castle, whose Barge he had hired to bring his Provisions to him from Henley, during the Parliament, and to the end of the Provincial Council of Bishops, which was to be held not long after. The same was recognized by his Son, King Edward the 2d, in the Case of the Prior of Malton, who being arrested at York, in his Return from Parliament, had this Writ awarded to the High Sheriff of Yorkshire, against the Persons concern'd in it: ³ That he should cause them to give Security to Answer to the King, for what they had done; upon this remarkable ground; That those who come to the Parliament, where the Publick Affairs of the King and Kingdom are to be treated of,

as well Prelates, Counts, Barons, as other Clergy and Laity; and appearing there at the King's Command; in coming to the same Parliaments, in tarrying there, and returning from thence, ought to be protected and defended by him, from all manner of Injuries, Oppressions, and Grievances whatsoever.

Thus ancient were the Privileges of the Ecclesiastical, no less than of the Lay Members of that High Court. But now the Members of the Provincial Synod, had no such Privilege for above 200 Years after this; and then it was granted to them not as an Original Right belonging to their Assemblies, but by the special Grace of the King in Parliament; and after such a manner as sufficiently shews how different in this respect, these two Conventions of the Clergy were. Record of that Parliament runs thus: 'In this present Parliament, divers Petitions were exhibited to our Lord the King, as well by the Prelates and Clergy, as by the Commons of this Kingdom of England: The tenour of which, together with the Answers of the same, follow in these Words. Forasmuch as the Prelates and Clergy, of the Realm of England, call'd to the Convocation, and their Servants and Familiars that come with them to such Convocation; oftentimes and commonly, be Arrested and Molested, and Inquieted: Our said Sovereign Lord the King, willing graciously in this behalf to provide for the Security and Quietness of the said Prelates and Clergy, at the Supplication of the same Prelates and Clergy; and of the Assent of the Great Men and Commons aforesaid; hath Ordained and Statuted, that all the Clergy from henceforth to be called to the Convocation by the King's Writ; and their Servants and Familiars, shall for ever hereafter, fully Use and Enjoy such Liberty or Defence, in Coming, Tarrying or Going, as the Great Men and Commonalty of the Realm of England, called, or to be called to the King's Parliament, do enjoy, and were wont to enjoy, or, in time to come ought to enjoy.

This is that Act upon which the Parliamentary Privileges of the Convocation are built: And from the Process and Tenour of which, these Three Things, do, I think, necessarily follow. 1st. That this Statute being made at the Petition of the Prelates and Clergy in Parliament, 2^{dly}. the Parliamentary Convocation yet continu'd to be held; and at their request it was, that this Privilege was granted to them for their Provincial Assemblies. 3^{dly}. That these Privileges they had no occasion to desire for themselves, as they were Members of Parliament; for, in that respect, they had always enjoy'd them, upon the same Right and Title that the other Members of Parliament had. And therefore, 3^{dly}. That the Convocation, for which they petition'd, must, in those days, have been look'd upon as a different Assembly in Law from the Parliamentary Convention: The one being accounted, as it plainly was, a part of the Parliament; and allowed its Parliamentary Privileges accordingly: Whereas the Other was not thought to have any Relation to it; nor did therefore enjoy the like Privileges with it, 'till by the special Grace of the King, and in consideration of the large Supplies the Convocation (but just before sitting) had given to him, he was pleased to bestow this Favour upon them.

Sec. 5.

As for the other kind of Privileges, which relate to their Acting in these several Convocations; these also were very different, and will therefore infer a difference between those Assemblies, in which the Clergy had such different Rights of Action.

When the King summon'd the Prelates, and Clergy to Parliament; the end for which he call'd the former thither, was to treat with himself, and with the rest of the Prelates, Lords, and Great Men about the difficult Affairs relating to himself and his Realm, which were to be transacted there, and to give their Advice concerning them. This therefore was, and still is, the Great Parliamentary Privilege, of the Lords Spiritual, to be call'd to the Great Council of the Realm, and to Treat and give Advice, concerning the weighty Affairs of the Kingdom in it. As for the Other Clergy, summon'd by the same Writ, they were also called to meet at the same place; but their Province was not to Treat and Counsel, but to Do, and Consent; or, as it still stands in the Parliament Writ, to Consent to such Things, as by the Counsel and Treating of the Others, should there happen to be Ordain'd. Now this, as it Entituled them to an Assent to such Matters as were to be Treated of, and Concluded in the Parliament; so accordingly we find, That while they continued to sit with it, their Consent was taken, together with that of the Lay-Commons; and that not only with relation to Spiritual Matters, but sometimes to those which may seem to have been the least fit for them; nay, which which by the Canon-Law, they were not permitted to meddle in; and had therefore by our Ancient Constitutions, a remedy provided for them, to Excuse them from.

This was the Case, with regard to the Prelates, in Causes of Blood: In which, tho' by the Constitutions of Clarendon, they were Excused from being present; yet by the Protestations which they entred on these Occasions, they both Asserted and Preserved their Parliamentary right of Judicature, with the Lay-Peers in all such Matters; and were sometimes constrained to appoint their Proctors to Act for them; because that for want of this (as the Commons there affirmed) some Judgments had been revers'd; which plainly argues how just a Title they were then accounted to have had, to Act in all kind of Parliament Affairs.

Cryme, Lerce-

And the same was the Case of the Lower Clergy, in such other Matters as fell within their Sphere of Action: They Assented, together with the Lay-Commons, to what was done in the Legislative way, which was the proper Parliamentary Privilege, that by the King's Writ, and the Constitution of our Parliament, belong'd to them. So in the same Parliament the 21st of Richard the 2d, we find it expressly noted: That the King at the Assent of all the Lords Spiritual, and the Proctors of the Clergy, repealed the Statute of Commission granted in his Tenth Year, to the Duke of Gloucester, and Earl of Arundel: And by the like Assent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Procurators of the Clergy; they also, together with the Lords, having first been severally Examined, as to their Opinion in that Matter, the Acts of Parliament of the Eleventh Year of the same King were annulled. And tho' in other Places we do not often find them expressly mentioned, because, if I mistake not, they did not Vote as a distinct State, but had their Consents deliver'd by my Lords the Bishops in the Upper House, and so were included in their Votes; yet that they are to be look'd upon, as comprehended under the general Name either of Prelates or Commons, the very Preface to this Parliament shews; in which there is no distinct mention made of the Proctors of the Clergy, tho' they are so often and expressly taken notice of in the Statutes which follow: But the Acts of it are said to have been pass'd by our Sovereign Lord the King, Of the Assent and Accord of the Prelates, &c. and Commons of his Realm there Assembled. The same is the usual Introduction in other Parliaments; and therefore as we are sure that in this, the Assent of the Proctors of the Clergy was expressly required and taken; so we ought to conclude, That it was some way or other given in all the rest. For this was the purpose for which they were call'd to Parliament; and we need not doubt, but that whilst they continued to come to it, this was the main business that they did there.

Sect. 36.

But indeed we need not recur to any Conjectures in proof of this, for which we have so Authentick an Evidence in the very Records of Parliament. ² For in the 51st of Edward the Third, we are told that "the Commons finding themselves aggrieved, as well with certain Constitutions made by the Clergy in their Synods, as with some Laws or Ordinances which were lately pass'd more to the Advantage of the Clergy, than of the Common People; requested, That no Act or Ordinance should, from thenceforth, be made or granted on the Petition of the said Clergy, without the Consent of the Commons; And that the said Commons should not be bound in time to come by any Constitutions, made by the Clergy of this Realm for their own Advantage, to which the Commons of the Realm had not given Consent. For which request, they give this Reason, which clearly shews what their Privilege then was, "Car Eux ne veulent estre Obligez a null de voz Estatuz ne Ordinances faites sans Leur Assent; That they would not be obliged to any of the King's Statutes or Ordinances made without their Assent. So necessary did they think their Consent to be to the passing of such Acts at least, in which their Rights were concern'd, that they would not so much as own the Authority of any that had it not ; nor yield any Obedience to what was Established without it.

Sec. 37.

How long the Proctors of the Clergy here in England continued to assert, and enjoy this Privilege, I cannot certainly tell. This we know that in Ireland, they held it to the very latter end of King Henry the Eighth's time, and were then divested of it, not by their own Cession, (as was probably the Case of our Proctors, who look'd upon their Parliamentary Attendance as a Burden, and an Imposition ; and were never contented till they got rid of it) but by Act of Parliament ; how justly I am not concern'd to Enquire. But because I think their Case may serve not only to clear, and confirm, what I have now been observing, but also to inform us of the State of our own Convocation with relation to its Parliamentary Privileges, in that Reign ; I will stop so long as to give a short account of it.

King Henry the Eighth being resolved to cast off the Popes Authority in that Kingdom, as he had done here in England, met with an Opposition which our Circumstances did not enable our Clergy to give him. For their Proctors having continued not only to be Summon'd, but to Come to Parliament, and claiming a Right of Assenting to such Bills as were to pass in it, stily Opposed whatsoever was to be done in derogation to the Pope's Jurisdiction ; and insisted upon it, that for lack of their Concurrence, no Act could legally be made against it.

To cut this Knot, which was not easy to be untied ; it was resolved at once, by Act of Parliament, to deprive them of this Privilege ; and, if we may depend upon the Account which the Act it self gives us of it, to reduce them to the State of the Convocation at that time in England.

c. 12.

The Words of the Act are these : " Forasmuch as at every Parliament begun
" and holden within this Land, Two Proctors of every Diocese within the " same Land have been used and accustomed to be Summon'd, and Warn'd, to " be at the same Parliament, which were never, by the Order of the Law, " Usage, Custom, or otherwise, any Member or Parcel of the whole Body of " the Parliament, nor have had of right any voice or suffrage in the same, but " only to be there as Counsellors and Assistants to the same, and upon such " things of Learning as shall happen in Controversy to declare their Opinions, " Much like as the Convocation within the Realm of England is, commonly begun and " holden by the King's Highness special License, as His Majesties Judges of his said " Realm of England, and divers other Substantial and Learn'd Men having ground-
" dedly inquired and examined the Root and Establishment of the same, do clear" ly determine ; And yet by reason of this Sufferance, and by the continuance " of time, and for that most commonly the said Proctors have been made " privy to such matters as within this Land at any time have been to be E" nacted and Published, and their Advice desired and taken to the same, they " now of their Ambitious Minds and Presumptions, inordinately desiring to " have Authority, and to intermeddle with every Cause or Matter, without any " just ground or cause reasonable to the same, do Temerariouly presume, and " Usurpingly take upon themselves to be parcels of the Body, in manner " claiming, that without their Assents nothing can be Enacted at any Parliament with-
" in this Land &c. WHEREFORE be it Enacted, Ordained, and Established by Au" thority of this present Parliament, that the said Proctors, nor any of them, so
" Summon'd, or Warn'd to any Parliament begun or holden, or to be begun
" or holden within this Land, is, nor shall be any member, nor parcel of the " Body of the same Parliament, nor shall give, nor have, any Voice, Opinion, " Assent, or Agreement to any Act, Provision, or Ordinance, to be Regarded nor " Enacted within this Land &c. And by the same Authority, The said Proctors, nor " any of them, shall be accepted, reputed, deemed, or taken, from the First " day of this present Parliament, as parcel, or any member of the said Parlia- " ment, or any other Parliament hereafter to be holden within this Land, but " only as Counsellors and Assistants to the same : Any Laws, Usage, Custom, " Prescription, or any other Cause or Matter, Thing or Things, whatsoever it, or
" they, be, in any wise to the contrary notwithstanding.

This is the Sum of that Act ; and in which we ought not to wonder, if being resolved to divest the Clergy of their Parliament-Rights, they were willing willing to give the fairest Colour they could, to justify their Proceedings in it. To this it is that we must ascribe what is said in the Prefatory part, of the Clergies never having had any just Right to a Voice, and Assent in Parliament: And which they so little cared to depend upon, that in the close of it, they seem themselves almost to own the contrary; and therefore take Care, that their Act should not be vacated upon any such account. But however, these two things are plain enough, from it, with relation to the Irish Clergy: 1. That till this time they did Act as real Members of Parliament: They were made privy to such things as pass'd there, had their Advice desired, and taken thereupon: And did in fact, at least, give their Voice, and Suffrage, to them. 2. That by this Act they were deprived of this Privilege; yet so, as still to continue to be Chosen, as they were before; and to be deem'd, and taken, as Counsellors, and Assistants, to the Parliament, to Declare their Opinions upon such things of Learning as they should be Consulted about, by the other Estates there.

Now if herein, as is probable, and as this Act seems to say, they were really brought down to the state of the Proctors of the Clergy, at that time in England: Then, it will from hence also farther follow, with relation to our own Parliamentary Convention, that tho' it had then discontinued to Sit, and Act, in Parliament, as formerly it had been wont to do; yet was it still look'd upon as a Parliamentary Assembly; and occasionally Advis'd, and Consulted with, as such. And then, for ought I know, the Doctores & Milites in Parlamento, may have been Commissioners, the one from the Clergy, and the other from the Lay-Commons to Subscribe with the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, in their Names: And the other Instruments which have been produced to prove a Parliamentary Right in the Provincial Convocation, may truly belong to, and prove a Continuance of such Occasional Consultation, and Action, of the Clergy, in their other Capacity, there.

However, thus much, I think, is plain; That while the Clergy continued to come to Parliament, their Parliamentary Privilege was, to give their Assent by themselves, or by their Bishops, (if not to All such Bills as pass'd there, yet at least, to All wherein they themselves, or the State of the Church were concern'd) and to which they are still Summon'd by the King's Writ, tho' by a long discontinuance they may possibly be thought to have lost their Right, to an Actual Exercise of it.

But now, such a Parliamentary Privilege as this, the other Convocations of the Clergy never had, never pretended to. In them they acted upon another bottom; They did all by their own Ecclesiastical Authority: The Lay-Estates of Parliament meddled not with their Acts; nor did the Clergy in those Meetings, ever claim any Right, to restrain theirs. And if this be not a clear mark of Distinction between the two several Assemblies of the Clergy, in Parliament, and Convocation, I do not see what can be said, to prove a Distinction more plainly, between any two Assemblies, where the same Persons, only under different Capacities, do in good measure Meet and Act.

And here, I might conclude my Second sort of Arguments in proof of this distinction; But having thus far touch'd upon what, I take, to have been the great Parliamentary Privilege of the Clergy heretofore, while they came and acted with the other Estates in that Council, and of our Bishops still; It may not be unseasonable, before I proceed to any new matter, to consider what those other Rights are, which have lately been offer'd, as the main Privileges of the Clergy there.

Sect. 38.

Now among these, we are told in the very first place, That their great Parliamentary Right was to Tax themselves:² And to which I cannot altogether agree. For tho' it was certainly the undoubted Right of the Clergy, to Tax themselves, yet that this was their Parliamentary Right, I cannot allow; because neither did they alway enjoy it as an Estate of Parliament; nor were they confin'd to the Exercise of it in Parliament; and for what other reason it should be called their Parliamentary Right, I am not able to conceive.

Rights, &c. p. 344.

That before the time of King John, our Kings had but little Assistance (and that in an extraordinary way) from the Clergy of their Realm; the silence of our antient Histories in that Particular, may give us just grounds to conclude. In his 8th year, the King having called together the Bishops, Abbots, Priors, Earls,³ vid. Annal. Waverleiens. Ad. Ann. 1207. p. 169.

Barons, and Lords of his Realm, in the Octaves of the Circumcision, held his Parliament at London, and there desired the Bishops and Abbots, that they would suffer the Beneficed Clergy to grant him a certain part of their Revenues. The Prelates refusing this motion, the Business was put off to the Council of Oxford, in the Octaves of the Purification; where an infinite Multitude of the Ecclesiastical Prelates, and Great Men of the Realm, being gathered together, the King again required of the Bishops, and Abbots, what he had before Exacted of them. Who having Consulted thereupon, "the Archbishops of both Provinces, with their Prelates unanimously Answered, that the Church of England could not yield to that which had never been heard of in any time foregoing.

But what King John could not, without some kind of Violence, get of them, his Successor, King Henry the Third, obtained, in his eighth Year; when Confirming the Great Charter and Charter of Forrests in his Parliament at London, ¹ at the Feast of the Purification; both the Clergy and People, consented to a Fifteenth, and the Archbishop and Bishops Excommunicated All, who should either hinder, or defraud in the Payment of it.

The Clergy having thus begun to grant Subsidies out of their Church-Revenues, continued more or less to do it, all the time of this King; and that indifferently, either in the Great Councils of the Realm, or in their Own Provincial, or Diocesan, Assemblies. King Edward the First being return'd from the Holy-Land, and having obtain'd a Grant of a Two Years Tenth, from the Pope upon the Clergy; the Archbishop of Canterbury, ² upon the Receipt of his Holiness's Letters, called together his Suffragan Bishops, and with them agreed to the Payment of it: And directed his Mandates to the several Bishops of his Province, for the Levying of it; and to oblige their Clergy, by all means possible, to comply with it.

What the Clergy resolved upon, I do not find: But in his next Parliament ⁴ held about the same time, the King had a Fifteenth both from the Clergy, and Laity.

Reg. Peckham.

Kilwarby being removed, and Peckham made Archbishop of Canterbury, One of the first things done by him, to ingratiate himself with the King, was to encourage a New Contribution from the Clergy to him. And this too was made by the King's and the Archbishop's Letters directed to every Bishop, ⁵ who was to manage his Diocese to the best Advantage he could, and to give notice to the Archbishop at the next Meeting of his Provincial Council at London, ⁶ in the Octaves of Hillary, what their respective Clergy would grant.

The year following, the King having obtain'd a Fifteenth of the Laity, instantly demanded the like of the Clergy. This he demanded of them in his Parliament at London, about the Feast of All-Saints. ⁷ In Answer hereunto, the Archbishop of York first agreed with his Clergy to grant what was desired. The Archbishop of Canterbury stood out a while; but at the next Parliament after Easter, was forced to yield: And then granted a Tenth of Two, or Three, Years, as our Historians variously report it.

Upon the Octaves of Hillary 1282, the very next Year, the Archbishop, at the instance of the King, call'd his Clergy together at Northampton: ⁸ In that Synod the King demanded a Three Years Tenth of them. Which the Clergy not assenting to; Another Convocation was ordered to be held at the New Temple, London, three Weeks after Easter; ⁹ to Treat further of the same matter. Whether that Assembly which began there, was afterwards removed to Lambeth, or a New one call'd thither, I do not certainly know: But by a Mandate directed to the Bishop of London, to Summon another Synod at the New Temple Three Weeks after Michaelmas; it appears, that they had there agreed to a Triennial Disine; and were to meet in the Convocation then appointed, to deliberate upon a farther Supply to be Granted to the King. ¹⁰ In this Convocation the Clergy again Granted a Thirtieth, or as Walsingham says, a Twentieth part of their Goods.

Upon

Reg. Peckham, fol. 88.

Comp. Angl. S. Vol. I. p. 507.

Upon the 8th of August 1286, the King by his Letters to the Archbishop of York laid claim to a Promise made him by the Clergy of that Province, for a Supply of his Needs; and complain'd that they had not performed it. The Archbishop thereupon issued out his Mandatory Letters to the Bishops of Carlisle and Durham, and to the Archdeacon of Richmond, requiring them to consult with the Clergy of their respective Jurisdictions, and to pay in their Benevolence, according to the Promise which the King, in his Writ, had tax'd them with. The Clergy, tho' they disown'd any such Promise, yet Comply'd with his desire; and Granted him a Thirtieth part of their Revenues, for the three years next ensuing.

Thus the Case stood, when King Edward the First brought the Lower-Clergy, by his Premunitory Clause, to Parliament: After which, tho' they did sometimes grant their Subsidies there; yet soon after they fell upon the Practice of Taxing themselves in their Provincial Convocations; which was the Method that finally prevailed; and, by degrees, brought their Parliamentary Conventions into Disuse.

In the Convocation held at the New Temple, London, Anno 1297, on the day of St. Edmund, the King, a Tenth was Granted, for Defence of the Kingdom against the Scots: And the same year, in the Convocation at York, upon the Eve of St. Andrew, the King demanded of the Clergy a Fifth in their Synod there, which they had before refused to Grant, but then, as our Historians say, Consented to it.

This King being dead, and his Son, King Edward the Second having neither the Spirit, nor Reputation of his Father, and being otherwise under ill Circumstances with his People; The Clergy, tho' they still continued, against their Will, to come to the Parliament, yet began to fall off from the Custom of Granting their Subsidies in it.

One of the first steps which they made towards this, was in the Parliament held at Lincoln, in the Ninth of that Prince: Where an Aid being demanded of them, they agreed to it, as far forth as in the Absence of the Archbishop and some others of their Body they had power to do: But added this Clause to it, that a Convocation should be held, in which they might all meet together; and there, in a full Body, take their measures concerning it.

In his Fifteenth Year, the Clergy having utterly refused to grant any Subsidy at all to him in Parliament, he thereupon called them together in Convocation, to Consider of an Aid to be granted to him there. But he fail'd of his Expectations there also, because that the Pope had at the same time granted him Two Tenths upon them, which they supposed ought to have sufficed for his Wants; they were sure it was as much as they were able to bear.

Having advanced thus far in the time of the Father, they carried this matter yet farther in the beginning of his Son, King Edward the Third's Reign, Anno 1330. For now they refused so much as to Treat of any Subsidies at all in Parliament; pretending that in the Absence of the Archbishop, they could not make any Answer to the King upon that matter; but that in a Convocation to be held for that purpose, they should Act to his Content. And a Convocation was call'd accordingly, for that very purpose.

The same was the Case about Four Years after, when the Clergy, tho' Summon'd by the King to Parliament, yet did nothing there; But, in their Convocation held a few days after, Granted a Tenth and (which is again to be observ'd) were expressly Summon'd to Convocation for that purpose. From this time forward, this matter has continued almost intirely in the same state. The Clergy in their Provincial Convocations have made what Grants they have thought fit to our Kings; with a very few Exceptions, if any, to the contrary. Which being so, I cannot imagine why it should be thought any continued Parliamentary Right; much less their great Parliamentary Right, to Tax themselves. It was, indeed, their Right not to be Tax'd but by their own Consent, and that, I think, by the Great Charter more then once Confirm'd to them. As such they continued to exercise it without interruption, till our last Civil Wars: And that, from the time of King Edward the Third, almost without any Instance to the contrary, (that is for 350 years last past) in their Provincial Convocations. Upon the return of King Charles the Second, they resumed this Right; and by vertue thereof granted that Prince Four Subsidies in the

p. 134.

Year 1663. How they came to be deprived of it afterwards, I am neither sufficiently informed, nor would it be proper for me to say any thing of it, if I were. It is enough, perhaps too much, that our Subsidies have now so long been used to be granted in another method, that I doubt the Church will hardly ever recover her right, of disposing of her own Money again: And, for ought I can perceive, our late pretended Assertor of her Rights, (her Parliamentary Rights especially) does not shew himself at all concern'd to plead for it.¹

But not to complain, of what we know not how to remedy; let us see what has been offer'd to prove, this Right to have been the Great Parliamentary Right of the Clergy.² Their Great Parliamentary Right, was to Tax themselves; which they did always by separate Grants, not confirm'd by the Laity; (No, nor yet Granted by the Clergy for above 300 years last past) in Parliament. When therefore in the Fourth of King Richard the Second,³ the Commons proffered a certain Sum, So the Clergy (he means upon Condition that the Clergy) who (they said) had the Third Part of the Realm, would give as much, (or rather would bear their Part, and pay one Third of it:) It was Answered by the Clergy, that their Grants never had been, nor ought to be made in Parliament; (and therefore we may be sure they thought it not to be any of their Parliamentary Rights to Tax themselves.) Upon which the Commons Proposal was withdrawn, and they Granted without that Condition. The same Motion was made again and quash'd, after a very remarkable manner, in the Eighth Year of this King.

Had this Gentleman thought fit to have given Us the Answer of the Clergy, in-tire as it stands upon the Roll, we should the better have understood their sense, in those days, as to this Matter. Their Reply was fully thus; That their Grants had never been made in Parliament, nor ought to be: That the Laity neither ought, nor could constrain the Clergy in that particular; nor could they the Laity. But that however they thought that if either ought to be free, it should be the Clergy rather than the Laity; and therefore pray'd the King to keep the Liberty of the Church entire. Their meaning was plainly this, That they were not to be assessed by a Lay-Authority, (such as the Authority of the Commons in Parliament) which, tho' by a side Wind, yet had they yielded to the Proposal of paying their part of what the Commons had granted, 'tis evident they would have been. Now this was certainly very true, and it fully confirms what I have before said, That the Clergy in those days, were Masters of their own Purses; and not wont to be Assessed by any but themselves, and that in Convocation, not in Parliament. But that this was their Parliamentary Right is not yet proved; nor can it, I believe, be Established by any thing but that Principle, (which I have sufficiently shewn, to be an utter mistake) that the Provincial Convocation is a part of the Parliament, and therefore that whatsoever is the Right of the One, may for that Reason be accounted the Right of the Other.

Another of their great Parliamentary Privileges WAS to begin Bills by Petition from themselves, in the same manner that the Commons did. I should rather have said, to Present their Bills already begun, (for sure when Bills are drawn up, and prepared to be tendred to the King for his Assent, so they must have been) to be passed by the King, with the Consent of his Great Council in Parliament. But why IS not this, or OUGHT IT NOT TO BE the Clergies Right or Privilege now, as much as ever it was heretofore? Do not my Lords the Bishops sit as much in Parliament, and by the same Right, and Title now that they did then? Or are they not as well able to prefer any Bills or Petitions, on the behalf of the Clergy now, as they were in the times of which this Author speaks?

As much as some Persons may desire to depress the Honour and Rights of that Order, to satisfy their Resentments against those who are the principal Members, and Ornaments of it; and to run into the Notions of such as were never thought to wish well to our Church; Yet I do not think they will venture plainly to deny, but that the Lords Spiritual Sit and Act as part (at least) of the third Estate in Parliament. I am not afraid to repeat that Expression, after all that has been said either to censure or expose it.⁴ Some of our best Authors⁵ have used it before me, and yet never thought they should have been so far mistaken, or mis-represented; as if they intended thereby to sink the Clergy into the last and lowest Rank of that Great Council. Now if they continue to sit as a Third Estate in Parliament, and to act (in their Legislative Capacity) there, in the very same same respect at this day, that they did when they composed, tho' not the whole, yet the chief part of the Body of the Parliament Clergy: I cannot Imagine why this Gentleman should deprive either their Lordships of the Right of presenting any Bill to the Houses (as our manner now is) for the Advantage of the Clergy; or the Clergy of the Benefit of having any Bills, which they think will be for the Interest of their Order, brought in by them to Parliament. For tho' the Estate of the Clergy in Parliament be, by Custom, much Abridged as to its Extent; yet I do not know that the Rights or Privileges of it are at all lessened thereby: Nor that any thing prohibits the Bishops, who alone of all that Estate continue, at present, to sit there, from doing any thing in their Parliamentary Capacity, on the behalf of the Clergy in this Particular, at the Request of their Clergy now, that they might have done with the Advice, or at the desire, of their Parliamentary Assembly heretofore.

It is confess'd by this Author, ¹ and indeed it was too plain to be deny'd, ¹ Rights, &c. tho' he has pass'd it a little more covertly over than he should have done, (I am ^{P. 346.} afraid on purpose, that it might not be regarded;) that the Lower Clergy, even while they continued to come to Parliament, yet presented their Requests oftentimes to the Prelates of the Upper-house, in order to their being proposed (he should have added to the King) in Parliament. But why then among all his Forms of Supplication, had we not one Instance of this, to clear up this Matter: Such, as for Example, A nostre Seigneur le Roi supplient ses humbles Chapleyns Simon per divine soeffrance Ercevesque de Canterbirs & ses freres Evesques de sa Province, pur eux & tote la Clergie: 25th. of Edward the third. ² And again, the ² Jura Cleri. ^{fol. 34.} 13th of Richard the Second, L'Ercevesque de Canterbirs, & L'ercevesque Deverwyck firent une protestation en plein Parlement en la forme quensuit. In dei nomine, Amen. Nos Willielmus permissione Divina Cant. Arch. & nos Thomas eadem permissione Ebor. Arch. Protestamur publice & expresse pro nobis, et Suffraganeis nostris, ac toto Clero nostrarum Cant. & Ebor. Provinciarum ³ &c. A few such Instances as these would have shewn, that even while the Clergy continued to go to the Parliament; yet the Bishops oftentimes Petitioned, Protested, and Acted for them in that Council; and in that would have proved, that so they may continue to do now. And why one who would be thought to plead on the behalf of the Parliamentary Rights of the Clergy, should place this among their Antiquated Privileges, and therein do both the Bishops, and their Clergy, so much Injury; I shall leave it to himself, upon second Thoughts to Consider. ³ Ibid. fol 97

But, indeed, it does not appear to me, from the Rolls of Parliament, which I have purposely perused with some Care upon this Occasion; that when the Name of the Clergy was made use of in these Petitions, they were yet preferr'd any otherwise than by the Bishops, on their behalf. The Lower Clergy came up but in small numbers to Parliament: They were neither called over, nor computed among the actual sitting Members of it. They met often at Paul's, or some other Convenient Place by themselves; and consulted with the Prelates of what was to be done in Parliament: And so they left it to them to take care of their Interests, to prefer their Petitions, and act, as they saw occasion, in their Name. And thus their Lordships may still bring in any Bills to the House, on the behalf of the Church or Clergy; and that with as much freedom, and to as effectual a Purpose, as they could ever have done heretofore.

The next Point offer'd as the Parliamentary Right of the Clergy is to have no Bills in derogation, of any of their Privileges and Immunities pass, without their Consent: ⁴ Had he said, no Bills, in which they of the Clergy were concern'd, ⁴ Rights, &c. ^{P. 346.} I should not have disputed that Point with him: But for their Spiritual Privileges and Immunities, those they claim'd by another tenure; nor would they ever Consent that the Parliament should meddle at all with them. ⁵ Rot. Parl. ^{n. 70.}

And this his own Instances will serve to prove against him. In the 11th of Henry the 4th, a very good Petition was, I think, offer'd to the King by his Commons, which this Author should have mentioned, as well as the Answer to it; That half the Profits of the Benefices of such Clergy-men as resided not upon them, but absented themselves from their Cure by any Colour or feigned Cause, &c. might be applied to the King's Use. ⁵ The King's Answer was, That this was a matter that belong'd to the Church; and that as for Residence, a Remedy was provided for it in the Last Convocation. He look'd upon that matter not to fall under the Cognizance nizance of the Parliament, but (according to the Notions of those Days) to be a Case in which the Clergy and Convocation only could properly meddle.

The same was the purport of Richard the Second's Answer upon the next Petition, the Subject whereof, because it relates chiefly to the Bishops and their Officers, this Gentleman has no concern to hide; ¹ it related (says he) to the Extortions of Ordinaries for the Probates of Wills: The King will charge the Clergy to amend the same, whose proper Business it was to take care of such Matters. But I must not pass by this Instance, without observing how much this Gentleman has either Mistaken or Misrepresented this whole Case, and for which he has neither the Roll nor its Abridgement, to warrant him. The Abridgement is thus: That a Remedy may be had against the Extortions of the Ordinaries, by undue Extortions, p. 288. And the Roll, it self has no manner of regard to the probate of Wills, but to Suits: Nor is the King's Answer exact; as this Author would have found had he been pleased to consult the Roll: Le Roy Plera as Prelates pur faire owele droit as toutz leur subgits en le plus esee manere qils purront ².

² Dr. A. has examined the Roll in his Addit. and ordered the mistaken Subject of this Petition to be blotted out. He ought at the same time to have blotted out, or Corrected the Answer too.

The same is the Case of all his other Instances: When the Commons would have had any Bills pass'd in such Matters as concern'd the State of the Church, and the allow'd Privileges, and Immunities of the Clergy, and were look'd upon to be of a proper Spiritual Nature; the King refus'd to determine such Matters by Authority of Parliament, and referr'd it to the Clergy, to whom he thought it belong'd, to provide such Remedy among themselves as was meet in them. But that this was any Particular Branch of their Rights, as Members of Parliament, ³ does not appear; nor indeed was it so, any otherwise than as the Clergy in those days would not allow of any Acts to bind them, in any thing wherein they were concern'd, to which they did not give their Consent; of which I have taken sufficient notice before.

It is true, the Clergy have lost a great deal of their Parliamentary Privilege, if ever it was such, in these Matters. And with relation hereunto, I can easily close with this Author ³, "That our Constitution is much alter'd in this respect; ⁴ tho' I cannot altogether go on with him, that, to say the Truth, it was fit it should be alter'd; so much, I mean, as it is. A little more Authority than it now has, would, I am sure, be better for the Church, and, I think, for the State too. However it is to be hoped, that in Matters of Religion, wherein the Clergy, by their Order and Function, tho' not by any Parliamentary Right, ought to be advised with; as in the Articles of Religion, the Discipline of the Church, and the Publick Liturgies of it; They shall either be left entirely to do what properly belongs to them; or, at least, that no Laws shall pass in Parliament, without their Advice first taken concerning them. This regard, we must thankfully own, has hitherto been paid to our Bishops and Clergy (in their Spiritual, not Parliamentary Capacity;) And we ought to promise our selves from the Wisdom and Piety of our Princes [and Parliaments, that this Liberty our Church shall still continue to Enjoy.

But the Clergy in Parliament, did sometimes Protest against such Matters as passed there against their Consent, ⁵ as in the 13th of Richard the 2d, against the Statutes of Provisors. I grant that they did, and so they may still do, in the very same manner as they did in the Case which this Author Alledges; but is not willing his Reader should know; I mean by their Archbishops and Bishops in Parliament. I have already given the Form of this Protestation from the Parliament-Rolls but just before: Yet to shew how much to blame this Gentleman was, for not speaking of it more fully out, I will repeat it as it stands in the Abridgement of the Record; The Archbishop of Canterbury and York, for them and the whole Clergy of their Provinces, make their solemn Protestation in open Parliament; That they in no wise Meant, or would assent to any Statute or Law made in the restraint of the Pope's Authority, but utterly withstood the same, &c. And I hope this is no Part of those Rights of the Clergy, which this Author gives up, as neither belonging to them now, nor that indeed ought to belong to them.

As for his Petition, which he fixes as low as the Year 1529, or 30. be it which it will, 'tis no more than what I conceive is the Clergy's Right at this day. They may complain to the Bishops of any hardships which they think have been put upon them, or by which they find themselves aggrieved, and desire their Favour and Interest, to interpose for the redresse of them. And it will be very hard, if this must be look'd upon as an Old Parliament Right too, that they neither have now, nor ought to enjoy.

⁵ Sect. 42. Rights, &c. p. 348.

³ Rights, &c. p. 348.

But of all the Parliamentary Rights of the Clergy, his next to me is the most unaccountable; which was so far from being a Right of the Clergy there, that it was never claim'd as any Right of the Parliament at all. "Beyond all this," says he, their Consent in Parliament has also by way of Condescension been sometimes asked, and admitted, even in Matters wherein they were not particularly interested: And his two first Instances are, in the Ratification of a League by Parliament. But, was this any particular Condescension, with respect to the Clergy; or, was it the same to the Parliament in general? If the former, that indeed is to the purpose, when it can be proved. But if the latter, so that the King for certain Reasons of State, thought fit to communicate to his Parliament (not of Necessity, but of Grace) what Treaty of Peace he had Agreed upon, and to desire their Confirmation of it; it amounts to no more than this, which I conceive is their Parliamentary Right still; not to be denied the Privilege of Hearing, and Agreeing to, such things as are Transacted in Open Parliament, tho' not of an Ecclesiastical Nature; and which we need not go back to Henry the Sixth's time for Instances to prove.

Sect. 43.

p. 349.

What he means by his next Instance, from the Sixth of Henry the Sixth, I cannot tell; unless it be to shew, that the Bishops and Clergy sometimes Agreed to Bills not absolutely, but with such Restrictions, as they thought the Nature of the Matter to require. A Privilege, that their Lordships, I dare say, do by no means think an Antiquated Right, whatever this Author does. But in his last, I am sure, he utterly betrays the ancient Rights of the Clergy; and in them lays a fair ground, to shake those of the Bishops too. ² In the 21st of Richard the Second, he tells us that the Assent of the Proctors of the Clergy was alledged to countenance the Acts of that Meeting, and to give a Collateral Assent and Authority to them, as a (certain) Writer, (not much amiss, I think, says he) distinguishes. Now a Collateral Assent, may, for ought I know, be proper enough to give a Collateral Authority: But neither the One, nor the Other, will in any wise come up to the Right of an Estate in Parliament. And such the Clergy have ever been accounted; and, by our Laws, are still acknowledged to be. Nay, this very Author, in the next breath, himself allows of it, where he Observes (and that rightly) that in the Case of the Succession, in the Eighth of Henry the Fourth, the Clergy were allow'd a share in the Legislative Power, the Succession being said to be settled not only with their Consent, but by their Authority: Now if they had a share in the Legislative Power, then I hope they gave somewhat more than a Collateral Authority to what they pass'd, as part of the Legislature; and Assented to it not Collaterally, but in their Parliamentary Right; and as both by the King's Writ, and by the Constitution of our Parliament, they were Called, and Empowered to do. But we are told that great Authors, in long Works, may sometimes nod: And this Gentleman has more than once given us this Ground to Conclude that he is indeed an Author of the first Rank.

² The Roll of that Parliament speaks otherwise: It joins the Prelates and Clergy together; and I hope the Prelates, at least, had a right to something more than to give a Collateral Assent and Authority, to what was done in Parliament. Les Comunes monstrent au Roy comment devant ces heures plusieurs jugementz et ordonances faitz en temps des Progenitors nostre Sr le Roy en le Perlement ount este repelles et adnullez par ceo que L'ESTAT DE CLERGIE ne feust present en Perlement a la faisaunce des ditz jugementz et ordonances: Et par ceo priere au Roy que pur seurte de sa persone, & salvacion de son Roialme, les PRELATES et le CLERGIE feroient un Procuratour avec poir sufficeant pur consentir en leur Noun as toutz choses et Ordenances a justifiers en cest Perlement, &c. Ib. And from whence, and other Records, our Church of England Authors have proved a much higher Interest of the Clergy in Parliament, than to give only a Collateral Assent and Authority to what was done there. See Dr. Heylin's Tracts, p. 702, 704.

I have now done with my second kind of Arguments, from whence I proposed to shew, the manifest difference which there is between the Parliamentary, and Provincial Convocations of the Clergy of England. I proceed to the third and last sort; namely,

(3.) Such as may be drawn from some particular Observations in Point of Law and History, to confirm the same distinction.

Now the first which I shall Offer, shall be taken from the Language of our Laws, and the manifest difference which they make between the One, and the Other.

Sect. 44.

I have already taken notice of the Statute of the eighth of Henry the Sixth Chap. 1. as far as concerns the Priviledges thereby granted to the Members of our Convocations. I shall now only insist upon the Expressions of it; and shew how evidently they distinguish the Clergy in their Parliamentary Capacity, from the same Clergy in their Provincial. For which end I must observe, that the substance of that Act being put into a Petition by the Prelates and Clergy, at that time Assembled in Parliament; the thing which they desired was, that themselves, and their Servants, might enjoy the same Priviledges, in coming to, tarrying at, and returning from their Convocation, that the Lords and Commons did enjoy, who were called to Parliament.

Now that by the Convocation there spoken of, as distinguished from, if not opposed to, the Parliament, we are to understand our Provincial Convocation, is not doubted of, or deny'd by any. That this Convocation is there mentioned as an Assembly, wholly different from that of the Parliament, is plain; because the Priviledges of the One are set forth as the Measure of what was desired for, and granted to the Other. But the Bishops, and Prelates, who were at the same time called to Parliament, were actually Members of that Body. They sate and acted as proper Members of it; and in that Capacity both in their own and the Clergies Name, prefer'd this Bill, which upon their Petition pass'd into a Statute, on behalf of their Provincial Meetings. And therefore as plainly as the Parliament it self, in that Act is distinguished from the Convocation, so plainly must the Parliamentary Assembly of the Clergy, by the Words of that Statute, be distinguished from their Provincial Convocation, for which they Petitioned; and by their Petition obtain'd the same Priviledges for that, which the Parliament (and themselves as Members of it) before Enjoy'd.

It were an easy matter to pursue the same Difference of Expression in those many Acts of King Henry the eighth, in which the Parliament and Convocation are at all mentioned; And in all of which, were men willing to be convinced, they are clearly spoken of, as Assemblies altogether different from one another; and the Bishops are represented as Acting in a different Capacity in the One, and in the Other. But I shall rather chuse to mention that famous Act, made in the First and Second of Philip and Mary, Chap. 8. in which the Distinction is so evident, that I do not see what can reasonably be Excepted aganst it. For, First, It recites, that a Supplication had been presented to Their Majesties by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in Parliament Assembled. Then it takes Notice, how that conformably to their Petition, The Bishops and Clergy of the Province of Canterbury, had also Presented to Their Majesties a Supplication to the same effect: And the Preface of their Supplication, inserted into the Act it self, makes as plain a Distinction, as can well be made between any two Assemblies: Nos Episcopi, &c. "We the Bishops, and Clergy of the Province of Canterbury being Assembled in this Synod, after our Usual Manner, while the Parliament of the Kingdom is celebrated, &c.

Here therefore let it be considered, whether the Parliament and Convocation, be not evidently spoken of as Two different Assemblies, which severally Petition for the same thing; and the One of which takes notice of its being Assembled, according to Custom, at the time that the Other was Sitting? Now, in these two Assemblies the Bishops both Sate and Acted: They Petitioned as Members of Parliament, with the Parliament, and as Members of the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury, with the Provincial Convocation. But the Bishops in Parliament sit as a part (and tho' not the only part that is still Summon'd, yet the only one that still continues to Meet and Act there) of the Estate of the Clergy; and, in that, of the Parliamentary Convention of the Clergy, in the Great Council: And therefore as plainly as in this, and all other Acts, wherein these two Assemblies are spoken of, the Bishops are represented as Members of two different Bodies, and acting in two different Capacities, in Parliament and Convocation; so plainly are those two Conventions of the Clergy, thereby set forth as different from each other; and to have their different Considerations, in Law, as such.

Sec. 45.

From the Language of our Laws, let us proceed: Secondly, To Consider the Language of our publick Instruments, in which any mention is made of these two Assem-

Assemblies; and see whether they do not equally keep up the same Distinction between them. King Edward the 2d having summon'd his Parliament at Lincoln, upon the XV of Hilary, Anno 1315, and by the Premunitory Clause in the Bishop's Writs, called the Clergy to it¹: To strengthen this Summons, the Archbishop (according to the method of those times) by his Provincial Writ, Cited both the Bishops and Clergy of his Province; (who had before been summon'd by the King's other Writs) before him, for the same purpose in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln, according to the King's Appointment. In this Parliament the King demanded a Subsidy of the Clergy, to carry on his War with Scotland. The Clergy who were there present, assented to his Request, ² as far as in the Absence of their Archbishop, and of some others of their Body, they could do it; but with this Proviso, that, as well they Themselves, who had so consented, as the rest of the Clergy of the Province who were not at the Parliament, should, by the Authority of the Archbishop, be called together to treat before him, in a proper Place, and to consent to a certain Subsidy to be granted to the King.

The Clergy, in Parliament, having given this Answer, the King, whilst they were yet sitting there, issued out his Writs to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and to the Keeper of the Spiritualities of the Archbishoprick of York, to assemble their respective Clergy for this end in their Provincial Convocations; ³ the One upon the Wednesday next after the Quindene of Easter; the other, a Month after it: And the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Keeper of the Spiritualities of the Archbishoprick of York accordingly summon'd their Convocations upon the Days which the King had appointed.

This was the matter of Fact, as appears from the King's Writs, and the Archbishops Mandates, &c. Let us now see in what Terms these several Convocations are spoken of; and whether it does not evidently appear, that they were not only two distinct Assemblies, but of a different Nature and Constitution too. The Words of the Kings Writ to the Archbishop, for calling a Convocation at London, are these. "Certain of the Prelates and others of the Clergy of the Province, being called together, whom we had caused to be summon'd to be present in our Parliament at Lincoln, and there required on our behalf, to grant us a Subsidy—Consented, but with this Proviso, that both they, and Others of the Clergy of the Province who were not present in the said Parliament, should be, in a sitting Place, Assembled before you."

It is plain, that the Clergy who made this Answer to the King at Lincoln, were the Parliament-Clergy, by the King's Writs, and the Archbishop's Mandates, there Assembled in their Parliamentary, or State-Capacity: No other were called by either of their Writs thither; nor did any others appear there.

But to go on with the King's Writ: Wherefore we require and entreat you, to command all the Prelates, as well Religious, as Others, and the rest of the Clergy of your Province, to appear before you at London, &c. (in the other Writ at York) at such a time.

These two therefore were properly Provincial Convocations, not Parliamentary, National Assemblies: They met within their respective Provinces, before their several Metropolitans; or such, as had the Metropolitcal power committed to them. They Assembled neither at the Place nor time of the Parliament; and I think, upon all these Accounts, I may venture to say, that nothing can be desired, whether we consider the Words, or Nature of these two Conventions, to prove them to have been altogether different Assemblies.

It were endless to insist on all the other Instances of the like kind, that might be produced to prove these two Convocations of the Clergy to have been absolutely different from each other, whilst they continued to meet at several times, and in several Places; as it is confessed, that for a long time, they were generally wont to do; and I shall have Occasion hereafter, more particularly, to take notice of it. I will, at present, content my self to add but one Instance more of this kind, in Confirmation of what has now been observed.

In the 15th of Richard the 2d, Anno 1391: The King held his Parliament at Westminster the 3d of November, and, by his Writs, summon'd the Clergy, as well as Prelates, to come to it. This Parliament sate 'till the 2d of the next Month, and so long therefore the Clergy must have continued to have attended upon the King, in their Parliament Capacity there.

About a Month after he had summon'd this Parliament, he issued out other Writs for the calling of the two Convocations. In that for the Province of Canterbury, the time appointed by the Writ was the day after St. Martin, November the 12th. But the Archbishop of Canterbury enlarged the time, and order'd it to meet the Morrow after the Conception of the Blessed Virgin, December the 9th. ¹ The Words of his Mandate are remarkable; and I shall therefore take notice of some part of it. He complains of the Obligation which lay upon him by virtue of his Pastoral Office oftentimes, tho' unwillingly, to treat with the Prelates, and Clergy of his Province: That at present, the instant great Necessity of the Commonwealth, and the apparent advantage of the Church, which he hoped for by it; join'd to the King's desire, oblig'd him, of necessity, to call together the Prelates and Clergy of his Province, according to the effect of the King's Writ.

This is the sum of that Introduction which the Archbishop made to his Mandate for this Convocation; and it clearly shews what kind of Assembly of the Clergy it was, that he thereby intended to call together: That it was an Ecclesiastical Convocation of the Prelates and Clergy of his Province; which not only in Obedience to the King's Writ, but in discharge of his Pastoral Office, he call'd before him. And how different that must have been from the State-Assembly of the Clergy of the Realm, which met the Month before, by Vertue of the King's Royal Writ, in Parliament; and was broken up a Week before this Convocation sate, I may leave it to any impartial Person to Judge.

But (3dly.) And to proceed to some farther Considerations. In the Convocation of Archbishop Stafford, ² October 19. 1444: The Archbishop deliberating with his Brethren about such Matters as needed Reformation in the Church of England; two sort of things were thereupon consider'd by the Clergy, some such as fell under the power of the Convocation to Reform; others such as belong'd only to the Parliament to amend. To the former of these, the Bishop of Bath and Wells, in behalf of the Archbishop, whole Commissioner he was, subscribed his Resolutions, with the Consent of the Synod. And for the others which were to be corrected in Parliament, they appointed certain Deputies to solicit their amendment there; and so the Convocation was dissolved, upon the 26th of the same Month.

The Parliament in which these Persons were to solicit this Reformation on the behalf of the Clergy was not summon'd, 'till almost Three Months after the Convocation rose, and met not 'till the end of February following. Before this we find no Parliament sitting for One, if not two Years: Sir William Dugdale tells us, that there are no Summons upon Record the two years before; nor have I any where met with any, tho' I have made a diligent search after them. Yet this Convocation was called by Order of the King's Writ: Money was demanded by the King in it, and granted by the Convocation: And therefore this must be in all respects allow'd to have been, such a Convocation as we are now treating of. It would be unseasonable so soon, to enquire what Parliament it was therefore that this Convocation attended upon; or indeed by what Convocation, the Parliament of that Year was attended upon at all? For this Convocation rose three Months before that Parliament was called; and during the whole Year after there was no Convocation held, as by a remarkable Proof, shall in due place be made appear. All I shall at present observe from the Transactions of this Convocation is, That it manifestly speaks of it self as of a different Assembly from the Parliament; that, as such, it referr'd those Affairs which it had not Power to conclude upon it self, to be determined there, and that not after a Parliamentary manner, by the Clergy preferring their own Bill or Petition concerning them, which (tis granted the Parliament-Clergy were wont to do:) No, but it deputed certain of its Members to solicit the Reformation which they desired in behalf of the Convocation: And by so doing, I conceive, plainly shew'd, that that Convocation look'd upon it self as no part at all, much less as one of the Chiefest Estates of the Parliament.

And

And the same was the Case of the Convocation of 1452, of which I have made some short mention before. The Clergy having some things under Debate, which needed Reformation, but could not be determined in their *Ecclesiastical Synod*¹; desir'd the Archbishop and other Prelates, who were to be present at the Parliament at Reading a few days after, to use their Interest with the King; and the Lords and Commons there to be assembled, for the effectual Reformation of them; and deputed Four of the Lower House of Convocation, to Sollicit and Instruct the Archbishop, Bishops and Prelates, concerning such Matters as were in Parliament to be amended. Which being done, the Archbishop the same day dissolved the Convocation. ¹ Registr. Kempe Arch. Cant. fol. 219.

Three Days after this, the Parliament began at Reading, and with that the Parliamentary Convocation was called to meet. The Bishops and Prelates met accordingly, but the other Clergy had (it seems) left off their Attendance, and so none of them appear'd there but their four Delegates, and those not as Members of Parliament, but as the Deputies of the Convocation, appointed to solicit the Bishops, and Prelates, and by them the Parliament, on their behalf. Which being so, I shall leave it to any unprejudic'd Person to consider, whether the Convocation assembled at Paul's; dissolved three Days before the Parliament began at Reading; in which the Bishops and Prelates acted as Members of the Synod of the Province of Canterbury, by the Mandate of their Archbishop, and from thence removed to the Parliament at Reading, there to attend upon the King as One of the Chiefest Estates of the Great Council of the Realm, by virtue of another, and a Civil Writ; can in any manner of reason be accounted either in Law, or Fact, the same Assembly with that of the Parliament; in which, the Lower Clergy had now left off to attend at all, and the Prelates did both Attend and Act, at such a different time; in such a different Place; upon such different Affairs; and after such a different manner.

But 4thly, There was a time in the Reign of King Edward the 3d, when the Provincial Convocations of the Church and Parliament of the Realm, seem'd to have stood in the nearest relation to One another, and from which therefore their dependance upon one another, has, of late, been endeavour'd to be proved; how justly we shall presently see. For even those very Writs upon which this Argument is founded, will appear, when duly consider'd and fairly represented, to Establish a manifest difference between the Ecclesiastical and Civil Assemblies of the Clergy: And I shall accordingly offer one of these very Parliaments and Convocations, as my next Argument to prove the Distinction, I am now asserting between them. Sect. 48.

Upon the 18th of August, the 11th of Edward the 3d, the King, by his Parliament Writs summon'd² all the Bishops, Prelates, and Parliamentary Clergy, to appear before him in Parliament; the Friday before Michaelmas, at Westminster. The cause of their Assembling, is thus declared in the Body of the Writs themselves: That being shortly about to pass the Seas (in order to his French Expedition) ² See Dugd. Summonit. Parl. ad An. pag. 199.

To this Parliament, by the Premunitory Clause in the Bishops Writs, all the Deans, Archdeacons and Proctors of all the Chapters and Clergy of the Realm, from both Provinces were summon'd; and we must suppose, that, according to the Custom of those Times, either by Themselves, or their Proxies, They did generally come to it.

Upon the same Day that the King issued out those Writs for a Parliament; he sent out two other Writs, to the Archbishop of each Province, to Call their Clergy together in Convocation: In which having taken Notice of his Calling his Parliament, for the End and Reasons before mentioned; he thus accounts for the Cause of his desiring them to summon their Convocations also, about the same time with it: ³ “That for as much as the Affairs before mention'd, did specially touch not only the safety and quiet of the Realm, but of the Church too, and of all and singular the Members of it; he therefore requir'd them to summon the Prelates, and Clergy of their Provinces, to treat and consult about the Premises, with them, and with such other Persons as he should send to them; and

“ to agree to such things as should be ordain’d by them, for their Publick Defence and Advantage.

To these Convocations, the Clergy of the Province of Canterbury were commanded to come, the Morrow after Michaelmas, the Day which the King had appointed. In the Province of York, the King assign’d the Thursday after the Octaves of Michaelmas (the 11th of October) but the Archbishop of York enlarged the time till after St. Martin’s, about the middle of November ¹.

The King was now in great want of Money to carry on his War with France; and as this was one of the main things for which he call’d both the Parliament, and Convocations; to the better to secure a favourable return from both, he issued out his Letters ² a few days after these several Writs, to the Bishops, and some Others of the Principal Persons in every County, and Diocese, to meet with the Nobility, Clergy, and Citizens, of the same; whom he had ordered to come together to the Place where they were to Treat; and there to set before them the Circumstances which he lay under: What Endeavours he had used to prevent a War with France? How he had been refused, and what Dangers they were thereby like to be exposed to? And from all these Considerations, to Excite them to a liberal Supply of his Necessities. At the time appointed, the Wednesday before Michaelmas the Parliament met, and with that the Parliamentary Convention began, consisting of the Bishops, Prelates, and Clergy of the whole Realm, who had been Nationally summon’d to it.

As yet neither of the Provincial Convocations were Assembled: That of Canterbury, which was the soonest to meet, being not to be opened till the Morrow after Michaelmas. In Seven, or, at most, in Nine Days time, this Parliament rose: And it was above a Month afterwards before the Convocation of York met. Let us now put the whole together, and see what the result, as to our present purpose, must be. The King Calls his Parliament; and by his Parliamentary Writs, the Clergy of the whole Kealm, to Assemble in Parliament at Westminster, the Friday before Michaelmas. By other Writs, issued out at the same time, he requires the Archbishops to Summon their several Provincial Synods to meet, neither at the Day, nor Place, to which the Parliament had been summon’d. By the One he Assembles the Parliamentary Clergy of both Provinces to Westminster; by the other the Provincial Clergy (a quite different body) of each Province, severally to London, and York. And the Parliament being ended, the Parliamentary Convention must, by consequence, have been determined a Month before one of the Provincial Synods was held. So that these two Convocations then, were called by distinct Writs, the One taking notice of the Assembling of the Other, and requiring the One to be held as well as the Other. They were held at such times that the One was Dissolved before the other began: They were held at such Places, that the One actually met and sate at 150 Miles distance from the Other: They consisted of such different Persons, that the One was a National, the Other but a Provincial Assembly of the Clergy: And yet in the One, more than double the Number cited to appear, than what was called to the Other. The same Bishops, and Prelates, Deans, Archdeacons, and (it may be Proctors too) both sate and acted distinctly in them both. And if after all this, these two be not different Assemblies, I must own my self at a Loss to know, by what more fundamental Marks of distinction, any one could desire, that any too Conventions should be shewn to differ from each other.

³ Rights, &c. p. 245.

But 5thly, And to have done: It is confess’d by one who seems to have the most mistaken, the Nature of our Provincial Convocations; ³ that the Prelates and Clergy summon’d by the King’s Writs to Parliament, were thereby, strictly speaking, a Member of that High Court: Nor will he, I suppose, deny, but that being call’d by the same Writs now that they ever were, and sitting and acting as they do in that Great Council; the Bishops (who still continue to come to Parliament) are still as much, and properly, a Member of it, as ever they were; and make as much a part of one of the Estates of it Now, as they were wont heretofore to do.

It is also acknowledged, That the Provincial Clergy meeting in Convocation by vertue of the King’s Writ; and the Archbishop’s Mandate thereupon, are not, strictly speaking, a Member of the Parliament, ⁴ nor do Constitute any of the Estates of it. Now from these two Principles put together, this Conclusion must, I think, inevitably follow; that then the One of these Convocations must needs be be in its Nature, Rights, and Powers different from the other : Indeed as different as an Assembly which is, and has always been received by our Law, for a proper part and member of the Parliament, must thereby be accounted to be from another, which never was so accounted ; but is, at last, Confess'd not to be so.

And thus have I done with those Arguments, by which I propos'd to shew, the Provincial Convocations of the Clergy of Canterbury, and York, to be wholly different Assemblies in their Nature and Constitution, from the Parliamentary Convention of the Estate of the Clergy in that great Council ; and to have different Rights, Powers, and Privileges, from one another. And, indeed, so evident is the difference between them, that the only Excuse I know how to make for attempting any Proof at all of it, is, that which we usually give for shewing that the Elements of Bread and Wine, in the Blessed Eucharist, do continue the same, in their Nature and Substance, after Consecration, that they were before, viz. That there is a certain sort of Men in the World who deny it ; Nay, who not only deny it, but make it Heresie in us to affirm the contrary. Who burn our Books, and where they have it in their Power, the Authors too for Opposing them. And yet amidst this unhappy Spirit of Fury, and Delusion, set up for Infallibility ; and are as sure, as a mighty Conceit, and a resolute Obstinacy can make them, that they are in the right ; at least would have the World believe that they are so.

I am sorry to say that the Parallel holds but too exactly here : That the Cause and the Abettors of it are but too much alike. But I have been so long used to the One, as not to be at all Surprised at the Other. Their Anathema's to me are both alike. And the worst I wish either, is a better Mind, and a more Christian Temper : For the rest, let them think, or speak, as they please of me.

Let us hear how a late Author delivers himself upon this Occasion : The Air of Assurance, says he, ¹ which Dr. Wake takes up every where on this Article, would be very amazing to a Man that did not Consider how doubts dwell usually in knowing Breasts ; and that those who have the least Skill in things are most apt to be positive. It is as plain, says he, ² as any thing can well be, That the Convocation of the Clergy considered as Called by the Parliamentary-Writs, and Sitting by Vertue of them ; and the Convocation consider'd as Summon'd by the Convocation-Writ, and the Order of the Archbishop consequent thereupon, are in their Nature and Constitution two different Assemblies, and which by no means ought to be Confounded together. Well, this Dr. Wake did say ; and this he still affirms ; and submits it to any indifferent Person to judge, whether he has not now sufficiently proved it. But let us hear what this Gentleman Excepts against it.

By no means indeed, if Dr. Wake's Cause (he might have said, the King's Prerogative, and the Clergies true Parliamentary Rights and Privileges) must right or wrong be upheld : For the confounding of these two Assemblies, and making them but One, Confounds, all his little Aims and Reasonings. However, I have shewn that they must necessarily be, and have always been thus confounded together, whenever the Premunientes and a Royal Writ for the Convocation went out jointly : And it will puzzle Dr. Wake, I believe out of his plentiful store of Useless Collections, to furnish us with a single Proof to the Contrary, when the Convocation Clergy call'd by the Archbishop at the King's Writ, and those Summon'd by the Premunientes, have Met, Sate, and Acted in the same Province, distinctly ; All which they must have done, to be, what he tells us, two different Assemblies. 'Tis true, two sorts of Writs going out to Call the Clergy in time of Parliament, there is room for a nice Head, to distinguish (as Dr. Wake does) between the Nature and Constitution of that Assembly which relates to the One, and the Nature and Constitution of that Assembly which relates to the Other. But these two Assemblies being IN FACT but One Assembly, it does us no harm as to the Argument we are upon, to Consider that One Assembly under as many Views, and Respects as Dr. Wake pleases.

These are his Words ; and they contain the Main, if not the Only Ground, of his Exception against what I have now been proving. And I do not see how I can better Close this Chapter than with a brief Examination of it. Now two Exceptions there are which I shall take the Liberty to offer in Answer to this reasoning.

- (1.) That the Case, as it is here put, is neither Full nor Conclusive.
- (2.) That even that being allow'd, his Arguing is not good upon it.

See. st.

* Rights, &c.
p. 48, 49.

Rights, &c.
p. 234.

Seft. 52.

1. I say the Case, as it is here put, is neither Full nor Conclusive: For it extends only to One kind of Parliamentary and Provincial Meetings; and therefore Concludes nothing with Relation to any Other. "When the Parliament and Provincial Convocation meet at the same time, they have, in fact, he says, made but One Assembly: And therefore they are not, as I pretend, two different Convocations. But how have they done when they have not met at the same time; as he himself elsewhere tells us, 'they very seldom did, for near 200 Years together: But on the contrary, the Parliament met at One time, the Provincial Convocation of Canterbury at another; and that of York at a Third. Then I hope the Parliamentary and Provincial Assemblies were, IN FACT, two different Assemblies. Why therefore may I not from thence infer ('tis the exact Parallel of his own Argument, only much stronger) that they are two different Convocations.

Nay, but this is not the only Defect in this Case: There is yet another, and a much worse, which will go nigh to Overthrow his whole Argument. "When the Parliament and Convocation met together, the Clergy of that Province in which the Parliament met, did not Act, he says, distinctly both in the Parliament and Synod; but met only in One Provincial Assembly, and so Acted for both together. But what did those of the other Province do? Why, "They sent Deputies to the Parliament, to Act for them there; and they sate themselves at home in their Provincial Synod; and by so doing, in my apprehension, they plainly shew'd, that the Parliamentary, and Provincial Convocations, were two different Convocations; not only in their Nature and Constitution, but in FACT too.

Now if the Parliamentary Convention must always have been thus intirely different from one of our Provincial Convocations, viz. that out of whose Province the Parliament has met; I will leave it to this Gentleman, to perswade any reasonable Man, if he can, that it is not equally different, not only in my notion, but in reallity too, from the other also. But,

2. To quit this Exception against his way of Reasoning in this Case, and consider how he proceeds upon his own Supposition. The Sum of his Discourse, if I take it aright, is this: That those two Assemblies cannot be different Assemblies, which have, in FACT, Met, Sate, and Acted together. Now, to make this generally conclusive, we must supply the rest of it thus: But the Parliamentary and Provincial Convocations, of the Clergy of England, have always Met, Sate, and Acted together; and so, IN FACT, been but one Assembly: And therefore, they cannot be different Assemblies. This is his Argument, and in Answer to it, I reply, That his Proposition is Erroneous; his Assumption false; and therefore, his Conclusion can be of no force.

[1.] That his Proposition is Erroneous, every days Experience proves to us. In which we see the same men, and same Assemblies, Meet and Act in Different Capacities; and to be, tho' in Fact, the same Persons, and same Company; yet, in the Eye of the Law, utterly different both Persons and Assemblies, in one respect, from what they are in the other; and to have different Obligations, different Powers, different Priviledges, and Advantages, as such. For proof of which let us take an Example, or two, and that not in any feign'd Cases, but such as I have my self been Witness to, and, in part, concern'd in.

A Dean and Chapter, are made Trustees, in their Personal Capacities, for a Gift to the Benefit of some other Persons, or Society. Having Business to transact for their Church they meet Capitularly together, for the doing of it: And at the same time, having Occasion also to Act in the Trust, in which they are concerned, they give Orders, Seal Leases, and do several other things in pursuance thereof. The Persons, the Place, the Time of Meeting are, in Fact, the same. But yet for all that, they Act in very different Capacities; and have Power in Law, to do that in One, which they have no Power to do in the Other. Again:

The same Persons are Members of a Select Vestry in London, Justices of the Peace for the County of Middlesex, and Commissioners for a Parliament Tax to the King. Being met in their Vestry Room; they do Business in all these Three Respects. Will any Man living say, that tho' in Fact, they are here again the same Assembly; Yet they are not really, and truly different in Law, and have their different Rights, Offices, and Powers as such. Yet once more:

To say nothing of an Author, whom I must not be too bold with: I look upon my self to be, in fact, but one Person. Is therefore the Rector of St. James, and a Canon of Christ's Church, but one Person in Law too? And will this Gentleman from hence, in good earnest, affirm, that the Rector of St. James, and a Canon of Christ's Church, have no different Rights, Powers, and Priviledges, but what are meerly Imaginary; and exist only in my nice head?
and

In like manner, were it true, (as yet it is not;) that the Parliament Convocation and the Provincial Synod of Canterbury, when the Parliament met at Westminster, had been always, in fact, but one Assembly: That they had consisted of the same Persons; and that those Persons had sate in the same place, and acted together in both Capacities; had granted Subsidies, presented their Grievances, made Orders and Ordinances Provincial, in One; and drawn up Petitionary Bills for the King and Parliament to pass into Statutes in the Other; even this alone would have shewn them to have been really and truly two different Convocations, in point of Law: And all that could have been inferr'd from it would be but this; that being met together, they took occasion to act in both their Capacities; but would by no means prove the Parliament Convention, to be the same Convocation, in Law, with the Provincial; Or the Clergy to have the same Rights, Powers, and Priviledges in the One Capacity, which they were once intituled to in the Other.

To clear this matter, if it be possible, to this Author's own Satisfaction, I will to the Instances before mention'd, add yet one more, in a Case relating to Convocations; and, to make it the more Edifying, it shall be out of a MS. Register too.

King Charles the First, by his Writ to the Archbishop, Summon'd the Convocation to meet at St. Peter's York, November the 4th, 1640. Before the day came, the Archbishop died; and so the Assembling of the Convocation fell with him.

The Dean and Chapter having taken upon them the Charge of the Affairs of the Archbishoprick, as Guardians of the Spiritualties, the King upon the 11th of December, issued out his Writ to them, under that Character, to hold the Convocation of that Province, with all convenient speed.

Being Assembled thereupon in Chapter, and the King's Writ being read to them; the President of the Chapter, by, and with, the Consent of his Brethren, and fellow Canons, decreed that they would proceed with the Convocation, according to the King's Command, and appointed the 4th of January next following, for the Opening of it. This being resolved; he next of all, with the Consent of his Brethren, as before, Order'd a Citation of the Dean and Chapter of York, to appear in the Chapter house on Tuesday the 22^d of December, to chuse a Proctor for the said Chapter, to appear before the Guardians of the Spiritualties in the Convocation, which was, in the beginning of January, to be held by them.

They met, and chose their Proctor accordingly; and made return of him to themselves, as Keepers of the Spiritualties; and he appeared before them in the Synod, on behalf of the Chapter, as such.

Here now we see the same Capitular Body, Acting in their own Chapter house, under two very different Capacities. As Guardians of the Spiritualties, they receive the King's Writ, decree a Convocation to be held, appoint the time, Cite themselves to appear, by their Proctor, before themselves in it. And as the Chapter of the Church, they fix a day for chusing their Proctor, they Meet, and Elect him, they make return of him, and finally appear in Convocation by him. Let this Gentleman tell, us whether the Dean and Chapter here, did not Act under two very different Capacities in Law; and had not very different Powers, as Guardians of the Spiritualties, and as the Capitular Assembly of their own Cathedral Church: And whether he would not be ridiculous who should affirm the Rights, Powers, and Priviledges, of the Guardians of the Spiritualties of the Archbishop of the Province, and of the Dean and Chapter of York, to be all one; and that in discoursing of the Rights of both, it would be only a vain Speculation and Nicety, to distinguish between what belonged to those Gentlemen in the One, and what in the other Respect; so long as it was agreed, that the same Capitular Body, during the Vacancy of the See, had a Right to them all.

[2.] But to leave his Proposition, and come to his matter of Fact: That which he affirms is, That when the Parliament and Convocation met at the same time; the Provincial Convocation of that Province, in which the Parliament sate, was always IN FACT the same Assembly with the Parliamentary. And he defies Dr. Wake, out of his Plentiful Store of USELESS COLLECTIONS, to bring but a single proof, to the contrary.

Will this Gentleman give me leave to say, (in the first Place) that I think he here puts more than he ought to do upon me: For that the Proof, in this Case, lies upon him. I have proved, and that I am perswaded, beyond his power to contradict, that these two Convocations have all along been called by different Writs; to meet at several Places, and to Act with different Persons; and therefore, that, without running Counter to the Writs, by which alone they have been Empowered to meet at all, They must have met, and acted, in several distinct Assemblies. Now from hence, I conceive, I have a just Right to conclude, that they did meet and act in such a manner, as they were required by their Writs; and indeed, as alone they could legally meet, and act, in. If this Author will have us believe that they met after another manner, let him make his Proofs of it: I have shewn that, of Right, they ought to have met distinctly; let him shew, if he can, that, in fact, they did not do so.

However, to quit this Exception too; and submit to any Terms, that he pleases; (for indeed his Argument is not so formidable, that I need be afraid to deal with him in his own way:) And therefore, Secondly, Will he allow that the Convocation which sate and acted at Westminster, must have been, in fact, distinct, from that which sate and acted in London? If so, then he must grant these two Convocations to have been distinct, in fact, from one another: For the Parliamentary Convention he affirms to have sate at Westminster, and pities my Ignorance for but supposing the contrary: And I will undertake, at any time, out of my Collections (useless as he thinks them) to prove, that the Provincial Convocations, during the whole time that the Clergy were wont to come to Parliament, did not sit there; and therefore that they must, in fact, have been two different Assemblies.

'Tis true, I have shewn his Opinion as to the Place where the Parliament Clergy met, and debated together, to be not only void of all Ground, but utterly false too. I have proved that when the Parliament sate at Westminster; they met, for this end, at Paul's, as well, as for their Provincial Consultations. But yet thus far my Argument will still hold good, not only against this Author, but in proof of the Point under Debate; That upon the Opening of the Parliament, at the Passing of Bills, and, in general, in all their Parliamentary Conclusions, properly so called, when the King and the Three Estates, met and acted together according to their Writs of Summons, and in form of a Parliament, the Parliament Clergy were obliged to come to the place of the Parliament; Whereas the Provincial Convocation was neither Summon'd to, nor had any Authority to meet at it; nor, in fact, ever did Assemble there: And therefore, that they must have always been, in fact, as well as Law, two distinct Convocations.

This then, so long as they continued to come to Parliament, we may presume, they did, upon these Occasions, every Parliament, do. And therefore this, I hope, will Answer even his own demand, unreasonable as it is; and satisfy him, that in every Parliament throughout all the several Reigns, from K. Edward the First, to K. Henry the Sixth; the Parliament Clergy, and the Provincial Convocation, met, and acted, distinctly from one another, even when both sate at the same time; which was the thing he desired might be shewn.

If in Answer to this he shall say, That the Provincial Clergy upon these Occasions, Came and Assembled with the other Estates in Parliament; He will Excuse me, if I desire some farther proof, than his bare Assertion of it. For besides that this one half of the Provincial Clergy had no Authority to do; I mean the Regulars of each Province; who were neither Summon'd by the King's Writ to Parliament, nor premonished by the Bishops, nor otherwise, at all Empowered to meet, or act, with the Bishops, Prelates, and Clergy there; there is this reason to move me to conclude, with some degree of Assurance, that they did not do it; That we find them very Jealous of their Privileges, in this particular, and uneasy to come, even at the King's Summons, to it: They used all the Interest they could to get themselves discharged from all Parliamentary Attendance; and procured Patents of Release, from the King, to that Purpose. Now to imagine that, after all this, they would thrust themselves into an Assembly when they were not call'd to it, to be Exempted from which, they used all this Care and Industry; is, I think, very unreasonable; and we ought to have some some plain Proof of it, to make us believe it. If in this I am too scrupulous, I hope 'tis a good Sign that I grow wiser; for Doubts, he says, dwell usually in knowing Breasts; and, for the sake of his own Remark, I desire him not to be positive in this Case, without some good Authority to bear him out. But Thirdly, And to pursue the Consideration now alledg'd: I cannot imagine why this Author affirms the Provincial Clergy, and the Parliamentary, to have been but One Assembly in Fact; or how he hopes ever to persuade any Body to believe him; when 'tis so evident both from the Times of their several Meetings, and from the Persons who were summon'd, and came to both, that they could not possibly have been so. As for the Time of their Meeting, he has himself allow'd that the Parliament and Convocation; and (by Consequence) the Parliamentary and Provincial Assemblies, even when they met the nearest together, yet neither begun, nor ended the same day: The Parliament being commonly both Opened and Concluded, a day or two, at least, before the Convocation. Now this necessarily infers a Distinction in Fact between these two Assemblies, at every such Beginning and Ending of each: The Parliament Convocation usually sitting before the Provincial can be legally held; and the Provincial continuing to sit on, after the other is legally dissolved.

And then, as to the Other Circumstance, the Members of them both; it is certain that the Provincial Assembly of the Clergy in either Province, was composed of at least double the Members that the Parliamentary was; and those supernumerary Members were chiefly the Regulars, who (as I have before Observ'd) so industriously avoided having any thing to do with a Parliamentary Attendance. Now what probability is there, that they who so earnestly declined the King's Summons, would be brought in by a Side-Wind, upon the Archbishop's Mandate, to make a part in an Assembly in which they had no Concern; and so, at the same time, both Act as Members of the Parliament, and yet stand upon their Exemptions, of having nothing to do with the Parliament.

Nay, but by what Authority could they have done it, if they would? They had no Writ to Empower them any more to debate of, or draw up Bills for the Parliament, than to present them by Petition when they had done. Or should we, for Argument sake, suppose them, being met with the rest of the Clergy in Convocation, to have tarried as Counsel, or Assistants to them, when they proceeded to Act in their other Capacity; yet still that will not make them Members of the Assembly. So long as they had no Right of Voice, no Power of Determination, in any Parliamentary Affairs, tho' we should allow them to have been present (which yet is more than can be proved, or I believe is true) yet still this would not prove them to have continued the same Assembly that they were before; but rather would shew an actual Difference (even in Fact) between the two Convocations: In the Affairs of One of which, the Regulars were not only present, but, as Members of the Assembly, Voted and Determined together with the other Clergy; But, when it came to any Business which belong'd to the Parliament Convention, they only kept their Places, and gave their Advice, (like the Judges or Masters of Chancery in the House of Lords) but had no power of Action, as before they had; nor were therefore any proper part of the Synod, as before they had been.

But this is indeed a Supposition only for Argument sake, without all ground; and must also be plainly proved, before it can reasonably be allowed of. 'Till then, it will be enough that we are sure these two Conventions were, in Fact, Composed of different Members, to warrant us to Conclude, that they were also, in Fact, different Assemblies.

In the mean time, Fourthly, We must not forget what this Author allows, and might evidently be made appear, if, upon second Thoughts, he should think fit to retract it: That the Clergy of the Province, out of which the Parliament was held, sent their Deputies to appear for them in it, when the Provincial Synod was held at the same time in their Own Province. It is a Case that rarely happen'd in Ancient times, whilst the Clergy paid an Actual Attendance upon the Parliament; and when it did, they had their Liberty, and might indifferently have come to either of them themselves, and have sent their Proxies to the Other. Now these Deputies, he tells us, they sent to the Lay-Assembly (the Parliament) to Consent for them, according to the King's Writ of Summons there: Let me add, and otherwise to Act according to their Powers; as to join in Petitions for the Passing of their Bills, and the like. What those of the Other Province did, by their Proxies, if they came not themselves; the Clergy of the same Province did, in their own Persons: And so however they may have debated asunder, each Province by it self; yet in all those Cases wherein they agreed together, to Consent or Petition, we must suppose, that in order thereunto, after having deliberated apart, yet they had their common Meetings; a Committee, at least, of each Province; and in that came to a joint Resolution concerning what was to be Proposed, or Granted, or Denied, when they should come All together before the King, with the Other Estates in Parliament.

^{48.} ⁶ Ibid. num. 32. Now to imagine that they did all this, without ever meeting together, when they were all at hand, in the same City, and possibly in the same Place; would, I think be very unreasonable; nor ought we, without some very clear proof of it, to suppose, but that however sometimes they might deliberate apart Provincially, even in their Parliament Affairs; yet they came together in Common, to Conclude of what they had to do; as well as we are sure they did Act so with the Other Estates in Parliament.

But let them have debated, as they Will; this is plain, that when they acted the most properly in their Parliamentary Capacity; when they came and appear'd before the King as an Estate of the Realm in Parliament; then they always met conjunctly with one another. And I think 'tis as plain, that when they did so, the Provincial Convocation of the Province, in which the Parliament met, and the Parliamentary Convocation of the Clergy, must have been in FACT, as well as in their NATURE, and CONSTITUTION, two very different Assemblies.

⁷ Here therefore it is that I fix my self; and upon this ground, I utterly deny all his pretence of FACT, as well as of RIGHT, in this Case. The Parliament is the Great Council of the Realm, either Personally, or by Representation present, in the Three Estates, with the Sovereign at their Head. The Writs by which it is summon'd, call these Estates to Act, not separately, but together; and no Act is properly a Parliamentary Act, but what passes in this manner. The Lords and Prelates are call'd to Treat with one another about the Great Affairs of the Kingdom, and to Advise the King in them. The Commons are summon'd to do and Consent to such Things, as by the Common Council of England shall happen to be Ordain'd there. The Inferiour Clergy are premonish'd to give attendance at the same Time and Place with their Bishops, to consent to such Things as shall there be in like manner Ordain'd. Accord-a full Assembly of the Clergy and Laity, as that Expression sometimes in the Elder Rolls seems to imply. For this he refers us to Rot. Parl. 6. Edw. 3. n. 9. This Proof would have been more Convincing, had he added, that in the same Parliament, Rot. n. 11. Upon the Saturday next after the first day of the Parliament, when the King gave leave to the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses to depart; He gave leave to the Lower Clergy too by Name, & auxiliary la Clergie, but retain'd the Prelates and Lords with him. Now at this time there was no Convocation sitting; but only the Parliament Clergy assembled both by the Premunitory Clause, and the Provincial Parliamentary Writs. And therefore the Clergy here spoken of, must of necessity have been the Parliament Clergy Nationally summon'd to Westminster, and meeting there in Obedience to the King's Command.

Another Instance he brings from Rot. Parl. 2 Hen. 4. n. 14. Here again 'tis agreed between Us, that the Lower Clergy were present. But who were the Clergy? And where were they present? At Westminster, before the King in Parliament, to which the Convocation was not called. Those whom the King had summon'd: For tho' the Synod of the Province of Canterbury was then sitting at Pauls, yet it was by the Archbishop's Mandate, without any Royal Writ. And Lastly, which puts it out of all Doubt; This Council for the Convenience of the Parliament then Assembled, was adjourn'd by the Archbishop from January 29. to Feb. 12. Reg. Arund. par. ii. fol. 179. In this interval, the Clergy being now at Liberty to attend according to their Duty in Parliament, the Passage here quoted fell out: For, on Wednesday, Feb. 9. The King declar'd his favour to the Bishop of Norwich, in Parliament; and there the Parliament-Clergy being Assembled in Fact, distinctly from, and out of Convocation, return'd their Thanks to him for it. Rot. Parl. n. 14. He

He has yet a Third Instance, which plainly overthrows his Own Assertion, as the other two before had done. Rot. Parl. 7 & 8 H. 4. n. 128. The Clergy in Parliament Petition, with the Laity, against some Proceedings of the Sheriffs, with which they were aggrieved. The Clergy here, (says Dr. A.) were the Lower House of Convocation, pag. 58. But that is impossible; for there was no Convocation at that time either summon'd or Sitting. There were Three Sessions of that Parliament of H. 4. With the Second, the Convocation of each Province concurrently met and sate: But tho' the Parliament were prorogued only from June 19. to October 15. The Convocation was Concluded, June 18. and did not re-assemble that I can yet find. Upon December 22. that same Year, the Petition which Dr. A. Cites, was made: The Clergy therefore which join'd with the Lay-Commons in it, must have been the Parliament-Clergy which came up thither upon the Premunitory Summons; and that of both Provinces, Nationally Assembled; for no other Summons went forth to call them together, either at Westminster, or to any other Place at that time. See Regist. Arund. par. 1. fol. 67. What other Instances are offer'd by him, shall be consider'd in their Order of Time, as they Occur hereafter.

Accordingly their Proctors being chosen by the Chapters, or Clergy for this Assembly; are empower'd to appear before the King in Parliament, and to Treat with the Prelates, and Nobles of the Realm, about the Affairs to be handled there; and to Consent to all, and singular such things as shall be Established for the Publick Good by them.

Hither they come, and here they begin together their Parliamentary Assembly: If afterwards they separate to Debate each State by it self, yet that is only in order to the better discharge of their Duty, when they meet in the proper Form of a Parliament. Thus they presented their Petitions, got Laws made for themselves, and consented to such Laws as were passed for the Good of the Nation: And thus it is that they are to be look'd upon, if not alone, to Act Parliamentarily; yet, I am sure, the most properly, and most agreeably both to their Writs, and Powers, so to do. In their separate Debates, if the Parliament-Members of both Provinces meet together, 'tis but like a House of Lords, or a House of Commons, in a House of Convocation. If only those of One Province meet and Consult, I know not well what to Call it, 'tis not so much as an Estate of Parliament; 'tis, at most, but a part of One; a Committee of the Province that so Assembles, for Treating of some Parliament Affairs. But, considering the Bishops, and Prelates, and Clergy, as one of three Estates of Parliament, fully and properly Assembled in that Great Council, and meeting and acting as they are called to do, with the other Estates there; I do absolutely affirm, that the Provincial and Parliamentary Assemblies of the Clergy, not only were not always in Fact the same Assembly; but never once were, or could have been so: And I do, in my turn, challenge this Positive, Over-bearing Author, out of his plentiful Store of his Own or Other Mens Collections, to produce but the least shadow of an Authority to prove the contrary.

Having said thus much in Answer to his Premises, I should not need to trouble my self at all with his Conclusion, but that 'tis indeed so very extraordinary, that I cannot but desire the Reader, to stop with me a little, and consider it. 'Tis true, two sorts of Writs going out to call the Clergy in time of Parliament, there is Room for a Nice Head to distinguish, as Dr. Wake does, between the Nature and Constitution of that Assembly, which relates to the One, and the Nature and Constitution of that Assembly which relates to the Other. But these two Assemblies being, in FACT, but one Assembly, it does us no harm as to the Argument we are upon; to consider that one Assembly under as many Views and Respects as Dr. Wake Pleases. Well, the Argument we are upon is, I take it, this; to state the Rights, Powers, and Privileges of an English Convocation. Now two such Convocations, or (at least Assemblies) there are, concerning which the Enquiry may be made: The One a Parliamentary Convention, summon'd by Vertue of the King's Parliament Writ to the Bishops; the Other a Provincial, summon'd by the Archbishop of each Province, upon the King's Writ directed to him so to do. The One of these being a proper Member of the Parliament of England, had (whilst it met) Parliamentary Rights, Powers, and Priviledges; and particularly, a Right not only to be Summon'd, but to Sit and Act with every Parliament, and that during the whole Session of it. The other being only a Provincial Convocation of the Clergy alone; had no such Rights, 'till by King Henry the 6th (about the time that the Lower Clergy began generally to withdraw from that Council) they were by Act of Parliament Entitled to some of them.

This Author supposes (how truly we have before seen) that possibly the self same Persons might be Members of both these Conventions, and meet together sometimes under both Capacities at the same time. And that then being in Fact but but One Assembly, he affirms it does no harm to the Argument we are upon, to consider that One Assembly, under as many Views and Respects as I please: Which is, I think, (in effect) to say, That because in such a Case the same Persons, meeting under both Capacities, would have had a Right to the Privileges of both; therefore the Convocations also must have the same Rights, and Powers, and Priviledges too. And again, because the Clergy when they Sate, and Acted in a Parliament Capacity, would have had Parliamentary Powers and Priviledges; therefore they ought to have them still, tho' they do not now, either meet or act in any such Capacity, but only as Members of their own Provincial Convocations. And by the same Reason, (or rather much greater) he may affirm, that because the House of Commons, and a Committee of the whole House, are the same Persons, and meet in the same Place, and at the same time, therefore the Rights, Powers, and Priviledges of the Committee, are the same with those of the House. Because the same Person is in Fact, both a Father and a Son; therefore a Father and a Son are all One: And 'tis no great matter, in discoursing of the Duties or Rights of each; to distinguish which belongs to a Man in One Capacity, and which in the Other, so long as they all belong to the same Man.

But let this Gentleman argue as he Pleases: If he will not distinguish in this Case, the Law will; and shew him upon Occasion what a slender Topick it is to prove the Provincial Convocation to have a Title to Parliamentary Rights, &c. because the same Persons who are the Members of it, in another Capacity, once had them; and the most considerable Members of it, (the Bishops) without all Controversie, still have them. Let this Author, the next time the Parliament meets, see whether he can carry his point, and perswade some of his Friends, who are Members of Parliament to Meet in Convocation after the King has prorogued it; Or to Act without a License as he would have them do: He may then perhaps find, that, tho' as Members of Parliament they were not Adjourn'd, nor needed any License to debate of any Matter that came in that Capacity before them; yet, as Members of the Convocation they were, and did. And that it will hardly protect them against the danger of a Premunire, to say that they have a double Capacity as a proper part of the Parliament, and Convocation; and therefore that being free to Meet, and Act without any License in One, they ought not to be Censur'd for Meeting and Acting as freely, without any License in the Other.

I have now done with what I propos'd in this Chapter, I have shewn, the two Conventions of the Clergy of England, the Provincial and the Parliamentary; to be in their Nature, Frame, and Constitution, different Assemblies; and to have different Legal Rights, and Powers, and Priviledges, as such. And I have consider'd the Argument (such a One as it is) by which my late Opposer has endeavour'd, with greater scorn, than either Reason or Truth, to explode my Affertion, and to confound them with one another. I shall only draw an Inference or two from what I have proved, with Relation to the Matter under Debate, and so Conclude this Chapter.

And First, If these two Convocations be utterly different in all these respects, from one another, as I have now shewn; then we may conclude, without any further Enquiry, that it must be ridiculous to suppose, that the Provincial Convocation Writ should have been design'd only to strengthen the Parliamentary; that is to say, that a Writ, whose purport it is to call the Clergy to meet at York, should be intended to strengthen a Writ, whose end it is to call them to meet at Westminster.

That these two Writs were both design'd to strengthen the King's purposes, and to Co-operate together to his Ends, I can readily agree; because, that between both, they answer'd all that he had for the Clergy to do. What they would not agree to in Parliament, they commonly did consent to in Convocation; and in the One or the Other, he seldom fail'd to obtain what he desir'd of them. But that the Writ to call a Convocation sometimes a Month, two, or three, before the Parliament met, and sometimes as many after it: That a Writ to Summon the Convocation of Canterbury at one time, and of York at another, was design'd to strengthen the Premunitory Clause in the Bishop's Writ for their coming to the Parliament at a third time; nay, and it may be at a third Place too; must, I think, be both false and unreasonable: And I doubt not but every impartial Person will concur in the same Opinion with me.

Secondly,

2dly, Seeing these two Convocations have still continued to be distinctly Summon'd by the King, and have, in good measure, been kept up so too by the Clergy; the Bishops, the principal Members of each, still actually meet in both; and the other Clergy have, from time to time, not only received their Writs to come to both, but have chosen their Proctors, and made Returns of their Elections, and given their Procuratorial Powers distinctly for both: It will also follow, that the one of these cannot reasonably be look'd upon to have succeeded into the place of the other; and so to have had a kind of Devolution made to it, of the Rights and Privileges of it. On the contrary, the Clergy are still called by distinct Writs, both to Parliament, and Convocation. My Lords, the Bishops, by virtue of the same Writs that they ever did, meet and act distinctly in both. The rest of the Clergy, tho' they have now no actual place in the Parliament, yet both by the King's Summons, and their own continued Execution of them, had a Right to come to it; and that Right was not vacated, either by their Summons to, or sitting in, Convocation. And I cannot but wonder, that when the Clergy have so apparently a double Right to both these Meetings, one who sets up for an Asserter of their Rights, should make it his great Business to prove, that they have a Right only to one of them.

Sect. 56.

Had the Clergy indeed, never been call'd to Convocation, till after they had left off to come to Parliament; and had the Premunitory Clause been struck out of the Writ to the one, from the time that the King issued out his Writs for the other; there might then have been some colour of truth for this pretence. But since both these Assemblies were anciently held together, and that distinctly from one another; and the Clergy actually came to, and sat in both: Since their Writs continue the same now that they were then, when by virtue thereof they did meet and act, both in Parliament and Convocation: Since the Bishops to this day, by Authority of the same Writs, take their place distinctly in both; and the Clergy, tho' they have left off to sit in one, do yet in consequence thereof keep up a right to sit in both; I cannot conceive but that these two Convocations must still be look'd upon to remain, as they ever were, two distinct Convocations; and to have each of them their proper Business, and Rights, and Privileges, as such.

I shall close up all, with a short Case, relating to this matter; and the resolving of which would, in my Apprehension, go a good way towards the settling of our present Controversie. Sect. 57.

It is, I conceive, allow'd on both sides, that to make a compleat Representation of the Realm in Parliament, the whole Three Estates of the Nobility, Clergy, and Commons, must be look'd upon to be either in Person, or by Representation, present there. When this Constitution was settled, the Clergy was called thither, by the particular Writs issued out to the Bishops and Prelates; and by the Premunitory Clauses, for the Lower Clergy, inserted into the Bishops Writs. These Writs are the same now that they anciently were, and are issued out in the very same manner, that for several hundreds of years past, they were wont to be. When therefore the Bishops sit in Parliament, they sit in the self same Capacity now, that they ever did: And what that Capacity is, is the Question I would propose to Consideration?

Do they sit and act in Parliament, as part of the Estate of the Clergy; and the only part that now comes actually to it? Or, do they, in that Capacity, sit and vote in the Upper-house of Convocation; and there, with their Clergy, make up the Third Estate of the Realm required, by our Constitution, to compleat our Parliament.

If the Bishops sit and act in Parliament, not only as a part of the Baronage, but as the great remainder of the Estate of the Clergy there; then, 'tis plain, they must sit and act in some other Capacity, in Convocation: And be look'd upon to sit there only as Suffragan Bishops Assembled under their respective Metropolitans, in a Provincial meeting of the Clergy, to dispatch such Affairs as properly relate to their Jurisdiction, after a Spiritual or Canonical manner; which is what I affirm. But if they sit in Convocation as Members of the Estate of the Clergy in Parliament; and, in the Upper-house of Parliament, only as Spiritual Barons, and Peers of Parliament; then it will follow, that our Parliament is not a perfect Representative of the Realm without a Convocation: That all Acts which have been passed without the Consent of the Bishops, meeting with their Clergy in Convocation, Dr. A. himself owns that they sit in Parliament both as Spiritual Prelates, and Barons of the Realm. Rights, &c. p. 235.

Dr. A. in some kind of Laws, affirms this: That the "Consent [of the Convocation] is regularly to be had to all Laws relating to Faith, or Church discipline; whenever the Parliament shall please to Enact any. Rights, p 351. If the Act of Toleration therefore relates to Church-discipline; or the latter Act for Restraining Profaneness, &c. to Faith; these Acts for want of the Convocations concurring, have been Irregularly pass'd.

How these Opinions will appear to those honourable Persons, who now make up our Great Council, and to whom the Author, against whom I am here Arguing, so warmly appeals at every turn in this matter, I shall humbly submit to themselves, (if they please) to Consider. But if this be once allow'd, that the Bishops and Clergy in Convocation, and not the Bishops, in the Upper-house, (with the Lower-Clergy still Summon'd, tho' not still acting) be the Third Estate of Parliament; one of these two things must, in my Apprehension, necessarily follow; either that the King and Two Estates make up the whole Parliament of England, and have the Legislative Power in this Realm: Or, if that be not allow'd (as I believe our Law will not bear it;) Then, 2dly, That a great part of our Laws, which have certainly been pass'd without the Concurrence of the Convocation, either Ask'd, or Given to them, stand upon a very defective Bottom; and, to use a Modern Term, much in Fashion with some men, are only Laws de facto, and so (like de facto Kings) are to be submitted to only, because they pass for Laws, and have Power on their side; tho' otherwise they have no just Right, nor Title to our Obedience.

C H A P. III.

The First Question Stated: What Authority our Kings have, by Law, to allow the Convocation, when Called, to Sit and Act; or to Prorogue it from time to time, without suffering it to Sit or Act, as they shall think fit.

Sect. 1.

After so large an Account as has been given in the foregoing Chapter, of the Difference between the two sorts of Conventions of the Clergy of our Realm, the Parliamentary Assembly, and the Provincial Convocation, it will be no hard matter to come to a clear state of the first Point, which I propos'd at the beginning to Consider, viz. What the Convocation is, concerning which we are now discoursing? And, indeed, the thing it self is so plain, as to admit of no doubt; that it must be the Provincial Convocation: For in such only our Clergy either now do, or for more than 150 years past, have been wont to Assemble, and Act. Provincial Councils, properly so called, we have had none, since the time of the Reformation. Diocesan Synods have not only in like manner fallen into disuse, but would have otherwise been short of what we are now disputing about. As for the Parliamentary Convention of the Clergy, that, in the Principal part of it, the Bishops, still continues not only to be constantly called with every Parliament, but to meet with the other Estates, and there do its Parliamentary Business with them. And for the other part of it, the Lower Clergy, they are still Summon'd by the King as they have ever been wont to be, by the Premunitory Clause in their Bishops Writs. This is all that has been done by our Kings, as to this matter, ever since the time of K. Henry the Eighth, and more than this, we are told, they neither do, nor ought to pretend to, in that behalf: The Provincial Convocation then, as distinguished both from the Parliamentary Convention, and the Provincial Council, properly so called, is the Convocation which we are here to Consider; And the Interests of which are to be the subject of the following Discourse.

I proceed, in the Second Place, to Enquire, What those Rights, Powers, and Priviledges are, which are either affirmed, ordeny'd, to belong to this Convocation?

Now those may, in general, be reduced, to the Two great Points which I am here therefore to Consider;

First, Its Right of Sitting. And, Secondly, Its Power of Acting.

And both these to be taken with relation to Two several Periods of time:

1. Before the Act of Submission, 25th of H. VIII.: And,

2. Since the Passing of it.

I have already observed, that before the time of King Henry the Eighth, the Archbishop of each Province was possessed of an undoubted Right of Assembling his Provincial Clergy, whenever he thought it necessary to the Circumstances of the Church or State so to do; and needed not any Writ from the Prince to Empower or Justify him in the doing of it. This, in fact, each Archbishop, within his Province, did do; and the Canons of the Church then received among us, not only Commissioned, but required them on certain Occasions, to Call their Bishops and Clergy together to their Councils.

Sect. 2:

For, however those Canons as to any Constant or Regular holding of Provincial Synods, never obtained among us; yet as to the Power of the Metropolitans to Summon their Clergy to their Council, whenever either the Prince required it, or their Suffragan Bishops advised them, or they themselves accounted it proper so to do, they were both received and obey'd; and our Archbishops were look'd upon to have had an undoubted Right in this particular.

Now this Right, our Archbishops continued to Exercise to the very time of King Henry the Eighth; in whose Reign Warham Archbishop of Canterbury, is supposed by his own Mandate to have Summon'd his Provincial Synod, without any Writ from the Prince to Authorize his so doing; We are sure the Archbishop of York did so. 'Tis true tho' they had not the King's Writ, yet we may reasonably presume that they had the King's Consent for what they did: And so far, I conceive the Authority of the Prince had for some time before prevailed; that the Archbishops did not usually assemble their Clergy even for Ecclesiastical purposes, without making them first acquainted with it; and asking their Leave for it. But this being done, unless the Prince thereupon forbade them to proceed, they went on by their own Authority to Summon them to their Council; and that, except in the case of Convocations, without any particular Precept from the King to Warrant them so to do.

See the Appendix. Ad An. 1517.

It must be confessed indeed, that for above 100 years before the Act of Submission this was but rarely done by them: Not only our Church Historian, Mr. Fuller; but his Learned Animadverter Dr. Heylin² tells us, that they began to restrain the Exercise of their Authority in this particular from the passing of the Act of Premunire: Upon such good Authority I thought I might securely venture, ³ till I should be better inform'd, to close in with the same Remark: And accordingly the thing I agreed in; but without one word to intimate that I approved of the Reason; which yet not only Mr. Fuller, but several other Authors, had given; as one ⁴ who cannot be suspected of any Partiality in this Case, has informed us. On the contrary having Occasion, elsewhere, to take notice again of the same matter, I profess my self not to be satisfied of the reason, ⁵ which Mr. Fuller had brought for it. Yet for all this, a late Author having with his accustomed Scorn, Censured our Church Historian for his Opinion

² Heylin's Tracts. p. 2. Antiently the Archbishops of the several Provinces of Canterbury and York, were vested with a Power of Convocating the Clergy of their several and respective Provinces, when, and as often as they thought it necessary for the Churches Peace. — But Ordinarily — especially after the first Passing of the Acts or Statutes of Premunire, they did Restrain that Power, to the good Pleasure of the Kings under whom they lived, &c.

³ Authority, p. 230. How long our Archbishops went on by their Own Authority to call these Convocations, I am not able precisely to determine. — It is no improbable Conjecture of our Church-Historian, that about the end of Arundel's time the King began wholly to Assume this Power, &c. Which is all I there say.

⁵ Authority, p. 240, 241. It was about the year 1393 that the famous Statute of Premunire was pass'd: — It has been SAID by SOME that from this time forward our Archbishops did leave off to Summon Convocations by their own Authority, and called them only at the King's Command. But tho' I am NOT altogether SATISFIED in this PARTICULAR, yet that they now began to be more moderate in the Exercise of their Power, I do easily Believe, &c.

The Truth is, both Mr. Fuller and Dr. Heylin were mistaken in this Matter: And this Author is as unhappy in his own Conjecture, as he supposes our Church Historian to have been in that, which he is pleased to impute to me, tho' indeed, I did never approve of it. Our Archbishops still continued, as they had ever done, to the very last, 25th H. VIII. to Call their own Provincial Councils, by their own Metropolitan Authority. The Convocations held at the King's Writ, tho' they were Provincial Assemblies, yet were they Assemblies of a very different Nature from the others, and designed for a different Purpose. And it was only the rarity of these Provincial Councils for meer Ecclesiastical Affairs, in those latter Reigns, that led our Historians into their Mistake; as when I come to pursue the History of these Synods, I shall more plainly make it appear.

Margin; And Dr. Wake from him. In which yet he is afterwards forced to acquit me. p. 440, 442.

SECT. 3.

Thus then I look upon this matter to have stood before the Act of Submission: The Power of Assembling their Provincial Clergy was lodged, as it had always been, in the hands of the Metropolitans. Their Convocations, they called in Obedience to the King's Command, and by Authority of his Writ. If sometimes they did it without any Writ directing, or requiring them so to do, yet this was but very seldom: And even then we may presume, they did it by the King's Command, tho' without the formality of his Writ, as at other times. As for their Ecclesiastical Councils, they neither needed, nor depended upon the King's Authority in Convening of them. Sometimes indeed they advised with their Suffragan Bishops in those Cases; but that was matter of Prudence, or Respect; not of Necessity. They neither accounted themselves obliged to Call them whenever their Bishops desired it; nor yet to be hindred from Summoning them, if they were not of Opinion that they should meet.

It has I know, of late, been affirm'd that the Canons of the Church, which directed the Calling of Provincial Councils, not only Authorized the Metropolitans to Assemble them, but gave the Inferiour Clergy also a Right to be Assembled, at certain times, by them. And if they had such a Right, much more must their Bishops be presumed to have had a Tie upon the Metropolitan in that particular. Now if by this it be meant that the Canons of the Church obliged the Metropolitans in Obedience to the Ecclesiastical Authority, to Call such Synods at the times appointed by them, I readily agree that they did in such places where those Canons were received, and allowed of; and so the Metropolitans were concluded by them. But for any other Right of the Suffragan Bishops, much more of the Inferiour Clergy, to be thus Summon'd; It will then be soon enough to believe it, when it can be shewn that upon the Neglect of the Metropolitan to Assemble his Province, the other Bishops and Clergy were Canonically Empowered to Assemble themselves without him; or that some other Provision was made to Enable them to Constrain their Metropolitan, in such a Case, to Assemble them against his Will. If this can be proved, then indeed the Clergy may be said to have a Right to be called, as well as the Metropolitan a Right to call them. Otherwise, both the Power of Assembling these Provincial Councils, and the Exercise of that Power, must be look'd upon to have been wholly Committed to him: And that tho' he would have Sinn'd in the Neglect of his Duty, if Willingly or Obstinately, he should have Neglected it, yet the Clergy had no Right, by the Canons of the Church to meet in Council, but only when he thought it to be Convenient that they should, and therefore Required their Attendance.

Such was the ancient Powers of the Metropolitan to Assemble his Provincial Clergy; and thus was he allow'd to practice it in our Country. He had the Right of Assembling them in his hands; and he was under no constraint, (except what the Prince by his Writs, laid upon him in the business of our Convocations) to Assemble them, but only at such times as himself, with the advice of his Suffragan Bishops, thought fit so to do. The Inferiour Clergy, had no part either in Advising or Constraining of him: Nay, let me add (tho' I know I must be so unfortunate to displease some Men by it) that in our Church they were not accounted so much as any Necessary Members of such Church Synods; but only of the State Convocations, where the King had need of their Assistance, and therefore required them to come to them. If they came, and had any Business there, they were Admitted; If they did not, they were not thought to be at all Wanted.

The Clergy being thus freely Assembled by the Metropolitan; went on as freely, (only with his Direction;) to do any Business that properly belonged to them; without Expecting, or otherwise Needing any License or Permission from the Civil Magistrate, in that particular. And tho' our Kings often sent to our Provincial Councils their Royal Prohibitions, not to meddle with such matters as concern'd the Laws of the Realm, or their Own Crown or Dignity; yet (before the 25th of Henry the Eighth) there was no restraint laid upon them in such things as regularly fell under their Cognisance; but they were left at their full Liberty, to Make, Promulge, and Execute any Canons, or Constitutions, which they thought needful for the Good of the Church; and by which they did not contradict the Laws of the Realm.

But this Act of Submission made a great Change in our Constitution in both these respects; and limited in some measure the Authority of our Synods, tho' much more that of our Metropolitans: So that whereas before they were at Liberty to Assemble their Clergy whenever they pleased, now they cannot call them without the King's Consent: He must issue out his Writ to Empower them, before they can send forth their Mandates, to require their Bishops and Clergy to Come to their Council.

Sect. 5.

The Power of Assembling the Clergy of the Realm, being thus put into the hands of the Prince, carried all such other Rights along with it, as were Necessarily Consequent thereupon. So that whereas before, the Archbishop intirely Governed their Sessions; Prorogued them as he pleased; and Dissolved them when he thought fit; he is now altogether deprived of the One, and very much limited and confined in the Exercise of the Other. For the Clergy being Assembled by their Archbishop in Obedience to the King's Command, His Writ obliges the Metropolitan to continue their Sessions till the King shall think fit by Another Writ to allow of his Dismissing of them. They came not together by the Sole Authority of the Ecclesiastical Power, but as that Power was its self Influenced by the King's Writ: And therefore tho' the same Ecclesiastical Power which Assembled is also to Dissolve them, yet the Exercise of that Power must herein again be directed by the same Authority of the Prince; and the Archbishop must be guided by it in Both alike.

Whilst the King thinks fit they should sit, the Archbishop still keeps, and exercises his Power, of Holding, or Continuing their Sessions, as he was wont to do. But if the Prince, by his Writ, orders them to be Prorogued; and thereby Suspends his first Act, of Calling them together; 'tis no more than what his Legal Power of Assembling, and in that of Continuing their Sessions, intitules him unto; and the Archbishop must herein again submit his Authority to the King's Direction.

This has been the Practice, as far as I can Observe, ever since the time of King Henry the Eighth; and this, I take, to be the Legal Ground upon which it is built.

Sect. 6.

How far our Convocations, being thus Assembled, are limited in their Power of Acting by the Authority of the same Statute, will more properly be shewn, when we shall come to consider that part of our Argument. In the mean time from has been now laid down, I shall endeavour to give a plain account of the first point propos'd; as far as concerns my Opinion of it; and so proceed to Examine the Exceptions that have been made against it.

And, 1. Whereas before the passing of this Act, the Archbishop of each Province might, by his own Ecclesiastical Authority, have Assembled the Synod of his Province, without any Commission from the King so to do; he is now (as I conceive) by the Tenour of this Act, wholly tied up in this particular to the Pleasure of the Prince: So that neither may he Summon his Clergy in any wise, without the Authority of the King's Writ; nor the Clergy Assemble upon his Summons, unless it shall appear that the Archbishop does require them; not only by vertue of his Own Authority, but also in pursuance of the King's Command, to come to it. The Civil and Ecclesiastical Power, must both concur

to Warrant their Assembling; and they must be satisfied as well that the King has Authorized the Archbishop to Call them, as that the Archbishop does Require them to Come to his Convocation. For so I take the Words of the Act 25 H.8. c.19. to Run; both in the Recital of the Clergies Submission, and in the Enacting Clause framed thereupon: In both which, they are the Clergy of the Realm of England of whom the Act speaks, who had knowledged, according to the Truth, that the Convocations of the same Clergy, are, always have been, and ought to be, assembled by the King's Writ; and of whose Convocations the Statute declares, that they should always be Assembled by Authority of the King's Writ.

When therefore the Power of Assembling the Convocations of the Clergy of the Realm, was thus, in effect, put absolutely into the King's Hands, tho' the Authority of the Metropolitan alone was directly abridg'd by it, yet the Consequence of it reach'd to the other Clergy too: So that should the Archbishop Call a Provincial Assembly without the King's Writ, and the Clergy come together thereupon; they would be liable to the Penalty of this Act for Obeying, no less than their Metropolitan for Issuing out of such Summons. For it is not said that the Archbishop shall not Call a Convocation without the King's Writ, but that the Convocation shall always be Assembled by the Authority of it; and therefore every such Convocation as Assembles without the Authority of the King's Writ, Assembles contrary to the Purport of this Statute, and must thereby expose its self to the Danger of it.

Sect. 7.

2. This Statute having not determined any Certain or Fix'd Times, wherein the King shall be oblig'd to exercise that Authority which was hereby committed to Him; I do suppose he must be look'd upon to have been left to the same Liberty, in that respect, by this Act, which he enjoy'd before the making of it. If therefore he was not determined by any Law of the Realm to require the Archbishops to summon their Convocations at any set times before; but might have done it when, and only when, he pleas'd; then it must follow that he is left to the same Liberty still: And that he was intrusted by the Parliament to exercise this Power, freely, and without restraint; as he should judge to be most for the Publick Welfare of the Church and Realm.

Now that before the making of this Act, the King was not confined in the Exercise of this Authority; that he freely Issued out his Writs to the Archbishops, to Summon their Convocations whensoever he thought fit, and was determined by no Law of the Realm to do otherwise; both our Histories shew, and those who are the most concern'd to prove the Contrary, have not yet been able to make out any such Obligation as they pretend; as will evidently appear when we shall come to consider what has been offer'd by them to this purpose. In the mean time, this is plain, that this Statute which gave the King the sole Authority of Assembling our Convocations, gave it to him Absolutely, without any Tye or Limitation; and therefore that if there be any Restraint lying upon him in the Exercise of it, it must arise from some other Ground, than either the Submission of the Clergy, or the Words of this Act; in neither of which, any such thing is declared, or so much as hinted at. But,

Sect. 8.
 Authority,
 p. 140.

Thirdly, Tho' this Statute determines the King to no certain Time of Calling the Convocations of the Clergy; yet our Princes, of their own free and voluntary Choice have, ever since the Passing of it, accustom'd themselves to Issue out their Writs for the Assembling of them, at such Times as they have called their Parliament to meet: And so, in Obedience to the King's Authority, both the Civil and Ecclesiastical Councils of the Realm, have usually met at the same time.

What Authority such a Custom, by long continuance, may be supposed to have now Obtain'd, and how far the King's Prerogative shall, in Law, be look'd upon to be limited by it, I shall hereafter particularly enquire. But as there was a Time when this Custom first began to be introduced, and when (by Consequence) it could be of no force to oblige the Prince, whatever it may be thought to do now; So that ever any such Custom did at all prevail, was by the meer Will of our Kings, who for Reasons of State, best known to themselves, thought it Convenient to hold their Convocations together with their Parliaments; tho' then to be sure (however the Case be now) they were at their Liberty, and might have held them, or not, at such times as they pleased.

And

And this I say upon Supposition, that there was no positive Law of the Realm, which requir'd the Prince to call them at those times. For if there were, then it must be granted that the King by this subsequent Act, was only invested with a Ministerial Power; and had, in reality, nothing but a meer shew of Authority conferr'd upon him; if at such certain times the Convocation must be called whether he will or no: And so the Prerogative of the Crown be reduced to this, that the Archbishop shall not call his Convocation without the King's Writ; but neither shall the King be at liberty to Grant, or Refuse his Writ to him, but shall be Obliged to issue it out, at such Seasons as the Convocation is (otherwise determined by some other Law) to be held, whether he thinks fit or no to do it. A Prerogative which the Keeper of the Great Seal does, in effect, share with him; and who may almost as properly be said (if this be the Case) to have the Authority to Assemble the Convocation, as the King himself has. But, 4thly, Tho' a Custom has therefore prevail'd since the Passing of this Act, not (as I conceive) by any Legal necessity lying upon our Princes in that Case, but meerly through their own Royal Pleasure, to Assemble the Convocations of the Clergy, at the same time that the Parliament is to meet; yet still our Kings have kept both their Sitting and Acting wholly in their own Power; by Asserting to themselves a double Right, which by the same Statute, was invested in them, viz. First, Of Comdanding the Archbishops from time to time to Prorogue their Synods so Assembled, as has been said, as they have thought fit. And, Secondly, Of granting them, or not, a License to Act; without which, very little there is (as shall hereafter be shewn) that can now be done by them in their Convocations. Sect. 9.

Here therefore, I have affirm'd, (and must again beg leave to affirm) that the King's Power is still Intire: He has a Legal Right to permit the Convocations to Sit and Act, or not; and he has from time to time, so far asserted that Right, both by Prorogueing of their Assemblies, and by sometimes Granting, but oftner withholding his License from them; that tho' they have been summon'd by his Writ, yet they have frequently done nothing; nay, for the most part, have had neither Power, nor Opportunity, to do any thing. ¹ Authority, &c. p. 141.

Now this Power and Prerogative is that, and All that in this First Question I have undertaken to Assert: That the King is invested with a Legal Authority, to prorogue the Convocations of the Clergy from time to time, as he pleases; and may Grant, or not Grant them his License to Act, as himself, by the Advice of his Council, shall judge to be most fitting for him to do. If in this, his Authority be restrain'd, and having called them by his Writ, they have, from that thenceforth, a Right to sit, at their own Pleasure, so that he cannot Legally adjourn them; and if, being sate, either no License at all is needful to Empower them to Act; or, if there be, such License ought of Right to be granted to them; let this be proved, and I submit. But if in this he be left at liberty, so that the Right of Prorogueing, and Licensing the Convocation, is intirely at his Own Pleasure: If neither this Statute, nor any other Law, nor even Custom it self, has laid any Restraint upon the Prerogative in this Particular; then I conceive my First Position will remain good in Law, That the Sitting and Acting of the Convocation, does depend upon the Pleasure of the Prince; and that he may permit, or refuse it, to Sit and Act, as he shall think fit.

But then, 5thly. Tho' the King has (I conceive) such an Authority, by Law, over our Convocations, That he may prorogue them when he will; and Grant them a License or not, to Act as he pleases; yet still I have affirmed¹, and I see no Cause to retract my Assertion; that this Authority he is obliged in Conscience to Exercise for the Publick good of the Church and Realm; and therefore ought not either to hinder their Sitting, or to restrain their Acting, when it would be for the Advantage of either, that they should meet, and do the Work that belongs to them. Sect. 10.

As therefore in the Civil Affairs of the Realm, the Prince has his Other Council to Advise him, and upon their Deliberations proceeds to Act, not only with greater Advantage to the Publick, but with a better Satisfaction to himself likewise: So in those which concern the State of the Church, I make no doubt but that it is the Duty, as well as Wisdom of a Christian King, to Consult of all these Matters with those who have the Government of it committed to them by God; and by their Direction and Assistance, to manage himself in the Exercise of this Great Branch of his³ Royal Supremacy: And neither obstinately to refuse the Clergy ³ Authority, &c. p. 268, 281.

Clergy Liberty to Assemble, when they think it would be for the Service of the Church, and the Benefit of Religion to come together; nor yet unreasonably require their Attendance, when there is nothing at all, or nothing of any Consequence to be done by them.

Sect. 11.

But however, 6thly. Should it so fall out, (as yet it is to be hoped it shall not, in a Christian Kingdom) that the Prince should neglect his Duty in this Particular; and so not give his Clergy the Opportunity of Meeting and Acting, when it would be of a Real Benefit to the Church that they should Assemble, and provide for the Estate of it; In that Case, I conceive, it would be the Duty of those who are the Fathers and Governours of it, to apply to him for his Permission to come together; to remonstrate with Humility, but yet with a Christian Freedom too, the Necessities of the Church; the Evils that are to be remedied; and the reason they have to hope that, by their Assembling, they may provide some Remedy for them: And to press him in the Name of God, and in pursuance of that Trust which the Publick has reposed in him, to give a favourable Answer to their Requests.

When this is done, if the Prince shall still continue deaf to their Remonstrances, and refuse them the Liberty they so reasonably and dutifully desire of him; then indeed they may have just cause to complain that he abuses his Authority; and to consider what is next to be done for the Honour of God, and the safety of his Church committed to them. But otherwise, I cannot but think it too soon to Complain of the Prince, that he does not suffer the Clergy to Meet and Act; whilst they have not so much as once applied to him for his Permission, nor done any thing to convince him, that it is Needful for them so to do.

How far this last may be our Case, I shall leave it to those who have been the most Clamorous for the sitting of our Convocations, to consider. For my own part, as I have this Confidence in the Good Affections of my Royal Master towards the Church of England, as to be firmly perswaded that he would not refuse his Bishops and Clergy the Opportunity of Meeting, and Acting, if they desired it of him; or that he thought it would conduce to the better Establishment of Religion, and Piety among his People; so I have never heard that any Attempt has been made so much as to ask his Permission in this Particular. And where Princes are concern'd, 'tis, I think, a great Rudeness, not to give it a worse Name, loudly to complain of a Grievance, where none is intended; nor have those, who the most complain of it, done any thing to procure a Redress of it. For I am pretty sure, that if any Address of this kind has been made to the King, it has been only those which some Assuming Authors have been pleased to send to him from the Press; in which, they do not so much bespeak his Favour, as invade his Prerogative; and so both in the manner and substance of their Remonstrances, take the readiest way to hinder the Obtaining of that End, which they would appear the most Zealously to pursue.

Sect. 12.

However, 7thly, And to Conclude these Particulars; Should we ever be so unhappy under a Christian Magistrate, as to be deny'd all Liberty of these Assemblies, tho' the Governours and Fathers of the Church should, with all their Care, and Interest, endeavour to obtain it; should he so far abuse his Prerogative, as to turn it not only to the Detriment, but to the Ruin of all true Religion and Morality among us; and thereby make it absolutely necessary for something Extraordinary to be done to preserve both: ² In such a Case of Extremity, I have before said, and I still adhere to it; that the Bishops and Pastors of the Church, must resolve to hazard all in the Discharge of their Duty: They must meet, consult, and resolve on such Measures as, by God's Assistance, they shall think their unhappy Circumstances to require, and be content to suffer any Loss, or to run any Danger for their so doing. For then the Prince would only have the Name of a Christian, but would Act like an Infidel; and so having thrown off the Care and Protection of the Church, it would naturally return to the Bishops, and Pastors to whom Christ committed it, to take upon themselves the Care and Protection of it.

p. 43.

These are the Principles which I formerly laid down: To these I still adhere; and, as immoderately as some may Pretend, I set up the Prince's Authority, yet, I hope, by God's Grace, should things come to such a pass, I should Act as firmly in defence of my Religion, and the Church, by these Principles, as any of those who now talk with so much bitterness against me.

Let

Let us see what those of the other side have said as to this Question; and what they have to except against the Principles I have here laid down. Now the Sum of what has been offer'd in this Matter, may, I think be reduc'd to these Three General Heads.

Sect. 13.

1. That the Convocation, consider'd only as a Provincial Synod, has, by the Canons of the Church, a Right to be frequently Assembled; and (being Assembled) to Sit and Act for the Good of it. CHAP. iv.

2. That, as a necessary Attendant upon our Parliaments, (if not a direct part, and member of them) it has a Legal Right, by the Constitution of our Government, not only to be called as often as a Parliament meets, but to sit whilst the Parliament continues to sit; and within the compass of what it Lawfully may, to do any Business which the Members of it shall think needful to be done by them. CHAP. v, vi, vii, viii.

3. That this Right has, by a perpetual Custom, been Confirm'd to our Convocations; So that 'till this present Government, they were always allow'd thus to Sit and Act, as they now Desire, and indeed, Demand as their Right, to do. CHAP. ix.

And of these in their Order.

CHAP. IV.

The Argument drawn from Canonical Authority Examined: That the Canons which require any stated times of holding Provincial Synods, never were constantly Observed here; and are now utterly Abrogated by the 25th of K. Henry the 8th. The Rights of the Bishops Vindicated, against the levelling Principles of Dr. A.

HOW far this Author design'd to extend the Force of his first Argument; whether to prove (according to his first Proposition) ¹ a Right of meeting, and sitting in our Convocation, as often as a New Parliament meets and sits; ² Or only to shew from the Liberty which the Church heretofore enjoyed of holding frequent Provincial Councils, the reasonableness of our continuing to do the same, I cannot tell. If the Latter of these were his Intention, he will have no Adversary of me in this Particular. I have freely profess'd, and I do still declare it; that tho' the Law of England, has (as I conceive) put the whole power of Assembling our Convocations into the King's Hands, yet it was with a Supposition that he should use that Power, to the good of the Church and Realm, which intrusted him with it. That in Order thereunto, he is obliged both as a Christian, and a King ³, not to hinder our Bishops and Clergy from Meeting, and Acting, whenever it would be for the Benefit of the Church so to do. And that in judging of this, he ought to have a special regard to the Advice, and Requests of the Fathers and Governours of the Church; and not Lightly to refuse them the Liberty of Convening, as often as they shall humbly desire it of him. Sect. 1. ¹ Rights, &c. p. 2. ² See King. Charles the 1st's Declarat. before the 39 Articles.

Indeed as to any Certain time of their Assembling, neither do his own Proofs define it, nor do I think it necessary to restrain it to any determinate Periods. At first, when the Provinces were but small, and the Necessities of the Church very Great; when our Religion was not yet commonly received, nor its Discipline settled; when the Church stood surrounded with Enemies on every side, and the Civil Magistrates were so far from lending any help to it, that they Opposed and Persecuted it; very necessary it was that both the Governours, and People should meet often together, to consult and agree upon such Measures as should be thought expedient for the better Safety and Conduct of it. Under these Circumstances it was, that they first settled the Rule of holding their Provincial Synods twice every year; and which, tho' it continued to be the Rule for some time after the Empire became Christian, yet they soon met with great Trouble, and Inconveniences, in the Observation of it. Sect. 2.

To avoid this, ³ they first contrived, that the Bishops of the Province should be divided, and one half meet at One of the Synods, the other at the Other; and so none be oblig'd, ordinarily to leave his Church, above Once in the Year. ³ Vid. Garner. Dissert. ii. de Synod. in Gaul. Pelag. cum Mario Mercat. p. 182.

After-

Afterwards they thought fit to break in upon the first Establishment, and to reduce the Meetings themselves to but Once a Year. When even this was found to be inconvenient, they Enlarged it farther; in some Churches to Two, in others to Three Years distance: Which last measure, Established by the Council of Basil, Anno 1433. in the End prevailed, and became the settled time for the Canonical holding of Provincial Synods in the Western Churches.

Sect. 3.

Under this Uncertainty of Time, within which it has been determined, that Provincial Synods ought to be held, 'till it shall be shewn that our Constitution has declar'd it self for any One fix'd Period, it must, I think, be left to our Governours, to whom the Laws have committed the Assembling of our Convocations, to Resolve when to Convene them; and to the Circumstances, and Necessities of the Church, to suggest to them, how often, and, at what seasons, they ought to be Convened. And all that can be infer'd, from the Canons of the Church in this matter will be only thus much, which I readily agree to; that our Ecclesiastical Governours ought to consider the needs of the Church; and to apply to the Prince for Liberty to meet, whenever they shall find it expedient to Assemble: And the Prince (unless he has some very great reason to the contrary) ought to Grant them the Liberty which they desire.

If therefore this were his meaning, that the Church ought not to be refused to hold such Assemblies as these, when Occasion shall require; I agree with him in his Conclusion, and only except against the subject of his Discourse. For what is this but to intimate either that the King had utterly Refused the Church a Liberty of holding any Provincial Synods; or that our Church Governours had neglected to ask it of him; and that I had made my self an Advocate for such their Neglect, or Refusal. And yet this, as false and disingenuous as it is, is the Use which himself seems sometimes to make of this Argument. Let us hear how he sums up the design, and force of it, p. 28. Thus does our Right to these Assemblies stand by the Law Ecclesiastical: Which Law has been Considered by it self for the clearer Evidence of the Arguments, and not in any Opposition to the Temporal Government. It not following from hence that such Assemblies should be held contrary to the Will of the Sovereign Power; but that the Sovereign Christian Power should be desired to permit, or rather to Encourage them. At proper Seasons, I agree that the Sovereign Power should be thus desired; and I doubt not but it will be. And I am perswaded, that being so desired, his Majesty will not refuse our Bishops and Clergy, the Liberty of Assembling; but on the contrary will give all fitting Encouragement to their Meeting. In the mean time, I must beg leave to say, that such Reflections as these are neither modest, nor just; till it can be shewn that either our Spiritual Governours have been apparently Negligent in desiring the King to permit; or the King been manifestly Obstinate in Refusing them the Opportunity of Coming together, according to their Desires. And when that shall appear, I do assure this Gentleman they shall both seek for some other Advocate, to defend their Proceedings.

But, indeed, tho' I doubt not but that this Insinuation was one great part of what he design'd in this first Proof; yet both the method of his Work, and his own Expressions in other Places, shew that he intended to carry it a great deal farther; and to build upon this Foundation, a Right for our Convocation to meet at such determinate times, as he is pleased to affirm, it ought to do, whether the Sovereign Christian Power in our Realm, approves of it, or no.

Sect. 5.

Our Learned Bishop Stillingfleet, having said of our Convocation, considered as a Provincial Synod, that it was an Occasional Assembly; This Author in great Indignation, falls foul upon him; and taxes him with Unskilfulness for such his Assertion. He pronounces it to be not an Occasional, but a Stated Assembly:

p. 214.

¹In some measure Stated (says he) as a Provincial Synod, simply in its self consider'd: — And that for this Reason, because, that as a Provincial Council, the Rules of the Church received in all Christian States, and particularly in Ours, direct that it should be Annual. And even in the Passage before mentioned, where he seems to soften it all he can, yet he sufficiently intimates this to be his meaning; when he tells us, That ²thus does our Right to these Assemblies stand by the Law Ecclesiastical.

Here therefore must be our main Enquiry : Whether by the Law Ecclesiastical, produced by him for this purpose, it does appear, that our Convocation has a Right, at some certain times, to meet, and sit, so that the King has not a Legal Power at those times to hinder it from so doing ; For that is the Question, and the Only Question between us, as to this matter. And that it does not, I affirm upon these two Grounds :

- I. That supposing this Law Ecclesiastical to have once Obliged here, yet since the 25th of King Henry the Eighth, it has ceased so to do.
- II. That it does not appear, that it ever did Obtain in this Church before.

It was the Judgment of one of our most Eminent Lawyers, and as high an Sect. 6.
 Asserter of our Churches Rights, as ever sat upon the Bench ; concerning the Law, upon which this Argument proceeds ; ' If the Canon Law be made part of Lord Vaughan's Reports.
the Law of this Land, then it is as much the Law of the Land, and as well, and by the P. 21.
same Authority, as any other part of the Law of the Land. And if it be not made the Law of the Land, then hath it no more Effect than the Law of Utopia. If such be the Case as to this Law, that it has no manner of force with us, unless it be Received, and made part of the Law of the Land ; then it must follow upon the same Principle, that neither can it have any Effect any longer than it is so Received ; and yet much less, when it shall not only cease to be Received, but shall be expressly Rejected ; and a contrary Law be Established in the room of it. Now this I affirm to be the Case in the point under Debate : Those Ecclesiastical Canons, on which the present Argument is built, supposing that they did ever obtain here, (which shall hereafter be Examined) have all been Abrogated by Act of Parliament ; and thereby render'd of no more Effect, with us, than a Law of Utopia.

The Canons of which this Author speaks, and particularly that of the Fourth Sect. 7.
Lateran Council, ² which he tells us was in force here, and upon which therefore ¹ Rights, &c.
 he must especially build his proof, is to this Effect : " That the Metropolitans should P. 7.
 " not fail to hold Provincial Councils, with their Suffragans, every year. But now this our Archbishops have it not in their Power to do : 'Tis an Authority which our Parliament has thought fit to take out of their hands, and to intrust only the King with ; And by so doing has utterly Abrogated all such Ca- nons as require this of the Metropolitans ; as those Canons which relate to the yearly Assembling of Provincial Synods, all of them plainly do. And this Au- thor may as well alledge the first Canon of this Council to prove our Obligation to Believe Transubstantiation ; or the Second for the Right of the Church to Excommunicate, and of the Pope to Depose Heretical Princes ; as (under our present Circumstances) produce the Fifth, for any force or effect in Law, to Assert the Right of holding Provincial Councils, at those stated times of which he speaks ; or indeed at any other : Our Principles being not more changed in the two first of these Instances, than our Law is in the Third.

To set this Argument in a yet clearer light, I must observe, that by the 25th Sect. 8. of Henry the Eighth Chap. 19. all that part of the Canon Law, which Obliged in our Church, was intended (and that, at the request of the Clergy in Convo- cation) to be utterly Abrogated ; and a New System of Ecclesiastical Laws to be Compiled and Established in the stead of it. But because this could not presently be done, and, in the mean time, some Law was necessary to be in force ; therefore it was provided in the Act, " That such Canons, Constitutions, Ordinan-
 " ces, and Synodals Provincial, being already made, which were not Contrariant
 " nor Repugnant to the Laws, Statutes, and Customs of this Realm, nor to the Da- " mage, or Hurt of the King's Prerogative Royal, should now still be used and " executed, as they were afore the making of this Act : And as for any others, they never were in truth allow'd of ; nor could, by Law, ever have been Ex- ecuted ; and therefore needed no particular Declaration to be made against them ; or, if they had, they would yet, by this Clause, have now been sufficiently Rejected.

This then is our Rule, with relation to these Laws Ecclesiastical : If within the Compass thereof, those Canons which this Author has produced may be Re- ceived ; and if it does appear, that they have been commonly Used and Executed (and so Allowed of) in this Realm ; then the Argument will hold good, and infer a Right to our Convocations to be Assembled according to the Tenour of them.

But else, if they be either Contrariant, and Repugnant to the Laws, Statutes and Customs of this Realm; or to the Damage or Hurt of the King's Prerogative Royal, or if they were not wont to be Used and Executed, afore the making of this Act; then they must be adjudged to be of no force, and by Consequence to have been impertinently alledged in order to such an End.

Here then let us try the strength of his Argument: The Council of Lateran, recieved (as he pretends in this particular) here, requires the Metropolitans of every Province, to hold their Provincial Synods once every Year. The 25th of Henry the Eighth, forbids the Metropolitan to hold any Synod, but by virtue of the King's Writ; which the King is left at liberty to issue out at his own Pleasure for that Purpose; and subjects him to a Premunire in case he shall do otherwise. The Metropolitan having Summon'd it; by the Lateran Canon, every Person who refuses, or neglects to come to this Council, is to be Suspended from his Office and Benefice. By the Laws and Statutes of this Realm; If the Metropolitan Summons a Synod, of his own Will, without the King's Writ, the Clergy are forbid to come; and shall incur a Premunire if they Assemble at his Inauthoritative Command. This Canon therefore is Contrariant and Repugnant, to the Laws and Statutes of the Realm; and being so, is utterly Abrogated by them.

Again, The Lateran Canon either puts the whole Power of Assembling these Councils into the hands of the Metropolitan, or, at least, supposes it to be in them. The King's Prerogative, as by Law Established, lays Claim to the Supreme Authority in this case, and will not suffer the Archbishop to Assemble any Synod, but when he Authorizes him, by his Writ, so to do. The Lateran Canon, determines a certain time when this Synod shall be held; Once every year. The King's Prerogative is free, and unbounded; he may Call it when he pleases; and he is not limited to any certain time for the doing of it. This Canon therefore is against the King's Prerogative; and by being so, is, for that reason also, of no force by the Law of this Realm.

In short the Lateran Canon, requiring Stated Provincial Councils, every year, was not Used, nor Executed in this Realm, before the making of that Act. On the contrary, such Synods as were purely Ecclesiastical, met but very rarely; and that not by virtue of those Canons which establish'd such regular, Annual Synods; nor in Obedience to the Authority of them. Those Canons then were not Used, nor Executed, at the time that this Statute of the 25th of Henry the Eighth was made.¹ And being not Used, nor Executed then, they were not allow'd by this Act to be Executed afterwards; and upon this third Account also, (were the others wanting) they would have no force nor effect in Law among us.

Supposing therefore that the Law Ecclesiastical of which he speaks, had sometime Obliged, before the 25th of Henry the Eighth; yet since the Passing of that Act, it would have ceased so to do; and have been now, by virtue of it, of no manner of Authority, or Validity in this Realm.

Let us Enquire Idly, Whether the Canons, of which he speaks, did Obtain in our Church before?

Sect 9.

And here, I am not at all concern'd with any of those Proofs, which he brings either from the Imperial Constitutions, or the Canons of the Ancient Church, as to this matter. It is not deny'd by any Body who knows any thing of these matters, that a Provision was made by the most Ancient Councils for the Stated holding of Provincial Synods; or that the Roman Emperors, from the time that they became Christians, did give both Countenance, and Authority, to those Canons. The Question is, whether those foreign Laws, or Canons, were Received, and Practis'd here; and by what Authority they were so? And because it is a Rule in these Cases,²

² Dr. Cofens Ib.

Quod facta non presumuntur, "Matters in fact are not intended to be done, till they be proved so; if this Author will have us admit that these Provincial Canons, ever were of Authority with us, he must shew either by what Authority they were so; or, at least, from a sufficient number of facts, must prove, that they did indeed Obtain in our Church.

Now this I the rather insist upon, because this very Author himself seems to allow of it; and for that Reason prefers³ the Authority of the Lateran Canon for Yearly Synods, before that of Basil for Triennial, because the One was not, as he thinks, received in England; whereas the Other, he tells us, was of force here. And yet, as much as this Author values this Canon, some of our best Historians speak but very lightly of the Decrees of that Council. They represent sent them, not as the Definitions of a General Synod, but as the Pope's own Decrees, and those Published in a very Arbitrary manner by him in the Council; and of which all that Mat. Paris says is, that to some they seem'd reasonable, to others burthensome. ¹ And to this Day, many of the most Eminent Writers of All sides, will not allow them to be of any Authority.

That the whole Body of those Canons (in general) was not received here, we are very sure, because several of them were contrary to the Laws and Customs of the Realm; and being so, did never obtain among us. Such were, for Example, The [3^d Can.] That the Goods of Clergy-Men being Convicted of Heresie, should be forfeited to the Church: The [18] Canon, which prohibits Clergy-men to pronounce Sentence of Blood; or to be present where such Sentences were pronounced; or to dictate, or write any Writs for that purpose. The [23^d] That Cathedral or Regular Churches, should not be vacant above three Months; and that then a Lapse should incur. The [25th] That no Election should be valid, which was made by any Secular Power. The [29th] That no one should have two Benefices, with Cure. [The 45th] That if any Patron kill'd or maim'd a Clergy-man, he should lose his Right of Patronage. The [46.] That no Governours of Cities, or other Lay-men, should Exact any Aids or Subsidies of their Clergy: And possibly several Others there may have been of the like kind.

That this Canon in Particular, was not accounted of any Force amongst Us; we have this strong Presumption to perswade Us, That it does not appear that it was ever regularly Observed; but on the contrary, as far as Our Histories give us any light into this matter, we are sure that it was not. Jo. de Acton, whom this Author, for ought I know, rightly places 100 Years after the time of this Council, Confesses, that in his Days, the Provincial Synods were disused among Us. And another to whom this Gentleman will, I believe, pay a yet greater Deference in this Case, even himself, (tho' here he would have it thought otherwise) yet elsewhere speaks expressly to the same purpose: He derives the Discontinuance of these ² Yearly Provincial Synods among us from the very Saxon Times; and tells us that the Church-Affairs were transacted by the Clergy in their State-Meetings. As for Synods properly Ecclesiastical, he says, they were Occasional Assemblies; and Rare in comparison of the Other. And in that he says the Truth; tho' not much to the Advantage of his present Argument.

But how then does it appear, that this Canon of the Lateran Council was ever Receiv'd among us? Why, for that he casts himself upon the sole Authority of Jo. de Acton, as he calls him. The Words of the Canonist are these: Which kind of Provincial Councils are Commanded to be Celebrated every Year, tho', in Fact, they are not. And for that he refers to two Texts of the Canon Law; in One of which, the Canon of the Council of Chalcedon; in the other, a Canon of the IVth Lateran, is Recited. Now this does indeed shew, that he thought the Canon-Law had the General Force of a Precept in this matter; tho' it proves at the same time, that it was not observed among us in this Particular. But that the Canon of the Lateran Council was of any force in our Country; either by any Authoritative Acceptance, or by any Constant and Allow'd Use of it; he says not one Word: Nay he does not so much as refer to the Canon of that Council, which settled this Point; but to another about the Jews; ⁴ in which this Matter was only occasionally mention'd, and which was all that the Canonist seems to have known of that Synod, as to this Matter.

All then that this Gentleman has produced in Proof of his Assertion, that the Canons which require Yearly Provincial Synods were of Force with us is, at last, but this, that a certain Canonist tells us, that his Foreign Canon-Law required the holding of them. But that ever that Law prevailed here in this Realm; that ever these Councils were regularly and statedly held according to the Direction of it, this Author says nothing; but on the Contrary, both himself, and his Canonist freely owns the Fact to have been otherwise: Which I am sure is a fairer presumption, that those Canons were not looked upon to have been in force here, than any he has yet alledged; or, I believe, will ever be able to alledge, to prove that they were.

The result then of this whole Matter is this: The Canons of the Church which required the stated meeting of Provincial Councils every Year; were never, for ought appears, either Confirmed by any Civil or Ecclesiastical Authority of this Realm; nor by any Customary Usage brought into Force in it.

Supposing that they had once Obliged, yet the Statute of the 25th of Henry the 8th, which took the Power of Assembling these Synods out of the Hands of the Metropolitan, and placed it in those of the Prince, would have effectually destroyed their Obligation; and have rendered them, from thenceforth, of no manner of Force in our Realm.

In alledging therefore these Canons (if that were his Design) to prove a Right of our present Convocations Meeting and Sitting at any certain times; he alledges such a Law, as concerns us no more than the Law of Utopia: If he had any other Meaning in it, which has not already been accounted for; 'twill then be time enough to Consider it, when he shall please to let us know what he intended to prove by it.

Having thus taken off the Force of any Argument that may seem to have been urged against me in this Chapter, I might here conclude my Reflections upon it: But because there have been some things farther offer'd, which tho' of little Consequence to the Question in hand, may yet help to clear the nature of our Church-Assemblies; I shall stop so long as to make a few necessary Remarks upon them.

And 1st, Concerning the holding of these kind of Synods every Year; ¹ it is said, That this was provided for by a Canon of the Council of Herudford, held Anno 673, under Theodore, Archbishop of Canterbury, which took care not only to Establish the Practise for the Future, but also to affirm the Antient Usage; it being at the very entrance of the Acts of it expressly said, to ASSEMBLE in VERTUE of the OLD CANONS. So this Author relates this Matter; how accurately, we will now Enquire.

l. iv. c. 5.

For 1st, Will this Gentleman please to tell us, how ² Juxta MOREM Canonum Venerabilium, comes to signify, In vertue of the OLD CANONS? Or how either the One or the Other, affirm the Antient Usage of Tearly Provincial Synods? All that the Acts of that Synod say, is this; That it pleased us to come together to treat of the necessary Affairs of the Church, according to the manner of the Venerable Canons; That is, after a Canonical manner, in an Ecclesiastical Council, or Synod. And how this Affirms any Usage but that of the Bishops meeting in Council, when any Publick Affairs of the Church were to be treated of, I cannot understand.

But what if this Custom be so far from making for him in One point, that it utterly contradicts, his next great Pretence in Another? It is one of the main Designs of this Chapter to prove, that the Authoritative part of these kind of Synods, were Bishops and Presbyters; whom he would have us believe not only to have been Both present, but to have Both acted upon an Equal Right of Jurisdiction, in them. Let us see how this Synod, in which Theodore tells us they met, according to the Custom of the Canons of the Church, answers this Pretence. We came together (says he, at such a Time and Place :) I Theodore, Dorovernensis Episcopus, which, with this Gentleman's leave, I will render Bishop of Canterbury; and our most Reverend Brother, and Fellow-Priest, Bisi, Bishop of the East-Angles; with whom was also present by his Proxies, Wilfrid, Bishop of the Northumbrians. There were also present, our Brethren and Fellow-Priests, Putta, Bishop of Rochester; Leutharius of the West Saxons; Winifred of the Province of Mercia. And being Assembled together, and sate down, every one according to his Rank; Theodore began to address himself to them. These are the Persons who composed this Synod; to these the Archbishop spake; Rogo dilectissimi Patres: These agreed to what he proposed; Consacerdotes nostri respondententes dixerunt, Placet: These Subscribed what had been Defined; Placuit ut quaeque definita sunt unusquisque nostrum manus propria subscriptione Confirmaret. But of this Gentlemans Fellow-Priests, his Presbyters, we find no notice taken in all the Acts of this Assembly.

Perhaps he will say, that tho' they are not to be found in the Acts of the Synod, yet the ³ Historian has given some hint of them; Where he says, that Theodore called a Council of Bishops, together with those who both loved, and knew the Canonical Decrees of the Fathers; Magistris Ecclesiae Pluribus. Now that among these, there might be some Presbyters, I will not deny; tho' 'tis plain, they were called not under that Character, but as Persons who Understood the Decrees of the Church, and whose Counsel therefore might be of Use to them on such an Occasion. But be they whom they will, the Acts of the Synod take no notice at all all of them, and therefore we may be sure that tho' they should have been present, which I shall not deny, yet they were not accounted any part of the Council; much less did they Act in an Equal Authority with the Bishops in it.

But this is only by the Way; to return again to our Author: The next thing he adds is, that this Synod not only affirmed the Antient Usage; but Established the Practice (of stated Provincial Synods) for the future. By which, if he means that this Synod Decreed, that they would meet all together, once every Year upon the First of August, at Cloveshoo; I allow that they did resolve it; but then, by his Favour, this is not to Establish a Practice, but to make an Order for a Practice to be Established upon: And before it can be affirmed that the Practice was Established, we must enquire what the Result of their Definition was. Now that was so far from introducing any such Practice, that we do not find it was so much as once Observed: Nor in Seventeen Years that Theodore himself liv'd Archbishop of Canterbury after this, does either Bede, or any other of our Historians, mention more than two Synods that were held by Him; and neither of them in Consequence of this Definition.

So little to his purpose does this Synod of Theodore make; and so lame an Account, has he thought fit to give us of it. But 2dly, Another point there is relating to the Assembling of these Synods, in which I cannot altogether agree with him; and that is where he asserts, 'That the Bishops, or as he more ambiguously Expresses it in the next Page, the Provincial Inferiours had as much Right by the Canon-Law to DEMAND such a Meeting, as the Metropolitan had Authority to Assemble it; and that the Obligation ran Reciprocally, tho' the Power did not. Now to Demand, is a Word not only of Vehemence, but of Law too: It implies not only an urgent Claim of Right; but such properly where the Law has provided a Remedy in case of Refusal: Nay, when used in its Legal Sense, as this Author here does, it signifies a Complaint made against the Person who Injures us; not to himself, but to some Other, who has the Power, and ought to Right us.

Sect. 13.

p. 22, 23.

If therefore by the Ancient Canons the Provincial Inferiours had a Right of Demand against their Metropolitan in this Case; they must have had some Provision of Remedy too against him: At least their Demand, must have had some influence, to subject him to a Canonical Censure, in case he should not comply with their Demands. If therefore in all the Ancient Canons there be nothing of this to be found; If they give no Remedy to the Suffragans (much less to any Other Provincial Inferiours) against him; If they allow them no power to meet without him; nay, if they do not so much as intimate, that in Case of a Neglect in him to Call them together, they should admonish him of his Duty; as they do Empower the Metropolitan, not only to Admonish, but to Censure them, if they should be backward in attending upon his Summons; I think some softer word might have served than that of Demand; and more agreeable, not only to that respect which Provincial Inferiours, in those Days, were wont to pay to their Spiritual Governours, but to the very Sense and Language of the Canons in this behalf.

That where these Canons were Received and put in Execution, the Metropolitan was obliged to the Observation of them; and, except upon some just occasion, which the Law may be presumed to have allowed of, would have sinn'd by a Careless, Obstinate Intermision of these Assemblies, I do confess. That in such a Case, the Provincial Bishops might modestly have represented to him both his Own Duty, and the Necessities of the Church (if it lay under any) and in consequence of both, have desir'd him to call them together, I agree too: And if this be all he means, tho' his Expression be a little harsh, yet I can readily comply with him in his Meaning, that they had a Right, in this Sense, to demand such a Meeting. But still it was in the Metropolitan's Power whether he would Assemble them or no; and for several Hundreds of Years, there was not so much as any Provision made by the Canons for the Bishops to Admonish him of his neglect; much less to call him to an Account for his Refusal, if he should not be moved by them. The Third Council of Orleans, was one of the first that inflicted any Canonical Punishment upon the Metropolitan upon this Occasion, and that reached only to the Gallican Church: Nor till the Second Council of Nice, was there so much as any Pretence of a General Provision, in case of such a Neglect.

And

And when all was done, what were these Provincial Inferiours the better for it? They could not Assemble but at the Metropolitan's Summons. For seven hundred Years together he was not so much as Accountable for his Refusal of Calling his Synod: After that, he was liable to be punish'd Canonically for it; but still the Matter rested there, and they were never the more in a Condition of meeting for all this.

Here therefore a Remedy was provided by the Council of Basil; (the first General Council that ever did provide any Remedy for it,) and which this Author therefore should, by all means, have found out to have been received in Our Church: For by the Canon of that Council, not only the Archbishop was punishable in Case of a Neglect to hold his Synod once in three Years; but the Bishops of the Province were enabled to meet without him; and to Assemble together whether he would or no. Now this indeed gave them a Right to Demand a Synod; in the Legal Propriety of that Word: But 'till then, they had only a Right of Petition; a Right (if it must be so call'd) to Admonish their Primate of his Duty; and this being done, they must rest content, if he would not Summon them upon such their Admonition.

Sect. 15.

But be this also as it will: Our Metropolitan has no Power, and therefore to be sure, no Obligation to call his Synod at any time, but only when the Prince shall think fit to Require, (at least) to Empower him so to do. The Prince, by Law, (as far as yet it appears) is not determined to Exercise this Power at any certain Times, but is left to his Discretion, to Require, or Suspend their Meeting, as he shall think fit. And therefore to turn his own Reflection upon himself, 'till the Obligation of the Prince shall be shewn, to Call our Convocations at some certain Seasons; and to permit them to sit, whether he approves or not of it; One good Reason which may move the Superior (in this Case) to Refuse to let them meet, may be, that his Right of hindring it, is Question'd; and he is openly charged with Abusing his Prerogative, by his past Prorogations of them. What Influence such a Consideration may chance to have upon his Majesty, I shall not presume to Conjecture; but sure I am the Matter is now brought to such an Issue, that he must resolve either to Assert, or to give up his Prerogative in this Particular. Nor do I see how he can possibly allow our Convocations to Meet after the manner that this Author requires, or rather Challenges him to do; until it be determined whether he has or has not, a Legal Power to Assemble and Prorogue them at his Own Pleasure: And when that is done, we shall be able, on both sides, the more surely to Judge; this Author, what Legal Right the Clergy have, in his free way of Speech, to DEMAND such a Meeting; I, what Power the King has, by Law, to Refuse it.

Sect. 16.

I should now have done with what relates to the Meeting of our Convocations, but there is one singular Consideration made Use of by him, to induce his Majesty to Consent to their Assembling, which ought not by any means to be passed by: The Scotch Kirk, He says, have been allow'd the Liberty of Assembling: Nor have those of the Presbyterial and Congregational Way, been less indulged at home. Nay, the Privilege we Claim, is not deny'd to any the most Wild and Extravagant Sect among Us. Even Quakers themselves have their Annual Meetings for Ecclesiastical Affairs, and are KNOWN to have, and ALLOWED to hold them.

To say nothing of those abroad, who have their Own Laws, and Act under the Power of the Civil Magistrate, by virtue of them. Does this Gentleman, in good earnest, believe what he here so confidently affirms, that the Presbyterians, Independants, and Quakers, have had the King's Writ, or Otherwise been Legally Empowered by the Government, to hold (as he calls them) their Convocations? Or does he hope, by a disingenuous Representation of the Case, to make some unwary People believe that they have? This must be his meaning, or he must mean nothing at all in what he says: There being nothing more extravagant, then to Argue in this Case, upon the true state of the Matter; that the Dissenters, against Law, without either the Leave, or Approbation; probably, without the Knowledge of the King, have held their Conventicles (for I will not so far debase a Word, that has been applied to a Legal Purpose, as to call them Convocations) Therefore the King has no Right in Law to hinder our Bishops and Clergy from holding their Synods; or, at least, if he has, he ought not to make use of it.

Had indeed our Royal Sovereign indulged the Dissenters in this particular; as this Gentleman's Expressions plainly Charge him to have done; and yet, at the same time, after having been suitably Applied unto, and desired to permit the Establish'd Church to hold her Synods, had Refused her the Liberty so to do; I confess there might have been a just Ground of Complaint; that such Sectaries should be Countenanced, and Licensed by the King, to Meet against Law, (if yet the King has Power so to License Them) and the National Church, at the same time, be denied to Assemble according to Law. But when neither of these is true; when neither have the One been indulged in any such Assemblies, nor the Other been refused them; when it is certain the King has neither Given any Tolerati-on, to this Effect, to Them; nor, does it appear, that he has ever Refused any such Liberty to Us; to Represent these Illegal Meetings, as the Acts of the Go-vernment, at least as the Result of its Indulgence towards them; and there-upon to Complain as if we had been deny'd, what they have been favour'd in; this, is, in my Apprehension, to Libel the Government; to Affront the Prince; and Impeach his Justice, under a pretence of bespeaking his Favour.

But, 3dly, From that part of our Author's Discourse upon this Subject, which relates to the Meeting of the Provincial Synods, let us go on, to another, and of a more considerable Importance; that which concerns, the Members of which those Synods were anciently wont to be, and are, at this day, Composed among us. And here I do not deny but that the Presbyters were, from the beginning, permitted to be present at the Conciliary Assemblies of the Church. That they were oftentimes Consulted with by the Bishops; and had their Advice, and O-pinions taken, in such matters as were Debated in them: Or that, lastly, in Testi-mony of their Concurrence with, or at least, Submission to, what was done there, they sometimes Subscribed, after the Bishops, to the Acts of them. All this not on-ly the Presbyters, but the Deacons too, have been allow'd; to say nothing of the Laity, who were sometimes indulged the same Liberty. In the ¹ Synod of Rome, against Novatus, besides Sixty Bishops, a greater number of Presbyters, and Deacons, were Assembled. In that ² of Carthage, about Re-baptizing of Hereticks, Anno ² Apud S. Cy-256. the Provincial Bishops met, together with the Presbyters and Deacons, presente priam. p. 229. etiam Plebis maximâ parte: In the ³ Council of Antioch against Paulus Samosetanus; all these were not only present, but, after the Pattern, of the Synod of Jerusalem; they joyned in the Synodical Epistle, which was sent abroad, to the Bishops of Rome and Alexandria first, and then to all other Parts. In the ⁴ Council of Eli-beris, besides the Bishops and Presbyters, the Deacons, and People were present: In that ⁵ of Rome, under Pope Hilarus, the Bishops and Presbyters sate, and the Dea-cons stood: In the ⁶ first, of the same place, under Pope Symmachus, the Presbyters, and Deacons were not only present, but subscribed, together with the Bishops: And several other Instances might be alledged of the same kind.

But this is not that which either this Author Affirms, or I Deny: The Point in which I look upon him to have had less Regard to the Rights of the Episcopacy, than a Divine of the Church of England ought to have had, and upon which there-fore I must take the Liberty to Assert its Prerogative, in this Case, is; Whe-ther Presbyters have an Equal Right of Authority, in Provincial Synods, with the Bishops; and whether this is verified by the Canons, or Practice, of the Ancient Church? Both which he is pleased to affirm; And in both which I conceive he is mistaken. His Words are these: ¹ "The Authoritative part of these Meetings, were composed of the Bishops and Presbyters: Before whom the Deacons, and the People stood, being little more than Witnesses of what passed at the Synod. ² "Some of the Presbyters the Bishops were Obliged to carry along with them to the Council of the Province; and there, I say, they sate, deliberated, and vo-^{ted}, upon all matters that came before the Assembly. And even, in General Councils (he tells us) that the Bishops "were deputed thither by Provincial Synods, and brought along with them the Resolution, and Consent of the several Churches from whence they came; and the Presbyters therefore, having Voices "in these Lesser Synods, their Consent also was in the Definitions of the Greater, pre-^{sumed}, and included.

Sect. 18.

And lastly; he alledges, and approves of the Resolution of some of our first Reformers, which, ² he says, "allow'd them not only a Consultative, but Decisive ^{Vote} also, in Synods; and that derived from Primitive Practice.

Ibid. p. 15.

Here

Here therefore is the Point, which, in Defence of the Rights of that Venerable Order, I shall beg leave, tho' foreign to my own Business (as in truth the whole Chapter is) with some Care to Examine: And if from the Authentick Records, and Histories of the Primitive times, I can make it appear, that neither by the Canons of the Ancient Church; nor by the Practice of it upon those Canons; the Presbyters had any such Privilege allow'd to them, as he pretends; If the Bishops only were, Ordinarily, Summon'd to these Councils, and Acted, Authoritatively in them; so that the Presbyters, had no Prerogative above the Deacons, and Laiety, as to the Decisive part, of what pass'd there, in the times of which he speaks: If lastly, the Change that has been made, in this Respect, was an Encroachment of Latter Ages; begun by the Abbots, and Priors first; Carried on by the Dignitaries of the Cathedrals, and Diocesses; and so, last of all, obtain'd by the Rectors of Parochial Churches; then it will follow, that this Gentleman has here again not only imposed upon his Reader, but injured that Venerable Order too; and given a fresh instance of what a then Learn'd Presbyter, afterwards an Eminent Prelate of our Church, observed upon this very Occasion;

" At first (says he) even Provincial Synods were only held by Bishops, and Presbyters had no Interest in the Decision: However we have, of late, sate so near Bishops in Provincial Assemblies, that we have SATe UPON THE BISHOPS SKIRTS. But my Lords the Bishops have a Concerning Interest in this; To them I leave it.

To begin with the Canons of the Church: The 37th of the Apostles; the first that determined the Yearly Assembling of Provincial Synods, directly calls them Synods of Bishops; and directs that they should ἀλλήλους, among themselves, Judge of the Doctrine of Religion, and determine such incidental Controversies, as related to Ecclesiastical Matters. And the Greek Canonists, in the same Language, Expound the Sense of it; that for these Reasons it seem'd necessary ἵνα ἐπισκοπῶν ἐκαστος ἐνορίας ᾤκησιν; for the Bishops of every Province to meet together. Not a Word either in the Canon, or Comment, of the Presbyters either Coming, or Judging with them.

* Concil. Ni-
cen. Can. 5.

This Canon thus passed before the Empire became Christian, was Confirmed by the 2^d first General Council that was held after: That every Year, in every Province, Synods should be held, ἵνα κοινῇ πάλιν τῶν ἘΠΙΣΚΟΠΩΝ ἐπὶ τῷ αὐτῷ ᾤκησιν, That so the BISHOPS of every Province being gathered together, the Causes, of which the Canon speaks, might be Examined by them. And the Canonists here again talk of the BISHOPS coming together, to their Primate; That by the Sentence of all the BISHOPS of the Province, every Ecclesiastical Controversy might be Ended; but of the Presbyters, either Coming, or Acting, not one Word.

* Concil. Antioch. Can. 20.
Vid. Comment. Grac.

But the 3^d Council of Antioch (the next in Order) speaks, if possible, yet more fully to the same purpose. It determines, Συνόδους τῶν ἘΠΙΣΚΟΠΩΝ γίνεσθαι, that there should be "Synods of the Bishops held in every Province; the Metropolitan admonishing his Suffragans to Come to it. That so, says the Canon, the Presbyters, and Deacons, and all Others, who think themselves to have been injured, may come to the Synod, and have their Causes heard, and judged by it. This was the End for which the Presbyters were then allow'd to Come to these Assemblies; not to Judge, but to be Judged; not to Sit with the Bishops in them, but to bring their Causes, if they had any, before them.

* Concil. Chal-
ced. Can. 19.

But yet notwithstanding all these Orders, these Provincial Synods, ᾤκησιν τῶν ἘΠΙΣΚΟΠΩΝ, soon grew into disuse. To Revive them therefore, and cause them to be more punctually observed; 4th the Fourth General Council, Renew'd the Decrees which had before been made concerning them. It order'd ἵνα ἑπισκοποῦνται, the Bishops, twice in the Year to come together; And commanded ἵνα μὴ ᾤκησιν τῶν ἘΠΙΣΚΟΠΩΝ, the Bishops that came not, to be punished.

* Concil. in Trull. Can. 8.
6.

The same is the Language of the 5th sixth and seventh general Councils, where they speak of these Meetings. They are still the ΠΡΟΕΔΡΟΙ, and the ἘΠΙΣΚΟΠΟΙ, and the ἈΡΧΙΕΡΕΙΣ, that are to come together; the Meetings themselves are called ᾤκησιν τῶν ἘΠΙΣΚΟΠΩΝ and Συνελεύσεις τῶν ἘΠΙΣΚΟΠΩΝ, Synods, and Conventions of the Bishops. But neither in the Canons, or their Comments, is there any thing to persuade us that the Presbyters had any Authoritative Concern in them.

* Novell. 123.
C. 10.

And as this was the Language of the Canons of the Church with relation to these Assemblies; so was it that of the Laws too by which they were enforced. We Command, says the Emperour, 6th the most blessed Archbishop, once or twice in every Year, to call before him ἵνα ὁσιωσῶνται ἘΠΙΣΚΟΠΟΙ, the most holy Bishops. And in another Law, he calls them Συνοδοὶ τῶν ἑπισκόπων ΕΠΙΣΚΟΠΩΝ, Synods of the most holy Bishops: And Commands that such as were Ordain'd immediately by the Patriarchs, and had not a Right to Ordain Others, should Appear before them; and that such as were Ordain'd by the Metropolitans, should Come before them.

This was the Language of the Greek Church; and the same is the Account which the Latin Codes give us of these Assemblies. ² Martin of Braga, thus renders the Canon of the Council of Antioch: "That the Metropolitan should Call together all the Bishops of his Province; and that all the Presbyters, and Deacons, or such of them as thought they had any Injury done them, should Come to the Council; that so their Causes being Examined in the Council, they might be brought to a just Determination.

The same is the Language of the ancient Collector published by ³ D'Achery in his Account of this Canon; and what kind of Persons he supposed these Synods to have been formerly Composed of, ⁴ his own Account of them in the beginning of his Collection, sufficiently shews.

Pope ⁵ Leo the First, in his Epistle to the Bishops of Thessalonica, calls them Concilia EPISCOPALIA: The ⁶ Ancient Code of the Roman Church, Stiles them in like manner EPISCOPORUM Concilia: It speaks of the BISHOPS Coming together out of every Province; and appoints ⁷ that the BISHOPS of every Province, should Come together, twice every Year, where the Metropolitan Bishop should appoint; and Correct all things that should arise to be Amended.

And now, can it reasonably be so supposed, that if the Presbyters, in those times, had been allow'd an Equal Right of Meeting, Debating, and Determining, in these Church-Assemblies, with the Bishops themselves (as this Author is pleas'd to Assert) we should have had no hint, no intimation given of it, in all these Canons, for almost Eight hundred years together? That no Directions should have been Established, for their bringing such a certain number of their Presbyters along with them; had they been indeed Obliged, as he, again, pretends, to Carry them to the Synod of the Province? That these are the Chief, if not the Only Canons, that could have Obliged them to do this, during the Period before-mentioned, is certain; because they are the Chief, if not Only Canons, by virtue of which these Provincial Synods were Anciently Established. Yet, in all these, not a Syllable is to be found of any Right in the Presbyters to Come to them; of any Obligation in the Bishops to bring them thither.

But it may be, the Practice of the Church may have given some Right in this particular, which 'tis evident the Canons of it, did not. Let us therefore Enquire how that stood, during these times in all the several parts of the World, into which the Church was dispers'd; in the East, the South, and the West; and see what Persons were Called to these Assemblies in the Greek, the African, and the European Councils heretofore.

(1.) Among those of the Eastern Church, as the most Ancient of which we have any Notices remaining, were the Synods which Eusebius tells us were Assembled upon the Account of the Paschal Controversy, so the Character he gives of them, in General; is this; that ⁸ Synods and Assemblies of Bishops were held about it. And those which he particularly takes notice of, Confirm this Character; as is plain both from what himself tells us of them; and from what the Synodical Book delivers concerning them.

In those of Palestine ⁹ Theophilus Bishop of Casarea, and Narcissus Bishop of Jerusalem, presided; and the One consisted of Twelve, the Other of Fourteen Bishops, Assembled for that Debate.

In that ¹⁰ of Pontus; Palma, with Fourteen other Bishops met: In that of Osroene, Eighteen Bishops Assembled: In that of Corynth, Bacchillus, and Eighteen other Bishops were Convened.

These are the Synods of which Eusebius speaks; and in all these we find no Presbyters Called; none but Bishops that either Sat, or Acted, in them.

I might to these add those other ¹¹ Synods, which we are told met in the Greek Church about the same time; at Hierapolis; in Asia; in Mesopotamia; in Other Places: And, in which, again, we meet with no Account of any but Bishops that were Assembled in them. But I shall rather go on to another great Dispute that happen'd in the Church, about the Baptism of Hereticks; and concerning which, several Synods, in all parts, were Convened.

If from these we proceed to the Synods held about the Arian Controversy; we shall find those also to have been of the like kind. Of the Bishops which met, we have an ample account; but of any Presbyters that Sate, and Voted with them, not the least tittle is remembred.

To the ³ Council of Alexandria about the year 320, the Bishops of Lybia, Pentapolis, &c. Subscribed. The Assembly consisted of near One hundred Bishops: ⁴ Nor had the Presbyters any thing to do in it, but only to Subscribe, with the Deacons, to what their Bishops had done, as soon as they were required by their Metropolitan so to do.

In all the following ⁵ Synods, of which either Athanasius, or Hilary; Socrates, Sozomen, or any other of the Historians of those times, take notice, the Account is still the same. They are Synods of Bishops; that is their Title: Nor is there, that I know of, so much as one single Instance where any Others have Sate, and Acted Authoritatively, with them.

It would be too long to take a particular View of this matter in all the several Councils, whose Acts remain to us: I shall therefore Conclude what I am Observing, with relation to the Eastern Synods, with those whose Canons have been received into our Own Greek Code; and which may therefore deserve to be especially considered upon this Occasion.

The Synod of Ancyra is the first of these: It consisted (as we are told) of Eighteen Bishops; but that any Presbyters were present, and Voted in it, we have no intimation.

Of the ⁶ Synod of Casarea the same Year, the ancient Code of the Roman Church tells us, that the Holy and Venerable BISHOPS being gathered together, Established the Canons, which we have of it.

Of that of ⁷ Laodicea, the Inscription says, that the Canons were made by the Holy and Blessed Fathers, Assembled at it: And lastly, for that of Gangra; the Preface expressly calls it, the most Holy Synod of Bishops.

(2.) Such were the Councils of the Greek Church, nor were those of the African any Other. Let me for this appeal to an unquestionable Authority, that of St. Cyprian, whose Synodical Epistles of the several Synods of that Country; as well of those which were held ⁸ before his time, as of those under ⁹ his Government, are still Extant; and in none any mention of any others, besides Bishops, that Decided in them. And tho' from the Acts of the Synod of Carthage, published with his Works, it appears, that not only the Presbyters, but the Deacons and Laity, were present, yet from the same Acts it is evident that the Bishops only Voted; and by their Voting, determined what was to be Concluded in the Affairs for which they had been Assembled.

The same was the Case of all the Other Councils of that Country which follow'd after; and of which, a large Collection is made in the ¹⁰ Code of the Roman Church: And tho' in some of Them the Deacons are mention'd to have stood by, yet both the Characters of the Synods, and the Persons who are reported to have acted in them, shew, that the Bishops only defined; nor do's it appear that the Presbyters had any thing to do in them.

Let me, to these, add the Acts of the ¹¹ First Council of Carthage, under Gratus, Bishop of that See, Anno. 348. Of the Second under ¹² Genedius, Anno 397. Of the ¹³ Third, ¹⁴ Fourth and ¹⁵ Fifth under Aurelius; and in most of which, tho' the Deacons again attended, yet so plain it is, that only the Bishops Defined; that nothing can (I think) be reasonably excepted against it.

It would be too long to insist upon the rest of the African Synods, in which the same Method was held; as that of ¹⁶ Cirta against the Donatists: That of ¹⁷ Carthage against the Pelagians: That of ¹⁸ Milevis in the Cause of Cælestius. It may suffice to Observe that the same Authority ran thro' all of them: ¹⁹ The Deacons (and perhaps the Presbyters and Laity too, were present;) but the Bishops shaps alone acted as the proper Members of the Synod, and Concluded what was to be done in them.

(3.) To come therefore to our Western Churches, and enquire how far they Observed the same Discipline. Sect. 23.

In the Churches of Spain, the Council of Illiberis, the First of that Country, has been thought to favour the pretended Right of the Presbyters in this Particular. And indeed, we are told, that not only They, but the Deacons and Laity too were present at it: And in an old Manuscript it is said, that they Subscribed also to the Acts of it. But then it must be Observed, that when all is done; 'tis expressly deliver'd, That Episcopi dixerunt; the Bishops spake; They agreed upon the Canons; nor are any of the rest so much as pretended to have had a hand either in the Making, or Voting, of them.

From this Council Downward, it has been observed by One who was the best Qualified of any to judge of it, the late Illustrious Editor of the Spanish Councils,¹ that we shall hardly find any Presbyters so much as present in any of their Synods, unless it were by way of Proxy for some Absent Bishops; and therefore we may safely conclude that they were not look'd upon to have been any Authoritative Members of them. And indeed so true is his Remark, that before the Fourth Council of Toledo, Anno 633, there is not above Two or Three Instances at the most, of their Presence; and not One of their Acting concurrently with the Bishops in those Assemblies.

In the First² Council of Toledo, besides the Bishops, 'tis expressly noted that the Presbyters, Deacons, and Others, were admitted to be present: But that they did any thing there, it is not say'd; and both the Acts and Subscriptions shew that they did not.

The same was the Case in the³ First Council of Braga, Anno 561. Yet in the Acts of the Second Synod of that Place, 'tis expressly called a Council of Bishops; and indeed with very just Reason, for none but Bishops did Define in it. And tho' of this Second Council, of Braga, 'tis said that it was held by the Bishops, universo Clero presente; yet in the Acts of it, only the Bishops Decree; in the Conclusion, only the Bishops Subscribe to what had been Decreed.

From the time of this Council, we meet not with any Mention of the Presbyters being present in the Provincial Synods of this Country, before the Fourth Council of Toledo: And this presumption there is, to warrant us to Conclude that they were not called to them; that the⁵ Third Synod of that Place, Reforming the Provincial Canons, which requir'd such Councils to be held twice every Year; Decreed, that in respect of the Poverty of the Churches of Spain, and the Length of the Way, the Bishops should be assembled but Once in the Year, to the Place which the Metropolitan should chuse for that purpose.

Indeed in the⁶ Fourth Council of Toledo, where a Form was settled for the manner of holding of Synods in Spain; a Provision was made for seating of the Presbyters in them: And this may be thought to imply a Right in them to be present at such Assemblies. But then so there is for the Deacons, and Laity too: Nor could the One claim any Right by Vertue of this Canon, which the Other might not have done; except this only, that the Presbyters were allow'd to sit behind the Bishops, whilst the other were required to stand. But for their Defining or Voting in such Synods, the Canon says not one Word of it, but rather intimates the Contrary; where it requires the Bishops (not Presbyters) at the Close of the Council to subscribe, to what by Common Deliberation, (no doubt of the same Bishops) should be Defined.

And accordingly, notwithstanding this Canon, yet we hear no more of the Presbyters in these Councils afterwards, nay, nor even so much as we did before. 'Tis true, about Twenty Years after, in the 8th Council of the same Place, we meet with some Change in the Members of their larger Synods; for now the Abbots began to be taken into them, and to subscribe with the Bishops, to the Acts of them: And which is yet more to be Observed, some of the more Eminent of the Laity, both assented and subscribed with them. This was the Case of the 8th, 9th, 11th, 13th, 15th and 16th Councils of Toledo: And yet in none of these, do we find that any meer Presbyters either Acted or Subscribed.

In the⁷ Provincial Council of Merida, Anno, 669; several Canons were pass'd concerning Provincial Synods: That no absent Bishop should make a Deacon his Proxy, but either the Arch-Presbyter, or some useful Presbyter at the Least.

the 5th. That if any Bishop could not come to the Synod, he should signify by his Letter to the Metropolitan, the Cause of his Absence. Canon the 6th: But especially Canon the 7th, That if any Bishop being Admonished by his Metropolitan, with the King's Consent, (which the Canon expressly requires) should neglect to come, he should undergo such Censure as the Canon there directs, for his Neglect; but neither is there here any Provision made for the Summons, or Attendance of the Presbyters; nor, tho' present at this very Synod, did they Act with the Bishops in it. ¹ On the contrary, there is this Presumption, that they were not allow'd any other Privilege, but to complain in case of any Grievance, or to Answer to any Complaints made against them; or, at most, to Advise the Bishops if any Difficulty arose in which they thought fit to Consult them; that even the Priests, who were order'd to come as Proxies for their Bishops, were allow'd to do no more than ² scire, & subscribe, to know, and to subscribe to what should be done in the Council; and we cannot imagine that the Presbyters themselves were allowed more in their Own Right, than they were permitted to do in Right of their Bishops.

And now it will be no hard matter to account for the Canon of that Council of Tarragon, which has been alledged, and that in my Apprehension, a little unfairly, to countenance the right of the Presbyters to Sit, and Act in these kind of Synods: For that is the End, for which (as we have seen) this ³ Author requires their presence in them. In a Spanish Council at Taragon, says he, we find it particularly provided, That the Bishops should bring along with them to these Synods, Presbyters, from their Cathedral Churches; and from the Other Churches of their Dioceses. But why has this Gentleman left out the Laity too; who, by the same Canon, were Ordered to be brought, as well as the Presbyters, to the Synod? They stood as plain before him both in the Title, and in the Canon itself, as the Presbyters: And I cannot see but that they were Order'd to be brought for the self same purpose that the Presbyters themselves were. Let us take then this Constitution, not as this Author has Represented it, but as those Fathers pass'd it. The Inscription of it is this: ⁴ That the Bishop, by his Letters, should Summon the Diocesan Presbyters, and some of the Laity to come to the Synod. The Canon is to the same effect: That such Letters should be directed by the Bishops, from the Metropolitan, that they may carry with them, not only some of the Presbyters of their Cathedral Church, but also of their Diocese; and that they should bring some also of the Secular Sons of the Church along with them.

This is the Constitution: The Bishops are Order'd to bring such select Presbyters and Laymen to the Synod, as the Metropolitan should direct: But for what End they should bring them, that the Canon says not; nor will this Gentleman, I dare say, affirm, that it was to Act Authoritatively with the Bishops in their Council, however he may have designed, and 'tis plain, did intend, that it should have been so understood.

If from the Church of Spain we pass on to those of France and Germany; we shall find the same Discipline observed in them as to this Matter. 'Tis true, in the Subscriptions to the Great Council of Arles, we meet with Presbyters as well as Bishops, but so we do with Deacons too; nay, and even with Readers and Exorcists, accompanying the Bishops in their Assent to what had been done in it. And this is sufficient to assure us, that from these no Argument can be drawn, to prove any Authoritative Right of Acting on behalf of the Presbyters, in those Assemblies. But that the Power of this Synod was lodged solely in the Bishops, both the desire of the Donatists, at whose importunity it was called, shews; and the Accounts which the Antient Fathers, and St. Augustin in particular, have given Us of it, will not suffer us to Doubt.

The Cause of the Donatists, and their Pretences against Cæcilian, had already been heard, and (would they have been satisfied with any Judgment that went against them) had been decided too, in the Synod of Rome: But they were angry at the Sentence, and they desir'd another Hearing; and upon that, the Emperor agreed that this Synod should meet in Answer to their Desires. Now the Judgment which they appealed to, was an ⁵ EPISCOPAL Judgment; and such a One Constantine consented to give them; so St. Augustin tells us: He calls it another EPISCOPAL Judgment, a Judgment of other BISHOPS; and by so doing, sufficiently shews, of what Persons the Council of Arles was Composed, at least, who they were that Judged and Acted authoritatively in it.

As

As this Synod began, so those which follow'd after continued to Meet and Act after the same Method. To pass by those of a more early Date; the ¹ Council of Riez, Anno 439, is One of the First that, I conceive, provided by a ¹ Concil. Lab. Tom. iii. Col. 1285. Canonical Order for the constant Meeting of Yearly Synods in this Country. Of what Persons those Assemblies should consist, the Canon of that Synod does not particularly determine; but it refers to the Other Canons which did, and Defines after their Pattern: And the Synod it self consisted wholly of Bishops, excepting only one Presbyter, deputed by the Bishop of Constance; who, with the rest in his stead, alone subscribed to the Acts of it. The same was the Case of the ² First Council of Orange, in which the like Care was taken for the Yearly meeting of their Provincial Synods; and there again One only Presbyter is mentioned as either present at it, or subscribing to it; and that in the Name, and by the Authority of his Bishop, for whom he acted in it. ² Concil. A. rausic. l. 1b. Col. 1452.

In these two Synods, the famous Hilary, Bishop of Arles, appears First among the Subscriptions, as Casarius, Bishop of the same Place, does in the next which I shall mention, that of Agde; ³ and in which, tho' we meet both with Presbyters and Deacons, yet were they neither of them there in their Own Right; but deputed by their Bishops to Appear, and Act, on their behalf. ³ Ibid. Tom. iv. Col. 1394. 1395.

Thus stood this Discipline in these Parts for about Seven hundred Years after Christ; nor have I observed in all that time, any thing that seems to Countenance the Pretence now advanced in behalf of the Presbytery.

Indeed, about Forty Years after, Karloman being desirous to Reform the Discipline of the Churches under his Command; called, together with his Bishops, their Presbyters too, to Advise and Assist him in what was to be done: And by their Advice, Published those Decrees which we now see among the Capitulars of the French Kings. The same was the Case of the ⁴ Synod of Soissons, about two Years after: But then how far these are to be look'd upon, to be properly Ecclesiastical Synods, in which not only the Bishops and Presbyters, but the Prince and his Lords sat, and agreed too; may, I think, very justly be Question'd. That which seems to weigh more in this Case, is the ⁵ Canon of the Synod of Vernis; where determining that two Councils should be held every Year, it says that the Second of these should consist of such Bishops as had been before Established in the Place of Metropolitans, and of such other Bishops, Abbots, and Presbyters, as the Metropolitans should Command to come to them. ⁴ Capit. Tom. i. Col. 144. 146. ⁵ Ibid. Col. 155.

When afterwards Charles the Great, in order to a General Reformation of his Dominions, Commanded his Clergy to Assemble in several Synods, and consider of such Matters as seem'd necessary to be Reform'd, and to lay them before Him; We find in One of them, that of ⁶ Challons, Abbots as well as Bishops: ⁶ In Three of the other Four, not only the Abbots but Clergy, to have assisted. And yet when the ⁷ Council of Paris, took care expressly to Revive the Yearly Provincial Synods; the Fathers not only called them, according to the Antient Phrase, Synods of Bishops; but spake of the Presbyters and Deacons, as Persons who, if they were injured, were to appear before these Councils, but say nothing of any Right which they had to Vote in them. ⁷ Concil. lab. Tom. vii. Col. 1272. ⁸ Tours lb. col. 1261. Rhems col. 1254. Mentz. col. 1240. ⁹ Ibid. col. 1617.

In the mean time this is plain, That for the First 700 Years, the Bishops only were either Summon'd to, or Acted Authoritatively in these Assemblies; and that the Admission of others, whenever it came in, must therefore have been a Deviation from the Antient Practice, which in these, as in all the Other Churches, was plainly against it.

As for the Custom of the ¹⁰ Italian Churches, in this matter; we are told by Eusebius, that in One of their First Councils, that of Rome against Novatus; there were present, besides LX Bishops, more than LX Presbyters and Deacons. But what they did, or how far they were allowed any Authority in that Meeting, he tells us not: Nor can we derive any Right from this Instance to the One, which will not equally belong to the Other. ¹⁰ Hist. Eccl. lib. vi. cap. 43.

The Account which ¹¹ St. Cyprian gives us of another Synod in the same City, and about the same time, is more plain: He tells us, That Cornelius, Bishop of that Place, having held a Council with many of his Fellow-Bishops; They all agreed to ¹¹ Ac si minus sufficiens Episcoporum in Africa nu-merus Videbatur, etiam Romam super hac re scripsimus ad Cornelium Collegam nostrum; Qui & Ipse, cum plurimis Co-Episcopis habito Concilio, in Eandem Nobiscum sententiam, pari gravitate, & salubri moderatane Consensit. Cyprian. Epist. LV. Edit. Oxon.

what they of Carthage had determined concerning the admitting of those to Pennance, who had fallen away in the Time of Persecution; which, it seems, was both the Business and Occasion of that meeting.

But more full is the History of that Synod which met, in the Case of Atha- nasius, and of which that ¹ Father has left us a particular Account. He tells us that it consisted of more than Fifty Bishops, under Julius; who both heard his Allegations, and Decreed to receive him into Communion, and Fellowship, with them. The same was the Case of the other ² Synods both of Rome and Mi- lan, on the Occasion of the same Controversy. They All consisted of the Bishops of those parts; nor do we hear of any Presbyters who (in their own Right) either Sate, or Acted with Authority in them.

Indeed in the next Century we find the Presbyters not only Sitting in the Synods of this Country, but joyning with the Bishops in their Conciliary Acclamations; and testifying their Consent to what was Ordained in them. Of this we have an early Instance (and it is one of the first that I have observed) in the ³ Synod of Rome under Pope Hilarus, Anno 465: Where, together with the Bishops therein Assembled, it is said, That all the Presbyters sate, and the Deacons stood behind them; and the Bishops and Presbyters cried out, These Things we confirm and Teach:
These Things are to be held and Observed: These Things we desire may for ever be kept. But then it must withal be remembred, that when the Synod proceeded to give every One his distinct Definitive Judgment, only the Bishops Decreed, and thereby, (I conceive) plainly shew'd, that the Authority of the Synod rested solely in them.

By what degrees the Presbyters came not only to be present, but to be allow'd the Privilege of Defining in these Meetings, in the Roman Church: I shall not now attempt, more particularly, to Enquire. That in process of time, they were admitted, not only for Counsel, but Decision too, the ⁴ Order of holding such Synods in the Roman Church, does plainly declare. I will only observe, that even at the time when that Collection was made, (which was near 1300 Years after Christ) they were not yet generally admitted either to Sit, or Vote in Council. But the Metropolitan chose whom he thought fit for that purpose; and they and no others, were priviledged to Judge and Define with him.

Indeed as to the Proctors of the Cathedral Churches, Pope Innocent the Third, had some time before determined, in the Case of the Archbishop of Sens, that they were not only to be Invited to the Provincial Synods, but to be allow'd to treat in them. The ⁵ Chapters of the Cathedral Churches of that Province had, it seems, been called to the Provincial Synod, and yet when they came, had not been admitted to Treat with the Bishops in it. The Pope therefore directed, that they should not only be Invited to such Councils, but that being come, their Proctors should be admitted to treat with the Archbishop and Bishops in them; especially, says he, in such things as are known to Concern their Chapters.

This was the Case, and the Popes Decision upon it; and I have the rather taken this particular Notice of it, because the Author, against whom I am now disputing, has indeed made a very Loose and imperfect Representation of it.
As for his Latin in the Margent, 'tis not the Pope's, but his Own Determination upon the Case; neither the Title nor Rescript, have any such sentence: Nor, which is worse, does it sufficiently represent the sense of Either. And for the English, it still less agrees either with the Pope's Decree, or his own Mistaken Abridgement of it. Innocent the 3d (says he) in his Rescript to the Archbishop of Sens, directs that the Proctors of Cathedral Churches should be summon'd to these Provincial Synods: But the Margin says only that the Chapters of such Churches should be admitted to treat by their Proctors in these Councils. Now that indeed is nearer to the Truth, tho' it does not fully come up to it. The whole is, as I have said before, that they should be Invited (not summon'd) to these kind of Synods; and that if they came, their Proctors should be admitted to treat in them. For (as I shall shew more particularly by and by) in these Cases the Rule then was not to summon the Lower Prelates, or Clergy, to such Councils, but to Invite them; to receive them if they came, not to require them to come to Them.

Such was the Case in the Roman Church, about Twelve hundred Years after Christ.
The Inferiour Prelates, and Capitular Bodies, were thus far taken into their Synods; that they were to be Invited to them, and, if they came, were to be allow'd to Treat

Treat in them. And so were some Select Presbyters too; such as the Metropolitan thought fit to call, and admit to such a Privilege. But then even this shews, that neither the One, nor the Other, were look'd upon as any Necessary or Authoritative part of the Synod, which was Compleat without them: For they were neither Cited (as the Bishops) peremptorily to come to it; nor being come, did they Act upon any Equal Right of Power with them, in the Definitions of it.

Nay, let me add yet more; that even in this too, the Custom of the several Churches of the Roman Communion varied: In some, these Persons were generally called; in others, only a few of each kind. And this Custom was not only the Rule by which the Metropolitans still continued to Guide themselves; but was expressly provided to be observed even by the Council of Trent it self; ^{Concil. Tri-} where it requires, 1st, The Bishops (as the Proper and Necessary Members of these Synods) All, and Absolutely, to Come to them: And, for the rest, Obliges those on-^{dent. Sess. 24.} ly who, of Right, or by Custom, ought to be present at them. ^{cap. 2.}

In the Ancient Order of holding these Councils in the Church of Rome; collected See before. not long after the time of Pope Innocent the Third, of whom we are now speaking; the Rule which is prescribed is this; First the Bishops were to Enter into the Place of Meeting, and Sit: Then the Presbyters, who had any Cause to be there: But these were not to mix with those whose Order required them to be present. And a Circle being made of the Seats of the Bishops; Let the Presbyters (says the Order) sit behind their backs: That is, such of them as the Metropolitan shall chuse to sit with him; and who (therefore) may both Judge and Define any thing with him.

This is one of the most Early, as well as most Authentick Evidences that I have met with, for the Presbyters acting in these kind of Assemblies: And this at the same time that it allows a Liberty to some of them to Sit, and Act, in the Synod, yet excludes all Colour of Right; and leaves the Metropolitan to Determine whom he will Admit, to such a Power, and Privilege, with him.

To clear this yet more, let us look into the Acts of some of those Synods which have been held since the time of Pope Innocent the Third; and, by consequence, since the passing of the Rescript before alledged; and see both what Presbyters they were, who were admitted to them; and how far they were allow'd to Act in them. ^{Sect 28.}

In the Church of Sens to which this Rescript relates, it does not appear either that all the Chapters were received; or that those who Came, did any thing more than Treat, and Consent to what passed in their Synods. Thus² in that of 1436,² Act. Concil. the Archbishops tells us, that he held his Sacred Provincial Council with his venerable Senonens. apud Brethren, and Suffragans, and such other Ecclesiastical Persons of his Diocese, and Pro- Dacherium. Spicileg. Tom. vince, as could conveniently be present.³ Who they were, it is not said; but be ^{5. p. 130.} they whom they will, the Bishops only ratified the Acts of the Synod, and (as the ^{Ibid. p. 138.} manner then was) Set their Seals to the Definitions of it.

But our next Instance will be more Particular,⁴ Anno 1460, in which the ^{Dachery ib.} Acts having taken notice of the Suffragan Bishops, and the Proctor of the Bishop of ^{p. 587.} Orleans who was absent; for the rest say, it was held in their Presence, and in the presence of SOME Abbots and Priors of Conventual and Cathedral Churches, and Pro- ctors of Collegiate Churches; and of many Other Ecclesiastical Persons, as well Se- cular, as Regular, Exempt, and not Exempt: With the Counsel and Consent of whom, the Archbishop Established, and Ordain'd what was Determined in it. And then again the Bishops only set their Confirmatory Seals to it.

The same was the Case of the Synod of the same Place, Anno 1483. Only ^{Ibid. p. 585,} SOME Abbots, and Conventual Priors, were Called, with the Proctors of Cathedral, and ^{586. Item p.} Collegiate Churches; and such Others as both by Right, and Custom, might and ought ^{625, 628.} to have been present: And with their Approbation, the Metropolitan Ordained, and Commanded what was to be done to be Corroborated by his Own, and his Suffragans Seal- ing of it.

Such was the Practice of the Province of Sens, to which the Order of Pope Innocent particularly referr'd. If from thence we look into Other Provinces, we shall find in some of them the Bishops only; in others, the Bishops and Prelates, to have been Called; in others, besides these, the Proctors of the Cathedral Churches; in others, the Archdeacons, Deans, and Provosts: And all these sometimes without any farther Clause; at others with a General Addition, of all others who were to be called: Or, as the Council of Trent (and by that some Metropolitans since) have phrased it; who by Right, or Custom, ought to be present. But of any other Presbyters, Cited as of of Right to these Meetings, there is very little mention; and but few Examples are, I believe, to be found of that kind.

But tho' these, now, were usually Called to the Provincial Synods; yet were they not, therefore, look'd upon as Authoritative Members of them. In the

¹ Council of Rhemes Anno 1235. The Proctors not only of the Absent Bishops, but of the Chapters too, were present: But then as it is expressly noted that the ² Proctors of the One were sent only to Consent to those things which should be Ordain'd in the said Council; so in the ³ next Synod of the same year, 'tis said of those both of the One, and the Other, that they Consented to what the whole Council had before Agreed.

The same distinction we find observed in the other Synods of the same Province: First ⁴ the Bishops Consent, and Approve, and Set their Seals: And then the Consent of the Proctors of the Chapters of the Cathedral Churches of the Province is taken to what was done.

In some Synods, the Constitutions were pass'd, with the Consent of the Bishops, and Approbation of the Council: In others, (as the Custom obtain'd) the Consent of All was alike Express'd: And, lastly, in some; the Difference has been so great, that both the Summons, and Authority of the Bishops, and the Other Clergy are Expressly distinguished; and the Presbyters neither Called after the same manner, nor admitted to the same Powers with them. Thus in the Constitutions of the Cardinal Borromeo, Bishop of Milan, for the Settlement of the Provincial Synods of that Church; the Bishops are required under Pain of Canonical Censure, together with all Others who may, or ought to Come to them; to be duly present at them. But for the Chapters of the Cathedral Churches; ⁵ he only Invites them, and tells them that they MAY send any Ecclesiastical Persons, as their Proctors to them, who MAY be PRESENT in the Council; and if they have any thing to Refer to it, MAY DECLARE it to the Metropolitan BEFORE the COUNCIL.

And in pursuance of this Custom, in that Church; ⁶ he himself Defined with the Counsel, and Assent of the Bishops only; not of the Proctors of his Capitular; much less with the Approbation of his Parochial, Presbyters.

The Case was much the same in the Synod of Narbonne, in Spain: The Council Decreed that not only the Bishops, but the next Dignitaries after them, in their several Churches, together with their Chapters, by their Deputies, should Necessarily attend at the Synod of the Province. But the Chapters of the Regular Monasteries should be only Invited to them. And then ordain'd, ⁷ That the Proctors of the Cathedral Churches, the Abbots, and all Deputies should have only a Consultative, not a Deliberative Voice, in the Synod: They might be present and advise, but they were not to Vote, or Determine with the Bishops.

That the same Method obtain'd in ⁸ France, we have the Acts of the Synod of Bourdeaux, to Testify: From all which we may now Conclude, that as, at the beginning, none were Called to these Synods at all, besides the Bishops of the Province, nor Acted in any decisive manner in them; so tho' in process of time others, in some Churches, were taken in, yet still the Bishops were considered as the Proper, Authoritative Members, of them: Nor were the Presbyters, as such, ever either Constantly, or Universally Called by the Catholic Church, in their own Right, to them; or Admitted to Act with an Equal Authority with their Bishops in them.

So little ground is there in Antiquity for that position of our Author: ⁹ "That some of their Presbyters the Bishops were OBLIGED to carry with them to the Council of the Province; and that there, they SATE, DELIBERATED, and VOTED upon all matters that came before the Assembly: And all this in their own Right, and from the beginning of Christianity. An Assertion so Injurious to the Rights of the Episcopacy, and so Contrary to the Principles and Practice of the Ancient Church, that I could not pass it by without taking some Pains to shew that there was as little of Truth, as there is of the Received Principles of our Episcopal Church in it.

But

But this is not enough to content this Gentleman; his Presbyters must be intituled to a yet farther Right, tho' not in Person, yet by their Previous Approbation, and Consent, even to what was done in the General Councils of the Church. For that the Bishops that were present in those Councils, were Deputed thither by Provincial Synods; and brought along with them the Resolution, and Consent of the several Churches from which they Came: And the Presbyters having Voices in those lesser Synods, their Consent was also in the Definitions of the greater, presumed and included. This is another New Discovery, and (as this Gentleman well observes) such Discoveries must be maintain'd by as New Proofs. Sect. 29.

To Examine this Matter in short: I do not find that either the Metropolitans, or their Synods, were much concerned either in the Choice, or Delegation, of the Bishops who went to the two first General Councils, of Nice and Constantinople. As for the Third of Ephesus, from whence he fetches the Proof of his Position; the Direction which the Emperor gave to St. Cyril, was "To come himself in Person to the Council, and to bring such a number, and of such Bishops of his Province along with him, as he should think fit; that so neither the Province might want a Competent number to Answer its needs; nor the Synod such as might be proper for its Service." Paucos, quos sub tua Constitutos Provincias Sanctissimos Episcopos ad eam (Synodum) concurrere procurans—

How St. Cyril, or any other of the Metropolitans, chose the Bishops which, hereupon, they brought with them, it does not appear; much less are we informed with what Powers and Instructions, they Came; or that they brought along with them the Resolution, and Consent of their several Churches; and that the Presbyters, as well as Bishops, sent their Sense, and Votes by them. This is pure Divination; and must be fetched from our Author's Fancy, not from any Acts that have yet been publish'd of that Council. Scriptum namque est à pari, à nostra Majestate de prædicta sancta Synodo Deo amabilibus Episcopis, ubiq; Metropolitanis, &c.—Baluz. Nov. Collect. Concil. Col. 454. Rights, &c. p 6.

But it may be the Letter of Capreolus Bishop of Carthage, the other Proof which he alledges, will clear this: Let us see therefore how he represents it. "Capreolus (says he) excuses himself for sending no Bishops, because the War which had broke out in those parts, hindred him from Calling a Provincial Synod, from whence they were to be deputed. So this Gentleman; but the Truth of the matter was this. Theodosius together with his Letters of Summons to the African Bishops, had particularly desired that St. Austin might be sent to this Council. That Bishop being dead before the Letter came; Capreolus, in Excuse to the Fathers of the Council, for not sending any African Bishops thither, alledges that he would have called a Common Synod of Africa together, and therein have Caused some of his Brethren to have been Chosen, and sent to them, but that the Troubles under which the Provinces there lay, and the Difficulty of Assembling, joyned to the shortness of the Warning, hindred him from being able, tho' never so willing, to do it. This is the substance of Capreolus Excuse; And from whence these three things will arise to be Observed in this Case: Ex omnibus Provinciis Africae—Synodum volui congregare, ut electi e numero fratrum &c. Episcoporum nostrorum ad adorabilem Synodum—definirentur. Baluz. ibid. Col. 478.

First, That the Synod which Capreolus designed to have Called, was not (as this Author imagined) a Provincial Synod, but a general Council of Africa: "I would have assembled (says he) a Synod from ALL the PROVINCES of Africa. Such Synods were frequent there; They met Every Year; and All the Greater Affairs of that Church, were transacted by them." Hinc igitur impeditis convenire ad unum qui Circum Africam sunt Episcopi (no mention of the Presbyters) nullatenus potuerunt. Ibid. Codex. Eccl. Afric. apud Jusellum Vol 1. p. 368. Can. 75.

Now, Secondly, And 'tis the next thing I would note in this Case; to this Council, no Presbyters were Summon'd; nay, nor All the Bishops of Africa neither. But the Bishops of Each Province Assembled first in their Provincial Synods, and from thence Deputed such a Number of Bishops, as they thought fit; for every Province, to meet in their General Council.

And therefore, Thirdly, Tho' these Bishops had not only been Chosen, and Deputed by this Synod, but (as he pretends) had brought the express Resolution of their Churches along with them; (of which nevertheless hitherto not one Word does appear) yet would not this have advanced the Interest of the Presbyters at all in this Case; seeing they not only would not have been concern'd in the General Council which would have sent them, but would not so much as have had a Vote, in the Provincial Synods, by which the general Council of that Country, was to have been form'd.

How the Bishops of the following Councils were Assembled, and with what Powers and Instructions they Came; it will be time enough to Examine, when this Author shall have found out some better Authorities to prove, what, these he has already alledged, do by no means come up to. Till then I shall Conclude, that, that, tho' true it be, that Presbyters were allow'd to be present in the General, as well as in the Provincial Councils; nay, and sometimes were called to Act Authoritatively in them; as Barsumas (in the next General Council) was, not only to Sit, but to Define with the Holy Fathers, and Bishops; yet was this the result of the Emperour's Pleasure, and Command; and gave no Right either of Coming to, or Acting in, these Assemblies, but to such Persons, alone, and at such Times, as they thought fit to Require, and Authorize them to Meet, and Act in them.

Having thus taken a View both of the Canons, and Practice of the Church in almost all the other Parts of the World, as to this matter; I should now proceed to enquire into the Discipline of our own Country in this particular, and to shew how egregiously mistaken this Author has been in that, above any; but that I ought first to clear my way to it, by a brief review of such Proofs (if any such there be) which he has offered to maintain his Popular, and Anti-Episcopal Position. And that indeed will soon be dispatch'd: For as if it were a Principle on all hands agreed, and which therefore needed no Authorities to support it; he has not so much as aim'd at any Instances from abroad to maintain it, unless we should allow the Rescript of Pope Innocent, and the Canon of the Synod of Tarragon, to be proofs; and for those I have sufficiently accounted before.

Se& 30.

Indeed One thing he adds, which is very true, but withal very little to the Purpose, that in the "Provincial Synods (he means abroad, for with us it was "otherwise) the Bishops were wont to sit foremost (in a Semi-circle) so Corona facta " signifies with him; and the Presbyters behind them; before whom the Deacons, and People stood. By which one would think that the Deacons, and People, stood between the Bishops, and Presbyters, in these Meetings. But the Directory of ' the Fourth Council of Toledo, (the Platform on which the Orders of holding these Assemblies in the West were drawn) speaks more plain; Diacones in Conspectu Episcoporum stent; let the Deacons stand in the presence of the Bishops: And so I must suppose this Author meant; tho' being Discoursing of the several Degrees of Sitting, and having mentioned the Bishops sitting foremost, and the Presbyters behind them; so correct an Author, who cannot bear the least impropriety of Expression in others, should have used a Word of a less ambiguous Signification, upon this Occasion.

But tho' what he says be true, yet his proof of it is such, as I can by no means allow to be either pertinent, or conclusive. He supposes St. Cyprian, in the Epistle to which he refers, to have spoken of his Sitting in Council with the Presbyters. And would from thence infer that they were properly his Assessors, in those Meetings. And so indeed ² Baronius, and Pamelius Understood it. But the Arguments against this Opinion which two of our own Learned Bishops have offered, are so clear and conclusive, that I cannot imagine why this Gentleman, in a matter of so little Consequence to his own Assertion, took part against them; unless it be that he has resolved not to approve of any thing where a Bishop is Concern'd against a Presbyter, as in this Case they happened to have been.

To come now to the Usage of our own Church: How our Synods were held in the Saxon times, it is not easy to determine. They seem for the most part to have been Meetings of a Mix'd Nature, and but few to have been properly and purely Ecclesiastical Councils. Among those which I suppose may belong to this latter kind, that of ³ Herudford, under Theodore, is one of the first and most considerable: And in that the Company was entirely Episcopal; nor does it appear that the Presbyters had any thing at all to do in it. The same was the State of the next Synod, ⁴ of Haethfield under the same Archbishop. 'Tis true our venerable Historian says, that he gathered together a Company not only of the Reverend Bishops, but of many ⁵ Learn'd Men too: And that those may some of them have been our Author's Presbyters, I will not deny. But then the End of his so doing was to inform himself, by a Personal Conference with them, what the Faith of every one was; the settling whereof was the Design, and Business of that Assembly. But when he proceeded to Act Synodically, ⁶ the Conciliary Letter takes notice of the Bishops only; They Expounded the Right, and Orthodox Faith; they Received the Five General Councils, which had then been held; And they only, with Theodore, Subscribed to what they had Determined. And upon all these Accounts, Another of our ¹ Ancient Historians calls it precisely a Council of Bishops, and takes no notice of any others being concern'd in it. ^{² Henr. Huntingdon. lib. iii. fol. 192. a.}

From this time forward, our Synods seem rather to have been mixed Assemblies than Ecclesiastical Councils. The next that appears to come the nearest to this Rank, is that of Clovesho, held by Athelard, Archbishop of Canterbury and Twelve Bishops. In this, Kenulph King of Mercia, was present: Yet all was Established by the Authority of Athelard and his Bishops; and then, with the Consent of the whole Synod, not only the Bishops, but the Abbots, Priests, and Deacons too, subscribed to what had passed in it. The Subject indeed was of a very considerable nature, the resetting of the Rights, and Extent, of the Archbishop and Province of Canterbury; and therefore no wonder, if not only the Provincial Bishops, who, as our ² Learned Spelman observes, on such Occasions as these, were otherwise, Alone, wont to subscribe, but which (he tells us) he has hardly any where found besides; their Principal Clergy also subscribed together with them. ^{² He says, Præter modum Usitatum. Non solum enim (ut in aliis) provinciales om-} nes Episcopos exhibet subscribentes, sed (quod vix iterum Reperi) Episcopos singulos cum Parochia sua posteriori Clero, (Abbatibus scil. & Presbyteris aliquot, interdum etiam & Diaconibus) Suffraganti. Spelm. Concil. Tom. i. p. 326.

How these Synods were afterwards held during the Saxon Times, I cannot certainly say: But that towards the latter end of them, the Regular Prelates began to be admitted, we may judge from those Councils which were held immediately after, under King William the Conqueror. Such was that of ³ Windsor, about the Primacy of the Archbishoprick of Canterbury over that of York: And such was that of ⁴ London, about three Years after, Anno 1075: And in which tho' others of the Regulars were present, yet only the Bishops and Abbots Subscribed; And the Synod it self resolved, That none else should be allow'd to speak in it, without the Leave of the Metropolitan. ^{³ Spelm. Concil. Tom. ii. p. 5. & 723.}

It is in a ⁵ Legatine Synod, Anno 1126, That the number of these Inferior Prelates seems to have been first enlarged among us. To this, besides the Bishops, the Archdeacons, Abbots and Priors were called; and together with an innumerable Company of the Clergy and People, met under the Presidency of John de Crema, the Pope's Legat, at London, September the 8th. the Day of the Blessed Virgin's Nativity. ^{⁵ Ibid. p. 33. So our Councils place it, but it should rather have been 1124, or at most 1125.}

About Fifty Years after, at the ⁶ Synod of Cassels in Ireland, a new Accession was made to the Members of these Assemblies; and the Deans were called to a National Synod there. In this state our Provincial Assemblies continued, till near the latter end of King Henry the 3d, as appears by the Convocation-Writ issued out Anno 1257, by ⁷ Boniface Archbishop of Canterbury; in which the Persons summon'd to come to it are the very same; the Bishops, Deans, and Priors of the Cathedral Churches; The Abbots and Priors, and the Archdeacons of the several Diocesses of the Province. ^{⁶ Ib. pag. 97.}

It is true by the Execution of the ⁸ Convocation-Writ of the next Year, it appears that the Archdeacons came with Procuratorial Letters to act for the Clergy of the whole Diocess: And so I presume the Deans also did, with the like for their Chapters. But hitherto they had no distinct Proctors for themselves, nor were these Dignitaries of necessity either Called or Empowered thus to act in these Assemblies, but only in such Cases where Business of a mix'd nature was to be transacted; and it was therefore necessary to oblige the Clergy, by their own Consent, to agree to what should be done in them. ^{⁷ Annal. Burton. pag. 382.}

In short, upon the best Observation I can make, the Cathedral and Diocesan Clergy, were not called to any of our Provincial Synods before the 10th of King Edward the 1st, from which time they have been generally (as the nature of the Convocation required) either summon'd, or, at least, Invited to them.

But tho' from about the Year 1282, I do conceive that the Presbyters have been commonly thus received into our Provincial Councils; yet have they not, for all that, been accounted any Necessary or Authoritative Part of them. The Synod has always been look'd upon to have had its full Complement, and Power, without them: And that neither did their Presence add any thing to it, nor their Absence detract at all from the Authority of it. ^{⁸ Ib. p. 389.}

Let me for this, Appeal to the Determination of our two Great Canonists, Jo. de Acton, and William Lynwood; who both agree, and are both Express to Unde patet this purpose. The Decision of the former is this: ¹ That to such Provincial Councils where any thing is to be established which touches the state of the Province, the Bishops are to be Cited; and the other Subjects to be Invited, not Compell'd. And for the ² Latter; he tells us, if possible, yet more plainly; That true it is, that to the Provincial Council the Bishops are to be Called; but no Others of Necessity: But if Others come, they are to be Admitted; and such Others shall be Called too, of whose Affairs any thing is to be done; or because their Counsel is necessary. This was his Account both of the Law and Practice in this Matter, as appears by the Occasion he took for this Determination; it being absurd to suppose, that that great Canonist should have Question'd whether all the Persons were present at the passing of the Constitution, upon which he Commented, who were requisite to give a Canonical force to it; supposing that the same Persons had always been summon'd to Our Conventions, and therefore always been, either legally present at them, or contumaciously absent from them. But indeed he knew that, in fact, the Lower Clergy were not always Cited, nor did always Come to them; and therefore the Constitution on having something in it contrary to Common Right, he had reason to Enquire Who were present at the Passing of it; and whether it were made by a sufficient Authority or no?

What he had said here, he again repeats in ³ his Fifth Book: That to the Provincial Council none but Bishops were Necessarily to be Summon'd: Yet if Others Came, they were to be Admitted; and to be Called too, when their Own Facts were to be treated on; or because their Counsel was necessary.

The result of all is this, That it has been with Us, as with the Other Churches abroad: At the Beginning the Bishops only Came to, and Did all in these Assemblies. By degrees the Regular Clergy, and the Inferiour Prelates were either Called, or Invited to them. And towards the End of the Thirteenth Century, the Capitular, and Diocesan Presbyters, were indulged the same Liberty; or rather, were upon some Occasions requir'd to attend at them. This has been our Case; and from the true state of which it may, I think, sufficiently appear, with what rashness, to say no more, a late Author has affirmed; that Presbyters, from the Beginning had Equal Right of Place and Voice in these Conciliary Meetings with the Bishops themselves: An Assertion which not only the Acts of all the Synods abroad, but the best Accounts we have of those of our Own Church, do apparently contradict.

And here then let us stop, and Examine what it is that this Gentleman founds his Opinion upon? By what Arguments either of Law or History, he proves his Position; that (in Our Church at least) Presbyters were, from the Beginning, a Necessary and Authoritative part of our Provincial Synods.

Now three Instances there are which he offers, to settle this Right during the Saxon Times: ⁴ For the first of which, the Synod of Clovesho, Anno 803: I have already accounted, nor can any Argument be brought in favour of the Presbyters from thence, which will not carry the Point farther then he intends, and take the Deacons also into the same Rights and Privileges with them.

His next ⁵ Authority seems to come up more fully to his purpose; but yet upon a fair representation of the matter, which this Gentleman will give me leave to say he has by no means made, it will appear to end at last in a meer Shew; without Force, and without Authority. The State of our Country, both in the Clergy and People, was at that time wonderfully depraved. Several Admonitions had been given both from the Pope and Others for the Correction of it: And in Order thereunto, a ⁶ General Assembly both of the Clergy and Laity, was thought fit to be held by the King and the Archbishop, that therein some Course might be taken for the remedying of it.

To this Assembly therefore, ⁷ the King, his Princes, and Great Men; with the Archbishops, Bishops, and Other Clergy came: And as the Author observes, being come together, ⁸ the Prelates, Priests, and the Lesser Dignitaries, in the Ecclesiastical Degree, sate together, both to Treat of, and to Confirm the Unity of the Church, the state of the Christian Religion, and an Agreement of Peace.

And First, the Metropolitan publicly Read, and Expounded in our own Tongue, the Pope's Letter of Exhortation and Threat to them, which being done, ⁹ the Bishops, ipsi Præsules qui cæteris Magisterii loco a Deo Prælati sunt, ad seipsos Verba mutæ exhortationis Verterunt, ac sese, suumque Officium, quo Cæteri ad Dei famularum instrui Cotidie debent—Atque deinde primo suorum loco Decretorum, hoc rata sanctione Condixerunt, &c.

bishops, qui Cæteris (say the Acts) Magisterii loco prælati sunt; began to Exhort one another to do their Duty, by which the Rest ought to be duly instructed to the Service of God. And then in the first Place of their Decrees they made this Sanction; that every Bishop, &c.

This is the substance of the Introduction to the Canons, which were passed in that Synod; and I think it sufficiently shews that tho' Others of a Lower Order were present in the Synod (Deacons as well as Priests) yet the Bishops only acted Synodically, and Defined in it.

To confirm this Account, let me observe that, (as another of our ¹ Ancient Historians relates it) the King and his Lords, as well as the Lower Clergy, were both present at the making of these Decrees, and approved of them. And yet I suppose, this Gentleman will not from thence infer, that they were Authoritative Members of the Synod too. But then he adds, that the Archbishop only Decreed, and the Bishops subscribed to the Definitions.

The Sum then of this Instance (supposing it to have been a proper Provincial Synod) will at last amount but to this; that the Clergy and Laity were present, with the Bishops, at it, and agreed to what was done in it: But they only as the Governors set by God over the Rest, defined; or rather, the Metropolitan alone Decreed, with the Approbation of his Bishops, who Consented to what was done, and subscribed the Decrees with him.

Whether this Author was aware of this or no, I shall not pretend to Judge; but the Caution with which he alledges the Authority of this Synod, is at least suspicious. ² In the Preface (says he) to the Canons, we meet with these remarkable Words: And so he leaves it to shift for its self, without entering into any farther Enquiry about it.

It is much such another piece of Ingenuity that occurs in the last Instance which he brings in Proof of his Position; From that ³ Domestick Council of our own, as he is pleased to Call it, Anno, 1129. "The Persons summon'd to which," he tells us, are thus reckon'd up in the Saxon Chronicle; Bishops, Abbots, Archdeacons, all the Priors, Monks, and Canons who were in all the Religious Houses of England; Finally, all that had the care of Religion committed to them, i. e. I suppose the Parochial Presbyters. Now this 'tis true, the Saxon Chronicle does say, concerning the Persons who were called to this Assembly: And I have before agreed, that not only Presbyters, but Deacons, and Lay-men, were from the Beginning, allow'd to be present at, and sometimes were invited too, to the Synods of the Church. But then to be present at a Synod, is one thing, and to be a proper Authoritative Member of it, is another. All these were called to this Meeting, 'tis true; but did they all Define, and Decree, in it? Let the Reader judge by what immediately follows in the very Chronicle to which he refers. "The Mot or Meeting began on Monday and continued to Friday. The Business was concerning the Wives of the Archdeacons and Priests; that they should put them away before the Feast of St. Andrew; and that he who would not do it, should forego his Church, and his House, and his Home; and never return to Officiate there. This WILLIAM ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY DECREED, and ALL the DIOCESAN BISHOPS, that were in England: But those Decrees had no Effect, by the King's dispensing with them in that Case.

Thus this very Chronicle relates this Matter; tho' this Author was pleased to draw a Curtain over it, for what end, to his Own Conscience, and the Reader's Judgment, I shall leave it to determine. But I must not conclude this Passage without observing yet farther; that in this whole Relation, the Saxon Chronicle greatly varies from all our Historians; which is another thing that, I think, should not have been dissembled. ⁴ The Account which they give of it is this: That the King (not the Archbishop) being returned into England, held a Great Council (not a Church-Synod) at London, the 1st of August (not at Michaelmas) about prohibiting of Priests Wives. That at this Council, the Archbishops both of Canterbury and York, were present; and together with the Other Bishops, Consented that the King should see Justice done in this Case: But that he deceived them; and took Money of the Priests for liberty to keep their Wives. That the Bishops in vain repented of what they had Granted, when the Trick which the King had put upon the Prelates, and the Depression of his Subjects, was made manifest in the Eyes of all Nations. ⁵ In the same Council it was, (as some affirm) that the Nobility of England swore before the King, to keep the Kingdom of England for the Empress his Daughter, if she outlived her Father, and he had no Son to succeed him.

This

- This is the Account which, not only Hoveden, and Brompton, but Mat. Paris, Hemingford, and the Annals of Waverly give of this matter. They all expressly call it a Great Council; and say that the King held it. And even his own Saxon Chronicle styles it, to the same effect, Mot, a Council; but not such as this Author would have us believe, when he calls it a Domestick Council of our own; nor indeed such as is at all to the Purpose of the Argument for which he alledges it.

So little has he hitherto offer'd to Vindicate his pretended Rights of the Presbyters in our Domestick Councils, during the Saxon times: Let us see whether his Success be afterwards any better; and that not for its importance to our Argument, if it should be true, that 1100 Years after Christ, the Presbyters had been admitted to Sit with their Bishops in Council; but to shew upon what slender grounds the Confidence of some Men is built; and with what easiness they censure Others of Error; when, at the same time, 'tis only their Own Ignorance, or Prejudice that ought to be Blamed.

I have before observed how, not only our Learned Lynwood, but Jo. de Acton too, have told us, that the Bishops only were to be Cited to our Provincial Synods; as the proper constituent Members of them; but that the rest were ordinarily to be Invited, not summon'd to them. Now this, as it is directly contrary to his Allegation, so will it much concern him to get clear of it. The Authors were Both Men of great Knowledge in the Canons, and Customs, of the Church. They were Both of them, in all probability, Members of our Convocations; and therefore we ought, in Modesty, to suppose that they must have known much better then we now do, what was the Constitution of them in the Times in which they Liv'd. They Publish'd their GLOSSES in their Own Days; and as that Study was then in request above all Others, so we cannot doubt but that they were diligently Read, and Examined: And to think that they should have deliver'd a Falsity at that time, and in such a matter, in which they could so easily have been disprov'd; and in which I cannot yet see what Interest they could have had to prevaricate; must be to suppose them to have been destitute, not only of all Conscience, but of all Reason too; and to have had as little Prudence, as Honesty, in their Attempt.

But what then says this Gentleman to their Evidence? Jo. de Acton, was an Author, either whom he knew not to have deposed against him in this Case, or having never been a Bishop, he was content, for Once, to Excuse him. But Lynwood must not so Escape: He dedicated his Book to an Archbishop of Canterbury, and he was himself afterwards made a Bishop; and upon both those Accounts there is no mercy for him. And therefore to push his Blow home, he Charges him on both sides, with Inconstancy, not to say a Contradiction in his Assertion; and a mistake little less than Wilful, in the Practice of the Church. The Attaque is violent, and eagerly pursued, but yet I do not much Care if I venture to stand the brunt of it, and to make my self a Second to this famous Canonist in his Assertion.

As to the Point of Contradiction, which he charges upon him, it consists in this; that he first says, that None but Bishops are of Necessity to be called to these Synods; and yet afterwards confesses, That Presbyters were to be called to them, when any thing was to be done wherein they were concern'd; or because their Counsel was necessary.

Now to make out a Contradiction in this Case, this Author must suppose either that the Presbyters had always Business in these Synods; or that their Counsel was always Necessary; and that therefore upon One or Other of these Accounts, they were always necessarily to be Called to them. But this Lynwood neither said nor suppos'd, but rather intimated the contrary, by putting in these two Cases, as particular Exceptions to his General Assertion; that they were not to be called of Necessity, but only in Case there was any thing to be done, in which they were concerned; or that the Archbishop thought it needful to take their Advice in what he had to do.

The mistake of this Gentleman, I suppose, proceeds from the different Notion which he now has of the Rights of the Clergy, from what the Clergy had of their Own Rights heretofore. He thinks it a Privilege, and a Prerogative, to be summon'd to the Convocation; they accounted it a Charge and a Burthen. He stands upon the Right of Attending in Council; they stood upon their Right of being Exempted from such an Attendance. In this very Gloss therefore, Lynwood is so far from flattering the Episcopacy, as this Author pretends, that he really argues for the Liberty of the Clergy. He asserts, that they were to be Invited indeed; so that if they pleased they might Come to these Assemblies: He asserts, that if they did come, (as they freely might) they ought to be Admitted. And in this he sufficiently secures their Privilege both of Coming to, and Acting in these Assemblies; whenever they should think it expedient so to do. That which he denies is; that they were to be peremptorily Cited; or Canonically punished, if they Came not. Now in this he delivers his Opinion, conformably both to the Orders, and Usage of the Church in his time, and for some Ages before him; that they ought not to be Summon'd (like the Bishops) unless there was some Cause depending in which they were concern'd; or that some Matters were to be treated of, in which the Archbishop (who was the Judge of it) thought their Advice to the Necessary. And then, he allows, that the Metropolitan might peremptorily Cite them, as well as the Bishops; and that being so Cited, they were bound to Attend.

This therefore may suffice to Answer the pretended Contradiction in this Case. Rights, &c. p. 14.
As for the truth of the Affertion; this Gentleman doubts not to say, "That the practise of Lynwood's own time, and the Stile of those Constitutions some of which probably he himself penn'd, Over-rule the Affertion of his Glosse. And this not only Confutes, but Exposes him too; And argues a want, either of common Sense, or of common Honesty in him, thus openly to Contradict in his Glosse, what himself had, probably, penn'd in the Text. Sect. 37.

To remove therefore all doubt in this matter, I must beg leave to make use of a Distinction, which this Gentleman, himself has elsewhere allow'd of, between a Convocation, and a Provincial Synod; as the Case stood in those times. By the One was meant such a Provincial Assembly as was either Called by the King's Order, or Design'd for his Service; as well as for the Affairs of the Church. By the Other was understood a pure Ecclesiastical Council; which was Summon'd only upon a Spiritual Account, and not intended to meddle with any matters of a Civil, or Mixt Nature, in which the King or the State of the Realm were concern'd. Mandat. pro Convoc. Epif. Lond. Mandamus quatenus Omnes Ecclesie nostrae Cant. Suffraganeis auctoritate nostra Vocetis quod convenient, &c. — Et ut negotium hujus saniori Consilio fulciatur, Injunctis ex parte nostra singulis Episcopis, ut quilibet eorum vocet, & ducat secum ad praedictam Congregationem, Tres, vel Quatuor Personas, de Majoribus discretioribus, & prudentioribus, sive Ecclesiae & Diocesses, &c. E. Registr. Giffard. Episc. Wigorn. fol. 41. Vid. Registr. Peckham. fol. 10.

What other Differences there were between these Two heretofore, I have already shewn. It shall suffice at present, to affirm, against this Author's Opinion; that One of the most Considerable; was this, that the Lower Prelates first, and then the Other Clergy, were peremptorily Summon'd to the One, but were ordinarily only Warn'd of, and Invited; (and sometimes not so much as Invited) to the Other.

Thus Kilwarby in his Synod of 1273, held for the Reformation of the Church called only his Suffragans to Treat, Provide, and Ordain with him, of what should be expedient for the Honour of God, and his Holy Church. But yet that this they might do the better, he Enjoyned every Bishop to bring along with him to the said Congregation, Three or Four Persons of the most Discreet, and Prudent of his Church, and Diocese, that by their Counsel, the Business of the Church might the more successfully be settled. Tres, vel Quatuor Personas, de Majoribus discretioribus, & prudentioribus, sive Ecclesiae & Diocesses, &c. E. Registr. Giffard. Episc. Wigorn. fol. 41. Vid. Registr. Peckham. fol. 10.

In the Council of Reading, which this Gentleman so much talks of, but so little Understands; Archbishop Peckham, in like manner, Called only his Suffragans to it, Anno 1279. and with their Assent published the Constitutions of it. And tho' in his Synod of Lambeth held Two years after, he required the Lesser, as well as Greater Prelates to come to it; yet neither in that were the Proctors of the Clergy present; nor was their Consent required to the Constitutions which were made in it. They were only to be inform'd that if they were aggrieved in any Cases which properly belong'd to the Council to Correct, they should be heard in due form: A favour vouchsafed, by the expressions of the Writ, to the Laity, as well as Clergy. Fr. Jo. Cant. Arch. Convoc. suffraganeis suis apud Radin- ges Celebravit Concilium — Petr. de Rikham, ad An. 1279. Sic Constit. W. Hemmingford.

And here, I must Observe an Accident which fell out, and which may serve to Confirm what I before asserted; that the Lower-Clergy were so far from accounting it any Privilege to be Summon'd to these Synods, that they took all Occasions to avoid their being Compelled to Come to them. The Archbishops had Cited, together with the Bishops, all the Inferiour Prelates of his Province (Quos Conciliorum tractatibus, says Peckham, interesse jubent Sancti Canones) who by the Canons of the Church, were required (if called) to be present at such Treaties, to Come to this Council. But the Exempt Prelates stood upon their Privilege, and refused to Obey his Summons; They neither Came themselves, nor sent any Proctors to Excuse their Absence. For this Contumacy the Archbishop resolved to proceed by his Ecclesiastical Authority against them. 'And tho' some of them had the Brisk-ness to Appeal to the Pope from his Sentence, yet they were forced at last to Compromise the matter, and to submit themselves to his Mercy.

Whether these lesser Prelates were Summon'd to his next ² Synod of Lambeth (in the beginning of the year after) I cannot tell: But the Inscription of the Articles which were pass'd in it, seems to imply that they were not; but that what was there done, was Establish'd by the Sole Authority of the Archbishop, and his Suffragans, without the Concurrence of any Others to the Passing of them.

I shall not need to say that before the time of these two Archbishops, the Lower- Clergy, as well as the Bishops, were Called to such Assemblies in which the Affairs of the State were to be transacted. That is not only ³ allow'd by the Person whom I am now to deal with; but has been, I think, sufficiently proved by him.
That therefore they were not Called to the Assemblies here mentioned, was because in those times they made a Distinction in this Matter; and look'd upon their presence to have been Necessarily required in the One, but not in the Other.

In the beginning of the next Reign, when the Other Convocations were now brought to the same Regulation under which they have generally continued ever since, yet still the Ecclesiastical Councils remained in the state which they were in before. The Clergy were not Summon'd, but only Invited to them, unless they had some particular Reason to be present, or that the Archbishop desired to have their Advice in his Debates.

The Affair of the Templars was now the great Point in Agitation: And upon occasion whereof frequent Synods were held in our Country, as well as in the other Churches of Europe. The Archbishop of York having determined to hold his Provincial Synod upon this Account, upon the 20th of May 1310; Commanded his Suffragans to Cause a Solemn Publication to be made of it in all the Collegiate and Cathedral Churches of his Province. Then he ⁴ Summon'd Peremptorily to his Synod, both the Bishops, and Lesser Prelates, with the Chapters, of his Province, "That they should appear in his Council, to Treat of the Matters to be proposed in
"it; to give wholesome Counsel in them; and humbly to admit, and effectually to ful"fil, what should be Established, Ordained, and Done there. But for the Clergy he no farther Invited them, than as by the Publick Notice which he had directed to be given in the Churches of his Synod, they should be prompted voluntarily to come to it, if they had any thing to Offer, or Do, in it.

But there is another Circumstance, in this Summons which must not be neglected:
He knew how backward these Prelates would be to Comply with his Citation; and that it would therefore be necessary to give all the reasonable force he could to it. And to that end, he added; "That he Premonished his Bishops and by them "Commanded the rest to be Premonished, who were to be Cited by them, that he "would Punish all such as should be Absent at the time prefixed, according to the "Exigence of the Law, as Disobedient, and Contumacious; unless they should be a"ble to prove, that for some Evident and Reasonable Causes, they were Lawfully "hindred from Coming to this Synod.

The Case was the very same the next year following: ⁵ He Summon'd the Lower Prelates, and Capitular Bodies, but Omitted the Proctors of the Diocesan Cler- gy; till the King desiring a Subsidy of Twelve Pence per Mark to be Granted to him, in which the Rights of the other Clergy were concern'd, by a Second ⁶ Mandate, he required the whole Clergy to appear at the same time; and so held at once both a Council, and a Convocation. This Assembly sate not long; it o-pen'd on the 24th of May 1311. and by a new ⁷ Mandate Dated the 31st of the same Month, we find notice taken of their Adjournment to the 1st of Ju- ly; and then the Proctors of the Clergy were dropp'd again, and only the Members first Summon'd, required to appear.

Thus this Matter pass'd in the Province of York: Nor was it much otherwise in that of Canterbury. Archbishop Winchelsea Summon'd his ⁸ Provincial Synod to meet at London the Wednesday after the Feast of St. Matthew, Anno 1310. To it he Cited only the Bishops, and Chapters of their Cathedral Churches; but no Abbots, Priors, Deans, or Archdeacons; no Proctors for the Diocesan Clergy, as in the other Convocations he was wont to do.

This was the state of his Synod in 1310: But the year following the Diffi- culty of the Business to be transacted in his Council, prompted him to Call in more Help, for the better dispatch of it. ⁹ Here therefore he Cited not only the Bishops,
and

and Regular Prelates, with the Archdeacons, and the Capitular, and Diocesan Clergy; but enjoyn'd his Bishops to send, before the Opening of the Synod, some Other Persons learn'd in the Canon, and Civil Law, and Experienced in Matters both of Right, and Fact, to agree on the Methods by which they should proceed when they Came together.

From which two different kinds of Summons in both Provinces, so near to one another, the Assertion of Lynwood is, I think, evidently made good: That the Lower Clergy were not necessarily to be Called to these Councils; unless when their Counsel was thought to be needful; or that somewhat was to be Treated of in which they were particularly Concern'd. The former of which Assertions we see plainly verified in the Synod of 1310; the latter in that of 1311; and both together speak the same, which therefore both Joh. de Acton, and Lynwood, upon good Authority affirmed to have been the Custom of the Church, and the Rights of the Clergy, from them.

But the next Synod which I shall offer, One of the last of this Archbishop's, will carry us yet farther. In the Summons of which having peremptorily Cited his Suffragans to appear; He Concludes with this Clause; "That they should give Notice to the Dean, and Priors, of their Cathedral Churches; and to their Chapters, that IF they came to the said Council, and DESIRED to be ADMITTED to it, as the LAW REQUIRED, they should be Admitted. This is the direct Stile of what our Canonists laid down; or rather indeed it is not so much as they will be found to have pleaded for. For their Rule was General, that if Others, Any Other of the Lower Clergy, Came, they were to be Admitted. But this Order restrains it to the Cathedral Bodies only; that if the Deans, and their Chapters Came, they should be Admitted: Nay, and that too upon their Petition, Si—venerint &—Petierint—Secundum juris Exigentiam, Admittentur.

I do not believe that this Gentleman will presume to make the same Reflection upon Robert Winchelsea, that he has done upon William Lynwood, tho' by his Character more Obnoxious to his Resentments, as being Archbishop of Canterbury at the time that he caused this Writ to be issued forth, for the Assembling of this Provincial Synod. His Zeal for the Rights and Liberties of the Church; what he did, and what he suffer'd on the Account of them, are too well known to leave it in doubt, whether he was of a Temper to enter into any measures that tended to the Lessening of them. 'Tis true, he was Proud, and Imperious; and so may be thought to have carried his Own Authority too high over his Subjects; as 'tis certain he did both his own and theirs too far against the King. We will therefore see how his Successors behaved themselves as to these Matters; and Enquire, whether they did not continue to act by the same Measures, as we have now seen those did who went before them.

The Convocation of Archbishop² Stratford, in 1341, is a Provincial Synod with which this Gentleman has shewn himself to have been particularly well acquainted. He Cites a part of the Mandate by which it was Summon'd; and argues from thence, justly enough, that it was properly an Ecclesiastical Council, and not a State-Convocation. But who then were the Members of which that Synod consisted? And how were they Summon'd to it? First, the Archbishop, according to what Lynwood has asserted, peremptorily, and precisely Cited all his Suffragans to it: But as for the Deans, and Priors of the Cathedral Churches; the Abbots and Elective Priors; the Archdeacons, Chapters, Covents, Colledges, and Clergy; Who should THINK THEMSELVES INTERESTED IN IT; he order'd them to be only premonished, that IF they THOUGHT THEMSELVES CONCERNED in it; or HAD any CAUSES, or AFFAIRS to be TREATED OF in such a Provincial Council, they MIGHT lawfully appear, at the same time with their Bishops, before himself, and the said Council; there to Treat, and to give their deliberate Counsel, and Assent, to such things as should be Ordain'd by them. And lastly, upon the same terms, he order'd Notice to be Given to all Other Prelates of the Church, not being Mendicants, of whatever Order, State, or Condition, they were; to come at the same Time and Place, IF they should THINK it EXPEDIENT, &c.

Such was the Mandate by which this Council was Summon'd: And accordingly both in the Bishop of London's Provincial, and in the Other Bishops Diocesan Executions of it, we see these Precautions carefully Observed. The Bishops are peremptorily Cited by the One; and the Rest are premonished to Come by the Others, IF they thought it for their INETREST; IF it SEEM'D EXPEDIENT TO THEM; and IF they had any CAUSES, or other BUSINESS to be TREATED of there. From all which, it is clear, even to Demonstration; that as our Canonist affirmed, so it was then the Sense, and Practice of the Church, that the Bishops only were to be CALLED to such Meetings; but, for the rest, they were to have Notice of them; and to be Admitted if they Came; but not to be Cited, unless they had some Affairs which required their presence; or that the Metropolitan (which here it seems he did not) should stand in need of their Counsel, and for that reason, require them to come to his Synod.

This is so full a Proof of what I am now Asserting, that I think nothing plainer can be added, unless it be the Convocation of the next Year; with which therefore I shall (at present) Conclude these Instances. The King, by his Writ, Dated August the 15th, had Order'd the same Archbishop to Call a Convocation; and the Archbishop by his Mandate, Dated the 23d of the same Month, had Summon'd it to meet at St. Paul's, London, about the 9th of October following. To this, the Summons ran in the usual form; and all the Other Clergy, as well as the Bishops, were Expressly Cited to Come to it.

Upon the very same day, August 23d, the Archbishop issued out another Mandate, for his Provincial Council to meet at London the 14th of October; within a few days after the Other. But here the Mandate ran in a quite different strain.

The Bishops were Cited peremptorily to appear at it, as in the Other Mandate: 'But the Deans, and Priors of Cathedral Churches, with the Abbots, Priors, and Archdeacons, were PREMONISHED only, and that with this Qualification (if it SHOULD SEEM EXPEDIENT TO THEM: The Chapters, Convents, and Colledges, with the Clergy of every Diocese; by their Proctors, IF THEY SHOULD THINK IT TO BE FOR THEIR INTEREST, and THEY HAD ANY CAUSES or AFFAIRS to be TREATED of in such a Provincial Council: And lastly the Prelates of Exempt Churches, not being Mendicants, IF THEY WOULD.

This was the form of his Mandate for his Ecclesiastical Synod: And I shall now leave it to any One to judge, what other reason can be given why the Lower Clergy were Summon'd after such a different manner to this Council, and this Convocation; but that the Inferiour Clergy were look'd upon to have had very different Rights, and Obligations, with respect to the One, and the Other. To the Convocation they were expressly required by the King, and Summon'd peremptorily by the Archbishop to Come. They had not only a standing Right, but a necessary Obligation too, lying upon them to be present at it: But as for the Provincial Council, their presence was not necessarily required there; the Bishops only were look'd upon to be the Constant standing Members of that. Here therefore the Other Clergy (unless upon some special Occasions) were to be left to their Liberty: They were Allow'd to Come, if they would; or else, without Censure, to be Absent, if they would not.

In this Council, thus Summon'd, as I have before shewn, were those Constitutions made, upon which Lynwood first took Occasion to make that just Remark, which has now brought all this Storm upon Him. The Point under Consideration was a matter of Common Interest, the letting of Ecclesiastical Benefices to Farm. Upon this he first Observes, "What Persons were present at this Council is not known. For the Clergy, under the degree of Bishops, being Admonished, and Invited only not Summon'd; it was Uncertain whether they were there or no. Now this, says Lynwood, I observe upon the Account of the things which were here Establish'd---For several things were here Ordain'd contrary to common Right; and therefore it may be doubted whether this Constitution were made by All who had an Interest in it--- And then he adds, what is thought so Criminal to have been said: "That to these Councils Bishops only were necessarily to be Called; unless any thing were to be treatd of which touched the Other Clergy (as this Order certainly did) and then they were to be Called too. Had Dr. A. known and consider'd this, he would, I am confident, have been more moderate in his Reflections upon this Learned Canonist; who only Repeated in the Other place, what he had before Observed here; and that with all the pertinence, as well as tenderness, and justice to the Rights of the Lower-Clergy, that could be desired.

But tho' the Inferiour Clergy, therefore, were not always to be Compelled to come to these Synods; yet if being præmonished, and Invited, by Order of the Metropolitan (as usually they were) but much more if they were summon'd to come to them; (as in such Cases wherein he desired their Counsel and Advice; not only they, but such others of the Clergy of his Province, as he thought fit, might be) their their Consent was taken to what passed in the Synod; and they had a Voice, as well as the Bishops themselves, there. This I take to have been the Rule which was Observed in our Church, as well as in the Other Western Churches in those Days: For so the Order ran, "That the Presbyters, whom the Metropolitan should chuse, might both judge and define with him in Council. And so I conceive our Practise ran with it.

In the Council of London, 1421: ² Archbishop Chicheley, besides the Usual Members, Cited the Chancellors of both the Universities; and all, and singular such Persons as Exercised any Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, of whatever Condition, State, or Degree they were. This was, at once, both a Council and a Convocation: The Members of both were present, and they acted under both their Characters in it. And the Lower Clergy not only consented to what was done with relation to the State, but in the Church-Constitutions too; ³ the Consent of the Prelates and Clergy, as well as of the Bishops, being expressly said to have been given to them.

This therefore is neither deny'd by Lynwood, nor needed it to have been so Elaborately proved by this ⁴ Gentleman against him. That they were to be admitted into these Councils if they came, he affirmed: All that he deny'd, was, That they were to be peremptorily Cited, and Obliged to Come to them, whether they thought it Needful or not, so to do.

After what has been said, I may now venture to affirm that Lynwood, in this matter, has no need either of this Author's Charity to Excuse, or his Apology to justify him in his Gloss. However we will see what his Civility to him is: And how he clears him from that foul Imputation he had just before cast upon him, of having wilfully prevaricated upon this Occasion. The Sum of the Excuse which he makes for him is this: "That he knew no more of this Matter than what he found in his Gratian; whereas, had he been at all acquainted either with the Writings and Usage of the Primitive Church, or even with the Elder Records of our Own, they would have better inform'd him.

This indeed is a Notable Apology for an Author of no higher a size, to make for so great a Person as Lynwood, both in Learning and Experience, in his Offices and Employs, was. But there is a sort of Men in the World, who account all to be either Knaves, or Fools, who are not of their Opinion. This was Lynwood's Crime, and for this, both his Learning is Arraign'd, and even his Honesty it self call'd in question. For most certainly both the Rule and Practice of our Own Church, in this Case, was of his side, at the time when he Wrote: And how it stood in the Antient Church, I have, in some measure, endeavour'd to declare.

It must be confess'd, That the Council of Basil broke in upon the Antient Usage; and Gerson, who liv'd not long before it, and was deeply engaged in the Papal Schism, and turn'd all his Endeavours to the Removal of it, did, by his Writings, prepare the Way for it. Many of the Canonists, and Others, who have wrote since that time, have gone into the same Notions. So Mendoza, and Gonzales in Spain: The Magdeburg Divines in Germany: Almain, Richer and Simon Vigors in France: To say nothing of the famous Charles du Moulin, who, in his Treatise against the receiving of the Council of Trent, maintains the same Opinion. But then it must be consider'd that others, no less Eminent, stily opposed this Innovation, in the very Council of Basil it self, which was particularly the Case of the Learn'd Abbot Nich. Tudeschus, tho' better known by the Title of Panormitane; as Aeneas Silvius, in his History of that Synod, informs Us. And the Principles on which those who Assert this, found themselves, are such, as, I believe, this Gentleman himself would not; I am sure no good Member of the Episcopal Church of England, can admit of.

To take some of them as they lie in the Learn'd Simon Vigorinus's Discourse upon this Occasion. His first and main Ground, for the Right of Presbyters in this Case, is, that of St. Hierom, and (as he pretends) of St. Austin too, That Bishops are only by Use and Custom, and nothing else, superiour to Presbyters. He adds, that in the Synod of Jerusalem; not only the Elders, but the Lay-people were present: That in the first general Councils, not only Bishops, but Priests, and Deacons; had a Right of Sentence; that is, as he adds after, of definitive Sentence. That in Provincial Councils, Priests, and Deacons, carried an equal stroke, and acted upon the same terms with the Bishops. These are some of the Principles, upon which he Builds his Position. If this Author allows of them, let him enlarge his Proposition, and take in not only his Own Presbyters, but the Deacons and Laity of these Canonists, along with them.

them. If not, let him shew us upon what other Grounds he can prove their Separate and Distinct Right from the Others, in the Case under debate.

As for our own Divines, who liv'd about the time of the Reformation, it is not to be wonder'd, if they enter'd into the Notions, which not only so much prevailed in those days, but which seem'd the most proper to promote the good Work, which the Chiefest of them had at that time in hand. The Constitution of our own Synods favour'd it; and it was not so easie then, as it is now, since the Antient Writers, and Councils, have been more correctly Publish'd, and more commonly read, to know what the Sense and Practice of the Primitive Fathers and Governours of the Church, in this case were. And yet, when all is done, I cannot find that the Passage which he alledges will bear so large a Superstructure as he is pleased to build upon it. They say, That in the Antient Councils of the Church, in matters of Faith, and Interpretation of Scripture (for to those they restrain their Assertion) no man made definitive Subscription, but Bishops, and Priests. And they give this Reason for their Opinion, for-as-much as the Declaration of the Word of God pertaineth unto them. I meddle not with the truth of their Remark; but sure I am, it cannot, from thence be generally inferr'd (as this Author yet infers) that these Bishops allow'd to Presbyters not only a Consultive, but a Decisive Vote also in Synods, and that derived from Primitive Practice. Their Proposition is particular; in such certain Cases, they made definitive Subscription, and that, because in those Cases they had a Right to declare their Sense. But his Inference is general, Therefore they have a Right (indefinitively) to sit and vote (as well as subscribe) in All Cases; even in Matters of Discipline, and in Sentences of Judgment; which do not belong to them, tho' the Preaching of the Word does.

But let these Three Bishops (for no more, after all, they were) have thought what they will: In Lynwood's time, tho' these Opinions were then begun to be started abroad, yet had they not obtain'd with us. The Lower Clergy were admitted; and, upon such Occasions as he speaks of, were summon'd to the Provincial Synods. But still the general Rule was, that they were not to be Cited to them; but according to the Definition of Pope Innocent, which this Gentleman so much insists upon, if he were willing to understand it; They were to be Invited, and if they came, to be Admitted; but, if they came not, they were not to be Censured.

Let us hear how he Concludes this whole Matter. "I have made the best Excuse that I can for him; for I am not willing to believe that the Dedication of his Book had any influence upon the Doctrine of it; tho' I must needs say that he has decided in this Case more like a Dean of the Arches, then a Prolocutor of the Lower-House of Convocation, which he sometimes was. It is not hard to find out what this Author design'd by this Reflection: He had before charged him with Contradicting in his Gloss, those very Constitutions which himself had probably penn'd. And he now would have it thought that he did it, as an humble Official of the Archbishops, (for Dean of the Arches he was not, that is a Preferment of this Author's bestowing upon him) to ingratiate himself with his Master, tho' to the Loss of the Rights and Liberties of that part of the Convocation, which had more than once made him their Speaker, and intrusted their Rights in his Hands.

But I have sufficiently shewn, that in this the Prolocutor not only delivered the true state of the Matter; but in the very thing for which he is charged to betray the Rights of the Clergy, did indeed stand up for them. It being certainly a greater Liberty, and I think a higher Privilege too; to have a Right to be Invited to these Synods, to be Admitted, if they thought fit to come to them; and yet not to be Censured, or Punished, if they did not; than to have a Right of being forced to come, whether they would or no; and to suffer for their Contumacy, if they neglected to attend at them.

Whether this Author could not have made a better Excuse, if he had pleased for him; I shall leave it to the Reader to judge, when I shall have told him, that it was in his Power to have given the true Account, which I have here given of this Matter; and so to have prevented the need of any Excuse at all. The Convocation Writ of Archbishop Stratford of 1341, which I have before mentioned, is so Clear, that one would think Prejudice it self could hardly blind a Man so far as to hinder his discovering of it. That this very Writ this Author had by him when he wrote his Book, himself shews, Pag. 65, where he not only makes mention of it, but actually transcribes a considerable passage from it. And in that Writ, tho' Others besides the Bishops are premonish'd of the Council which was to be held, yet the Bishops only were Called to it: The Rest were left to their Liberty, to Come If they had ANY BUSINESS, or THOUGHT it for their INTEREST to Be PRESENT, or else (if they liked that better) to stay away. This was exactly agreeable to what Lynwood had affirm'd; and let this Author tell us, when he next Writes, why he so shamefully conceal'd his Knowledge of it.

Writ

There is yet one stroke more at this Unhappy Writer, and then we shall have done; and a remarkable One it is, for it discovers the Secret of what Lynwood, it seems, aim'd at, in betraying the Rights of the Clergy, as he did on this Occasion. And perhaps (says he) One that had less Regard for his Character than I have, would be ready to suspect that he might, by this time, have his Eye upon the Bishoprick of St. Davids, To which he was promoted, almost Twenty Years after his first advancing of this Assertion.

What respect this Gentleman has to the Character of which he speaks; I mean the Episcopacy; the whole Scope of his Book, and all the Principles of it, sufficiently shew. And either I am very much mistaken, or the Character, in this very Place, was set up, only in order to its being scoffed at, and Abused. What secret Views that Learned Canonist had, in Glossing upon the Provincial Constitutions, besides the Motives which he owns to have induced him to that Useful Undertaking, I cannot tell. Sure I am, That those who knew him much better than this Author can pretend to have done, deliver him to Us under a very different Character: And which in justice to the Memory of so Modest, as well as Learned a Man, I desire my Reader to peruse in the 'Appendix to this Book. In the mean time, I shall only add thus much, which, I presume I may, without Offence, be allow'd to say, That 'tis much to be suspected, That those who are so forward to Accuse others of secret and unwarrantable Designs in what they do, are not wholly free from them themselves: They know their Own Ambition, and that inclines them, on every Occasion, to Conclude the same to be the Case of Other Men.

Epist. Reg.
ad Ann. 1438.

And now, if it be ask'd how our Convocations came at last to admit, not only of the Inferiour Prelates, but of the Cathedral, and Diocesan, Presbyters too; the Answer is very plain: They were, Originally, design'd not for Ecclesiastical, but for State-purposes; To consult of the Welfare of the Church, as it was a Part of the Realm; and to provide for the Support of the One, by ministring to the Wants and Security of the Other. Now in this, the Lower Clergy have as much an Interest as the Higher: They are Equally Members of the Commonwealth with them; and it was but reasonable that their Consent should be taken in the Granting, and Dispensing of what belong'd to their Cures and Dignities; as well as the Prelates of what was to arise out of their greater Preferments.

Sect. 43.

When in process of time the frequent Assembling of Our Convocations for these Ends, gave Opportunity to the Bishops to transact most of the Other Matters relating to the Church in them; they easily consented to take the Clergy into their Debates and Resolutions in the One, as well as in the Other. The Lower Prelates and Dignitaries had before been admitted into the Provincial Synods of almost all the Churches of Europe; and into our Own among the rest. The Parochial Presbyters had been allow'd this part in them too; that if they were Called by the Metropolitan, and Permitted by him, they might both Sit, and Advise, and Determine in his Council. Thro' this Condescension of the Metropolitans, and Bishops, at the Beginning, it was no hard Matter from Admitting them sometimes, and in some certain Cases Requiring them to be present at these Synods; to allow them to become almost constant Members of them: Especially when by Order of the Prince, and for the Dispatch of his Affairs, they were regularly called together; and the same Persons were thereby ready, oftentimes, as well to join in making Synodical Constitutions, for the Service and Establishment of the Church; as to consult, in Convocation, about the Outward Peace and Security of it.

By these Degrees then our Convocations came to be settled on the Foot on which they now stand. First the Bishops alone seem to have acted authoritatively in them. About the End of the Saxon times, the Lower Prelates came into them. Afterwards the Presbyters were premonished, and if they came, were admitted to be present at them. This was towards the latter End of King Edward the 1st. When Provincial Convocations were brought up for State Purposes, the Lower Clergy presently became, and that justly, Members of them: By degrees the King demanding demanding Aids of the Church, in their Ecclesiastical Synods, as well as in their Other Convocations; the Lower Clergy were for that purpose, sometimes, called to Them. sometimes the Archbishop wanted their Counsel and Consent: 'Till by degrees it grew to be almost a constant Method to Summon them; and to give them the same Place in the Ecclesiastical, that they had in the State-Assembly. Thus were our present Provincial Synods establish'd; nor is it any part of my Design, in what I have now been discoursing, to make any manner of Exception against the Form of them; much less to encourage any Change in it. I am well content, that not only our Presbyters should be admitted to the share which they have in them; but were our Archdeacons no more now than what their Name imports, and what, at the Beginning they were; nay, were not only some few of the Laitie capacitated to be chosen Members of them, but should many more be received, than have ever yet been Elected into them; it would be no more Offence to me, than it is to read of their being present at the Synod of Jerusalem; and in several other of the most Early Councils of the Church.

That which I except against, in what this Author has affirmed, is; First, That he Asserts a Synodical Right belonging to Presbyters, in Provincial Synods, by virtue of their Order, as Joint-Members with the Bishops, in guiding the Affairs of the Church, exclusively to those of a lower Rank; and (I suppose) yet much more Exclusively of the People; whose Presence, tho' he allows to have been found in the Ancient Councils; yet he denies them to have had any of that Interest in them, which he affirms the Presbyters to have a Common, that I do not say an Equal Right to, with their Bishops. Now in this, I think he sets these Orders too near upon a Rank, and Level, with One another: And thereby injures the Bishops to whom the Government of the Church was, as I conceive, Committed by Christ and his Apostles; and therefore to whom of Right, there belongs a Singular Power of Ordering the Affairs of it. And then, Secondly, That he appeals to the Sense and Usage of the Primitive Church, for the Confirmation of this Opinion; (and particularly to that of our Own) and from neither of which (after once these Provincial Assemblies came to be Canonically settled) I have now shewn, any such Practice or Opinion can be derived.

Let the Presbyters then, let the Deacons, nay, let the People too, enjoy any liberty, that either the Ancient Church allow'd them; or the Interests of the Present shall make it reasonable to indulge to them. Let them come not only as Witnesses of what is done in our Synods, or to testify their Consent to the Acts of them; but, if our Governours please, let them Define together with their Bishops in them. Only let the Divine Right, and Prerogatives, of the Episcopacy be preserved; which our Fathers have taken care with so much Zeal and Piety to support: And let the Presbyters, as well as the Deacons, and People, remember this; that 'tis to the Bishops, not to Them, that the Government of the Church was left by Christ, and his Apostles; and that 'tis one thing to be admitted into a share of it, and another to lay claim to it, as a Privilege, which of Right, belongs to them.

CHAP. V.

The Second Argument Entred upon: Of the Convocation's being an Attendant upon the Parliament. That it does not sufficiently prove his Point, supposing what he Asserts to have been True. That if it did, yet in Fact, it is utterly False. The State of the Publick Assemblies of the Church, Historically shewn, during the SAXON Times.

Sect 1. 1. HITHERTO I have proceeded with Dr. Att—— upon his own Ground, and supposing our Convocations to be pure Ecclesiastical Synods, have shewn that the Canons of the Church do neither lay any Obligation upon our Metropolitans, to hold them at any set Times, nor give any Right to the Clergy, in his free way of speech, to DEMAND the Assembling of them.

I must now beg leave to put him in Mind of what himself here, in his next Argument, not only allows, but insists upon; that had those Canons of which he

he speaks never so much obtain'd amongst us; yet the Convocations, concerning which we are here Arguing, are not such Provincial Synods as they intended; but are, indeed, Assemblies of the Church called together for Civil, or State-purposes; which only Occasionally medled with Spiritual Matters, by the direction of the Metropolitans heretofore, and continue so to do by the License of the King now. And concerning such Convocations as depend upon the Constitutions of Civil Government, and are held according to the Laws and Customs of every Country or Kingdom; neither the Canons of Foreign Synods, nor the Papal Decrees, have any manner of Right to Command or Establish any thing. So that in this first Argument, this Author has, as I conceive, committed the same double Error, which I shall hereafter shew he has done in all the Rest; that both the Supposition, on which he Builds, is False; and the Argument which he raises upon it (tho' we should allow of his Supposition) is nevertheless Weak and Un-conclusive.

His next Reason to prove a Right in our Convocations, (not only to be Called together with every Parliament, which constantly has been, and, I suppose will always be done; nor yet, being so Called to Sit and Act, with the King's Allowance, which is likewise agreed to; no, nor yet, Thirdly, to be permitted by the King to Sit and Act, whenever there is any Business for it to do; or that their Sitting, and Acting, would be of any Benefit, either to the Church or Realm; which I freely own the Clergy have a Right to; nor can the King, in my Apprehension, without abusing his Authority, deny it to them; but 'absolutely) to meet ^{Rights, p. 76} and sit with every Parliament, and to continue sitting the whole time that the Parliament does, whether there be any thing to be done by them or no; and that, as Attendants on the Two Houses, and at their Direction, not at the King's Pleasure, the Metropolitans, or their Own; is derived from the Nature of our Own Political Constitution, which (as he affirms) has given the Clergy the Right (or as I should rather speak, were it my Notion, has laid upon them the Burden) of such an Attendance, and given the Parliament the Right (if they think it worth the insisting upon) of being so Attended by them.

To bring this Matter to the fairest Issue I can, I will first endeavour to settle the true state of the Point, and draw it out of that Confusion in which he has involved it: And, then proceed to consider the Argument upon which he founds his New, and, I think, Enslaving Assertion.

In pursuance of the former of these, two things must be enquired into: First, What this Author means by a Convocation? Secondly, What that Attendance is, which he affirms the Convocation ought to pay upon the Parliament. Sect. 1.

1. By a Convocation, he tells us, p. 4. he means a Provincial Synod, and that whether it be consider'd simply in it self, or as Attendant on a Parliament. And to be yet more particular, p. 28. he means by it, a Synod of the Province of Canterbury: So that it may be doubted whether the Synod of York comes within his Consideration or not. And indeed the Clergy of that Province have so seldom met at all, and when they have met, have generally sat at such a distance from the Parliament, that 'tis but a very slender sort of Attendance, that they have paid upon it.

But tho' this were his Sense at the Beginning of his 2d Chapter, yet by that time he came to the End of it, he enlarged his Notion, and, upon the whole, gives us this full description of what he means by a Convocation, p. 75. That it is a Word of Art, which signifies a meeting of the Clergy in time of Parliament. And that, as he there again limits it; a Provincial Meeting, summon'd by the Parliamentary, no less than by the Provincial Writ; for which Reason he calls them in the same Page, Parliamentary Conventions of the Clergy; and adds, that they are State-Meetings, as well as Church-Synods.

"These Parliamentary Meetings of the Clergy were, at first, he says Congregations; or Convocationes Cleri, but not therefore Concilia Provincialia, which were "Extraordinary (or as 'tis now Corrected, Occasional) Assemblies; for Church-
 "business only; whereas the Others were Originally held for Civil Purposes alone, "and the Common Affairs of the State. But this Distinction held not very long,
 "the Business of Provincial Councils, being, in tract of time, done in the Ordinary
 "Congregations of the Clergy; and These, and Those, being promiscuously st-
 "led Convocations; till at last, Provincial Councils, properly so called, CEAS'D
 "ALTOGETHER (or as 'tis now Corrected, GREW INTO DISUSE) and Parliamen- "tary Convocations came into their Room.

"These

"These Parliamentary Convocations, have the same stated times of Assembling that the Parliament has. The Other Meetings of the Clergy out of Parliament Time, were held when the Necessities of the Church required; and those Assemblies, indeed, and those Alone, were properly Occasional.

This, as near as I can observe, is the sum of Dr. A's Notion of these Meetings. He distinguishes, as I have done, between the proper Provincial Councils of the Church, and the State-Convocations of the Clergy. "He agrees with me, That the One were design'd for Church-business only, p. 65. The Other were held for Civil Purposes Alone, and the Common Affairs of the State. And I agree with him, that, in tract of time, (tho not so soon as he would insinuate) the Convocations proceeded to treat of the Church Affairs of the One; as the Provincial Councils had begun more early to meddle with the Civil Business of the Other. Only, I would observe, That as the Provincial Council, by treating of State Affairs, did not thereby lose or change its Nature, and become a Parliamentary Convocation; so neither did the Convocation, by its Occasional Meddling with Spiritual Affairs, cease to be, what it truly was, a State-meeting; nor become a proper Ecclesiastical Synod. They both continued distinct from one another, as I have shewn, to the very time of the Reformation: And even after the 25th of King Henry the 8th, were design'd to have been still continued, under the same distinction they had before been. This the intended ¹ Reformation of our Ecclesiastical Laws speaks; and I appeal to their Constitution concerning Provincial Councils, for the truth of what I say.

Legg. Eccl.
Tit. de Eccl.
cap. xviii. fol.
103.

The Convocation then, of which we are now treating, is an Assembly of the Clergy for State-purposes; which, by the leave of the Metropolitan, and with the Consent of the Bishops of the Province, did sometimes (being met) transact Ecclesiastical Affairs heretofore; and if Need be, may, by the Authority of the King's License, do the Business of a proper Church-Synod Now.

Sect. 3.

I proceed, 2dly, To Enquire what that Attendance is, which he affirms, this Convocation ought to pay upon the Parliament? Now that is altogether servile and severe: And, as I apprehend, equally injurious both to the Liberties of the Church, and to the Prerogative of the Crown. ² The Clergy (he says) must meet, and sit, whenever the Parliament does, and continue to attend, so long as that Continues to sit; whether there be any thing to consult about or No: And they can neither meet, nor sit, nor act, (no not by the King's Authority,) when the Parliament does not; tho' the Exigences of the Church should never so much require their Counsel and Deliberation. This is, in short, the so much magnified Right, Power, and Privilege of an English Convocation; but such as our Wiser Predecessors, when more mildly stated, thought a Burden and an Opression; and as earnestly endeavoured to be freed from, as some are now zealous to contend for it.

As for the former of these, the Necessity of their sitting with every Parliament, it is so great, that he tells us it is "neither in the Princes, or the Archbishop's Power, whether they will have such Assemblies or No. That there is the same Law for the sitting of a Convocation, as there is for that of a Parliament. By this Law, the Clergy are not only under a Duty to Attend, but have also a Right to meet. Their Writs of Assembling concurrently with a Parliament, are not meer Letters of Grace, and Complement, but to be Emitted ex debito justitia, whether the Government has any thing to Propose to them or no. So likewise are their Assemblies at such times, to be held by the same Law, notwithstanding it may be pretended that there is no Occasion for them. For although their Consent may not be necessary, nor their Advice seem wanting, yet as they are BOUND to WAIT, if either shall be asked; so may the Clergy themselves have some Informations, and Remembrances to offer, and some Petitions to make, concerning such things, as they may be supposed to take more particular Notice of, or wherein they may be more particularly concern'd.

Such is the Necessity, which some call the Right, of the Clergy's Sitting, during the time of Parliament. And for their other Right (if that too must be so accounted) of not being in a Capacity of being Assembled, or of doing any thing out of Parliament, no not by the King's Writ: Dr. A. Closes in with the Opinion of some Warm Members in the Parliament of 1640. (for the Parliament it self never declar'd it self of that Opinion; no nor so much as the Lower House, however

ever he is pleased for the better Credit of his Cause so to represent it:) That the Proceedings of that Convocation were Unlawful, because they were made by an Assembly which Sate and Acted after the Parliament was dissolved. He represents the Lord-Keeper and Judges, who gave their Opinion to the contrary, as setting their Hands to a solemn Equivocation; when they "declared, That the Convocation being called by the King's Writ, under the Great Seal, doth continue until it be Dissolved by Writ or Commission under the Great Seal, notwithstanding the Parliament be Dissolved: Because forsooth, they did not say, whether Such Writ or Commission, ought not of Course, to have Issued out from the Crown, upon the Dissolution of the Parliament. But this Point, says this Gentleman (after his usual freedom with the greatest Men, if they speak against his Hypothesis) is not touch'd upon in the Judgment given, and seems to have been PURPOSELY DECLINED: For otherwise it had been a Clearer and fuller Determination of the Matter in Question, if they had said, That the King might, by his Prerogative, keep a Convocation sitting as long as he pleased, notwithstanding the Dissolution of the Parliament with which it was called.

Ibid.

I shall not here compare the Two Forms proposed, the Judges, and this Authors; nor consider which of them, upon the whole Matter, is the fuller and more clear. I freely own, that I look upon the Decision, as drawn up by them, to be both more legally worded, and as clearly deliver'd, as if they had had this Gentleman to dictate a Form to them. The Convocation was called not by the Parliamentary, but by the Provincial Writ. And being so Called, they declare, that it does continue, by Law, to Sit'till it be dissolved by some Writ, of equal Authority with that by which it was Called. And, to clear all Doubts, they add, That the Dissolution of the Parliament did not alter the Case, nor at all affect their Session, who Met and Sate by a quite different Writ from it. This I think, was very Full and Clear: In the mean time, this Gentleman, we are sure, is of another Opinion; that the Convocation cannot Out-sit the Dissolution of the Parliament above a Day; tho' in point of Law, if the Convocation may Sit and do business but a Day after the Parliament is gone, (which this Author cannot deny but that it may) it will, I believe, be difficult to give any good Reason why it may not as well Sit and Act a Week or a Month.

Having thus seen what the Point is which this Author is to prove; it will now be time to Enquire, what Method he takes in order to the proving of it. Now that he thus gives us, in his own Summary Re-capitulation of it.

Sect. 4.

² * That as far back as we have any Memoires of the Civil, or Ecclesiastical Affairs of this Kingdom, it appears that the Clergy and Laity met together in the Great Councils of the Realm. That this they did in the Saxon Times, and for some Reigns after the Conquest, Nationally; joining closely with the Laity in Civil Debates, and taking THEIR SANCTION along with them in ALL ECCLESIASTICAL ACTS or ORDINANCES.

² Rights, p. 74.

* That they divided afterwards from the Laity, and from One Another, and Attended the Parliament, not in One Body, but in Two Provincial Synods held under their several Archbishops.

³ Pag. 75.

* That these Parliamentary Conventions of the Clergy, were held at first Near the Time at which the Laity met; afterwards with a Latitude: But that this Irregularity was Reformed before the Reformation of Religion; and their Meeting and Departing, fixed within a Day of the Assembling and Dismission of the Parliament; and that this Custom has now for above an Age and Half continued.

This is the Sum of his Deduction, which I hope I have not, I am sure I have not designed to injure by any thing which I have Omitted; to render the Argument more short, and thereby more easie to be Understood. Let us see first what strength it has to infer his Conclusion, supposing it to be true; and then go on from step to step to Examine, whether it be not, almost in every particular, utterly False and Untrue.

And 1st, Supposing the Case to have been as this Author represents it, it will follow, that tho' the Clergy have, in some way or Other, still been Called to the Great Councils of the Nation; yet there have been great Changes and Varieties, in the Manner of their Coming to them. In the Saxon Times, and for some

Sect. 5.

Reigns after the Conquest, they came Nationally: They joyn'd with the Laity in Civil Debates, and the LAITY joyned with them, in GIVING AUTHORITY to ALL their ECCLESIASTICAL ACTS and ORDINANCES.

This Constitution lasted for some Reigns after the Conquest; Then it was changed for two Provincial Meetings, held under the several Archbishops; and thus, if we may believe it, they Attended the Parliament 'till the time of King Edward the First.

But here the Old Practise was again revived; and the Clergy, by Vertue of the Premunitory Clause, was once more brought Nationally to Parliament. They were summon'd at the same time, to the same place, and for the same Ends that the Other Estates were; 'and a strict Compliance herein was exacted by the Crown, and paid by the Clergy.

This had not long continued before the Clergy found means to be Released from the rigour of it; And prevailed upon the King to accept of their former manner of Assembling with the Parliament in two Provincial Synods, in lieu of that closer Attendance which the Præmunientes Challenged; the forms however being still kept up, by which the King's Right of Summoning them immediately to Parliament, was acknowledged all along, and their Obligation to Obey his Summons in the way it prescribed, was duly acknowledged.

But neither did the Change stop here: For even these Provincial Assemblies were held, at first near the time that the Parliament met; afterwards with a Latitude: And some time before the Reformation, They began to be held concurrently with it.

This is Dr. A—s Scheme, and be it Right or Wrong, the Use I would at present make of it is this: That it appears from hence, that from the very Times of the Saxons downwards, there never was any One Constant, or settled Method, of the Clergy's coming to the Great Councils of the Nation. Sometimes they met with the Laity, sometimes by themselves. One while at the same Time with the Parliament; at others utterly distinct both in Time and Place from it. Sometimes in One National, and sometimes in two Provincial Assemblies. And this, if his Account be true, according as they had a greater or lesser Influence over the King; Who, it seems, by his reckoning, had the whole Ordering of this matter in his Hands.

Which being so, it is plain, that there was nothing in this Matter of the Clergy's Attending upon our Parliaments, so fix'd by the Nature of our Constitution, but what the King himself heretofore, at the request of the Clergy, (and sometimes even against their Wills) did Change; and the Authority of the King, Clergy, and Parliament, without all doubt, had Power to Alter. If therefore the Statute of the 25th of Henry the 8th, passed with the Consent of the Clergy, and by the Authority of the King and Parliament, has made such a Fundamental Change in this Case, as to put the whole power of Calling the Convocation Absolutely, and without all Restriction, into the King's Hands, so that there is no Reserve or Limitation upon him, that he shall be obliged at any certain Times to Assemble these Meetings; or during such and such Periods, shall be tied up to Continue their Session whether he will or no; it is plain from this Author's own Account, that 'tis but one Alteration more added to many that had gone before: Only whereas those before had been made by the Clergy themselves, and rather yielded to, then approved of by our Princes; this last had the solemnity of the utmost Authority of the Nation to Confirm it; King, Convocation, and Parliament, All join'd to render the Establishment lasting and unquestionable.

Sect. 6.

Now the better to know what Influence that Act may have had in this respect; I would observe, 2dly, That according to this Author's own Account, the Convocations of the Clergy, at the time that that Statute was made, were not fix'd to the Sessions of the Parliament; nor therefore necessarily to be held Concurrently with it. At first, he says, they were held near the time the Laity met; afterwards with a Latitude; and some Time before the Reformation, they began to be HELD CONCURRENTLY with their Assemblies. When this State Reformation BEGAN, He does not precisely tell us; yet we may guess at it from what follows, where he says, that it was above an Age and half ago. Let us therefore suppose it to have been 170 Years; and so we shall bring it to the very Parliament which pass'd the Act of the Clergy's Submission: Or if that will not satisfy him, let us carry it yet twenty Years higher; and suppose it to have begun the 1st of King Henry the 8th, and that is within Nine Years of Two Ages past. But still this will not give give such an Authority to the Innovation, as to enable it to Limit the King's Prerogative; and make that necessary to King Henry the 8th, which neither in Law nor Fact, was either necessary to, or practised by any of his Predecessors.

To the Reign of King Henry the 8th, the Assembling of our Convocations was not determined, by his own Confession, to the Sessions of our Parliaments. They were actually Assembled at different Times from one another; and the King was the Judge, when to hold the One, and when the Other. If therefore the King had this Liberty then, I am sure neither the Act of Submission, nor any other Statute, has deprived him of it since. All that can be alledged must be resolved into the late Practise of an Age and half, (as this ¹ Gentleman says) for it: And whether that shall have such an Influence in this Case in Law, as to tie up the Kings Hand in the free Exercise of his Sovereign Authority; where both the Antient Custom is on his side, and the Parliament have plainly left him at Liberty; and that ever there was such a Custom at all, has been the meer result of the Royal Will and Pleasure, I may leave it to any One, who is never so moderately versed in our Laws, to determine.

But 3dly. If this Gentleman's Account be to be relied upon, not only the King's Authority is safe, but the Liberties of the Clergy too; and the Parliament have neither any Right to be so Attended by the Convocation as he requires; nor is the Convocation under any Necessity of Attending in such a manner upon the Parliament. And the reason of this is plain; because that when our Convocations were first Established, and the Constitution settled upon this Bottom, they were not Obliged to such an Attendance, nor did they, for two hundred Years after, by this Author's own Acknowledgement, thus attend upon it.

See 7.

Let us hear once more how he delivers this part of our History: These Parliamentary Conventions of the Clergy (says he) were held at first NEAR the TIME at which the Laity met: Afterwards with a Latitude; and so they continued 'till about an Age and half last past. In all that time therefore, from King Edward the First, to King Henry the Eighth, the Parliament and Convocation met at several times from one another; sometimes nearer, and sometimes at a greater Distance, and both as the King thought fit to order it.

I will not now be so importunate as to enquire how, nevertheless, this Gentleman makes the Convocation to have been all this while a Parliamentary Attendant. I would rather Ask, when the Convocation thus met, at a different time from the Parliament, had not the King and the Archbishop (One, or Both) a Legal Authority to Prorogue, or put an End to its Sessions, whenever they thought fitting? And did they not actually, all that time, do this at their Own Will? This Gentleman, I am sure, knows too much of the Acts of those Convocations not to know this to be true; and I hope he has too much Ingenuity to deny it.

The Convocation then, call it what you will, 'till about King Henry the Eighth's Time, had no such dependance upon the Parliament, but that the King could Assemble it when he pleased; and being Assembled, the Archbishop might, and did (as he saw good) Prorogue and Dissolve it; and that without any Manner of Restraint laid upon him by the Parliament, or any Other Person or Authority whatsoever in that particular. Now what Authority was before divided between the King and the Archbishop, that Act has vested intirely in the King alone. By Consequence from thenceforth, the King had the sole power of Calling, Proroguing, and Dissolving the Convocation: And all these in as free a manner as himself, and the Metropolitan together, before enjoy'd it. Since then before the making of that Act, they did together, Call, Prorogue, and Dissolve, the Convocation Absolutely, and without Controul; and that nothing does appear in that Act to limit this Authority; I must beg leave to conclude, 'till I shall be better inform'd, that the King may do the same by virtue of that Statute Now: And that the latter Custom of Calling or Dissolving it with the Parliament, has not at all abridged him of a Power, which both the more Antient Custom, does confessedly Establish; and the Act of Parliament, built upon that Custom, and to be Interpreted by it, does evidently favour.

Now that which makes such an Authority the more reasonable in this Case is, Fourthly, That herein the King claims no Power over the Convocation, but what is, without all Controversie, granted him over the Parliament. The Right of Calling, Proroguing, and Dissolving that Great Council, is confessedly in the Crown; and the Lords and Commons pretend not to deny it to him. Indeed as the Exi- gency of the state required it, the King was always under an Obligation of Conscience and Duty to his People, from time to time, to Call the Estates of the Realm together in Parliament. And to prevent the Inconveniences which have risen for the want of this, in some Reigns, a Law has been made, by which the King has consented to determine the Intervals not to exceed three Years. Nor is it deny'd but that the Case is the same in the business of Convocations; tho' no positive Law be made for any determinate Times of holding of Them. The King ought to Assemble them whenever there is any Real Business to be done by them; or that the Welfare of the Church or Realm, require the holding of them.

But how come the Clergy to have a greater Right in Law, as to this Matter, then the Laity? So that the King has not a Legal Power, whenever he sees fit, to Prorogue and Dissolve the Meetings of the One, as he confessedly has, to prorogue and Dissolve Those of the Other.

Divine Rights, in this Case, Convocations (as we are now agreed to understand them) have none; whatever the pure Ecclesiastical Synods of the Church may be supposed to have.

Ecclesiastical Rights are, upon the same Ground, Excluded too: Because these Assemblies were primarily design'd for State Purposes, not for Spiritual, or Ecclesiastical Affairs.

As for any Relation to, or Dependance upon the Sessions of Parliament, by our Constitution, this Gentleman's Own account has Excluded it. It being absurd to think that those Convocations which had no regard, as to the time of their sitting, proroguing, or dissolving, to the Parliament, for two hunder'd Years after their Institution, but were wholly at their Own Liberty to be Held, Adjourn'd, and Concluded at the Pleasure of the King and the Metropolitan; should by meer force of a late voluntary Custom, founded upon no Law, but meerly depending upon the Will of the Prince; be Confined by our Constitution, to the Times and Motions of a Body, to which, whatever Other Relation they had, yet they were not at all limited, or Concluded in their Meeting, or Acting by it.

In short, the Authority of the King in this particular, is by Act of Parliament vested in him. By that Act he enjoys it in the same freedom that it was, or might lawfully have been Exercised at the Time when that Act was made. At the time when that Act was made, the Convocation was not determined by any Law, or Custom, to Meet or Sit, at the same time, with the Parliament; much less to begin, and End its Sessions with it: So much this Gentleman himself allows. I Conclude therefore, that neither is the sitting of the Convocation limited to any such particular period now: But the King is at this Day as much at Liberty, both by the Antient Custom, and the Prerogative of the Crown, and by the Statute of the 25th of Henry the 8th, as if no such later Custom had ever been introduced. He may Call, Prorogue, and Dissolve the Convocation when he thinks good; only so as still to Attend to the Publick Good of the Church and Realm, and never to Refuse it the Liberty of Sitting and Acting, when the Interest of the One or Other shall call for it.

But that I may not seem to build Altogether on the Concessions of this Author, of the truth of which some may be apt to doubt; let me thus far anticipate, what I shall hereafter more particularly demonstrate, concerning the independence of the Sessions of our Convocations, upon those of the Parliament, at the time when the Statute of the 25th of Henry the 8th. c. 19. was made; as may suffice to confirm the force of my present Argument, and to carry it farther than Dr. A. I believe intended; by shewing that the one had no manner of dependance, in those days, upon the other; nor was in any wise limited to the Sessions of it.

King Henry the 7th came to the Crown, August 22. 1485, he called his Parliament the 7th of November following. It continued by Sessions and Prorogation to January the 23d after. Yet in all this time no Convocation, that I can possibly meet with, was held in either Province; nor do I believe that this Author, with all his Diligence, can shew that there was any.

About the End of the next Year, 1486, A Convocation was held in the Province of Canterbury, February the 13th. In that of York, February the 19th: But that Year no Parliament sat; and so here we have a solemn Convocation without a Parliament, as we had the Year before, a Sitting Parliament, without a Convocation.

more fully,
Chap. viii.

The next Year following, 1487. The Parliament sate November the 9th; but it sate again without any Attendance from the Clergy in Convocation: Who met not 'till January the 14th, 1488, a Year and Quarter after.

In 1488: The Parliament and Convocation of our Province met within a Day of each other; and they kept so equal a pace, that the latter out-sate the former but Four Days. But the Clergy gave so liberally, not only for that, but for the next Year too; that tho' the Parliament met again in October 1489; yet the King had no need to call the Convocation with it, and therefore held his Parliament, as before, without it.

In 1491. We find the next Assemblies of both these Bodies, but at such different times, as sufficiently shew the little dependance the one was thought to have in its Sessions upon the Other. The Convocation of Canterbury met June the 21st; The Parliament, October the 17th; And the Convocation of York the 1st of March following.

In 1495. The Parliament and Convocation kept a pretty Equal pace with one another: But then the next Year following, all was in disorder. The Parliament sate January the 16th. The Convocation of Canterbury a Week after, January the 23d. But at York they met not 'till May the 16th. After both the Parliament, and the other Convocation were risen.

In 1501. We hear of no Parliament; yet nevertheless find Two Convocations. In Canterbury, February the 14th. In York, February the 21st.

In 1503. King Henry the 7th held the last Parliament that I can find upon any of our Records. It met January the 25th; but the Convocation was not Assembled 'till February the 16th, in our Province; and in York, not 'till the 5th of August following.

After this, tho' we hear of no more Parliaments, yet two Years more we meet with Convocations, January the 23d, 1506, and February the 7th 1508. So that in all this Reign, 'tis evident, that there was no manner of Dependance acknowledged either in Law, or Fact, between these two Assemblies: But the King, at his pleasure, Summon'd both; and that without any regard to the holding of One, in his Convening of the Other.

Indeed, after this time, the Meetings of the Parliament, and Convocations, began to run more nearly together; but yet with such Interruptions as sufficiently argue the independance of the One upon the Other.

In 1511, and 1512. The Parliament and Convocation of the Province of Canterbury Assembled and Sate very near to one another. But then that at York was utterly different from both; which sufficiently proves the Concurrence of the other to have been matter of Choice in the King, and not of Necessity. The Parliament met February the 4th, 1511, and sate 'till about the First of April, 1512. The Convocation sate not 'till April the 26th after; and continued sitting 'till about June the 12th, from thence it was Prorogued to January 17, and so sate 'till February the 4th: But the Parliament met in the Interval, November the 4th, and began and ended within the time that the Other was adjourned.

In 1513. The same Parliament met by Prorogation, January the 23d: But the Convocation of Canterbury having granted Four Subsidies in their last meeting, 1512. and that of York two intire Tenths in theirs, and these being not yet paid, there was no occasion for calling the Clergy together this Year, and so we do not find that they were Assembled at all with the Parliament.

The next Year following, 1514. The Parliament met February 5. But our Convocation was held June the 22d, above Six Months before, when no Meeting of the Laity was Assembled.

In 1515. The Parliament and Convocation of Canterbury met near to one another, November the 12th and 13th. But the Convocation of York came not together 'till April the 9th, at which time neither the Parliament, nor the Other Convocation sate.

In short, the very Year that the Clergy made their Submission, upon which, the Act of the 25th of Henry the 8th, c. 19, was founded; the Parliament met by Prorogation, January the 15th. Yet the Convocation of York met not 'till above Three Weeks after, February the 7th. And the following Session (which immediately preceded that in which the Submission Act was pass'd) the Parliament sate down February the 4th. but the Convocation of our Province, by Order of the King's Writ, met not 'till Monday the 17th of March; seven Weeks after the Parliament began, and but Three before it Rose. This

This was the state of the Case, when the Act of Submission was made; and it plainly shews, what this Author has, in part, acknowledged to be most true; that in those days, the Convocations of the Clergy were under no manner of Obligation either of Law or Custom, to meet at the same time with the Parliament. The King called both at his Own Pleasure; and was under no Legal Restriction in the Exercise of his Royal Prerogative, in Assembling of either.

Sect. 10.

When therefore the Clergy agreed that their Convocations ought not to be held but in Obedience to the King's Writ, and the Parliament Enacted, that from thenceforth they should not be Assembled but by Vertue of it; and neither the One Stipulated, nor the other Decreed, that the King should be tied up to any certain times of issuing out his Writs for them: We must, in Conformity to the then allow'd Practice and Prerogative of the Crown, conclude, that they both design'd to leave the King to the same free Exercise of his Authority in this Particular, that his Predecessors Enjoyed; and which himself had as good a Title to, as any that went before him. By Consequence, that King Henry the 8th lay under no manner of Obligation, either by Custom, Statute, or the Constitution of our Government, either to Call a Convocation with every New Parliament, or to continue its Session as long as any such Parliament should sit. And then I shall leave it to the Gentlemen of the Long Robe to judge, whether the same Statute, still continuing in force, shall not convey the same Authority, in the same freedom, to his Successors; any later Custom, which is all that can be alledged to the contrary, in any Wise notwithstanding.

I Conclude then: That allowing every part of Dr. A's Scheme to be true; yet the King's Prerogative is not at all prejudiced, but on the contrary, is Confirmed by it: Because, that from thence it appears plainly, 1st. That the manner of Calling the Clergy to Convocation, was not by any Immemorial Custom, or fundamental Law of our Constitution, Setled and Established; but, that by their own Consent, and the Authority of the King and Parliament, the whole Power of Calling, Proroguing and Dissolving these Assemblies, might lawfully be put into the King's Hands. And 2dly, That when it was so Granted to him by Act of Parliament, it appears both from the general Words of the Statute of 25 H. 8. and the then prevailing Custom, and Practice in this particular; that the King had not before been limited in the Exercise of this Authority, nor was intended, either by the Clergy, or Parliament, to be any more limited in the Exercise of it for the time to come.

Sect. 11.

Having said thus much in Answer to this Gentleman's Second Argument in the general; to prove the King's Prerogative not to be at all abridged in this Case by our Own Laws, or Constitutions, any more then it was by the Canons of the Church: I shall now proceed here, as I did in the foregoing Chapter, to enquire into the Truth of his Allegations, and shew, that there is as little Fidelity in his History, as I think I have shewn, there is either Law or Consequence, in his Reasoning.

And for this I shall take the same Method, I pursued in my Other Discourse; and consider the Interest which the Clergy had in our Ecclesiastical or Civil Assemblies,

I. In the Saxon Times.

II. Under our Norman Princes, to the Reign of King Edward the 1st.

III. From the Reign of King Edward the First, to that of King Henry the Eighth. And

IV. From the Reign of King Henry the Eighth, to the present Parliament, and Convocation.

I. Of the SAXON Times.

Dr. A. having Enquired (as he words it) into the Rights of a Synod of the Province of Canterbury, at large; goes on, in the next place, to Consider It as an Attendant upon a Parliament of England. For so the matter, says he, at present, stands, and has stood for 400 Years, and upwards; to speak at the lowest: Tho' in the Elder Ages it plainly enough appears, That the Clergy came at Once from Both Provinces, and joined Nationally with the Lay Assembly. These are his Words, but I hope they are not his Meaning: Because, according to this Account, we must Conclude, that the Clergy of the Other Province, for these 400 Years past, have lost all their Relation

Relation to the Great Councils of the Realm. For so he tells us in the Elder Ages, The SAXON Times.
 the Clergy came from both Provinces, and join'd Nationally with the Lay-Assembly.
 But for 400 Years past, the Synod of the Province of CANTERBURY, has been the Attendant upon the Parliament; for 'tis of that, and that only, that he here speaks, and sets out to Us as the Subject of his following Considerations.

How our Brethren on the other side of Trent will like this, and a great many Other Passages hereafter to be consider'd; in which, I think they have been a little hardly dealt withal, I must leave it to them to determine. As for the present Period, in which they are, at least allowed to have had an Equal Right in these Assemblies with ourselves; his Assertion is elsewhere, thus: 'That thro'¹ Rights. p.
the Piety of our Saxon Ancestors, the Clergy were called to the Great Councils of the 215.
Realm, and made a CONSTANT, and NECESSARY PART of them. That being obliged so frequently to Attend (for Attendance has, from the Beginning, been the Right and Privilege of the Clergy) in that Capacity, they had neither Leisure nor Need, to Observe the set times of their Provincial Assemblies. The ordinary Business of these was dispatched at those State-Meetings, which were frequent, and gave the Clergy the Opportunity of an Easie Recourse to the Civil Power for a Confirmation of their Decrees. And this, by degrees, brought on a discontinuance of Provincial Synods, which from thence began to meet only on Great Emergencies, and for Extraorinary Occasions. Thus the Matter stood throughout the Saxon Times. But did not this Gentleman tell us in his First Chapter, That the Canons of the Church, which required Yearly Provincial Synods, were received here in the Saxon times?
That the 2 Council of Herudford, held, Anno 673, under Theodore, Archbishop of 2 Rights, p.
Canterbury, took care, not only to Establish the Practise for the future, but also to Affirm the Antient Usage?

This I am sure was his Assertion, when he argued from the Canons of the Church, and their Authority, in this Matter. But now the Case is alter'd; and this Author,³ after all his Outcry against Occasional Principles, gives us some ³ Ib. p. 217.
 Reason to think that he is no such Enemy, as he pretends to them. No, nor yet to Occasional Synods neither: ⁴ For such he Confesses our Provincial Councils ⁴ Ib. p. 215.
 were. All his Indignation is against Occasional Convocations; which for the Honour and Liberty of the Church, he would have not to be Occasionally Assembled, when there is any Business for them to do; but to be Constant, and Necessary Attendants, tho' they have nothing to do but to Attend: A Privilege that I believe no other Body would Contend for; nor if we should get it, ought any to Envy it to Us.

But not to insist upon past Assertions: His present Position is this, That in the Saxon Times, the Clergy were called to the Great Councils of the Realm, and made a CONSTANT, and Necessary Part of them. Will he stand to his Point, as he now states it? Why truly no: That was a Round and full Assertion, and very proper for the Fifth Chapter, where he had a particular Use to make of it.
But in the Sixth, he had either been better informed, or he thought himself con-cern'd to speak more warily to this Matter. And therefore there, it amounts to no more then this: 'That the Inferior Clergy were then Oftentimes; Called ⁵ Rights, p. to the great Councils of the Realm. Now if they were only Called Oftentimes, 277, 278.
 I think that will imply, that Sometimes they were not Called: And this may lead on a farther Question, whether they were not Oftentimes Omitted, and only Sometimes Called. But however, if they were but Oftentimes Called, even that shews that they were no Constant, and Necessary, part of those Councils, as he before affirmed them to have been.

Let us hear how this Author again explains himself as to this Matter. ⁶ Not ⁶ Rights. p.
that I believe them (the Inferior Clergy) to have had Place in All, (even the most 285.
Ordinary, and stated) Assemblies, but only in the Greater, and more Extraordinary Ones. The Wittena-Gemots, and Mycel Synods, the Magna Concilia, and Pleni-Folcmoti, which are plainly distinguished from the Less Solemn, and Numerous Councils; and which met together only Ex Arduis contingentibus, & legum Condendarum Gratia, as Sir H. Spelman Observes. What would this Author make us believe Sir H. Spelman Observes, That the Wittena Gemots, and Folcmots were all One? Or that the Pleni Folcmoti were Assembled legum Condendarum gratia?
Or that the Inferior Clergy sate in those Greater Assemblies? So it might be mistaken; and possibly it was design'd to be so understood.

But

The SAXON
Times.

¹ Spelman.
Glossar. Voca Gemotum
p. 261. a

But that Learned Gentleman spake not at such a Rate. He absolutely distinguishes between the Wittena-Gemot, and the Folc-mot: And what he says Relates to the former, as One great thing wherein it differed from the Latter: ¹ A Wittena-Gemot (says he) was the same among the English Saxons that "Parliament is" with us at this Day: and it differed but little from a Folc-mot, but that this Latter was Annual, and commonly held for Certain Affairs; whereas the Other was called at the Pleasure of the Prince, Ex arduis Contingentibus, & legum condendarum Gratia.

And now, at least, One would think he should stick by his Assertion, that to these Wittena-Gemots, tho' not to the Less Solemn, and Numerous Councils, the Inferior Clergy, were OFTENTIMES Called. But how then Does he vouch ² Mr. Sherringham for the same Opinion; and affirm his Authority to be "A strong presumption of the Truth of what he has offered on this Argument. For Mr. Sherringham does not come up to his OFTENTIMES; but Sometimes, and very Seldom, are his Expressions. "In the Saxon times (says he) Laws were COMMONLY made by the "Approbation, and Consent of the Nobles, Arch-Bishops, and Bishops, in a Publick Synod, or Parliament. SOMETIMES the Queen was present; SOMETIMES the INFERIOR CLERGY; and Sometimes also the Commons; but that happened VERY SELDOM. So that if this at last should be Dr. A's Sense; it will follow that he looks upon the Inferiour Clergy to have been a part of these Councils only as the Queen, and Commons were; they Came to them SOMETIMES, but VERY SELDOM.

And, indeed it must be confes'd, that this agrees much better with his Proofs, than any Other Hypothesis: For thus the Abbeſſes, whom he also makes a part of the same Great Councils, in the Subscriptions to his Charters, (and is so kind as to continue in this State till after the time of King John) may also have been SOMETIMES Attendants upon them. And I do verily believe that he is thus far in the right, that they were both Equally Members of them.

35. 296.

The Truth is, this Author as he does not very Well know by what Right the Inferior Clergy came to these Great Councils, so neither is he at all Concern'd in that Particular. Let them but Come, and 'tis all one to him, in what Capacity, or for what Ends they came to them. Now this has Engaged him in some very Odd Methods of bringing them to these Assemblies. In one Place he calls them thither as Knights Spiritual; and tells us that upon this Account they had a Right, no less then the Knights Temporal, to Attend upon the King in Parliament. And this gives them a Right, not as Clergy-Men, but as Knights; or, at most, as Knights Spiritual: And Entitles only those to a Place there, who had the ³ 4711. Knights Fees, which for that End he has vested in our Parochial Churches; to whom the Conquerour never reached out any such Bounty.

⁴Ib. pag. 290.

In Another Place, ⁴ he brings them there under a Meaner Capacity, as the King's Retinue; by the same Right that the Gentleman Ushers and Pages, come sometimes to Parliament; and yet, I believe do not Imagine that they are thereby made any Proper Members of it.

That which I insist on (says he) is, that the Attestations and stile of these Charters make it manifest, that MANY of the Lower Clergy had place in those Great Councils which confirmed them: How, or in what Capacity, They were summoned thither, Whether as Representing any Part of the Spirituality; Or, as the King's immediate Servants, and Dependants, (his Hand-Priests, and hired Clercs, as the Capellani, and Presbyteri Regis, are in the Saxon Chronicle, oddly called) is another Enquiry which it is not very Easie, nor very Necessary at present to determine. So that this Gentleman does not affirm that the Inferior Clergy came either Always, Oftentimes, or Sometimes, to these Councils, as Representatives of any part of the Spirituality; (that is a Point neither Easie, nor Necessary, to be determined) all that he affirms, is, That some of them there were present at those Councils in which his Charters were subscribed: How they came thither, Or what they did there, he neither Knows, nor Cares. So little a Colour had this Author, for what he so Confidently Asserted before, that the Clergy were called to the great Councils of the Realm, and made a Constant and Necessary Part of them.

But he has not yet done with his Restrictions: For, as if this were not enough to destroy all that he had before been Establishing; he proceeds to bring their Interest of Acting in those Great Assemblies as low, as he has at last done their Right of Coming to them. ⁵ Nor do I suppose, says he, that the Clergy-Men of Lower-Rank call'd to these full Conventions, treated Always as freely, and acted as Authoritatively, as the Constant and Standing Members did: Treated ALWAYS as freely; That implies however that they sometimes did; and then a Question will arise, how they came to Treat so freely sometimes? Whether by any Right that they had so to do; or only by the Consent or Allowance of the Constant and Standing Members. No, I take them, as to this, to have been much in the same Case with the Inferior Laity, who are said Oftentimes to have been present at such Great Councils; and to have Consented to, and Approved what was done there; but not often to have Deliberated or Determined; just as the Lesser Members of the German Colloquia, or Synods (the Patterns of our English Ones) are represented by Hincmar to have interposed in them.

The SAXON Times.

The Business therefore of the Inferior Clergy, when they came to these Assemblies, was to Consent and Approve, not to Deliberate or Determine. That was to be done by the constant and standing Members; and all the Others had to do, was but to consent to what had been Resolved by them. But what if they did not Approve, and therefore did not Consent? Could they, by their Dissent, rescind what the Other Members had Determined? That he has not told Us; unless perhaps we may find it in the Account which Hincmarus gives of the German Colloquia, or Synods, the Patterns, as he tells us, of our English ones.

Let us therefore see how he reports Hincmarus's Relation of these Colloquia or Synods; as this Gentleman styles them; (for his Author no where Calls them so, but by their proper Name Placita:) Why first for the Persons; ¹ Generalitas (says he) Universorum, tam Clericorum quam Laicorum, Conveniebat. Seniores (that is the Magnates, whether Counts, or Bishops) propter Consilium Ordinandum: Minores (that is the Lesser Barons, and Inferior, but Qualified, Clergy) propter idem suscipiendum, & interdum pariter tractandum, & non ex potestate, sed ex proprio mentis Intellectu vel Sententia Confirmandum.

I wish this Author had told us what Edition of Hincmarus he made use of: For I can hardly persuade my self that he could have been guilty of so wretched a Misrepresentation of that Author, and these Councils, had he not been misled by some very faulty Copy, that utterly spoiled the whole Relation of them. In these great Assemblies, or Placita, Generalitas Universorum tam Clericorum quam Laicorum conveniebat, says Dr. A—— But ² Hincmarus says quite another thing; Generalitas Universorum MAJORUM: The PROCERES, as he calls them, Cap. 34. And more particularly, Cap. 35. where he makes this Division of them; Episcopi, Abbates, vel hujusmodi Honorificentiores Clerici, for the Ecclesiastical; and Comites vel hujusmodi Principes, for the Lay-part, of these Councils. Shall I give it him, more plainly, in the Relation of his own ³ Marca: They consisted then, according to his Epitome of this very Relation, Ex Episcopis & Abbatibus & Comitibus Regni. These were All the Members, who had any part in those Councils.

But what then shall we say to ⁴ His Seniores, and Minores? If you will take de Marca's Interpretation, they are the Antiquiores, and Juniores, of these Great Counsellors. ⁵ Arumaus, thinks rather that they were the greater and lesser of the Majores before mentioned: The One, the Prelates and Nobles; the Other, the Judges and Magistrates; whom he also takes in under the General Name of Majores. The Account of Hincmarus will admit of either of these: And 'tis no great matter, as to our present purpose, which of them we pitch upon. ⁶ He tells us that two Solemn Councils were held every Year. One a General Assembly, to which all the Majores, or Great Men, Temporal and Spiritual, were called. The other more select; consisting only Ex senioribus, & precipuis Consiliariis; of the more Aged, and honourable Counsellors. But whether Seniores or Minores, they were still of the Generalitas MAJORUM; no Others were called to these Assemblies; no Others (unless perhaps some of the King's Ministers of State, in the Lesser Council) were admitted to them.

⁵ De Comitibus cap. 4. num. 5, 6, 7.

⁶ Hincmar. loc. cit.

It is Evident then, that all this Gentleman's Dream of the Inferior Clergy, is not only precarious, but is directly Contrary both to his Own Author, and to his allowed Interpreter of him. The Over-sight, or Omission, of the Principal Word MAJORUM in his Copy of Hincmarus, misled him; and we will suppose his de Marca might not be at hand to set him right.

But to allow for his Mistake in the Persons who came to these Meetings: This, at least, must be agreed, that the Power of these Younger or Lesser Counsellors, is rightly represented by him. They came to Receive what the Others had de-terminated; and were sometimes asked their Opinion about it: And they Confirm'd it, not by way of Authority, but by their concurrent Judgment, or Reasons; ¹ They spake, (says de Marca) sometimes but only to give their Opinion, not to Exercise any Right of Voting with the Others. They were first to learn, and be trained up to the Affairs of State; before they were admitted to any Authoritative share in them.

This was the Case of the German Polity under Charles the Great, so this Author styles it; but that Emperour, who ought the best to know his Own Title, every where calls himself ² King of France and Italy. ³ Eginhard the Writer of his Life, and his Contemporary, speaks of him all along, as King of the Franks. In the Preamble to his Will, which that Historian has preserved a Copy of, the Date is Regni ejus in Francia, 43; in Italia, 36; Imperii xi. In his Epitaph, it is said, that Regnum Francorum Nobiliter ampliavit, & per Annos 47 feliciter tenuit. Adelmus, or whoever else Wrote the Lives of Pepin, Charles the Great, and Ludovicus Pius, calls his Works the Annals of the French Kings: And tho' it is not deny'd, but that his Empire reached to the greatest part of Germany at the last, and from the Death of his Brother, took in those parts of it which belonged to the Kingdom of Austrasia; yet even that was, in those days, look'd upon as a part of France, and took its denomination from it; as one Province of it Continues to do at this Day. This I was willing to Observe, not as a Matter of any great Consequence, but to justify my Own Expression, in treating of those Councils, from which this Author thought fit to recede; whether for the greater Accuracy of Language, with relation to those times, I shall leave it to the Reader to Judge.

But because this ⁴ Gentleman, tho' he has not thought fit to own from whence he took both his Subject, and the Authors he makes use of in the pursuit of it, has yet been so unusually Obliging as to approve the Method I propos'd of, clearing the nature of our Own Ancient Government, by Comparing it with that of the French in those Days; I will thus far endeavour to gratifie his Curiosity, as to set that Matter in a somewhat clearer Light, and shall leave it to him to make what Advantage he can of it, in the present Argument against me.

The first ground of a Settlement of the ⁵ Government in France, was laid by Pepin, in the Synod of Soissons, as I before observed; but of which this Author has not thought fit to take any notice. He set forth his Statutes, cum Consilio Episcoporum, & Optimatum Regni, as de Marca Expresses it: To which the last Canon of the Council adds, Cum aliis Sacerdotibus sive Servis Dei; which the same Learned Person rightly understands of the Regular Prelates, who were wont to be Called to these Assemblies; and who therefore may reasonably be presumed to have been present at this Council.

What was thus begun in his Parliament at Soissons, he much improved a few Years after in the ⁶ Council of Vernis: Hither he called almost all the Bishops of France; but that any of the Inferior Clergy were present, it does not appear. And here that provision was made, of which this Author has given us but an imperfect and erroneous Account; not that two National Ecclesiastical Synods should be held every Year, but two Assemblies; One Royal, in the presence of the King; the Other Ecclesiastical, either at Soissons (of which he takes no Notice) or at such other Place as the Bishops, at the other Council, should agree. Of this, de Marca gives such Proofs, as seem to determine the point; and thus the Learned ⁸ Steph. Baluz. in his Annotations upon this Canon, expounds it from him.

The Former of these Assemblies was appointed to be held on the First of March. ⁹ This was after by Pepin's Son (says Dr. A.) appointed to meet on the First of May. I doubt this Gentleman has here again mistaken his Author; who expressly says, that this Change was made not by Pepin's Son, but by Pepin himself: And to him ¹⁰ Fredegar plainly ascribes it, who Ends his Chronicon with the Father, and to him ascribes this Change, as de ¹¹ Marca has rightly observed from him.

To the Second of these ¹² Synods, which was properly Ecclesiastical, Those Bishops whom he had set in the stead of Metropolitans, were required to Come; and with them such Other Bishops, Abbots, and Presbyters, (unless we should rather expound it ¹³ Abbots, or Presbyters) as those Metropolitans Bishops should appoint to meet with them.

This was the last Establishment of Pepin: Where this ¹⁴ Author finds, under that Prince, His other Royal, but Privy Council, consisting only of the Great Ministers

Ministers, and such others as the King thought fit to Call, I am yet to seek: And I doubt he himself will be no less puzzled to inform me.

The next Advance which was made in this Country towards the Settlement of the Government of it, was by Charles the Great. Of this, some Account has been given already; but I shall now be more particular, because that Dr. A. either knew very little of it, or was not willing that Others should.

And First, as his ¹ Father before had done, he Establish'd two Solemn Meetings every Year. The Former consisted of the Bishops, and Abbots, and Peers of the Realm. In it, all the Political Estate was settled for the Year following. The Latter consisted of the most Antient of these, to whom were joined some of the Prince's Council. In this, they digested and concluded upon such Matters as were to be proposed in the next General Meeting: They Order'd such incidental Affairs, as would not admit of Delay; as Matters of War and Peace; and some others of the like kind.

In these Conventions, but especially in the General One, Constitutions were made both concerning Ecclesiastical, and Civil Affairs. The King proposed the Heads which he would have them to deliberate upon; which having done, the Elder, and more experienced, determined; and the Younger Consented to their Determination. Which being over, the Result of their Debates was laid before the Prince, who finally gave Authority to what he approved of them.

In these Conventions, according as the Matter which was to be treated of required, so a Difference was observed in debating upon it. The Bishops and Abbots, met apart from the Laity. The Lords and Nobles were Divided from the Other Laity, by the Honourable Seats that were prepared for them. Sometimes they voted separately from one another, and sometimes together, as the Nature of the Cause required; whether it were Spiritual, Secular, or of a Mix'd kind.

This is the Account which de Marca, out of Hincmarus, gives of these General Meetings: Let us see how this agrees with the Observations of Other Learned Men concerning them.

And 1st, For the Persons who met in the Councils, (the main thing in Dispute betwixt us) de Marca tells us, they were on the Spiritual Part, Bishops and Abbots; on the Secular, the Comites and Optimates, the Great Men of the Realm. And so ² Monsieur Baluze, a Person excellently well versed in these Matters, tells us after him. They were the Fideles Regis; or, as sometimes they are called, Populus; not, says he, any Common Persons, but the Principes, Optimates, Proceres, and Capita Populi: And whom he meant by these, we may see more expressly a little after; where having alledged some Places out of the Capitulars, in proof of his Assertion, he concludes thus; It is evident therefore, that to these Conventions, there came the Bishops, and other Fideles, that is to say, Abbots, Dukes, Earls, and the like.

To this, as to the Ecclesiastical part, ³ Arumens agrees: And his Authorities for it are such, as clearly shew, that neither the Lesser Clergy, nor the Lower Laity, were wont to come to these Assemblies. ⁴ Eginhard, a Contemporary, and Exact Author, calls them, Primores de toto Regno: Another, Primores & Comites. A Third adds, the Magistratus to them, and that agreeably to ⁵ Hincmarus's Relation; who (in like manner) Entitles the Chief Officers of the Palace, and Council to a part in them. A Fourth makes particular Mention of the Ecclesiasticks; Convenerant (says he) multi Episcopi, Abbates, & Principes, ad Imperialem Synodum Vocati. But for Dr. A's Inferiour, but qualifi'd Clergy-Men, I do not know any one Author, that so much as occasionally takes them into these Meetings.

I might enlarge these Proofs by the Authorities of many other Writers, as well Antient, as Modern: But I shall mention only one more, the Learned ⁶ Monsieur du Fresne, whose Quotations (quite different from the most of those whom I have hitherto alledged) all speak the same thing. Dagobert held his Placitum with his Sons, Omnibusque totius Regni Primatibus. Charles the Great his cum Ducibus; says the Saxon Poet: Or as another, more fully, Congregata non minima Coadunatione Episcoporum, summae Autoritatis Virorum, multorum quoque illustrium Procerum, seu quam plurimorum Nobilium. These were the Persons of whom those Meetings consisted; No others mention'd to have come to them.

⁶ Lower degree, sitting by themselves, and on honourable Seats. That these only managed the Debates, and formed the Conclusions; the Commoners assenting and sometimes speaking, but so as rather to signify their Opinion, than give a Vote. And may we not suppose this to have been the Method also on the spiritual side? No, ⁸ de Marca says no such thing, but rather the direct contrary. For he says that these Assemblies consisted only of the Optimates: Those he divides into Antiquiores, and Juniores; and of the Juniores, or younger Lords, he speaks what Dr. A. very unfairly applies to his Commoners.

As for their sitting by themselves in these Councils on honourable Seats, and their being distinguished thereby from those of a lower Degree, that too is another Mistake of this Author. That which de Marca says is this; that the Bishops and Abbots Assembled apart from the Laity. That each had their proper Curia, or Council-Chamber prepared for them. That the Lords and Great Men, were distinguished from the Other Laity, Subsellis honorificabiliter preparatis. ¹ But who were these Other Laity? Were they Dr. A's Commoners? No, but they were the King's Ministers, and Counsellors; who, he tells us, were admitted to the Second, or Lesser of these Assemblies; but sat below the great Lords in them.

Now this ² Hincmarus more plainly shews: He tells us N. 30. That this Placitum, or Great Council, was held, cum Senioribus (the Chief of the Majores before mentioned) et principis Consiliariis. That these Counsellors were chosen out of either Clergy or Laity, N. 31. That the three Great Officers of the Court, the Apocrisarius or Capellanus, the Palatii Custos, and Camerarius, were always present at them. That if any of the Other Officers of the Court, seem'd to be Men of parts, and fit to be taken hereafter into the Council, they were Ordered to be present, and so trained up, to a Capacity and Readiness for Publick Affairs, N. 32.

But indeed if I take the Sense of that ³ Author aright; there is another meaning than what de Marca seems to have understood in his Relation. He says, that the Lords, the Proceres, as he calls them, and Chief Counsellors, primi Senatores Regni, who were called to these Assemblies, debated one, two, or three days by themselves, or more, if need required; no stranger who was not of the Council coming near, or mixing with them, 'till they had finished their Debates; and made their Report to the Prince.

The Lords and Counsellors thus assembled for Debate, he calls ⁴ Segregati, with respect to the many others of all kinds, who had no part in the Assembly, but yet usually came at that time to the Court; and with whom, in the mean while, the Prince passed his Time. Whenever these Lords desired it, the Prince was wont to come to them, to hear the result of their Debates: And when he did so, then, I suppose, that the Reliqua Multitudo, which attended upon him, were also admitted into the Assembly. And for this a place was prepared of such Capacity, ubi et in abundanter segregati semotim, & Cetera Multitudo (who were wont upon these Occasions, to crowd in) seperatim residere potuissent: But 'till then no Inferiores persone interesse potuissent.

This I take to have been the true meaning of Hincmarus as to this Matter: Whether herein I am mistaken or not, thus much is evident, that the Members of these two Assemblies were no other than these: The Bishops, Abbots, and Majores of the Laity, of the One; and the Seniores and Consilarii of the Other Council. Only to the Latter, some of the Court Officers were permitted to Come, not as proper Members of the Council, but to hear and learn, and be trained up thereby to become, in time, the more useful Members of it.

Having thus accounted for the Persons of whom these Councils were composed, let us enquire, ^{2dly}, What kind of Affairs were treated of in them, and how they proceeded in the handling of them.

As for the former of these, the Affairs which were treated of in these Conventions; they were, in General, the Great Affairs of the State. ⁵ In the Latter of them, which met in Autumn, the State of the Whole Kingdom was settled for the Year following; and what was then Established, nothing but an Absolute and Extreme Necessity could Change. In the former, held about the Beginning of May, they prepared Matters for the following Assembly; Consider'd what would be proper to be proposed to it, or determined in it. And if any Matters fell out, which required a present Resolution, and could not be Deferr'd to the General Meeting, they here came to a determination concerning them.

In these Assemblies, the ¹ King enquired into the State of his Dominions; and was inform'd by those who came together from every quarter, what was doing, or what had happened; or whether any thing needed to be considered; or reform'd in any part of them.

Of these ² Affairs some were purely Civil; Others Meerly Ecclesiastical, and others of a mix'd Nature; such as indifferently concern'd both the Church and State. ³ Of the First, the Laity alone debated; of the Second, the Ecclesiasticks; of the Third, both; first apart, and then together; and the Resolutions which they came to in any of these, were still laid before the Prince, who had the last Judgment of all; and either ratified, or disannulled what they had agreed of.

In debating upon these Matters, they usually took this Method: ⁴ First, the Prince laid before them the Heads on which they were to Deliberate. Then he left them alone to consider of them. This they did so long as they thought necessary: And having given notice to him that they were agreed in their Opinions, he came to their Assembly, and there either Approved, or Disallowed of them.

But that which I would chiefly Observe, in these Councils is, after what manner, and by what Authority, Ecclesiastical Matters were transacted in them. Now of that we have a clear Account in the ⁶ Council of Soissons, under King Pepin, Anno 744. The Articles of which relating to Ecclesiastical Matters, are said to have been made ⁷ by Twenty three Bishops, together with other Priests, or Servants of God (the Regular Prelates) with the Consent of the Prince and Counsel of the Lords. The Clergy therefore passed them; the Lords approved of them; and the King gave the Authority of Laws to them.

cap. x.

The same may be Concluded from the Account we have of the Capitular of Charles the Bald, Anno 846. The Metropolitans and their Suffragan Bishops, ⁸ had agreed upon certain Canons, which they thought proper for the Reformation of the Church; and offer'd them to the Prince, as he had commanded them, to be publickly read in Council before him. But the Prince being raised into a heat against them, and the Lords disapproving of some things which they had determined, they removed the Bishops out of the Council, and selected out of their Canons such only as they approved of, and delivered them in Writing to them; telling them that they had Accepted no more of their Definitions but those; and that those, they had agreed with the Prince, to Observe.

Thus they concluded in Matters Ecclesiastical; ⁹ The Bishops first Debated by themselves concerning them: Being come to a Resolution, their Definitions were Read before the King and his Lords. If the Lords Advised, and the King Approved, they became Capitulars, or Laws; Otherwise they were laid aside, as rejected, and of no Force.

If the Matters were of a mixed Nature, then both parts of the Council Debated, or at least Agreed first together concerning them; And by their joint Advice and Consent, they were Established by the Prince. This was the Case of the Convention at ¹⁰ Quierzy, about Eleven Years after, under the same Prince: Who therefore calls that Meeting by the double Title, Synodum venerabilium Episcoporum, ac Conventum fidelium: And says, that with these he had consulted, among other Affairs relating at once to the Benefit of the Church, and the necessity of the Realm, about the Points which there follow, and with their Advice had Decreed, as we see, concerning them.

They tell us, that about the 1st of October, Louis the King held a General Council (placitum) at Mentz. And so go on to declare First the State Affairs that were transacted there, and then the Conviction of Goteschall in it. And the only Reconciliation that can be made between these different Relations is this; that the Emperour at that time held his Great Council at Mentz; and the Archbishop, at the same time, Summon'd a Synod, by the Emperour's Command, to meet there. The same Persons were Cited by a double Authority, for a double End; by the Emperour to his Civil Council, by the Archbishop to a Church-Synod.

lib. 4. cap. 33.

This was so strictly Observed, that tho' the Bishops were come together to the State-Council, yet if they wanted their Ecclesiastical Summons, they refused to Act as a proper Church-Synod at such times as they had not been regularly premonish'd so to do. A notable Instance of which we meet with in ¹ Flodoard, in the Dispute between Artaldus and Hugo, concerning the Bishoprick of Rhemes. The two Kings, Louis and Otho, held their Council at the River le Cher. The Cause was brought before the Bishops who were Assembled there upon the Occasion of the Other Meeting. But, says the Historian, because a Synod was not then held, the Controversy could not be Determined; but was deferr'd to a Synod to be held for that purpose, about the Middle of November following.

² Capitular.
101. 102.

It is true, it seems to have been the usual Custom for the Bishops to have an Ecclesiastical Summons, as well as a Civil Call to these Meetings; and that the One, issued out from the Metropolitans, almost as regularly as the Other did from the Prince: Insomuch that when ² King Louis sent to the Bishops of the Provinces of Rhemes and Roan, to come to one of these Councils before him, vii. Kal. Decembr. there to treat with him and the rest of the Fideles of those parts, concerning the Restoration of Holy Church, and the State and Welfare of the Christian People; among other Excuses which they made to put off their Attendance, they alledged this as One of the Chief; that it was forbidden by the Canons of the Church, that either the Archbishops, without their Com-Provincial Bishops, or they without their Archbishops, should presume to meddle with any thing, but what belonged to their own proper Diocesses. And that in so short a time as he had named, it was not possible for them to have their Mandatory Letters from their Archbishops to go to that Convention.

This was their Excuse; and tho' 'tis plain, they would otherwise have declined going at that time to the Council, yet this we may Conclude from the Reason here alledged by them in their Defence, that they were wont to have their Archbishops Mandates, as well as their King's Writs, for these Assemblies; and thought they could not Regularly Act as a Synod, on those Occasions, without them.

I shall add but one thing more, and so have done with these Foreign Councils: That, as in the State-Conventions, 'tis plain that the Inferior Clergy had no place; so neither were they yet Called, to the proper ³ Church-Synods, which consisted only of the Bishops; and (sometimes) of the Regular Prelates; as I have, in part, already shewn, and might further prove, were it needful to insist upon it.

The result of what has been said, upon this Point, is this: That it does not appear that any of the Inferior Clergy were wont to be Called to the Great Councils of the Realm in France; on the contrary, it is plain, that they had not any Place in them, unless it were by Vertue of some Office which they held at Court, upon the Account of which they were allow'd to be present at them. If therefore these Councils were, in effect, of the same Nature with our own Wittena Gemots, so that we may rationally argue from the Constituent Members of the One, to those of the Other; then we must Conclude that the Lower Clergy, were not only not Always, and Necessarily, summon'd to them, as he sometimes affirms; nor yet Oftentimes called, as he elsewhere Discourses; but were not at all Admitted to them as proper Members; tho' possibly they might now and then be there as the Queen, or any Others of the Laity might be; which is all that Mr. Sherringham affirms, or that, I believe, can truly be said in this Case.

pag. 31.

Let us see How Dr. A. applies the History of these Councils, to the Illustrating, if not to the Determining of the Nature of our Own. "Much after the same manner (says ⁴ he) I suppose were the mix'd Meetings, [the Wittena Gemots] of our Saxon Kings held. "They were Called by the same Name: They were Compos'd of the same Persons: The Spiritual and Temporal part of the Convention consulted together, or asunder, as they saw Occasion; were Convened

“vened in like manner twice a Year; and One of those Meetings was fixed to the Calends of May, as it was in Germany: To this all the Proceres Regni, & Miletēs, & Liberi homines Universi totius Regni Britannia resorted; and it was stiled plenus Folcmote; and distinguished from the Other Folcmote, where only the Episcopi, Principes, and Comites were present.

The SAXON Times.

The Members also of our Saxon Councils were alike distinguished into such as had Right of Suffrage and Subscription, and such as were present, chiefly, in Order to Approve.

The same Distinction, doubtless, there was between their manner of Attending those Great Councils. Which he shews to have been also much the same with that of the Inferior Laities, and Clergy's, Attending the like Conventions abroad.

It cannot be denied, but that if all these Circumstances can be made out, the Antient Gallican Placita, and our Saxon Wittena Gemots, must have been very like to One another. To say nothing to the Names, the least Material of all these Observations; and for which this Author stands accountable to another ¹ Learned Writer. The main point of all is the next; whether they were Composed of the same Persons? Dr. A. Affirms it, and I am clearly of the same Opinion: And do therefore conceive, that as I have plainly shewn the Lower Clergy (as such) not to have been Constituent Members of the One, so neither were they of the Other.

But Dr. A. is against me in both: And therefore as he before gave his Inferior, but Qualify'd Clergy, a Place, tho' not a Suffrage, in the Great Councils of the Realm of France; so now he is no less liberal in bestowing an Equal Right upon them in our Saxon Gemots. ² He tells us, that there sate the Bishops, Counts, &c. and there Attended the Lesser Thanes, and their Equals, the Priests, &c. And for this we must take his Word; for, at present, he does not so much as offer at any Proof of it. Let us therefore go on.

² Rights, p. 30.

In these Councils, the Spiritual and Temporal part of the Convention Consulted together, or asunder, as they saw occasion: This ³ I have agreed to as to those abroad, and had before offer'd as my Conjecture, with Relation to our Own here at home. I alledged the Council in which Ethelstan made his First Laws, in Proof of it; and had before Produced that of ⁴ Aenham to the same purpose.

But Dr. A. who always affects to be an Original, and not to Write out of any Man's Second-hand Collections, resolved to take his own Method. Instead of the Council of Aenham, which was indeed a State-Council; he pitches on that of Cloveshoe, which was as plainly a Church-Synod: And for Ethelstan's Laws, he refers to Sir Henry Spelman's Glossary; I suppose as a more Authentick Record than either the Laws themselves, or Brompton's Version of them: And for both which I refer him to the ⁵ Censure of a more learned Writer, who has justly call'd him to Account for both.

These Councils, he says, were call'd twice a Year by a Law of King Alfred's, and One of these Meetings was fix'd (if not in his time, yet afterwards) to the Calends of May, as it was in Germany. That King Alfred appointed Parliaments to meet twice in the Year, is, I confess, reported in the Mirror of Justices; and to him, and to his Authority only, Dr. A. refers us for it. Of what Credit such a Relation ought to be, in a Matter wherein not only the Laws of King Alfred, but all our Antient Historians are silent, it is not difficult to determine. In the mean time, let me ask this Gentleman, with Relation to his own Authority; will he be content to be concluded in this Matter by it? ⁶ If he will, then the Persons who Constituted King Alfred's Parliaments, were only the Great Men of the Realm; Comites Congregari fecit, says Horn, to these two Parliaments; and I see no Reason why his Authority should not be as great for the Persons of which these Councils consisted, in which our Antient Authors are generally of his side; as for the Times of their Assembling, in which, for ought I know, he stands alone, without so much as any One Writer before him to support his Allegation.

⁶ Mir. loc. cit.

It is a happy Talent to be able to improve a Good Hint. The Mirror had found out a Law for two yearly Parliaments in the time of King Alfred; and Dr. A. has discovered the very Day on which one of them was, by Law, to meet. One of these Meetings (says he) was fix'd, if not in Alfred's time, yet afterwards, to the Calends of May, as it was in Germany. Debent Populi omnes & Gentēs Universæ, singulis Annis convenire. scil. in Capite Calendarum Maii; say the Laws of Edward the Confessor. But to what ought they to come together; to a Wittena Gemot, or, National Parliament? So this Gentleman would have it thought; but I will venture to say, he knew the contrary himself: And I shall leave

This was the state of the Case, when the Act of Submission was made; and it plainly shews, what this Author has, in part, acknowledged to be most true; that in those days, the Convocations of the Clergy were under no manner of Obligation either of Law or Custom, to meet at the same time with the Parliament. The King called both at his Own Pleasure; and was under no Legal Restriction in the Exercise of his Royal Prerogative, in Assembling of either.

Sect. 10.

When therefore the Clergy agreed that their Convocations ought not to be held but in Obedience to the King's Writ, and the Parliament Enacted, that from thenceforth they should not be Assembled but by Vertue of it; and neither the One Stipulated, nor the other Decreed, that the King should be tied up to any certain times of issuing out his Writs for them: We must, in Conformity to the then allow'd Practice and Prerogative of the Crown, conclude, that they both design'd to leave the King to the same free Exercise of his Authority in this Particular, that his Predecessors Enjoyed; and which himself had as good a Title to, as any that went before him. By Consequence, that King Henry the 8th lay under no manner of Obligation, either by Custom, Statute, or the Constitution of our Government, either to Call a Convocation with every New Parliament, or to continue its Session as long as any such Parliament should sit. And then I shall leave it to the Gentlemen of the Long Robe to judge, whether the same Statute, still continuing in force, shall not convey the same Authority, in the same freedom, to his Successors; any later Custom, which is all that can be alledged to the contrary, in any Wise notwithstanding.

I Conclude then: That allowing every part of Dr. A's Scheme to be true; yet the King's Prerogative is not at all prejudiced, but on the contrary, is Confirmed by it: Because, that from thence it appears plainly, 1st. That the manner of Calling the Clergy to Convocation, was not by any Immemorial Custom, or fundamental Law of our Constitution, Setled and Established; but, that by their own Consent, and the Authority of the King and Parliament, the whole Power of Calling, Proroguing and Dissolving these Assemblies, might lawfully be put into the King's Hands. And 2dly, That when it was so Granted to him by Act of Parliament, it appears both from the general Words of the Statute of 25 H. 8. and the then prevailing Custom, and Practice in this particular; that the King had not before been limited in the Exercise of this Authority, nor was intended, either by the Clergy, or Parliament, to be any more limited in the Exercise of it for the time to come.

Sect. 11.

Having said thus much in Answer to this Gentleman's Second Argument in the general; to prove the King's Prerogative not to be at all abridged in this Case by our Own Laws, or Constitutions, any more then it was by the Canons of the Church: I shall now proceed here, as I did in the foregoing Chapter, to enquire into the Truth of his Allegations, and shew, that there is as little Fidelity in his History, as I think I have shewn, there is either Law or Consequence, in his Reasoning.

And for this I shall take the same Method, I pursued in my Other Discourse; and consider the Interest which the Clergy had in our Ecclesiastical or Civil Assemblies,

I. In the Saxon Times.II. Under our Norman Princes, to the Reign of King Edward the 1st.III. From the Reign of King Edward the First, to that of King Henry the Eighth. AndIV. From the Reign of King Henry the Eighth, to the present Parliament, and Convocation.

I. Of the SAXON Times.

Dr. A. having Enquired (as he words it) into the Rights of a Synod of the Province of Canterbury, at large; goes on, in the next place, to Consider It as an Attendant upon a Parliament of England. For so the matter, says he, at present, stands, and has stood for 400 Years, and upwards; to speak at the lowest: Tho' in the Elder Ages it plainly enough appears, That the Clergy came at Once from Both Provinces, and joined Nationally with the Lay Assembly. These are his Words, but I hope they are not his Meaning: Because, according to this Account, we must Conclude, that the Clergy of the Other Province, for these 400 Years past, have lost all their Relation Relation to the Great Councils of the Realm. For so he tells us in the Elder Ages, ^{The SAXON Times.} the Clergy came from both Provinces, and join'd Nationally with the Lay-Assembly. But for 400 Years past, the Synod of the Province of CANTERBURY, has been the Attendant upon the Parliament; for 'tis of that, and that only, that he here speaks, and sets out to Us as the Subject of his following Considerations.

How our Brethren on the other side of Trent will like this, and a great many Other Passages hereafter to be consider'd; in which, I think they have been a little hardly dealt withal, I must leave it to them to determine. As for the present Period, in which they are, at least allowed to have had an Equal Right in these Assemblies with ourselves; his Assertion is elsewhere, thus: ^{1 Rights, p. 215.} 'That thro' the Piety of our Saxon Ancestors, the Clergy were called to the Great Councils of the Realm, and made a CONSTANT, and NECESSARY PART of them. That being obliged so frequently to Attend (for Attendance has, from the Beginning, been the Right and Privilege of the Clergy) in that Capacity, they had neither Leisure nor Need, to Observe the set times of their Provincial Assemblies. The ordinary Business of these was dispatched at those State-Meetings, which were frequent, and gave the Clergy the Opportunity of an Easie Recourse to the Civil Power for a Confirmation of their Decrees. And this, by degrees, brought on a discontinuance of Provincial Synods, which from thence began to meet only on Great Emergencies, and for Extraordinary Occasions. Thus the Matter stood throughout the Saxon Times. But did not this Gentleman tell us in his First Chapter, That the Canons of the Church, which required Yearly Provincial Synods, were received here in the Saxon times? That the 2 Council of Herudford, held, Anno 673, under Theodore, Archbishop of Canterbury, took care, not only to Establish the Practise for the future, but also to 7. Affirm the Antient Usage?

This I am sure was his Assertion, when he argued from the Canons of the Church, and their Authority, in this Matter. But now the Case is alter'd; and this Author, ^{3 Ib. p. 217.} after all his Outcry against Occasional Principles, gives us some Reason to think that he is no such Enemy, as he pretends to them. No, nor yet to Occasional Synods neither: ^{4 Ib. p. 215.} For such he Confesses our Provincial Councils were. All his Indignation is against Occasional Convocations; which for the Honour and Liberty of the Church, he would have not to be Occasionally Assembled, when there is any Business for them to do; but to be Constant, and Necessary Attendants, tho' they have nothing to do but to Attend: A Privilege that I believe no other Body would Contend for; nor if we should get it, ought any to Envy it to Us.

But not to insist upon past Assertions: His present Position is this, That in the Saxon Times, the Clergy were called to the Great Councils of the Realm, and made a CONSTANT, and Necessary Part of them. Will he stand to his Point, as he now states it? Why truly no: That was a Round and full Assertion, and very proper for the Fifth Chapter, where he had a particular Use to make of it. But in the Sixth, he had either been better informed, or he thought himself concern'd to speak more warily to this Matter. And therefore there, it amounts to no more then this: ^{5 Rights, p. 277, 278.} 'That the Inferior Clergy were then Oftentimes; Called to the great Councils of the Realm. Now if they were only Called Oftentimes, I think that will imply, that Sometimes they were not Called: And this may lead on a farther Question, whether they were not Oftentimes Omitted, and only Sometimes Called. But however, if they were but Oftentimes Called, even that shews that they were no Constant, and Necessary, part of those Councils, as he before affirmed them to have been.

Let us hear how this Author again explains himself as to this Matter. ^{6 Not 6 Rights, p. 285.} that I believe them (the Inferior Clergy) to have had Place in All, (even the most Ordinary, and stated) Assemblies, but only in the Greater, and more Extraordinary Ones. The Wittena-Gemots, and Mycel Synods, the Magna Concilia, and Pleni-Folcmoti, which are plainly distinguished from the Less Solemn, and Numerous Councils; and which met together only Ex Arduis contingentibus, & legum Condendarum Gratia, as Sir H. Spelman Observes. What would this Author make us believe Sir H. Spelman Observes, That the Wittena Gemots, and Folcmots were all One? Or that the Pleni Folcmoti were Assembled legum Condendarum gratia? Or that the Inferior Clergy sate in those Greater Assemblies? So it might be mistaken; and possibly it was design'd to be so understood.

But

The SAXON
Times.

¹ Spelman.
Glossar. Voc.
Gemotum
p. 261. a

But that Learned Gentleman spake not at such a Rate. He absolutely distinguishes between the Wittena-Gemot, and the Folc-mot: And what he says Relates to the former, as One great thing wherein it differed from the Latter: ¹ A Wittena-Gemot (says he) was the same among the English Saxons that "Parliament is with us at this Day: and it differed but little from a Folc-mot, but that this Latter was Annual, and commonly held for Certain Affairs; whereas the Other was called at the Pleasure of the Prince, Ex arduis Contingentibus, & legum condendarum Gratia.

And now, at least, One would think he should stick by his Assertion, that to these Wittena-Gemots, tho' not to the Less Solemn, and Numerous Councils, the Inferior Clergy, were OFTENTIMES Called. But how then Does he vouch ² Mr. Sherringham for the same Opinion; and affirm his Authority to be "A strong presumption of the Truth of what he has offered on this Argument. For Mr. Sherringham does not come up to his OFTENTIMES; but Sometimes, and very Seldom, are his Expressions. "In the Saxon times (says he) Laws were COMMONLY made by the "Approbation, and Consent of the Nobles, Arch-Bishops, and Bishops, in a Publick Synod, or Parliament. SOMETIMES the Queen was present; SOMETIMES the INFERIOR CLERGY; and Sometimes also the Commons; but that happened VERY SELDOM. So that if this at last should be Dr. A's Sense; it will follow that he looks upon the Inferiour Clergy to have been a part of these Councils only as the Queen, and Commons were; they Came to them SOMETIMES, but VERY SELDOM.

And, indeed it must be confess'd, that this agrees much better with his Proofs, than any Other Hypothesis: For thus the Abbesses, whom he also makes a part of the same Great Councils, in the Subscriptions to his Charters, (and is so kind as to continue in this State till after the time of King John) may also have been SOMETIMES Attendants upon them. And I do verily believe that he is thus far in the right, that they were both Equally Members of them.

35. 296.

The Truth is, this Author as he does not very Well know by what Right the Inferior Clergy came to these Great Councils, so neither is he at all Concern'd in that Particular. Let them but Come, and 'tis all one to him, in what Capacity, or for what Ends they came to them. Now this has Engaged him in some very Odd Methods of bringing them to these Assemblies. In one Place he calls them thither as Knights Spiritual; and tells us that upon this Account they had a Right, no less then the Knights Temporal, to Attend upon the King in Parliament. And this gives them a Right, not as Clergy-Men, but as Knights; or, at most, as Knights Spiritual: And Entitles only those to a Place there, who had the ³ 4711. Knights Fees, which for that End he has vested in our Parochial Churches; to whom the Conquerour never reached out any such Bounty.

⁴ Ib. pag. 290.

In Another Place, ⁴ he brings them there under a Meaner Capacity, as the King's Retinue; by the same Right that the Gentleman Ushers and Pages, come sometimes to Parliament; and yet, I believe do not Imagine that they are thereby made any Proper Members of it.

That which I insist on (says he) is, that the Attestations and stile of these Charters make it manifest, that MANY of the Lower Clergy had place in those Great Councils which confirmed them: How, or in what Capacity, They were summoned thither, Whether as Representing any Part of the Spirituality; Or, as the King's immediate Servants, and Dependants, (his Hand-Priests, and hired Clercs, as the Capellani, and Presbyteri Regis, are in the Saxon Chronicle, oddly called) is another Enquiry which it is not very Easie, nor very Necessary at present to determine. So that this Gentleman does not affirm that the Inferior Clergy came either Always, Oftentimes, or Sometimes, to these Councils, as Representatives of any part of the Spirituality; (that is a Point neither Easie, nor Necessary, to be determined) all that he affirms, is, That some of them there were present at those Councils in which his Charters were subscribed: How they came thither, Or what they did there, he neither Knows, nor Cares. So little a Colour had this Author, for what he so Confidently Asserted before, that the Clergy were called to the great Councils of the Realm, and made a Constant and Necessary Part of them.

But he has not yet done with his Restrictions: For, as if this were not enough to destroy all that he had before been Establishing; he proceeds to bring their Interest of Acting in those Great Assemblies as low, as he has at last done their Right of Coming to them. ⁵ Nor do I suppose, says he, that the Clergy-Men of Lower-Rank call'd to these full Conventions, treated Always as freely, and acted as Authoritatively, as the Constant and Standing Members did: Treated ALWAYS as freely; That implies however that they sometimes did; and then a Question will arise, how they came to Treat so freely sometimes? Whether by any Right that they had so to do; or only by the Consent or Allowance of the Constant and Standing Members. No, I take them, as to this, to have been much in the same Case with the Inferior Laity, who are said Oftentimes to have been present at such Great Councils; and to have Consented to, and Approved what was done there; but not often to have Deliberated or Determined; just as the Lesser Members of the German Colloquia, or Synods (the Patterns of our English Ones) are represented by Hincmar to have interposed in them.

The SAXON Times.

The Business therefore of the Inferior Clergy, when they came to these Assemblies, was to Consent and Approve, not to Deliberate or Determine. That was to be done by the constant and standing Members; and all the Others had to do, was but to consent to what had been Resolved by them. But what if they did not Approve, and therefore did not Consent? Could they, by their Dissent, rescind what the Other Members had Determined? That he has not told Us; unless perhaps we may find it in the Account which Hincmarus gives of the German Colloquia, or Synods, the Patterns, as he tells us, of our English ones.

Let us therefore see how he reports Hincmarus's Relation of these Colloquia or Synods; as this Gentleman styles them; (for his Author no where Calls them so, but by their proper Name Placita:) Why first for the Persons; ¹ Generalitas (says he) Univerſorum, tam Clericorum quam Laicorum, Conveniebat. Seniores (that is the Magnates, whether Counts, or Bishops) propter Conſilium Ordinandum: Minores (that is the Lesser Barons, and Inferior, but Qualified, Clergy) propter idem ſuſcipiendum, & interdum pariter tractandum, & non ex poteſtate, ſed ex proprio mentis Intellectu vel Sententia Conſirmandum.

I wish this Author had told us what Edition of Hincmarus he made use of: For I can hardly persuade my self that he could have been guilty of so wretched a Misrepresentation of that Author, and these Councils, had he not been misled by some very faulty Copy, that utterly spoiled the whole Relation of them. In these great Assemblies, or Placita, Generalitas Univerſorum tam Clericorum quam Laicorum conveniebat, says Dr. A—— But ² Hincmarus says quite another thing; Generalitas Univerſorum MAJORUM: The PROCERES, as he calls them, Cap. 34. And more particularly, Cap. 35. where he makes this Division of them; Episcopi, Abbates, vel hujusmodi Honorificentiores Clerici, for the Ecclesiastical; and Comites vel hujusmodi Principes, for the Lay-part, of these Councils. Shall I give it him, more plainly, in the Relation of his own ³ Marca: They consisted then, according to his Epitome of this very Relation, Ex Episcopis & Abbatibus & Comitibus Regni. These were All the Members, who had any part in those Councils.

³ De Concord. lib. vi. cap. 25. Señ. 1. &c.

But what then shall we say to ⁴ His Seniores, and Minores? If you will take de Marca's Interpretation, they are the Antiquiores, and Juniores, of these Great Counsellors. ⁵ Arumans, thinks rather that they were the greater and lesser of the Majores before mentioned: The One, the Prelates and Nobles; the Other, the Judges and Magistrates; whom he also takes in under the General Name of Majores. The Account of Hincmarus will admit of either of these: And 'tis no great matter, as to our present purpose, which of them we pitch upon. ⁶ He tells us that two Solemn Councils were held every Year. One a General Assembly, to which all the Majores, or Great Men, Temporal and Spiritual, were called. The other more select; consisting only Ex senioribus, & principibus Consiliariis; of the more Aged, and honourable Counsellors. But whether Seniores or Minores, they were still of the Generalitas MAJORUM; no Others were called to these Assemblies; no Others (unless perhaps some of the King's Ministers of State, in the Lesser Council) were admitted to them.

⁵ De Comitibus cap. 4. num. 5, 6, 7.

It is Evident then, that all this Gentleman's Dream of the Inferior Clergy, is not only precarious, but is directly Contrary both to his Own Author, and to his allowed Interpreter of him. The Over-sight, or Omission, of the Principal Word MAJORUM in his Copy of Hincmarus, misled him; and we will suppose his de Marca might not be at hand to set him right.

But to allow for his Mistake in the Persons who came to these Meetings: This, at least, must be agreed, that the Power of these Younger or Lesser Counsellors, is rightly represented by him. They came to Receive what the Others had de-terminated; and were sometimes asked their Opinion about it: And they Confirmed it, not by way of Authority, but by their concurrent Judgment, or Reasons; They spake, (says de Marca) sometimes but only to give their Opinion, not to Exercise any Right of Voting with the Others. They were first to learn, and be trained up to the Affairs of State; before they were admitted to any Authoritative share in them.

This was the Case of the German Polity under Charles the Great, so this Author styles it; but that Emperour, who ought the best to know his Own Title, every where calls himself King of France and Italy. 3 Eginhard the Writer of his Life, and his Contemporary, speaks of him all along, as King of the Franks. In the Preamble to his Will, which that Historian has preserved a Copy of, the Date is Regni ejus in Francia, 43; in Italia, 36; Imperii xi. In his Epitaph, it is said, that Regnum Francorum Nobiliter ampliavit, & per Annos 47 feliciter tenuit. Adelmus, or whoever else Wrote the Lives of Pepin, Charles the Great, and Ludovicus Pius, calls his Works the Annals of the French Kings: And tho' it is not deny'd, but that his Empire reached to the greatest part of Germany at the last, and from the Death of his Brother, took in those parts of it which belonged to the Kingdom of Austrasia; yet even that was, in those days, look'd upon as a part of France, and took its denomination from it; as one Province of it Continues to do at this Day. This I was willing to Observe, not as a Matter of any great Consequence, but to justify my Own Expression, in treating of those Councils, from which this Author thought fit to recede; whether for the greater Accuracy of Language, with relation to those times, I shall leave it to the Reader to Judge.

Sect. 4.

The first ground of a Settlement of the 5 Government in France, was laid by Pepin, in the Synod of Soissons, as I before observed; but of which this Author has not thought fit to take any notice. He set forth his Statutes, cum Consilio Episcoporum, & Optimatum Regni, as de Marca Expresses it: To which the last Canon of the Council adds, Cum aliis Sacerdotibus sive Servis Dei; which the same Learned Person rightly understands of the Regular Prelates, who were wont to be Called to these Assemblies; and who therefore may reasonably be presumed to have been present at this Council.

6 Concil. Vern.
Can. iv.

What was thus begun in his Parliament at Soissons, he much improved a few Years after in the 6 Council of Vernis: Hither he called almost all the Bishops of France; but that any of the Inferior Clergy were present, it does not appear. And here that provision was made, of which this Author has given us but an imperfect and erroneous Account; not that two National Ecclesiastical Synods should be held every Year, but two Assemblies; One Royal, in the presence of the King; the Other Ecclesiastical, either at Soissons (of which he takes no Notice) or at such other Place as the Bishops, at the other Council, should agree. Of this, de 7 Marca gives such Proofs, as seem to determine the point; and thus the Learned 8 Steph. Baluz. in his Annotations upon this Canon, expounds it from him.

The Former of these Assemblies was appointed to be held on the First of March. 9 This was after by Pepin's Son (says Dr. A.) appointed to meet on the First of May. I doubt this Gentleman has here again mistaken his Author; who expressly says, that this Change was made not by Pepin's Son, but by Pepin himself: And to him 10 Fredegarus plainly ascribes it, who Ends his Chronicon with the Father, and to him ascribes this Change, as de 11 Marca has rightly observed from him.

To the Second of these 12 Synods, which was properly Ecclesiastical, Those Bishops whom he had set in the stead of Metropolitans, were required to Come; and with them such Other Bishops, Abbots, and Presbyters, (unless we should rather expound it 13 Abbots, or Presbyters) as those Metropolitans should appoint to meet with them.

This was the last Establishment of Pepin: Where this 14 Author finds, under that Prince, His other Royal, but Privy Council, consisting only of the Great Ministers

Ministers, and such others as the King thought fit to Call, I am yet to seek: And I doubt he himself will be no less puzzled to inform me.

The next Advance which was made in this Country towards the Settlement of the Government of it, was by Charles the Great. Of this, some Account has been given already; but I shall now be more particular, because that Dr. A. either knew very little of it, or was not willing that Others should.

And First, as his ¹ Father before had done, he Establish'd two Solemn Meetings every Year. The Former consisted of the Bishops, and Abbots, and Peers of the Realm. In it, all the Political Estate was settled for the Year following. The Latter consisted of the most Antient of these, to whom were joined some of the Prince's Council. In this, they digested and concluded upon such Matters as were to be proposed in the next General Meeting: They Order'd such incidental Affairs, as would not admit of Delay; as Matters of War and Peace; and some others of the like kind.

In these Conventions, but especially in the General One, Constitutions were made both concerning Ecclesiastical, and Civil Affairs. The King proposed the Heads which he would have them to deliberate upon; which having done, the Elder, and more experienced, determined; and the Younger Consented to their Determination. Which being over, the Result of their Debates was laid before the Prince, who finally gave Authority to what he approved of them.

In these Conventions, according as the Matter which was to be treated of required, so a Difference was observed in debating upon it. The Bishops and Abbots, met apart from the Laity. The Lords and Nobles were Divided from the Other Laity, by the Honourable Seats that were prepared for them. Sometimes they voted separately from one another, and sometimes together, as the Nature of the Cause required; whether it were Spiritual, Secular, or of a Mix'd kind.

This is the Account which de Marca, out of Hincmarus, gives of these General Meetings: Let us see how this agrees with the Observations of Other Learned Men concerning them.

And 1st, For the Persons who met in the Councils, (the main thing in Dispute betwixt us) de Marca tells us, they were on the Spiritual Part, Bishops and Abbots; on the Secular, the Comites and Optimates, the Great Men of the Realm. And so ² Monsieur Baluze, a Person excellently well versed in these Matters, tells us after him. They were the Fideles Regis; or, as sometimes they are called, Populus; not, says he, any Common Persons, but the Principes, Optimates, Proceres, and Capita Populi: And whom he meant by these, we may see more expressly a little after; where having alledged some Places out of the Capitulars, in proof of his Assertion, he concludes thus; It is evident therefore, that to these Conventions, there came the Bishops, and other Fideles, that is to say, Abbots, Dukes, Earls, and the like.

To this, as to the Ecclesiastical part, ³ Arumens agrees: And his Authorities for it are such, as clearly shew, that neither the Lesser Clergy, nor the Lower Laity, were wont to come to these Assemblies. ⁴ Eginhard, a Contemporary, and Exact Author, calls them, Primores de toto Regno: Another, Primores & Comites. A Third adds, the Magistratus to them, and that agreeably to ⁵ Hincmarus's Relation; who (in like manner) Entitles the Chief Officers of the Palace, and Council to a part in them. A Fourth makes particular Mention of the Ecclesiasticks; Convenerant (says he) multi Episcopi, Abbates, & Principes, ad Imperialem Synodum Vocati. But for Dr. A's Inferiour, but qualifi'd Clergy-Men, I do not know any one Author, that so much as occasionally takes them into these Meetings.

I might enlarge these Proofs by the Authorities of many other Writers, as well Antient, as Modern: But I shall mention only one more, the Learned ⁶ Monsieur du Fresne, whose Quotations (quite different from the most of those whom I have hitherto alledged) all speak the same thing. Dagobert held his Placitum with his Sons, Omniбусque totius Regni Primatibus. Charles the Great his cum Ducibus; says the Saxon Poet: Or as another, more fully, Congregata non minima Coadunatione Episcoporum, summa Autoritatis Virorum, multorum quoque illustrium Procerum, seu quam plurimorum Nobilium. These were the Persons of whom those Meetings consisted; No others mention'd to have come to them.

But do's not ⁷ de Marca, (and that from Hincmarus) say, "That in these Councils, the Great Persons, Earls, &c. were distinguished from Those of a “Lower degree, sitting by themselves, and on honourable Seats. That these only managed the Debates, and formed the Conclusions; the Commoners assenting and sometimes speaking, but so as rather to signify their Opinion, than give a Vote. And may we not suppose this to have been the Method also on the spiritual side? No, ⁸ de Marca says no such thing, but rather the direct contrary. For he says that these Assemblies consisted only of the Optimates: Those he divides into Antiquiores, and Juniores; and of the Juniores, or younger Lords, he speaks what Dr. A. very unfairly applies to his Commoners.

⁸ De Concord. lib. vi. cap. xxv. Sect. 3.

As for their sitting by themselves in these Councils on honourable Seats, and their being distinguished thereby from those of a lower Degree, that too is another Mistake of this Author. That which de Marca says is this; that the Bishops and Abbots Assembled apart from the Laity. That each had their proper Curia, or Council-Chamber prepared for them. That the Lords and Great Men, were distinguished from the Other Laity, Subsellis honorificabiliter preparatis. ¹ But who were these Other Laity? Were they Dr. A's Commoners? No, but they were the King's Ministers, and Counsellors; who, he tells us, were admitted to the Second, or Lesser of these Assemblies; but sat below the great Lords in them.

Now this ² Hincmarus more plainly shews: He tells us N. 30. That this Placitum, or Great Council, was held, cum Senioribus (the Chief of the Majores before mentioned) et præcipuis Consiliariis. That these Counsellors were chosen out of either Clergy or Laity, N. 31. That the three Great Officers of the Court, the Apocrisiarius or Capellanus, the Palatii Custos, and Camerarius, were always present at them. That if any of the Other Officers of the Court, seem'd to be Men of parts, and fit to be taken hereafter into the Council, they were Ordered to be present, and so trained up, to a Capacity and Readiness for Publick Affairs, N. 32.

³ Hincmar. To ii. num. xiv. cap. 34.

But indeed if I take the Sense of that ³ Author aright; there is another meaning than what de Marca seems to have understood in his Relation. He says, that the Lords, the Proceres, as he calls them, and Chief Counsellors, primi Senatores Regni, who were called to these Assemblies, debated one, two, or three days by themselves, or more, if need required; no stranger who was not of the Council coming near, or mixing with them, 'till they had finished their Debates; and made their Report to the Prince.

The Lords and Counsellors thus assembled for Debate, he calls ⁴ Segregati, with respect to the many others of all kinds, who had no part in the Assembly, but yet usually came at that time to the Court; and with whom, in the mean while, the Prince passed his Time. Whenever these Lords desired it, the Prince was wont to come to them, to hear the result of their Debates: And when he did so, then, I suppose, that the Reliqua Multitudo, which attended upon him, were also admitted into the Assembly. And for this a place was prepared of such Capacity, ubi et in abundanter segregati semotim, & Cetera Multitudo (who were wont upon these Occasions, to croud in) seperatim residere potuissent: But 'till then no Inferiores persone interesse potuissent.

This I take to have been the true meaning of Hincmarus as to this Matter: Whether herein I am mistaken or not, thus much is evident, that the Members of these two Assemblies were no other than these: The Bishops, Abbots, and Majores of the Laity, of the One; and the Seniores and Consilarii of the Other Council. Only to the Latter, some of the Court Officers were permitted to Come, not as proper Members of the Council, but to hear and learn, and be trained up thereby to become, in time, the more useful Members of it.

Sect. 19.

Having thus accounted for the Persons of whom these Councils were composed, let us enquire, 2dly, What kind of Affairs were treated of in them, and how they proceeded in the handling of them.

⁵ Hincmar. Ibid. n. 29, 30.

As for the former of these, the Affairs which were treated of in these Conventions; they were, in General, the Great Affairs of the State. ⁵ In the Latter of them, which met in Autumn, the State of the Whole Kingdom was settled for the Year following; and what was then Established, nothing but an Absolute and Extreme Necessity could Change. In the former, held about the Beginning of May, they prepared Matters for the following Assembly; Consider'd what would be proper to be proposed to it, or determined in it. And if any Matters fell out, which required a present Resolution, and could not be Deferr'd to the General Meeting, they here came to a determination concerning them.

In

In these Assemblies, the ¹ King enquired into the State of his Dominions; and was inform'd by those who came together from every quarter, what was doing, or what had happened; or whether any thing needed to be considered; or reform'd in any part of them.

The SAXON Times.
Ib. n. 36.

Of these ² Affairs some were purely Civil; Others Meerly Ecclesiastical, and others of a mix'd Nature; such as indifferently concern'd both the Church and State. ³ Of the First, the Laity alone debated; of the Second, the Ecclesiasticks; of the Third, both; first apart, and then together; and the Resolutions which they came to in any of these, were still laid before the Prince, who had the last Judgment of all; and either ratified, or disannulled what they had agreed of.

³ De Marca. de Concord. lib. 6. cap. 25.

In debating upon these Matters, they usually took this Method: ⁴ First, the Prince laid before them the Heads on which they were to Deliberate. Then he left them alone to consider of them. This they did so long as they thought necessary: And having given notice to him that they were agreed in their Opinions, he came to their Assembly, and there either Approved, or Disallowed of them.

⁴ Hincmar. Ib. c. 34, 35.

The General ⁵ Affairs of the Church and State being dispatched; they finally proceeded to hear such particular Causes as were proper for them, and had been reserved by the Prince to their Judgment and Determination.

⁵ Marca de Concord. lib. 6. cap. 35. Sect. 5. &c.

But that which I would chiefly Observe, in these Councils is, after what manner, and by what Authority, Ecclesiastical Matters were transacted in them. Now of that we have a clear Account in the ⁶ Council of Soissons, under King Pepin, Anno 744. The Articles of which relating to Ecclesiastical Matters, are said to have been made ⁷ by Twenty three Bishops, together with other Priests, or Servants of God (the Regular Prelates) with the Consent of the Prince and Counsel of the Lords. The Clergy therefore passed them; the Lords approved of them; and the King gave the Authority of Laws to them.

⁷ Ib. Cap. 2. Et Col. 160. cap. x.

The same may be Concluded from the Account we have of the Capitular of Charles the Bald, Anno 846. The Metropolitans and their Suffragan Bishops, ⁸ had agreed upon certain Canons, which they thought proper for the Reformation of the Church; and offer'd them to the Prince, as he had commanded them, to be publickly read in Council before him. But the Prince being raised into a heat against them, and the Lords disapproving of some things which they had determined, they removed the Bishops out of the Council, and selected out of their Canons such only as they approved of, and delivered them in Writing to them; telling them that they had Accepted no more of their Definitions but those; and that those, they had agreed with the Prince, to Observe.

⁸ Capitular. Tom. 2. col. 30. in villa Sparnac.

Thus they concluded in Matters Ecclesiastical; ⁹ The Bishops first Debated by themselves concerning them: Being come to a Resolution, their Definitions were Read before the King and his Lords. If the Lords Advised, and the King Approved, they became Capitulars, or Laws; Otherwise they were laid aside, as rejected, and of no Force.

⁹ Vid. Concil. apud Pistas Capitular. T. 2. Col. 153. Reges & Episcopi qui ante Nos fuerunt, ducti Amore, & Timore divino, cum Ceterorum Fidelium Dei Consilio atque Consensu plura statuerunt Capitula. Et de Marca de Concord. lib. 6. cap. 25. Sect. 5. &c.

If the Matters were of a mixed Nature, then both parts of the Council Debated, or at least Agreed first together concerning them; And by their joint Advice and Consent, they were Established by the Prince. This was the Case of the Convention at ¹⁰ Quierzy, about Eleven Years after, under the same Prince: Who therefore calls that Meeting by the double Title, Synodum venerabilium Episcoporum, ac Conventum fidelium: And says, that with these he had consulted, among other Affairs relating at once to the Benefit of the Church, and the necessity of the Realm, about the Points which there follow, and with their Advice had Decreed, as we see, concerning them.

And this may suffice to acquaint us how the Bishops and Prelates Acted in these Assemblies, as Members of the Royal Councils; and in order to the making of Ecclesiastical Laws in them. But I must observe farther.

3dly. That being to meet on these Occasions with the Nobility in Council, they oftentimes laid hold of the Opportunity to Consult together, and to Act, not only as a part of the State-Convention; but by their Own Authority, as a proper Ecclesiastical Synod too. Such was, for Example, the Synod of Mentz, in which Rabanus Archbishop of that Place condemned Goteschallus; and of which Triethemius ¹¹ in his Chronicle reports, that by the Command of Louis Lotharius the Emperor, he called a Synod of Bishops, and Abbots, Anno 848, and therein Condemned a certain Heretick named Goteschallus, and Ordained many things to the Honour and Dignity of the Church. But the ¹² Annals of Fulde are more express.

They tell us, that about the 1st of October, Louis the King held a General Council (placitum) at Mentz. And so go on to declare First the State Affairs that were transacted there, and then the Conviction of Goteschall in it. And the only Reconciliation that can be made between these different Relations is this; that the Emperour at that time held his Great Council at Mentz; and the Archbishop, at the same time, Summon'd a Synod, by the Emperour's Command, to meet there. The same Persons were Cited by a double Authority, for a double End; by the Emperor to his Civil Council, by the Archbishop to a Church-Synod.

lib. 4. cap. 33.

This was so strictly Observed, that tho' the Bishops were come together to the State-Council, yet if they wanted their Ecclesiastical Summons, they refused to Act as a proper Church-Synod at such times as they had not been regularly premonish'd so to do. A notable Instance of which we meet with in ¹ Flodoard, in the Dispute between Artaldus and Hugo, concerning the Bishoprick of Rhemes. The two Kings, Louis and Otho, held their Council at the River le Cher. The Cause was brought before the Bishops who were Assembled there upon the Occasion of the Other Meeting. But, says the Historian, because a Synod was not then held, the Controversy could not be Determined; but was deferr'd to a Synod to be held for that purpose, about the Middle of November following.

² Capitular.
101. 102.

It is true, it seems to have been the usual Custom for the Bishops to have an Ecclesiastical Summons, as well as a Civil Call to these Meetings; and that the One, issued out from the Metropolitans, almost as regularly as the Other did from the Prince: Insomuch that when ² King Louis sent to the Bishops of the Provinces of Rhemes and Roan, to come to one of these Councils before him, vii. Kal. Decembr. there to treat with him and the rest of the Fideles of those parts, concerning the Restoration of Holy Church, and the State and Welfare of the Christian People; among other Excuses which they made to put off their Attendance, they alledged this as One of the Chief; that it was forbidden by the Canons of the Church, that either the Archbishops, without their Com-Provincial Bishops, or they without their Archbishops, should presume to meddle with any thing, but what belonged to their own proper Diocesses. And that in so short a time as he had named, it was not possible for them to have their Mandatory Letters from their Archbishops to go to that Convention.

This was their Excuse; and tho' 'tis plain, they would otherwise have declined going at that time to the Council, yet this we may Conclude from the Reason here alledged by them in their Defence, that they were wont to have their Archbishops Mandates, as well as their King's Writs, for these Assemblies; and thought they could not Regularly Act as a Synod, on those Occasions, without them.

I shall add but one thing more, and so have done with these Foreign Councils: That, as in the State-Conventions, 'tis plain that the Inferior Clergy had no place; so neither were they yet Called, to the proper ³ Church-Synods, which consisted only of the Bishops; and (sometimes) of the Regular Prelates; as I have, in part, already shewn, and might further prove, were it needful to insist upon it.

The result of what has been said, upon this Point, is this: That it does not appear that any of the Inferior Clergy were wont to be Called to the Great Councils of the Realm in France; on the contrary, it is plain, that they had not any Place in them, unless it were by Vertue of some Office which they held at Court, upon the Account of which they were allow'd to be present at them. If therefore these Councils were, in effect, of the same Nature with our own Wittena Gemots, so that we may rationally argue from the Constituent Members of the One, to those of the Other; then we must Conclude that the Lower Clergy, were not only not Always, and Necessarily, summon'd to them, as he sometimes affirms; nor yet Oftentimes called, as he elsewhere Discourses; but were not at all Admitted to them as proper Members; tho' possibly they might now and then be there as the Queen, or any Others of the Laity might be; which is all that Mr. Sherringham affirms, or that, I believe, can truly be said in this Case.

pag. 31.

Let us see How Dr. A. applies the History of these Councils, to the Illustrating, if not to the Determining of the Nature of our Own. "Much after the same manner (says ⁴ he) I suppose were the mix'd Meetings, [the Wittena Gemots] of our Saxon Kings held. "They were Called by the same Name: They were Compos'd of the same Persons: The Spiritual and Temporal part of the Convention consulted together, or asunder, as they saw Occasion; were Con-
"vened

"vened in like manner twice a Year; and One of those Meetings was fixed to the Calends of May, as it was in Germany: To this all the Proceres Regni, & Milites, & Liberi homines Universi totius Regni Britannia resorted; and it was stiled plenus Folcmote; and distinguished from the Other Folcmote, where only the Episcopi, Principes, and Comites were present. The SAXON Times.

The Members also of our Saxon Councils were alike distinguished into such as had Right of Suffrage and Subscription, and such as were present, chiefly, in Order to Approve.

The same Distinction, doubtless, there was between their manner of Attending those Great Councils. Which he shews to have been also much the same with that of the Inferior Laities, and Clergy's, Attending the like Conventions abroad.

It cannot be denied, but that if all these Circumstances can be made out, the Antient Gallican Platita, and our Saxon Wittena Gemots, must have been very like to One another. To say nothing to the Names, the least Material of all these Observations; and for which this Author stands accountable to another ¹ Learned Writer. The main point of all is the next; whether they were Composed of the same Persons? Dr. A. Affirms it, and I am clearly of the same Opinion: And do therefore conceive, that as I have plainly shewn the Lower Clergy (as such) not to have been Constituent Members of the One, so neither were they of the Other. Sect. 12.

But Dr. A. is against me in both: And therefore as he before gave his Inferior, but Qualify'd Clergy, a Place, tho' not a Suffrage, in the Great Councils of the Realm of France; so now he is no less liberal in bestowing an Equal Right upon them in our Saxon Gemots. ² He tells us, that there sat the Bishops, Counts, &c. and there Attended the Lesser Thanes, and their Equals, the Priests, &c. And for this we must take his Word; for, at present, he does not so much as offer at any Proof of it. Let us therefore go on. ¹ Dr. Kennet Eccl. Syn. p. 214, 215.

In these Councils, the Spiritual and Temporal part of the Convention Consulted together, or asunder, as they saw occasion: This ³ I have agreed to as to those abroad, and had before offer'd as my Conjecture, with Relation to our Own here at home. I alledged the Council in which Ethelstan made his First Laws, in Proof of it; and had before Produced that of ⁴ Enham to the same purpose. ³ Authorit. pag. 161, 162. 170. ⁴ lb. p. 159.

But Dr. A. who always affects to be an Original, and not to Write out of any Man's Second-hand Collections, resolved to take his own Method. Instead of the Council of Enham, which was indeed a State-Council; he pitches on that of Cloveshoe, which was as plainly a Church-Synod: And for Ethelstan's Laws, he refers to Sir Henry Spelman's Glossary; I suppose as a more Authentick Record than either the Laws themselves, or Brompton's Version of them: And for both which I refer him to the ⁵ Censure of a more learned Writer, who has justly call'd him to Account for both. ⁵ Eccles. Syn. p. 212, 213.

These Councils, he says, were call'd twice a Year by a Law of King Alfred's, and One of these Meetings was fix'd (if not in his time, yet afterwards) to the Calends of May, as it was in Germany. That King Alfred appointed Parliaments to meet twice in the Year, is, I confess, reported in the Mirror of Justices; and to him, and to his Authority only, Dr. A. refers us for it. Of what Credit such a Relation ought to be, in a Matter wherein not only the Laws of King Alfred, but all our Antient Historians are silent, it is not difficult to determine. In the mean time, let me ask this Gentleman, with Relation to his own Authority; will he be content to be concluded in this Matter by it? ⁶ If he will, then the Persons who Constituted King Alfred's Parliaments, were only the Great Men of the Realm; Comites Congregari fecit, says Horn, to these two Parliaments; and I see no Reason why his Authority should not be as great for the Persons of which these Councils consisted, in which our Antient Authors are generally of his side; as for the Times of their Assembling, in which, for ought I know, he stands alone, without so much as any One Writer before him to support his Allegation. ⁶ Mir. loc. cit.

It is a happy Talent to be able to improve a Good Hint. The Mirrour had found out a Law for two yearly Parliaments in the time of King Alfred; and Dr. A. has discovered the very Day on which one of them was, by Law, to meet. One of these Meetings (says he) was fix'd, if not in Alfred's time, yet afterwards, to the Calends of May, as it was in Germany. Debent Populi omnes & Gentes Universæ, singulis Annis convenire. scil. in Capite Calendarum Maii; say the Laws of Edward the Confessor. But to what ought they to come together; to a Wittena Gemot, or, National Parliament? So this Gentleman would have it thought; but I will venture to say, he knew the contrary himself: And I shall leave leave the Reader to judge, whether I am too Uncharitable in my Opinion, when he has Consider'd the Law to which we are referr'd.

The Subject of that part of the Law, which this Author refers to, is to shew what Power the Aldermen had within their respective Cities, or Walled Towns. It declares that they ought to have the same Power and Dignity, that the Heads of Hundreds, and Wapentakes enjoy'd within their Bailiwicks, under the King's Sheriffs, throughout the Kingdom. Having fix'd this first Point, it next declares what their Duty is, by vertue of their Place, and the Power thus given to them. That upon any suddain Danger, they ought to ring the Motbel, and call the People together, whose Assembly is stiled (says the Law) Folcmote, i. e. Vocatio, & Congregatio Populorum & Gentium Omnium, an Assembly of the whole People of that Town, or City, from the highest to the lowest; quia ibi Omnes convenire debent.

What was thus to be done by the Alderman upon any suddain Occasions, was Once every Year, upon the Calends of May, to be stately and of Course done by him. Statutum est enim quod ibi (at the like Meeting as before) debent Populi omnes, & Gentes Univerſe, ſingulis Annis ſemel in Anno ſcilicet Convenire; Scil. in Capite Calendarum Maii, and there ſwear to the Defence of the Kingdom, and renew their Fidelity to the Prince.

This was the Meeting which Dr. A. puts upon us for a Parliament of the Kingdom: A Common Court, or Meeting of a Town or City under its Alderman; whether by a real Miſtake, or with a Knowledge of his own Miſrepresentation of it, let the Equitable Reader Judge.

'Tis true, there is in the ſame Law (tho' not in the ſame part of it) an Account of another, and a larger Folcmote, which, we are told, was to meet at the ſame time, and after the ſame manner. What the Aldermen were to do in their Cities and Burgh Towns; the ſame the Earls or Sheriffs were to do in their Counties. And to theſe County Meetings all the Proceres, Milites, & Liberi homines univerſi totius Regni, were to come, as the Populus, or Citizens were to the Other: And there in pleno Folcmoto, in the full Assembly of the County, they were to renew their Oath of Fealty to the King, in preſence of the Biſhops, who ſate together with the Civil Magiſtrates in thoſe Aſſemblies. But then this too is as far from being a Wittena Gemot, or Parliament, as the Other. The former was no more than a General Aſſembly of a City or Town; the latter was the like Aſſembly of a Whole County. Indeed, if this Law be Authentick, they met together after this manner, over all the Kingdom at the ſame time, both in the Counties, and Towns; but then they met diſtinctly before the Aldermen, and Earls, in ſo many ſeveral Town and County Aſſemblies; not before the King, in one General and National Council.

After what has been ſaid, to ſhew the little Importance of the Law to the purpoſe for which it has been alledged, I ſhall be leſs concern'd in the Doubt which has been raiſed by ¹ Learned Men; whether theſe Additions to King Edward's Laws be Genuine or not; a Scruple which ² Sir Henry Spelman would not undertake to determine. The Learned ³ Editor of them tells us, that in the more Antient, and Authentick Copy of them, all theſe Acceſſions were wanting: And this, if it does no more, yet, at leaſt, gives us a juſt ground of Suſpicion againſt them. In the very Law before us, ⁴ Ballivus is a Word of Norman deſcent; and, to Conclude this Matter, with the Cenſure of the Learned Antiquary before mention'd; Et hoc, & alia plura ibidem Vocabula, Eo ſeculo haud recepta apud nos Cenſeo; Ipſaſque adeo leges a recentiore vel auctas, vel ad Normanicum Idiotiſma redactas ſuſpico. So little Credit is there in the Authority to which this Gentleman refers us, for his New Opinion; and ſo unfairly does he Reſent, what that Authority (weak as it is) ſays with relation to theſe Aſſemblies.

For the reſt of the Miſtakes (if indeed they were but Miſtakes) concerning the Saxon Folcmotes, I ſhall leave him to the Correction of a more ⁵ Able Pen; who has already undertaken him upon that Point.

The next Congruity he offers between the Gallican, and Saxon Councils, is, that the Members of them were alike diſtinguiſhed into ſuch as had right of Suffrage, and Subscription, and ſuch as were preſent, Chiefly, in order to Approve. Whether there was any ſuch diſtinction in the Members of our Saxon Councils, I very much much doubt. That many may have been occasionally admitted to them, at the solemn Opening or Closing of them; or at other Extraordinary Seasons when Laws were to be Publish'd, or (it may be) Charters to be Confirmed, I do not deny. It is upon these Occasions, that not only the People, but our Queens; not only the Clergy, but Abbesses, are sometimes spoken of as being present there: Of whom yet I believe this Gentleman will not affirm that they were proper, constituent Members, even for Approbation, of these Meetings. That being Occasionally present, they might sometimes subscribe as Witnesses; or give some token of their Assent, or Liking, to what had been done by the King and his Council, I can also allow. But that any besides our Great Men and Prelates were wont to be called to these Councils, as the proper Members of them; or that the Members so called were ever distinguished into such as had right of Suffrage and Subscription, and such as were present Chiefly in order to Approve, I am yet to learn; nor does this Gentleman's Proofs at all convince me that they were.

In the passing of King Ina's Laws, I find none but Bishops, Aldermen, Witen, and Servants of God, or Regular Prelates, to have been present; and all these, I conceive, had a full Right of Suffrage in them, as well as of Summons to them.

His Charter, here Recited, I look upon as clearly spurious: Sexburg the Queen advises it, at the Beginning, and Edelburgh the Queen subscribes at the End of it. Now, of these, the latter indeed was his Queen; and so continued to the time that he left his Crown for a Monastick Retirement: But the other never was, but Wife to Cenwalh King of the West Saxons, and dead many Years before Ina came to the Throne. The Year, and the Indiction, are irreconcilable with one another: And what is at last, Cum presentia populationis? Did those Four last Witnesses Subscribe for the People? Or did they need the Peoples leave to set their hands to that Charter? But, the truth is, whatever the rest be, yet that part of the Charter is certainly false. The Copy of Malmesbury does not only want it, but concludes directly contrary to this Author's Interest; whilst to the Archbishop's Subscription, it adds only this, Et Magnates quamplures alii.

Of his last Charter we have three Copies remaining: In two of them, these Subscriptions are intirely wanting, In the Third, if they prove any thing, it is more than he would have. The Subscribers are Archbishops, Bishops, and two Kings, Beorrede King of Mercia, and Edmund, King of the East-Angles: With an Infinite Multitude of Abbots, Abbesses, Dukes, Earls, and Nobles of the whole Land, and Other Fideles; Who all Commended or Approved the King's Charter: Dignitates vero sua nomina subscripserunt. How shall we here discover whom these Dignitates include? None below Bishops are said to have subscribed. All the rest are joined in an equal and opposite Class of Approvers. And if we take it thus, then the Nobles, and Regular Prelates, no less than the People, are Excluded from all right of Suffrage and Subscription.

If, to avoid this, he shall think fit to carry it farther, and take in all but the Fideles, it will then be another Question, Whether Fideles, doe there denote the Common People? Especially when join'd to the Great Lords, with such a Relative as it there is, Ducum, Comitum, Procerumque totius terræ, ALIORUMQUE FIDELIUM. Or if this too should be granted, yet still the greatest Difficulty of all will remain, how to prove that these Fideles, whoever they be, were all proper Members of this Council; which, at this rate, must have been a very Large Assembly indeed; Infinita fidelium multitudine, says the Subscription: An Expression that can hardly be reconciled to the proportion of an Ordinary State-Council, or to the Constant Members of such an One.

But what if we should suppose this to have been a more than Ordinary Convention? And that this pious King designing so great and general a Priviledge to the Church; as to assure to it the Tenths of all his Dominions for ever; to free it from all Secular Service; from all Tributes and Taxes; even from the trinitoda necessitas, of Expeditions, building of Bridges, and fortifying of Castles, (which were wont to be reserved in those Cases where Lands were granted in the most free manner to the Clergy) should call all the Landed Men of his Kingdom to it; that so what was to concern All, might be consented to by All? What if this Charter, made in Council, and agreed upon there, were, (as it is most probable) afterwards Publish'd and Subscrib'd, in a general Assembly of both Lords, Prelates, Clergy, and People, in the Great Church at Winchester, which indeed, I take to have been the Case; and shall hereafter give some farther Reasons for it? I do not see but that in any of these Suppositions, we may very well allow the Fideles, even in its lowest sense, to have been present at this Assembly, without being ever the more Intituled thereby to any Constant Place, or Right of Consent, in the Other Ordinary Councils of the Realm.

For the Application which this ¹ Author makes of this, to the Following Rights of the Commons in Parliament; both as to their Right of Suffrage, and manner of Attendance; I shall not need to say any thing more than this; that from the time that the Commons were called to Parliament, their Approbation was so necessary, that nothing pass'd in the Legislative way without it. But indeed, the difference between the Commons, as they have been since King Edward the First's Time, when they were (as I suppose) first made one of the Three Estates of the Realm in Parliament, from what it was in those days of which we are now speaking, is so great, that no one can reasonably argue from the Interest they have had in the Great Councils of the Realm since, to prove either what they were Allow'd, or, of Right, ought to have Enjoy'd two or three Hundred Years before.

There is yet another far-fetch'd Fancy of this Author, taken from a Conjecture of Mr. Seldens, and made worse by his own Improvement of it, which might be consider'd; of a certain Correspondence, not only between the State-Assemblies of our Own Country, and those of our Neighbours in France, but between the Set times of our Wittena Gemots, and the Eastern Churches-Synods, by the Canons of the Antient Greek Church: But this being nothing to the Point under debate, and having been ² already more fully examined than it deserved, I shall not give it the Countenance of a farther Refutation.

Hitherto, I think, I may venture to say, there has been nothing alledged to give the least Colour to his Pretence, that the Inferiour Clergy were, in any Respect, Constituent Members of the Saxon Councils. Let us see whether his Historical Allegations be any more to the purpose, and how far they may serve to Clear ³ the Antient Rights and Priviledges of the Commons Spiritual in this Particular.

The first Instance he offers, is the Preface to the Laws of Ina: That those Laws were Publish'd in a great Council, is on all hands agreed; and the Persons who are Enumerated as present there, viz. Bishops Aldermen, and Witen, sufficiently shew it. But how does it appear that the Lower Clergy were there too? Why yes, 'tis added, Multaque Congregatione SERVORUM DEI. Now that these were Clergy, is (he says) no doubt: And that the Words are farther to be understood chiefly of the Inferior Orders of the Clergy, appears both from their Numbers (for the West Saxon Bishops, and Abbots were but few) and from the like use of the Phrase in other Places.

As for the Numbers that is not Considerable: The Servi Dei may be said to be there in a great Congregation, in respect of the Bishops; which were but two: Or of the whole Number of the Regular Prelates of that Kingdom, if either all, or the greater part of them, were present at the passing of these Laws. The only question is, how it does appear, that these Servi Dei, were Inferior Clergy men, such as this Author is now pleading for, and would from hence, prove to have been Members of this Great Council.

Why, for this, two Passages are alledged: One from the Council of Cloveshoe, Anno 824. where the Servi Dei then present, are thus in the next Words explain'd, Presbyteri, Diaconi & plurimi Monachi: So this Author understands it; but he will excuse me if I take the Liberty to say, that I look upon him to have utterly mistaken the sense of it.

The great Business of that Council, was to determine a Controversie between Heabert Bishop of Worcester, and the Religious of Berclea, concerning the Monastery of Westburg. The Agreement was, that the Bishop who had the Land, and the Books, Cum Juramento Dei Servorum, Presbyterorum, Diaconorum, & plurimorum Monachorum, sibi in propriam possessionem terram illam cum adjuratione adjurasset. Here (says Dr. A.) the Dei servorum are Explain'd by Presbyterorum, Diaconorum, & Monachorum. But how does that appear? By what Note does he collect, that the latter Ranks of Priests, Deacons, and Monks, were intended for the several Orders of those who were before, in General, called Servorum Dei? Till this be shewn, he will give me leave to think, that Dei Servorum, are here of themselves a particular Order of Men; and were intended to Denote those Abbots, who accordingly were present at the making of this Oath; as the Acts themselves tell us: Juramento illi assiterunt & idem prestiterunt. * Friomund Abbas. * Eadberht Abbas. * Ecgerht Abbas. And my Reason is this; because 'tis evident that these Abbots were then present; and 'tis as evident; that if they are not meant by these words, there is no other proper Title under which they are included.

'Tis true, these Prelates were Priests too: And therefore in the Saxon Catalogue, which speaks only with Relation to their Ecclesiastical Order, they are all called by the Common Name of mæsse preohta. But in the Acts of the Synod, where they were ranked under their several Characters; the Title of servi Dei was used to distinguish the Regular Priests, from the Secular: And for the same Reason they were set in the first Place; because that tho' by their Order, they were no more than Other Priests, yet, in Dignity, they were above them, and so were to be ranked according to their Degree before them.

But his other Passage is yet more clearly against him: In a Charter of Mildred Bishop of Worcester, Anno Domini, 774. He makes his Grant, cum Licentia SERVORUM DEI qui sub meo Regimine, Dei Providentia, Constituuntur, i. e. says Dr. A. of all the Clergy of his Diocese: But, as I conceive, of the Prior and Convent of his Cathedral Church of Worcester.

It would, I believe, be difficult for Dr. A. to tell us how a Bishop should need the License of All the Clergy of his Diocese, to grant an Estate belonging to his Bishoprick. But, on the other side the Matter is plain. ¹ King Ethelred grants an Estate to Dunnan, to build a Religious House upon it. Dunnan grants both the Monastery and Land to her Daughter Hrothware: Upon some endeavours to deprive whom of it, Nothelm, Archbishop of Canterbury in his Provincial Synod, adjudges the Estate to Hrothware for her Life; and afterwards to go to the Episcopal See of Worcester. This Land, Mildred, Bishop of Worcester, Grants to Ethelburg Daughter of Elfred, for her Life; after which it was to return to the Church of Worcester again. And this Grant he makes, cum Licentia Servorum Dei, &c. with the Consent and Allowance of his Cathedral Prior, and Convent, who by the Tenure of the Estate had an Interest, in right of the Church, in it. This was the Case; and I shall leave it to any Impartial Person to say who these Servi Dei were: Whether the Prior and Convent of Worcester; or All the Clergy of that Large Diocese, who had no particular Interest, or Concern; no Power, or Authority, in that Matter.

The Case was, ² he says, the same in Athelstan's Laws, which were made Consilio Wolfelini Archiepiscopi mei, & Omnium Episcoporum, & DEI MINISTRORUM, that is, according to his Account, the Inferior Clergy. I agree it was: All the difference is, that I still affirm, these MINISTRI DEI to have been the Religious Prelates; and why I do affirm it, I come now to shew.

That the Greater Abbots were allow'd to be Members of these Assemblies, is, I suppose, a Point on all Hands agreed. They are often particularly Mention'd as such; and I do not know that there have been any Exceptions to Exclude them from a Part in them. If therefore these Prelates had any Part in those Councils, in which King Ina first, and then King Athelstan, made their Laws; They must be express'd under the Character of Godeþeopena, SERVI DEI, or they are not mention'd in them at all. Episcopi, Senatores, Sapientes, Servi Dei; are all the Words in King Ina's Laws: Archiepiscopi, Episcopi, Servi Dei, are all in King Athelstan's. Let any equal Person Judge, whether be the more just Account, and more agreeable to the Nature of these Assemblies, to interpret them; Bishops, Lords, and Religious Prelates; or to say, Bishops, Lords, and Inferior Clergy-men; and so totally to Exclude the Religious Prelates, from their Place and Right in them.

As for the Language it self, it agrees to this Account, much better than to any other. In the Pœnitential of our Own ³ Theodore, Accedere ad SERVITUTEM DEI in MONASTERIO, is the Phrase used to become a Religious: And Servi Dei are not only in Our ⁴ Histories, but even in our Conciliary Constitutions too, often set for the Religious, as distinguish'd from the Secular Clergy.

In the Synod of ⁵ Clouisho, Anno 747, the 29th Canon is, Ut nullus SERVORUM DEI inter laicos habitet. Malmesbury, in his Epitome, calls them plainly Monachi, and the Canon shews that Monachi & Sanctimoniales, are the Clerici which the Antient Inscription means by Servi Dei.

In the Synod of Winchester, Anno 855, in which Ethelwolf Granted those Liberties to the Church, I before took notice of; ¹ Placuit Episcopo cum suis Abbatibus, & Servis Dei, Consilium, inire to command the Frates, and Sorores, as well as Presbyters, to say such a Number of Psalms, and Prayers, and Masses, for the King, who gave them; and for all his Great Men who Consented unto them. Where if the Servi Dei were not the Priors of such Religious Houses as had not Abbots over them, (as yet I conceive they were) 'tis plain, they must be understood of such of the Religious as had Power to make such an Oraer, and to Oblige the Monks and Nuns, to a performance of it.

In an Antient Charter, cited by du^r Fresne, Montanus, an Abbot, with his Convent, doubles the Character, and call themselves Servi Servorum Dei. And de Marca, an Author much approved of by Dr. A. doubts not to give the same Account of this Expression; where the Members of the Councils of France being Enumerated in the very same terms, with those of which we are now speaking, ³ Episcopi cum aliis Sacerdotibus, sive SERVIS DEI (an Explication which had this Gentleman met with in our Laws, he would have thought it a decisive Interpretation of the Servi Dei to his Sense; and have told us, it was plain that they were Sacerdotes, or Parish-Priests) Yet that Learned Writer doubts not roundly to add this Comment to it, hoc est Abbatibus.

Having given this Account of the Reasons which induce me to interpret the Servi Dei, not Rural Priests, or Deacons, as Dr. A. would have them; but as both the tenour of the Laws require, and the Customary Usage of that Phrase on other Occasions, warrants me to do, of the Religious Prelates, who had a Constant Place in these Councils; I now go on to another Instance which this Author thinks a decisive Proof; but which, being Examined, will appear to be a meer Delusion. It is the Council of Becanceld, Anno, 694. ⁴ Where, together with the Duces, or Satrapæ, Abbat, Abbatissa, there met also Presbyters, and Deacons; who are there said in Unum Glomerati de statu Ecclesiarum Dei pariter tractare. And accordingly in the Subscriptions of that Council yet remaining, there are the Names of Eight Presbyters to be seen.

This is the Story; and I must beg leave to insist a little more largely upon it than it deserves, because I have formerly incur'd this Gentleman's Displeasure, by intimating some suspicion of this Council, without declaring for what Reasons I doubted of it. And indeed (says he) I cannot imagine what Ground there can be to suspect the Truth of it: There are no Marks of Imposture in it; nothing that disagrees with the Story, or Manners of that time. This is boldly said, how truly, we will now Enquire.

And, First; It is suspicious that so famous a Council should be held, and not one of all our Antient Historians take the least notice of it. Let Bede, Malmesbury, Huntingdon, M. Westminster, Brompton, Gervase, be Examined; and let this Author tell me, if he can, where These, or any Other of our Historians, do give so much as a hint of it?

But to this he has an Answer ready: ⁵ For, In the Antient Saxon Chronicle, there is at the Year 694, a very large and particular Account of this Council: So indeed he tells us; but that too is, like all the rest, a meer Imposition upon his Reader. The Antient Saxon Chronicle has not one Word of this Council: One Copy of it there is, (and but One) which has been miserably interpolated, and that has, among many Others, this goodly Story inserted into it. But it is the Only Copy that I can yet find which has it, and that one of the Latest, and least Authentick of any.

The most Antient Copy of that Chronicle, from whence Wheelock Printed it, has no mention of this Matter. In another, wrote about the time of King Edward, in the Cotton Library, there are no Footsteps of it. In two other Copies in the same Noble Treasury of Learning, this pretended Council is omitted. So it is in that of Archbishop Laud at Oxford. Florence of Worcester, who closely follows the same Chronicle, is silent in the Case. Only this one manifestly depraved Copy inserts it into this Year; and that, with Dr. A., must pass for an Antient Authority upon us: In the Antient Saxon Chronicle, says he, there is a very Large and particular Account of this Council; when all the while the truly Antient Saxon Chronicle has not a Tittle of it; nor is it any where to be found, but in One corrupted Copy of that Chronicle.

To make this the more apparent, I must observe that this Copy of the Saxon Chronicle was written about the time of King William the Conqueror, the very Age in which most of these Forgeries were made. It contains the Annals of that Chronicle first in Saxon, and then in Latin. Now the Interpolation of this place, as I am assured by those who are well acquainted with that Language, is a later kind of Saxon, than what was usual in the Age in which that part of this Chronicle was wrote. But that I am no competent Judge of: The Latin, which I must insist upon, is not only no Translation of the Saxon (as in the Other Parts of that Book) but is a long forged story of what the Monks of Canterbury had been hammering out for the Honour and Interest of themselves first, and then of all the Other Monasteries of Kent. I will not say that the very Original Invention of it was due to the Writer of this Copy, of which we are now speaking; But 'tis plain, that in this MS. we have One of the first Draughts of it.

The SAXON
Times.

This the Corrections and Rasures in the MS. it self; the Collation of it with the first Copy of Sir Henry Spelman; (which seems to have been the Second Edition of this Synod) and then the Comparison both of This, and That, with his Third Copy, which was that, I suppose, they finally resolved to stick by, sufficiently shews: And that the Reader may be himself the Judge of it, I shall present him in the Appendix, with the Acts of this goodly Council, exactly taken from this Saxon Chronicle, with all the Rasures and Corrections of it; and shall leave it to him to Compare it with the Other Copies, which were afterwards drawn with greater Exactness, upon the Design, and Model, of this Original.

Appendix
ad Ann. 694.

But Dr. A. Goes on. Sir Henry Spelman Printed it from five good MSS, and One of them near as Old as the Saxon Age. He should also have Added, that all these MSs. came from One and the same place, the Church of Canterbury, by whose Monks the whole Story was invented. That the only Other Copy we have besides, of it (if it were Another) is in the Evidentie Cantuarienses, which still renders the Matter the more suspicious.

Rights, &c.

For, 2dly. It is plain that the whole History of that Council was design'd to give Credit to a Charter, for the Benefit of that Church. The Original is order'd to be laid up there; and the Copies of it, have all come from thence. And yet, which is no good sign, W. Thorn, in his Chronicle of the Monastery of Canterbury, takes no manner of notice of it. Now I need not say how Notorious, or rather Infamous, the Monks of Canterbury have been for Forgeries of this Nature. Gervase of Canterbury gives a sufficient account of it; and to him I refer for the reasonableness of my suspicion in this Case.

3dly. They who speak most in favour of this Charter, allow it to be the first Authentick Instrument of this kind, and tell us that 'till then, the Church of Canterbury enjoy'd all its Liberties, and Customs, without any Written Charters or Muniments. But how does it appear that the Antient Custom was now Changed? The only Authority that I can perceive for it, is the MS. of Canterbury, from whence this Charter is taken; which how far it shall be allow'd to be a good Evidence in its own Case, let the Circumstances of this Charter, now to be examined, determine.

If either the Acts of this Synod; the Evidences of the Church of Canterbury; or the Saxon Chronicle, be to be relyed upon, they all agree to fix this Council to the Year 694. Let us see how the Relation will agree to the Persons, Characters, and Customs of that Time.

Among the Laity who were present at this pretended Council, the Satrapa bring up the Rear: I will not undertake to affirm, that that Word was never used in that Age, in the sense which there it must have. But I believe upon Enquiry, it will be found to be of a later Date, and that for near two Hundred Years after this time, no Authentick Proof can be produced for the Use that is there made of it.

In the Subscriptions, the King Subscribes for himself, and for Werburgh his Queen: But in his Charter granted the very next Year, his Queen appears to have been Kynigyth, and which of these we are to give the more Credit to, I would be Glad to be inform'd.

Spelm. Concil. Vol. 1. p.

He subscribes not only for Himself, and his Queen, but for Ailrick his Son: This is Extraordinary, and will be yet more so, when we shall consider that this

Ailrick was his youngest Son of Three; and why the King should pass by the two Elder, and Subscribe for the Youngest; or what need there was of that Young Prince's Confirming it at all, would deserve to be considered.

Dr. A— takes some pains to prove, that I ought not to be offended at the Subscriptions of the Abbesses to this Charter. I am not offended at all at it: I agree with him, that as Witnesses on these Occasions they might be, and were admitted to this Privilege. But yet one thing sticks with me, in which I still need satisfaction in this Particular; That two (at least) of these Abbesses ² Mildred, and Etheldride, were dead, the One 15 Years before this pretended Synod, the other probably yet more: And how they could then be present at this Council, and Subscribe to it, I cannot understand.

What Bishop Botred was I should be glad to know: In the Kingdom of Kent there were but two Bishopricks, Canterbury and Rochester, and of both those we had the Bishops Subscriptions before. How comes another Bishop to be present at this meeting? Or being present, how come three Presbyters to Subscribe before him? It is true, we are told, that ³ Abbots who had the Supreme Authority over their several Houses, did sometimes take place of Bishops in the Subscriptions of Synods. But then methinks if those Three had been such, they should have Subscribed before the Abbesses too; and not have been so Ceremonious on such an Occasion, as to allow the Ladies to take place of them.

In three of the Manuscript Copies of this Synod, and in the Evidences of the Church of Canterbury, they are said to have met together to consider, de statu Ecclesiarum Dei in Anglia, and that was the last Correction of it. I shall not now enquire by what Authority the King of Kent undertook to deliberate of the State of Churches within the Dominions of other Princes: But because the same word Occurs again in the End of the Charter, I would gladly know, by what Authentick proof it can be made appear, that Anglia was at all used for the Name of our Country in those Days. Bede wrote the Ecclesiastical History Gentis Anglorum; He runs it through all the Parts of the Nation: Yet in all his History, he does not once call this Land Anglia; nor was that Title yet applied to it. I know ⁴ M. Westminster has a story of a meeting of the Saxon Kings, to settle the Limits of their Dominions, above one Hundred Years before this. Which being done, they resolved utterly to deface the Name of Britain, and so agreed together that the Island should no longer be called Britain from Brute, but ab Anglis Anglia. Let the Historian answer for the Authority of this Relation; I meddle not with the Truth or Falshood of it. But that any Writers in the Age of which we are now disputing, called this Country by that New Name, I am yet to learn; let this Author shew, if he can, that they did.

Let me add yet more; that had such Privileges been granted to the Church, as this Charter pretends, and been so solemnly Confirmed by all the Estates of the Kingdom, Spiritual and Temporal; I cannot see what need there would have been to have had them again renew'd within six Years after, as yet they are said to have been; and that in a less full and solemn manner than before. In that latter Charter, the ⁵ King takes notice of his own Ignorance, that he was not able to Write his Name, and therefore set only a Cross ✕ in Confirmation of it. But in the other before, he Subscribed for himself, for his Wife and Son, without any such Excuse, or Acknowledgment made by him. Had the Order been inverted, We might have thought that in six Years time he might have learnt to write his Name. But how a King should be able to Subscribe to the Acts of a Council in 694, and not be able to Write his Name in 700, will be a more difficult matter to discover.

One of the first Uses that was made of this Invention, was to give Countenance to a Second, in the Council of Cloveshoe, Anno 742: In which Ethelbald, King of the Mercians, is made to Read, Approve, and Confirm the Privileges granted in this Synod of Becanceld. Now for that too Dr. A— may (if he please) refer us to the same Saxon Chronicle. There it stands, and yet more more plainly bespeaks its own Forgery. The Insertion being made, and by consequence the Story Invented after that very Copy was written; and the Acts of Three Years rased out, to make Room for it. They had not, it seems, Contrived this New Charter when that Copy was wrote; and therefore probably they took this Method to insert the one, at the same time they made those Corrections, and Interlineations, of which I before spake, in the Other.

The SAXON
Times.

And thus have I offer'd to the World, and to this Author, some of those Reasons which move me still to suspend my Belief of the whole Story of this Council of Becanceld: Let him now, in his turn, shew, that in all these there are no marks of Imposture; nothing that disagrees with the Story or manners of that time; as he has very confidently, and, I think, no less rashly affirm'd.

In the mean time, allowing for the truth of it; how does it appear, that this was a Parliamentary Council of the Kingdom of Kent, and not an Extraordinary Assembly, called upon a singular, and Extraordinary Occasion? The Saxon Chronicle styles it not by the Usual Title of Wittena Gemot, nor of Mycel Synod; but by a Phrase which I know not whether it Occurs again in the whole Book, Mycel Concilium. In this Concilium, the King, the Archbishop, and Bishop of Rocheſter presided: A Circumſtance not very agreeable to an Ordinary State-meeting. These treated altogether with the Abbots, Abbeſſes, Priests, Deacons, Dukes and Lords; a Confuſion which will not ſuffer it to be accounted a proper Church Synod. It muſt therefore be look'd upon as an Extraordinary Assembly; not as the common Model of the Great Councils of that Kingdom.

But to ſuppoſe even that too: What will this Author at laſt infer from it? That all who are here mention'd, were, in the Saxon Times, Conſtituent Members of the Wittena Gemots, or Parliaments of the Realm? This would be ſtrange indeed: Yet this, Dr. A— makes no ſcruple to affirm. 'Nor, ſays he, can this be matter of Surprize to any one in the leaſt acquainted with the ſtate of thoſe Times; when it was not unuſual for Women to aſſiſt at their Synods and Great Councils. We are told indeed, that among the Old Germans, and Gauls, they came to their Publick Councils; debated of Peace and War; and ſo among the Antient Saxons abroad too. But yet for our own Country, in the Times we are now ſpeaking of, I believe Dr. A— is the Firſt that made Uſe of the few Examples of ſome Women being preſent, upon extraordinary Occaſions, in ſuch Aſſemblies, to infer a Right in them to be reckon'd among the Members of our Great Councils of State. Now this he muſt ſay, or he muſt allow that this Inſtance proves nothing to the purpoſe for which he alledges it. For however he is ſometimes forced to mince the matter; yet, I preſume, he would have it thought that his Inferiour Clergy had a Right to come to them, and were not only now and then, by accident, permitted to be preſent at them.

But let us conſider his Authorities: ' Ælfled was an Abbeſs, and the King's Daughter: She was admitted into an Extraordinary Meeting called by the Pope's Order, Communicated by Berthwald, Archbiſhop of Canterbury to the Notability and Clergy of Northumberland, for reſtoring of Wilfred to his See, from whence he had been too rigidly Expell'd. Her Buſineſs there was, to bear Witneſs to the Company what Alfrith, the Father of their preſent King, had declared in her Preſence upon his Death-bed, concerning his Intentions to have Reſtored Wilfred; and had Commanded his Son, by her, to do. This was the Assembly, and this the Occaſion of Ælfled's being preſent at it. The Assembly was no Parliament; and the Abbeſs was preſent upon an extraordinary Occaſion at it; as a Witneſs of the late King's Order, not as a Member of the Convention.

Edd. Vic.

His next Inſtance, is alſo of a Meeting of an Extraordinary Nature: Neither a State-Council, nor a proper Church-Synod; but a ſolemn Conference between two different Parties about the Celebration of Eaſter. The Meeting was appointed to be held in the Monastery of Streaneſhalch, and Hilda, being at that time the Abbeſs of it, and a Party in the Contention; was allow'd to be preſent at the Debate.

As for the Charter out of Ingulphum, I have already accounted for it. All that the Abbeſſes there did, was to Subscribe as Witneſſes among the reſt; but it does not appear that they were any part of the Assembly; which was again no Ordinary Council, but rather an Irregular mix'd Assembly, for the Extraordinary

But this Gentleman does not stop here: The Abbeſſes were not only Members of the Saxon Councils, but, if we may believe him, of the Norman too; for ſo he goes on. ¹ And there is Reason to believe, that this Practiſe was not confined to the Times before the Conqueſt, but continued long after it; if at leaſt an Expression in M. Paris may be relied on, who tells us that in the Year 1210, Venerunt ad Generalem Vocationem [Regis] Abbates, Priores, Abbatiffæ.

It is one part of the Artifice which this Author uſes upon all Occaſions, to Confound Extraordinary, and Irregular Aſſemblies, with the Stated Councils of the Realm, and proper Synods of the Church: And from what paſſed in the One, to raiſe a Preſident for the Eſtabliſh'd Rights, and Customs, of the Other. He is now to ſhew that Abbeſſes were ordinarily Members of our Antient Parliamentary Councils. He has already produced Three Inſtances, two of which were evidently Extraordinary Meetings, that cannot properly be reduced to either Great Councils, or Synods; and I think the laſt was ſo too. He here purſues the ſame practiſe, in another Convention, which has no manner of Relation to either the One, or the Other.

King John was newly return'd from Ireland; he wanted Money, and he reſolved to raiſe it upon the Religious of his Realm. The Biſhops were generally fled out of the Kingdom, upon the Quarrels between the King and the Pope; inſomuch that none but the Biſhop of Wincheſter remain'd behind; and he was in the King's Interſt, and Employ'd about his Affairs.

In this Juncture, as ² M. Paris, relates it, he cauſed all the Prelates of England to Aſſemble before him: Abbots, Abbeſſes, Templars, and the Keepers of the Lands of the Order of Cluny; and of other Foreign Convents, of whatever Order, or Degree, and Extorted an immense Sum of Money from them. And this, ſays another ³ Historian, was eaſie to be done, conſidering what Circumſtances they were in; and that they were glad, upon any Terms, to enjoy but a ſhort Peace, and not ſuffer yet more by their Refuſal.

³ Walt. Co-ventre Mf. ad Ann.

This is the Instance, which this Author puts upon Us, to prove that the Abbeſſes continued, even after the Conqueſt, to come to our State-Councils. An Aſſembly called by the Prince alone without a Biſhop, or Secular Priest of any kind, ſummon'd to come to it, therefore no Regular Synod. An Aſſembly only of Prelates, and Heads of Religious Houſes, no Lay-men at it; therefore no English Parliament. Let the Reader judge what Fallacies are put upon him; when ſuch Conventions as theſe are Urged for Stated Councils; and not the leaſt Intimation given, of their being Extraordinary, and irregular Aſſemblies; which prove nothing but the Infincerity of the Writer, and the Weakneſs of the Cauſe, that muſt be defended by ſuch Allegations.

⁴ Rights, p. 282.

But he goes on: ⁴ In the year 697, the Conſtitutions of Withred were made by the Biſhops, & Cæteri Ordines Eccleſiaſtici illius Gentis, in which ſeveral of the Clergy, under Abbots, muſt be included.

⁵ f. þær þær geramnas eadigra geheatenlicpa ymb cýnne.

Dr. A— ſtill proceeds upon ſuſpected Inſtances, and upon dark Paſſages, of which nothing certain can be determined. “Theſe Conſtitutions (he ſays) were made by the Biſhops, et cæteri Ordines Eccleſiaſtici; that is not ſo:

They were made by Them, and the Laiety there preſent; Communi Omnium Aſſenſu, ſay the Acts: And I hope this Author is not ſo Warm in his Defence of the Clergy, as to bring the whole Right of Suffrage and Authority, even in Parliament, within the Pale of the Church; and make the Other Eſtates, but meer Aſſenters to what the Clergy do.

⁶ f. 7 þær þær anpæbe of this Meeting, account, as far as I can give it, of the Introduction to this Council: And it evidently shews who were the Authoritative Members of it. They were the Eadignas, the Nobles, or Great Men. Thus much is plain; but for the rest, the Acts are too Corrupt, and Obscure, to suffer us clearly to Understand them; much less to build any Opinion upon the Authority of them.

Account

The SAXON
Times.

There is therefore but little use to be made of this Precedent to the Purpose for which Dr. A. produces it, supposing these Acts to be Genuine, and Authentick. But, indeed, that is what I must beg leave very much to doubt of. For, First, Our Historians here again are absolutely silent in this Case: Not One, that I know of, makes any mention of such a Synod.

These Acts tell us that it was held in the Fifth year of King Withred, the First Indiction. But the Fifth year of that King falls in with the Tenth Indiction; and how this can be reconciled, I cannot conceive.

They call Brightwald not Archbishop of Canterbury, but by an odd Expression ¹ Sax. Chron. Bretone Heah-biscop; Chief Bishop of the Britains; a Phrase which in those ² An. 692. times would hardly have been made use of; and especially with relation to one of whom it is particularly taken Notice in our Saxon Annals that he was the first of all the Bishops of Englince, the English Archbishops of Canterbury.

They add that Gybmund was then Bishop of Rocheſter: But it is certain that Gybmund had been dead ³ Five years before; and that Tobias was now in the ⁴ Anno 693. Chron. Sax. Fifth year of his Government of that Church.

How far these Exceptions shall be thought sufficient to take off from all Credit of this Synod, I cannot tell: But thus much is plain, that we cannot much depend upon the accuracy of those Acts in which we find such Palpable Mistakes; nor determine a Cause of this Moment by an Obscure Expression, in such an erroneous, and unaccurate Relation.

His next ⁵ Proof is from the Synod of Cloveshoe Anno 747. This in the First ⁶ Right. p. 282. Chapter was a proper Church Synod: Now it is turn'd into a State Council. ⁷ Be-Comp. p. 13. fore it was a good Evidence of the Right of the Inferiour Clergy to sit in Ecclesiastical Synods; Now it is as good an Argument to prove the Right of the same Clergy to sit in Parliament: And what he will next take Occasion to prove by it, I cannot tell. But the truth is, it behoves an Author, in this Case, to be a good Husband of his Instances; and to apply them to as many Purposes as he can. There are not many that even Art it self can so far disguise, as to make them look like Authorities either for the One, or Other, of his Affertions; and therefore he ought not to be blamed for his Careful management of them.

But then as the Presence of the King, and his Lay Lords, sufficiently shews that All are not to be look'd upon as the proper Members of Church Synods, who have sometimes been permitted, or reported, to have been present at them: So this Meeting being evidently an Ecclesiastical Assembly, and Convened upon an Ecclesiastical Account; proves nothing but the disingenuity of the Author, who against his own knowledge, testified by his former Right Application of it, produced it for that, which he was sensible, at the same time, it had no manner of Relation to.

The next ⁸ Instance he calls the Synod at Calcyth, and mentions a Legate being ⁹ Right. p. 282. present at it. One would think that these were tokens sufficient to have shewn that it was no Wittena Gemot; but what the ¹⁰ Learn'd Editor of our Councils ¹¹ Spelm. Concil. styles it, Concilium Calcutheſe Legatinum. The Occasion of it was to receive the ¹² Tom. 1. p. 292. Pope's Admonitions, and they All relate to matters of Faith, or Discipline; that is, to the Business of a Church Synod, not of a State Assembly. But however let us hear what he says of it. "In the Legates Relation to Pope Adrian---- ¹³ It is said ¹⁴ ib. p. 300. "that every thing was done in Concilio publico coram Rege Ælfuualdo & Archiepiscopo Eanbaldo, & omnibus Episcopis & Abbatibus Regionis, seu Senatoribus & Ducibus & Populo Terræ. Well! and under which of these does he rank his Inferiour Clergy? Here are All that were present in this Publick Council; and not one word of any Inferiour Clergy there?

For that therefore we must go yet further: ¹⁵ "And at the close of the Sub- ¹⁶ Rights, ib. scriptions we find these Words, Illis quoq; saluberrimis Ammonitionibus, Presbyteri, Diaconi Ecclesiarum, & Abbates Monasteriorum, Judices, Optimates, & Nobiles, unopere uno Ore Consentimus & Subscripsimus. Let it be allow'd; After the Decrees were publish'd, and agreed to in the Council; Presbyters and Deacons, as well as Others, Subscribed to them? How does this make them Members of it?

The SAXON
Times.

But has this Author forgot what he had said before? Or does he think that no Body else will attend to it? These things being proposed in the Council, to the Bishops, Abbots, and Lords or Senators, were Consented to by them, and (which he has omitted) Confirmed with the Sign of the Holy Cross. The Abbots, Senators, and Lords therefore who were in the Council, had before Subscribed? Who are these other Abbots, Judges, and Nobles, that come in after with the His quoque? Either these must be some Others who were not present at the Meeting; or rather, as 'tis most probable, all these Subscriptions must have been meer Forgeries, and of no Authority.

For, give me leave to ask this Disputer, how comes Dilberchus Augustadensis presul, (or rather Gilbertus, or Tilbertus, Augustaldensis, as it should have been) to Subscribe before the Archbishop of York? He was both Consecrated in time after him; and of a See Inferiour to him. Who is the Ædilberchus Candensis Casæ? But especially who is Adulphus Myiensis, and Æthilwinus, Subscribing by his Legates?

Let us therefore leave the Subscriptions, and Recur to that which is of much more Authority, to the Acts of the Synod; and there we shall clearly see who were the Constituent Members of it. Upon the Arrival of the Popes Legates here, Offa King of the Mercians, (or rather Britricus; for the other was now Dead,) Chunulphus King of the West-Saxons, cum Pontificibus & Senioribus terra, advised the Separation of the Legates, and that Georgius should go to the North, and Theophylact, to the parts of Mercia.

George being come to Northumberland to King Oswald, and the Archbishop of York; the day of the Council was appointed; Ad quem Convenerunt Omnes Principes Regionis, tam Ecclesiastici quam Sæculares.

This Council being over, the Legate return'd to his Companion, and brought the Decrees of it to the Council of the Mercians, Ubi gloriosus Rex Offa, cum Senatoribus terræ, una cum Archiepiscopo--- S. Ecclesiæ Dorovernensis, & Cæteris Episcopis Regionum Convenerat. These also agreed to the Constitutions: And then tam Rex, quam Principes sui, Archiepiscopus, cum Sociis suis, Subscribed to them.

Here now is the whole Account of both these Councils as to this Matter. Where does this Author find his Inferiour Clergy in them? Let them, if you will, have afterwards Agreed with them; let them have Subscribed in their Places to what their Governours had done before them: Tho' I have no value for the Subscriptions, yet I insist not upon the Spuriousness of them. But let not this Author pretend to blind our Eyes, and bring his Subscribing Clergy into the Council, as Members of it, against the direct (and therefore I doubt by him suppress'd) Words of its Own Acts to the Contrary.

But this last Quotation furnishes Another in the same Terms: For those same Words, he says, Occur in a Charter of the Year 996. Granted to the Dean of Wolverhampton in a Great Council of the Realm. But he is here again at the same foul Play; and imposes upon us in his Representation of this Matter. Those Words do not Occur in that Charter, but are a Note added to the Bottom of all the Subscriptions to it, if one could tell how to make Sense of it: His quoq; saluberrimis Ammonitionibus, Presbyteris, Diaconibus & Abbatibus Monasteriorum, (for in this New Order they are ranked, first Priests and Deacons, and then the Prelates) Judices, Optimates, & Nobiles, uno Ore consentimus, & subscripsimus. But the Body of the Charter (which ought not to have been dissembled) makes directly against his Pretensions. Hæc namq; decreta Segerich Archiepiscopus, in Placito coram Rege Ethelredo, & Eboracensi Archiepiscopo, & Omnibus Episcopis, Abbatibus Regionis Britannicæ, seu Senatoribus, Ducibus & Populo Terræ, proposuimus; and they subscribed to it. These were the Members of that Council, as that very Charter recounts them; let this Author tell us where his Inferiour Clergy are to be found among them.

In a second Synod at Calcyth Anno 816, we find the King, Cum suis Principibus, Ducibus, & Optimatibus, tum undiq; Sacri—Ordinis Præsides, cum Abbatibus, Presbyteris, Diaconibus, pariter tractantes de necessariis, & Utilitatibus Ecclesiarum. This is his next Instance, and it is like most of the Others, unfairly Represented, and nothing to the Purpose. The Meeting is a proper Provincial Synod: Wulfred, the Archbishop, presided: The other Bishops of his Province were his Assessors. The King, attended with his Great Men, was (after the manner of those those times) present at it; Dum undiq; Sacri, &c. "Whilst the Holy Orders there present, the Bishops, with the Abbots, Priests and Deacons, Treated together of such Matters as were necessary or profitable to the Church. The SAXON Times.

This is the whole of the Matter; and how this proves any Right in the Priests and Deacons to be Members of State Councils, I shall leave it to this Author, at his better Leisure, to Inform us.

In the mean time, he will give me leave here again to put him in mind, that the Acts of these Synods, are too often very faulty, in what relates to the Circumstances of them; so that 'tis hard to found any good Argument upon them. Of this Synod, for Example, I do not know any one of our Historians that makes the least mention. Whence the Acts of it were taken, Sir Henry Spelman informs us not. But the faults of the Introduction, are beyond Number, and without Excuse. Beornmode Bishop of Rochester, is made a Member of it, Twelve years after his Death. Sibbanus and Tidfrithus mention'd as Bishops of the East Angles; where at this time Weremund sat. Wulfheard Bishop of Hereford, where Beonna had been seated Seven years before. And, on the contrary, Alnoth Bishop of London, advanced to that Dignity, almost Twenty years before his time.

These are some of the Errors of those Acts: And from whence tho' I would not take Occasion utterly to deny all Credit to them; yet are they sufficient to shew the Unaccuracy of them in these Circumstances; and to convince any impartial Judge, how little stress we can lay upon their Expressions to prove an Assertion of such moment, as this Author is pleas'd to found upon them. But let him make the best he can of his Argument: The Synod, as 'tis there Represented, was plainly an Ecclesiastical Council; and to such, tho' I deny that any besides Bishops had Right to Come, yet I do not doubt, but that others of a Lower Order, were oftentimes admitted, as I have before shewn, to be present at them.

But if the Inferiour Clergy had not a Right to come to Parliament, yet at least they had to come to a Coronation. For, "At the Coronation of King Edgar, Anno 973, the Saxon Chronicle tells us, Convenerat Sacerdotum Cœtus, Monachorum turba, Sapientumq; Concilium. This Concilium is a dangerous Word; and may be thought, as it there stands, to imply no less than a Wittenagemot. To remove that difficulty, let it be observed that the Saxon has no such Apposite Signification: It is a piece of Poetry, and in the proper Translation of it, which I am forced here to be exact in, runs thus; Ibi, Quemadmodum ego Accepi, Ingens Doctorum Sacerdotum Cœtus, Monachorumq; Gnavorum Magna Turba Convenit. "At this Solemnity, a great number of Priests and Monks were gathered together; What Priests and Monks the Poet defines not; nor is it any great Matter of what kind they were. Sect. 36.
Right. p. 283.

However let us see how one of the most exact followers of the Saxon Chronicle, Florence of Worcester, relates the Matter, in the very Solemnity under Debate. "King Edgar, says he, was Blessed, and Consecrated with great Honour and Glory, Quinto Id. Maii, on the day of Pentecost, by the Blessed Prelates, Dustan and Oswald, & à Cateris totius Angliæ Antistitibus. ³ M. Westminster is yet more distinct: Præsentibus Præsulibus Dunstano, Oswaldo, Cæterisq; totius Angliæ Pontificibus, ac Magnatibus Universis. These are the Persons of whom the Saxon Chronicle spake; which never intended to thrust out the Bishops, from this Great Solemnity, and to bring D. A—'s Inferiour Priests, into the Place, and Office, of them. Flor. Wig. ad Ann. 973.
M. Westminster ad Ann.

But it may be, I mistake his Meaning; and they are not the Sacerdotes or Monachi, but Sapientes, that he would have to Represent his Inferiour Clergy in this place. For so he reads the Adjective gleappa, for a Substantive; and makes a new sort of Persons to have been Summon'd there, the piten or Sapientes. To allow for his mistake in a Language which he professes not to understand; That even in such a Case Sapientes should have denoted his Inferiour Clergy, would have been very strange, because then he must exclude the Lay Nobility; and make us a State Council only of the Clergy. Now this he was himself aware of; and therefore gives such an Account of them, as I think renders his Proof but very little to his Purpose. "By the Sapientes here mentioned, the Laity are chiefly to be understood. But in other places, where the Lower Clergy are not distinctly Named, the Word comprehends them also, and is design'd to Express them. So that wherever then we meet with Sapientes, we must understand by it, the Parliamentary Nobles, and the Inferiour Clergy. Is that what he would have?

The SAXON

have? I cannot think any thing more Extravagant could possibly have been suggested by him: Nor of which it was more impossible to give an Example. Let this Author try his Skill, and see if he can produce any one Passage relating to the Members of the Saxon State-Councils in which Sapientes absolutely put, without any Other Word to determine the signification of it, Denotes the Inferiour Clergy; and bespeaks them, as well as the Lay Nobles, to be Members of them.

As for the Passage which he offers in proof of it, 'tis so very foreign to his Pretence, that one would wonder what he meant by the Citation of it. Simeon Dunelm. speaking of the Synod of Finchale, says, In diebus Justorum Regum, & Ducum Bonorum, atq; S. S. Episcoporum, Aliorumq; Sapientium, Monachorum Scil. atq; Clericorum: But does he speak of these as Members of a Wittena Gemot? By no means. He only says that the Council there met, debated about several good Orders, which heretofore in the time of the Just Kings, and Dukes, and of the Holy Bishops, and other Wise Men, as well Regulars, as Seculars, had been Establish'd.

Again, is Sapientes there put Absolutely, without any Relative to determine the Sense of it? Not so neither. But on the contrary it is limited on both sides; and refers to the Just Kings, Good Dukes, and Holy Bishops, which went before; and to the Monks and Clergy, which follow after. All which are here set forth to have been Wise, as well as Good Men: And therefore such whose Constitutions, upon both those Accounts, deserved to be Enquired into.

But what is it therefore that this Author would prove to Us? That Sapientes is a Common Character, and is not so restrain'd to the Great Men of the Realm, but that it may be, and oftentimes is, Applied to Others also? I know no Body that Opposes him herein. I can easily allow that his Inferiour Clergy may deserve the Title of Wise as well as Good Men? Nor am I an Enemy to their being Call'd so. That which I want is some Passage to shew, that any Ancient Authors that wrote Correctly of these things, speaking of the Saxon Councils, and the Sapientes, as Members of them; have used that Word Absolutely, without any Relative to determine the Sense of it, for the Lower Clergy in Parliament; which he would here insinuate, but I am pretty Confident will never be able to prove.

He concludes his Induction with an Instance fit to bring up the Rear of such sort of Allegations; an Example neither fairly represented, nor at all to the purpose, in these Words; "At the Great Council of Westminster Convened, Anno 1066, by Edward the Confessor, upon the Consecration and Endowment of that Abbey, there was Generalis totius fere Nobilitatis Angliæ Conventus: And on the Church Part, Episcopi & Abbates totius Angliæ, & Monachi, & Clerici; Who went aside to Excommunicate the Infringers of the Priviledges then granted. This was a large Parliament indeed; almost all the Nobility of England; and All the Bishops and Abbots, and Monks and Clergy. But yet it had One terrible Defect, according to this Author's Hypothesis, that large as it was, his Lay Commons were not Called to it; nor, for what appears by the Relation, were they at all present at it.

With what strange Security do some Men Write? And how much do they depend either upon the Ignorance, or Carelesness, of their Readers? "At the Great Council of Westminster, Convened by King Edward the Confessor upon the Consecration and Endowment of that Abbey, there was Generalis totius fere Nobilitatis Angliæ Conventus: Does the Ramsley History indeed say this? Or does this Author only say it, the better to Accommodate it to his own design? Let the Reader be his own Judge. "Dehinc Rex Edwardus, in die Natalis Domini, facta Londoniæ Generali totius fere Nobilitatis Angliæ Conventu, cum Gloria & Honore Regio Coronatus est. Here is nothing of Westminster Abbey; nothing of any great Council Convened at Westminster. It only takes notice that according to the Custom of those times, King Edward the Confessor was solemnly Crown'd at London upon Christmas-day, and that for this there was a General Conventus, or Assembly, of almost all the Nobility of England.

³ And "On the Church part (at this Great Council) Episcopi, & Abbates totius Angliæ, & Monachi & Clerici. Does ⁴ Sir Henry Spelman tell us that? Just as the Ramsley History did the other. The History thus wretchedly Disguised, and Confounded by this Writer, was plainly this. King Edward having solemnly kept his Christmas with his Nobility, and finding his Health decay, hasten'd to the Dedication of the Church of Westminster; which he had just then finish'd

gaudio celebri, & apparatu solemniori, fecit dedicari; says his own Historian.

To this Dedication not only his Great Lords, who had kept their Christmas with him, but a mighty Confluence of Persons from all parts Came. The Regular Prelates were in great Numbers present: The King's Charter to this Abbey was solemnly Sign'd, and Ratified; And that being done, all the Clergy who were there gathered together, Bishops, Abbots, Monks, and Clerks, Excommunicated (not going aside, as this Author would have it, but) in the presence of All the Laity those who should infringe it, or suffer it to be infringed.

This is the Sum of the Matter; and this the Assembly which this Author turns into a Parliament. But least this Gentleman should tell us that this Charter would not have been Valid without the Consent of Parliament; we will Enquire who they were that did concur with the King to the Making, and Establishing, of it.

First, the King being under a Vow to go to Rome; his Optimates were much troubled at it; and Communi habito Concilio, desired him to desist from any such Intention. The Pope thereupon Absolved him from this Vow, and Commanded him to Expend the Charges he should have been at in that Journey, on Works of Charity. ^{1 Spelm. lib. pag. 628.}

Having received this Dispensation, and determined to Repair and Endow this Abbey; and to Grant some extraordinary Privileges to it; We are, in the next Place, told by what Advice and Authority he did it: ^{2 Ibid. pag. 634.} Cum Concilio, & Decreto Archiepiscoporum, Episcoporum, Comitum, Aliorumque Omnium Optimatum.

In a ^{3 Charta Antiquae. vol. ii. U. i.} MS. Copy of this Charter it is said, that having not only done all this himself; but Renew'd all the Privileges which had before been granted to that Place; he again Confirm'd his Grant, Cum consensu atque Consultu Primatum suorum.

And Lastly, Upon the Day of this solemn Dedication; he commanded this his Charter to be Recited, coram Episcopis, Abbatibus, Comitibus, et Omnibus Optimatibus Anglie: Which being done, Omni Populo audiente et Vidente, in the Presence and hearing of all the People, he caused the Excommunication, of which this ^{4 Spelm. lib. pag. 635.} Author speaks, and for which he carries the Clergy aside by themselves, to be publish'd.

The Subscriptions to this Charter, must also be taken notice of; tho' I do not pretend, with this Author, to prove any thing One way or Other by them. First the King, then the Queen, subscribe it. After them the Archbishops, Bishops, and Abbots, with three of the Capellani Regis; who (I presume) had Places of Dignity in the King's Court and Chappel, as we are told, they had in the Court of France; the Custom of which King Edward very much follow'd. After these, we have only the Laity; with whom our Argument being not concern'd, neither shall I take any farther Notice of them.

I shall Conclude this whole Passage with the Ingenuous Note of our Learned ^{5 Ibid. pag. 636.} Spelman, upon this Meeting: This Convention (says he) I do not call either a Council, or a Synod; because tho' it has the Appearance of a Council or Synod, yet I do not find it so named by the Antient Authors, but a Conventus. And indeed a Conventus only it was; neither a Parliament, nor Synod: As, by the whole process of the History before touch'd, does evidently appear.

This therefore may be added to all the rest, to shew not only the Weakness of the Allegation, but the Disingenuity of this Author, in the Alledging of it: Who tho' he saw this Remark before him, and could not but be sensible of the Justice of it, yet nevertheless produced such an Assembly for a true and proper Council, which he had been told, no Antient Author had ever thought fit so much as to Call by the Name of a Council; as knowing that indeed it was not any Regular State-meeting, but an Extraordinary Convention, upon the Dedication of that Antient and Venerable Church.

And thus have I Examined his Historical Allegations to prove the Lower Clergy to have been Members of the Saxon Wittena Gemots, or Parliaments; and may presume to say, have shewn that there is not One that comes up to what he pretends; and scarcely any that so much as belongs to the Business for which he produced them. And yet as if his Instances had been clear, even to Demonstration, he Triumphantly Concludes: ^{6 Rights. p. 284.} These Instances are so plain, as to need no Comment, and to admit no fair Reply. 'Tis a great Felicity which some Men Men Enjoy, always to think well of their Own Performances. That his Instances needed a Comment, I am very sure; and accordingly I have endeavour'd to give some Historical Light to them. Whether my Reply to them be fair, or No, neither this Gentleman, nor I must judge. We have made a publick Appeal to the World in this Case, and to that we must now Leave it to judge between Us.

But he has yet ¹ Another Clear proof of the Lower Clergies Assisting frequently at those Great Councils, drawn from the Subscriptions of Charters, where we frequently meet with Capellani, and Presbyteri; and sometimes with simple Deacons among the other Witnesses. I cannot but remark the several odd Expressions which this Author makes use of in his Prosecution of this Argument. Sometimes his Lower Clergy Attend at those Councils; sometimes they are present at them; and here they are Assistant at them: Words of a Large Sense, and which may agree to those who were by no means the Proper Members of such Conventions. But the true State of the Question, would he deal fairly and Openly with Us, is this; whether the Lower Clergy, in the Saxon times, were by the Constitution of our Government in those days, proper Members of the State Councils, as the Great Men and Bishops were? If not, as indeed he dares not (at last) himself affirm, that they were; then what kind of Members they were? What Right they had to be Called to Them? And at what Times, and upon what Occasions, they came to them in Consequence of that Right?

286.

This would be plain dealing: But to talk of them sometimes as a ² Constant and necessary Part of our Great Councils; Sometimes as coming Oftentimes only, "and distinguish'd from the Constant and Standing Members: In one place as Obliged to Attend in that Capacity; in Others, as coming there only Sometimes like the Queens, and Lay-Commons; nay, or like the Common Croud of the Court, in waiting upon the King, is to perplex, not to clear this Matter; and seems to have been design'd only as a ground for an Evasion, if he should chance to be call'd to Account for his Assertions.

Sec. 39.

However let us consider this Argument too: Presbyters, and Deacons are sometimes found, he says, among the Subscribers to the Saxon Charters. To make this a good Argument; we must add; That all these Charters were made in their Wittena Gemots; and all that Subscribed as Witnesses to them, were proper Members of those Councils; and therefore the Presbyters, and Deacons, were proper Members of them. Now how will this Author ever make out either of these Two Assertions to Us? The latter, he does not so much as attempt: For the former he offers One, and but One, Reason; that if they were not made in Parliament, (give me leave to anticipate the Use of that Word) they were not Valid and Binding.

Now this, indeed, if it be true, may be a good Reason why those to whom such Charters were made, should have got them Confirm'd some time or other, by Act of Parliament; but it does not necessarily infer, that all such Charters must Originally have been made there. And true it is, that in Case the King did by his Charter grant any Priviledges which were contrary to Common Right; or dispose of such Lands, which he had not, alone, the Power to Alienate; it was necessary in such Cases that the Great Councils should Consent; and if they did not; we find they did often come with Acts of Resumption, and take them back again to the Crown. But was it necessary that the Lower Clergy should Consent in such Cases, where the Charter was pass'd in the Great Council, or Confirm'd by it? So far from it, that even in the times after the Conquest, when we all allow the Commons, and Clergy, to have been proper Members of our Parliaments, yet the King and his Lords only Determined these Matters. They were the Council which, even then, Consented and Agreed to them; and if the Consent of the Clergy was not thought needful to be taken then, this Author will find it hard to persuade any reasonable Man that it was either Required or taken before.

fol. xxvii. Sec.

Let me, in Proof of this, give one Instance from an ³ Antient and Authentick Record, relating to the Church of Ely. 'Tis in a large Charter of the 1st of King Richard the 2d, and comes up very near to the times for which I alledge it. In the Recital of a Charter of King Edward the 2d, we find an intire Grant of King Edgar's repeated by an Inspeximus to that Church, Anno 970. In this the Authority by which that King's Charter was Confirmed, is thus deliver'd, Scientibus totius Regni mei Primatibus, quorum quaedam nomina hic infra inferi, ad testimonium stimonium in posterum mandamus. And again, In hijs igitur testibus & alijs com- The SAXON pluribus, de omnibus Dignitatibus, & Primatibus Regni mei, hac constituta & peracta noscuntur. These are the Persons who joyn'd with that Prince; none other mentioned to have concurr'd with him in his Grant.

King Edward the 2d, (for to him, I think it refers, and not to King Edward the 3d) Confirms this Charter, de Assensu Prælatorum, Comitum, Baronum, & Aliorum Procerum regni nostri, in Parlamento nostro apud Ebor. Convocato existentium, Anno Regni, xii.

By another Inspeximus there is recited another Charter granted to the same Church by Edward the Confessor: It recites the Charter of Edgar, as made sancto Dunstano alacriter Mandante, Cunctisque Primatibus Regni, Privilegio firmatum. And then himself Confirms it suorum consensu fidelium; which perhaps Dr. A— will tell us, were his Commons and Clergy.

To prevent any such Misapplication; he may please to know, that in another ¹ Charter of King William the Conqueror to the Church of Fischam, there is ¹ Charta An-
the very same Expression; He ratify'd it with the Assent of his Queen, Children ^{tique S. 1.} and Lords; & Manibus FIDELIUM meorum (says he) corrobandum trado. Yet among all these FIDELIS in the Subscription, there is not One besides the Royal Family, Bishops, and Barons; so that we are in no Danger, I think, on that side.

After another recital of William the Conquerors Charter to the same Church; the same King Edward the 2d, comes again to ratifie these Charters, as he had done the fore-going; And he does it, as before; De Assensu Prælatorum, Comi- tum, Baronum, & aliorum Procerum Regni Nostri in Parlamento nostro apud Ebor.
Convocato Existentium.

Thus were these Charters Ratified in Parliament after the acknowledged admission of the Clergy to that Great Council. And I shall leave it to any one to consider, what probability there is, that the Concurrence of the Inferior Clergy should have been required to make such Grants valid, in the Saxon times; when it is yet to be proved, that they were at all Members of our State-Conventions; whose Consent was not required in those following times, when 'tis not doubted but that they were truly Members of our English Parliaments.

To make this the more evident, let us take the only Instance he alledges in Sect. 40.
Proof of what he assents; and which, even in his Own short Quotation of it, speaks against him. ² King Baldred had given some Lands to the Church of Can- ² Rights, p.

be valid. Where is the Consent of his Inferior Clergy required? The Consensus Magnatum was thought necessary: But for any others, it is not mention'd; nor was it taken upon the New Ratification of this very Grant.

The History of it, in the Place to which he refers, is this. ³ ⁴ In the Year ³ Evident.
⁴ 828, a Council was called at Kingestune; King Egbert and his Son Athulph præ- ^{Cant. apud}

⁴ of England. Here we have a plain Account of the Members of this Great Coun- 2218.
cil: Let us now proceed to the History of it. Among other things which were said and done there, Ceolnoth the Archbishop shew'd before the whole Council, how that King Egbert, and his Son Athulph, had given to the Church of Canter- bury, the Mannor of Mellinges in Sussex, free from all Secular Service, and Royal Tribute; Except that of Expeditions, and the Building of Bridges, and Castles.
The Charter therefore by which this Grant was made, did not pass Originally in Council, (as this Author supposes them all to have done) but being granted by the King, was now brought to be Confirm'd by the Council. And so it seems King Baldred had done before: He had granted the same Estate to that Church; but his Princes being not well pleased with him, they refus'd to Confirm his Gift. Wherefore King Edgar and his Son, at the Archbishop's Request, made good the Grant; and now it was moved that the Council would do likewise.

The result of this matter seems therefore to be this: Our Kings made their Charters either in, or out of Council, indifferently. But if the Gift were of such a Nature as required the Consent of the Lords, as well as the Kings; in that Case, they commonly obtain'd the Council's Ratification of them; which was what I before observed, and is, I believe, the whole Truth of this Matter.

Let me add, that even when it was so ratified, yet was it a very common thing for the Religious to desire, and to obtain, New Confirmations of their Charters,

The SAXON
Times.

Charters, almost under every Reign. So that it is no new thing for the Church of Canterbury to get such a reiterated Grant from King Edgar in this Case, but a Matter of Customary Practice, and of which it were easie to give a great Number of Examples.

But still the main point is to be proved ; how it appears that all who subscribed to such Charters, when passed, or ratifi'd, in the State-Council, were the proper Members of that Assembly ? This therefore must be left to some future Proof ; and 'till then, I might dismiss his Instances too, without Enquiring any farther into them.

There is yet one thing more to be consider'd, whether the Charters which he alledges be Authentick or not ? To that he Answers, it is no great Matter, whether they be Genuine or Not : ' For supposing them Forged, they must be allow'd, at least, to be well Counterfeited, or else they would not have pass'd upon knowing Men when first produced. The Monks who Coin'd them were no Bunglers ; but understood very well the State of those Times, to which they adjusted these Instruments, and drew them, no doubt, according to Authentick Forms and Patterns. But this too, is contrary to the Best Accounts we have of these Matters, and shews how little this Author understood what he wrote in this Particular.

The time in which most of these Charters were forged, was in the Reign of the Conqueror, or in those which immediately follow'd. The Priviledges granted by him to Battle-Abbey, were both the Occasion of them, and the great Pattern by which they drew them. Now the Normans, who forged them, were not only utterly unacquainted with our Saxon History, but could not so much as Read the Saxon Letters. The Men upon which they pass'd them, were not at all more knowing than the Inventors ; and therefore might easily enough be imposed upon by them. And yet this Author either does, or I am sure ought to know, that these Charters did not pass so currently neither, but that great Quarrels were raised by means of Them, and abundance of Knavery was discovered in relation to them. And therefore these forged Charters are not so much to be depended upon, as he supposes ; but rather are to be as little valued for History Now, as they were accounted of for Matters of Rights and Priviledges heretofore.

But if false Charters be of so Good Authority in this Case, what does this Author think of True Ones ? If we must determine in the present point by Charters, why should we not rather take those which are allow'd to be Authentic, than such as we are sure are not ? I will make him a fair Offer : Let the Matter be referr'd to the Saxon Charters of Ingulfus ; and let our Cause stand, or fall by Them. He Collected them in the time of the Conqueror : Or rather he found the Greatest part of them Collected to his Hand, by Contemporary Authors, before : He understood the Saxon Antiquities excellently Well ; and this Author himself agrees with me in allowing of his Authority.

Oxon. pag. 2.

² His First Charter is that of Ethelbald, Anno 716 ; how it was Confirm'd, the Historian tells us ; and it is, full to our purpose, Chartam suam in presentia Episcoporum, Procerum que regni sui Secutam statuit. Yet to this One Ingulphus a Presbyter, was a Witness ; * Ego Ingulfus Presbyter, & humilis Minister vocatus audivi. It is probable, he drew the Charter, and therefore, as in other Cases, was a Witness to it.

³ Ib. pag. 6.

Of this we have a more plain instance in the ³ Charter of Offa, Anno 793. In which the only Presbyter which subscribes, is Tilhere, one of the King's Priests, who also wrote the Grant.

⁴ Ib. pag. 7.

The same was the Case of ⁴ Sigga, in the Charter of Kenulph, Anno 806. But in the great Charter of Witlaff, Anno 833, Swithin the King's Priest subscribed, and Bosa drew the Charter : But by whose Authority was it Confirm'd ? 'Tis a remarkable Passage, and the rather to be taken notice of, because this Charter was actually granted in such a State-Council as we are now discoursing of. Istud Chirographum meum (says the King) Domino Siwardo Abbati, &c. Quondam promissum, in presentia Dominorum meorum, Egberti Regis Westsaxonix, et Athelwlf, filii ejus, coram Pontificibus, & Proceribus Majoribus totius Angliæ, in Civitate Londonia (ubi Omnes Congregati fuimus pro Consilio capiando contra Danicos Piratas littora Angliæ assidue infestante) signo sanctæ Crucis Confirmavi.

Such were the Persons of whom the Saxon Councils consisted ; and so plainly does it from hence appear, that this Presbyter, tho' a Subscriber to the Charter, was yet (as such) no Member of the Gemot, in which it was pass'd; unless by some special Call, or Office at the Court, he was required to come to it. The SAXON Times.

What this Charter of Withlaff plainly enough shews, the next of ¹ Bertulph his Successor, will put out of all reasonable doubt. One of their Monks had made Application to the King in his Council for some farther Confirmation and Enlargement of their Priviledges. Let us hear, who were the Members of the Council; coram Pralatis, & Proceribus totius Regni mei Mercia, apud Beningdon ultimo Congregatis. Ib. p. 12.

The King accordingly granted what was desired, ² Cum Communi Consilio totius regni mei. And of whom did that Council Consist? It follows as before, Consentientibus omnibus Pralatis, & Proceribus meis. Ib. p. 13.

But the King went farther yet; He granted them yet more: And still with the same Consent; Cum Communi Consilio, gratuitoque Consensu Omnium Magnatum Regni mei.

And finally to close all, ³ Cum unanimi Consensu totius presentis Concilii hic apud Kyngesberi Anno Incarnationis Christi Domini, 851. in hebdomada pasche pro Regni Negotiis Congregati, he subscribed to it. The Form of the Subscription is remarkable; and it is this. * Ego Bertulphus Rex Merciorum, palam omnibus Pralatis & Proceribus Regni mei, divinam deprecor Majestatem, &c. Ib. p. 15.

Here we have the Members of two Saxon Gemots plainly represented to us; The Prelates and Nobles only are mentioned: They Consent; they Confirm with the King; and by so doing sufficiently shew of whom those Councils in those times Consisted.

The next ⁴ Charter is that of King Ethelwolf Anno 851. which this Author has before produced in proof of the Right of the Lower Clergy to be present at, and approve of what was done in, the State Councils of those times. But this both Ingulfus, and the Charter it self, apparently Contradict. The Historian says, he made it, "Omnium Pralatorum ac Principum suorum gratuito Consensu:" The Charter, that he pass'd it, "Cum Consilio Episcoporum ac Principum meorum." The latter declares who were the Members of the Council; The former shews whose Consent was requisite to the Passing of it. Ib. p. 17.

After this, I shall not Dispute with this Author who the Fideles, and Dignitates, spoken of in the Subscription were. The Charter was Made and Confirmed in Council. That being done, it was Sign'd, and Offer'd to God, before the High Altar in the Church of Winchester. And upon so solemn an Occasion, it is not to be wondred if a vast Confluence appear'd in the Church, and Approv'd of the Piety and Munificence of the King, and his Council; tho' only the Dignitates Subscribed. The Infinita multitudo, was present at the One, but it does by no Means thence follow that they were also Members of the Other.

The Charter of ⁵ Beorred not being made in Council, I shall take no Advantage of it, tho' not one Priest, or Deacon, Subscribed to it. But hasten to the next of King Edred made in Council at London, Anno 948. and which is another plain Evidence against the new Model of this Author. Ib. p. 18.

In the Feast of the Nativity of the Blessed Mary (they are the Words of ⁶ Ingulfus) "Cum Universi Magnates Regni per Regium Edictum Summoniti, tam Archiepiscopi, & Episcopi, ac Abbates, quam Cæteri totius Regni Proceres, & Optimates, Londoniis Convenissent ad Tractandum de Negotiis publicis totius Regni;" Turkettle the Abbot obtain'd this Charter of the King. These were the Members of that Great Assembly, by the Historians Account; let us see how the Charter agrees with it. ⁷ "Ista donaria, says the King, prædictis monachis stabilivi in Anno 948. in Præsentia Archiepiscoporum, Episcoporum, & Procerum regni mei Subscriptorum." Yet here we meet with several of this ⁸ Authors Ministri among the Subscribers; who, I am pretty sure, were no Members of the Council; or if they were, they must have been other kind of Ministri, then he would have them to be. Ib. p. 32.

We now come to King Edgars Charters; and those too made in his Council at London. Let us Enquire who were present at the Making of them. "Sancitum est hoc Chirographum meum in Anno 966. præsentibus Archiepiscopis, Episcopis, Abbatibus, & Optimatibus regni mei Subnotatis." And yet here again we have more of the Ministri in the Subscriptions; and are not at all concern'd at the sight of them. Ib. p. 33.

The SAXON
Times.

This Charter being thus pass'd by the King, was corroborated by the Archbishop, with Ecclesiastical Censures denounced against the Infringers of it. And their Decree, pass'd at the same time, was made, in like manner; ¹ "in præsentia Regis Edgari, Prelatorum, Procerumq; suorum — apud London. Collectorium, in the Church of St. Paul's, upon the Octaves of Pentecost; where yet I suppose this Gentleman will hardly affirm the State Council to have been held.

² Ib. p. 46, 47. The other ² Charters of this King to the Monasteries of Medeshampsted, and Malmesbury, do not appear to have been made in Council, and therefore I shall not insist upon them; as neither that of ³ Knute Anno 1032. Whether that of King Edward the Confessor was made at his Easter Council, then attending at his Court, I am not able to say; but do think it most probable that it was. If so, we shall there have another Instance for what we have been observing: The Subscription being thus; ⁴ "Testibus Egitha Regina mea, says he, Edsio & Alfrico

I might, to these add several other Charters out of the Charta Antiquæ, relating to those times; but I shall, for Example sake, take only some of the lowest; and of which the least Mention has yet been made; Granted by King Edward the Confessor; and upon the Credit of which we may the best rely.

¹⁰ In that to the Monastery of Malmesbury, Cum Consensu Episcoporum, Optimatumq; meorum.

¹¹ Ib. T. 10.

¹² In that to the Abbot and Monks of Gant; "Sub astipulatione Primatum quorum nomina Caraxata videntur.

¹⁴ In that to the Church of Eli, "Sancto Dunstano Mandante, cunctisq; Primatibus Regni.

To conclude this Matter: That this was the true Saxon Form, we have not only the most Authentick Charters themselves to Witness, but our Venerable Bede, to prove to us, in his Epistle to Archbishop Egbert; where speaking of some who abused these kind of Grants to wicked Purposes, he makes his Complaint of Them in these Remarkable Words, ¹⁵ Ipsas quoque literas Privilegiorum suorum quasi veraciter Deo dignas, Pontificum, Abbatum, & Potestatum sæculi, Obrinent subscriptione Confirmari. This was the Authority by which our Saxon Ancestors Confirmed their Charters; and therefore if this Author's Charters be ratified by any Others, we may look upon that alone to be a fair Ground to conclude that they are Counterfeit, and of no Worth.

Having said thus much in Answer to his Argument drawn from the Saxon Charters to shew, that the truly Antient, and Authentic Charters which were pass'd in the Great Councils of those Times, or Confirm'd by them, are all against the new Pretences of this Author; and the rest spurious, and of no Authority; I shall now briefly Examine such of them as Occur to Me; and by the insignificance of those, shew what Account is to be made of the rest.

¹⁸ That of King Edgar, or Ethelred, to St. Paul's, has among the Subscriptions; two Persons noted Pr. whether Presbyteri, or Præfecti, or Præpositi, I cannot tell. But in the Body of the Charter, bad as it is, there is thus much of the Old Form stuck to, that the Grant is said to have been made cum Consilio atque Consensu Episcoporum meorum, & Sapientum meorum; Which I think sufficiently excludes the Lower Clergy from giving any Force, or Authority to it.

¹⁹ Ib. p. 287.

The ²⁰ Other of the same King, has no manner of Note to prove that it was made in Council, or at the time of any such Meeting, and is indeed so evidently Counterfeit, that no more needs to be said of it.

²¹ Ib. p. 287.

The ²² Charter of the Church of Peterburgh is next alledged; a Forgery so notorious, that it even surpasses the Council of Becanceld in the fallity of it. And, to Observe that too by the Way; the only Copy of the Saxon Chronicle, which has this Charter in it, is that of Archbishop Laud, which formerly belong'd to the Monastery of Peterburgh, as the Other of Sir John Cotton, no doubt, did to that of Canterbury. The SAXON Times.

But however, let us examine this too a little; lest Dr. A. again demand my Reasons for Rejecting of it. This Charter (as we are told) was made by King Wolfere, Anno, 656. In this Monastery therefore, we will suppose it to have been carefully laid up with the Other of King Ethelred, and Pope Agatho's Bull, for two hundred Years, 'till the Danish irruption, Anno 870. And what became of them then, let Ingulphus tell us. The Danes invading that Monastery, Tubba the Brother of Hulba, the Chief Commander, was accidentally slain in the Assault. This so enraged Hulba, that he utterly destroy'd the whole Place. He slew all the Monks with his own Hands; his Souldiers butcher'd all the others who had for security fled thither. The Barbarous Army dug up all their Altars, broke their Monuments to Pieces, burnt their Library; tore in pieces their Charters, pull'd down their very Walls; burnt their Church and all their Offices, and spent Fifteen Days in utterly ruining of that Place. Ingulf. Hist. p. 23.

The Monastery being thus totally rased, Beorred seized the Lands which belong'd to it, and gave them to his Souldiers; and so put a final end to that foundation. In this desolate Estate it continued for an hundred Years; at which time Ethelwold Bishop of Winchester set himself to the restoring of it. And here the Saxon Chronicle helps us out to a Wonder: For being at Work upon this Design, they found in a piece of an Old Wall these Charters still preserved, and by that means Discovered what Lands, and Priviledges, had so many hundred Years before, been Granted to them. Chron. Sax. ad An. 963.

This is the Legend of these Charters; which after all, were they never so Authentick, are nothing to his Purpose: For the Meeting of which his Charter speaks, was not a Great Council, but only a solemn Assembly, for the Dedication of a Monastery; at which no Body denies but that the Inferiour Clergy, as well as Others, might be present.

In the Relation of the Charter of Ramsay, this Author deals more artificially, than fairly. The truth of the matter, which he has Studiously disguis'd, is this. At Christmas, ^{287.} "Cum omnes Majores totius Regni — tam Ecclesiasticæ Personæ, quam Sæculares, ad Curiam meam Convenissent, says the King; at the Request of the Archbishops, he Confirmed all the Lands, &c. which had been given to that place, Coram tota CURIA sua. Who that Curia was, we before heard; It consisted of the Majores totius Regni, as well Spiritual as Secular. And accordingly it follows again, to the same purpose, "Favore, & Consensu, Primatum & Optimum meorum, prænominate Ecclesiæ — Concessi & Confirmavi. This Charter being thus made by the King, and his Great Lords, (no Presbyters, no other Clergy, besides Prelates, concern'd in it) All the Bishops, Abbots, and Presbyters, who that day were there in great Numbers, Excommunicated all such as should break the Establishment, or Cause it to be broken. This was the first Occasion upon which the Presbyters were mentioned. Rights, p. 287. Monasticon. Tom. I. p. 235.

The Account of this Excommunication being, in rei memoriam, added to the end of the Charter, the King proceeds to the Subscription of it. The Prelates, and Lords, Subscribe after the King: And then in the End come Six Presbyters, as Witnesses of the Ecclesiastical part of it, the Excommunication. * "Ego Ethelfi Presbyter, cum supradictis & aliis quamplurimis Presbyteris, infractores hujus firmitatis Excommunicavi, says the last of them. This was the other Occasion of the Presbyters being mention'd in it.

And now what is there in all this to prove the Right of the Inferiour Clergy to be Members of the Saxon Councils? The Business of the Council was over; the King had Granted, and his Lords had Assented to the Priviledges conferr'd upon that Monastery. The Charter of them was drawn; and none but the King, his Prelates, and Nobles, were concern'd in it. When this was done, and the Grant finish'd, the Bishops then joyn their Presbyters with them in an Ecclesiastical Act, of Excommunicating the Infringers of the Charter, which the King and his Council had made. And all this, both of the Passing of the Charter, and the Excommunication, being to be Attested; Six Presbyters, in the Close, set their hands to it; and distinctly tell us what they intended by it; namely, to testify thereby that themselves, together with a great many others of the same Rank, had Assisted at the Excommunication recorded in the Close of that Charter. This was the whole of that matter; let this Author, upon the True State of it, make what Advantage he can from it.

I have now attended Dr. A. thro' this first Period; and shewn, that he has not yet produced so much as One single Testimony in proof of the supposed Right of his Inferiour Clergy to sit in the Great Councils of the Realm, that Comes up to the Point; and but few but what shew the quite Contrary. If it shall be ask'd what then, upon the whole, I take the Politie of the Saxon times to have been? I will freely offer my Opinion; and shall submit it to those of better Skill in these Matters, to Judge as they please of it.

For Civil Affairs, they had their Wittena Gemot, or Parliament: To this the Great Men, and Prelates alone were Called: None else, as far as I can observe, were ever accounted any proper Part, or Members of it.

In this Council they treated of the Great Affairs both of the Church and State: And made Laws for the Outward Peace, and Government of both. The Laws which they pass'd here, were oftentimes prepared before by the King's Counsellors, and only proposed in this Assembly, and Confirmed by it. The Bishops and Prelates who met at these Councils, sometimes acted at the same time a-part by themselves, in a Synodical manner; and came to such Resolutions as they thought needful for the Edification of the Church. These were sometimes agreed to by the Great Council, as well as pass'd by the Synod; and so came forth at once both as Laws of the Land, and Canons of the Church.

But then there was, besides these, other proper Church Councils appointed by our Metropolitans, and held by them with his Suffragan-Bishops, and Prelates, when no State Council was Summon'd. To these very often the Kings, attended by their Great Men, Came: And were not only present at their Debates, but if they approved of what was done, gave their own Assent, and Authority to them. And tho' I know Dr. A. will have all these to have been Mix'd Councils, in which most of the Antient Canons of the Church were framed; yet the Nature of the Assemblies; the Authority by which they met; the Persons who acted in them; the work which they did; and all the Other Circumstances of them, plainly shew them to have been true Ecclesiastical Synods; and not at all the less so, because of the Laities Appearing at them. Unless Dr. A. will suppose, that the provision made for the Admission of the Laity, to the most Early Synods of the Church, and Continued down in the following Ages of it, changed the Nature of those Assemblies, and made them also mix'd Meetings, not true Ecclesiastical Councils.

These were the great settled Conventions both of the Church and State heretofore, as they are with us now. But then upon any extraordinary Occasion, such as the Dedication of a Church, or Abbey; the Publishing of some solemn Charter, or Privilege to the Clergy in general, or to any Particular Body; there were also, of course, Extraordinary Meetings. For tho' these might oftentimes be so managed, as to be join'd in timewith the Regular State-Councils, yet the Assemblies were different: And all that came, and could be receiv'd into the Place, were freely admitted into the One; tho' they were far from becoming thereby any part of the Other.

King Edward the Confessor, kept his Court, and Christmas with his Lords, the last Year of his Life. Three Days after he dedicated Westminster-Abbey: His Lords were call'd to it; but besides them, a vast Confluence of all sorts of People, especially of the Clergy, came thither also; and were Spectators, and Witnesses, of the Grant; which nevertheless the King only with his Council Ratified.

In other Cases, Charters of Privilege were pass'd by the King and his Great Men. But that being done, they were publish'd and signed in the Churches, at the High Altars, for the greater Piety, and Solemnity of the Act: And many were thereby present at the Signing, and Confirmation of these kind of Grants, who had nothing to do in the Councils by which they were Confirm'd.

As for any Constant or Set-times of holding either the State-Councils, or Church-Synods, there seem to have been none at the beginning. The first Settlement that I have observed of that kind, was founded upon the Solemnity with which our Princes came afterwards, to keep the Three great Festivals of the Church; and to require the Attendance of their Prelates and Lords at them.

This I take to have been the true State of our Saxon Government in these Cases. To enter upon a particular Proof of all these Matters from Antient History, History, would be to deviate too far from the Business in hand. I shall only add some few Instances more, to those I have already offer'd, to Confirm my main Assertion, as to the Members of their State-Councils, and so conclude this Period. The SAXON Times.

How far that Expression of ¹ Bede concerning the Practice of Ethelbert, will be thought an Evidence in this Case, I cannot tell: That he made his Laws cum Consilio Sapientium. But as the Use of that Word, in those Times, was, in great Measure, appropriated to the Members of these Councils; so whom this Author meant by them, we may, in part, conclude from another Passage, in the same Book, where ² he again employs it to the like purpose. Paulinus having preach'd the Faith in the Northern Parts; and perswaded the King to embrace it; the King resolved to hold a Council with his Great Men concerning that Matter. The Words of the Historian are these; Cum amicis Principalibus, & Consiliariis; or, as in Other Copies, cum Amicis, Principibus, & Consiliariis suis, sese do hec Collaturum esse dicebat. In the Title of the Chapter, 'tis cum Optimatibus: And these are all in the next Sentence, comprehended under the same general Word Sapientes; Habito cum Sapientibus Consilio. Hist. Ecclef. Lib. 2. Cap. 5.

But we will look a little farther into this Meeting; and see if we can find yet more exactly of what Persons it consisted. And first, we find there Coisti his Chief-Priest; who spake in Favour of the Christian Faith. To him Alinus Optimatum Regis, gave his Assent. After which Ceteri Majores natu ac Regis Consiliarii, did likewise. The Saxon Version calls them plainly pitum and Ealsopmen. And both the One and the Other seem evidently to refer to those of Highest Rank and Dignity, and to Exclude the Common Ordinary People. Ib. Cap. 13.

What he here says of the State Councils, ³ he elsewhere intimates of the Church ³ Bede Epist. Synods. He speaks of the Bishops only as the Members of them; and to them, in P. 47. Conjunction with the King, ascribes the Authority of what was done in Them.

If from our Saxon Historians, we proceed to the Remains of our Saxon Laws; they will yet more plainly speak the same thing to us. I have already accounted for those of Ina, and Ethelstan: The only Difficulty that can be made in them is, that the Servi Dei are added (not to Prelati, but) to Archiepiscopi, and Episcopi: And I think it is so plain both from the Omission of the Regular Prelates, in both those places, and the Ordinary Use of the Phrase its self to the same purpose, that those must be meant by it, that it is in reality no Difficulty at all.

King Ælfred made his Laws,⁴ Consilio Sapientum suorum: He communicated the Collection which he had gathered out of the Laws of Ina, Offa, and Ethelbert, Omnibus Sapientibus suis; who approved of Them, and answer'd, that it pleas'd them that they should be observed. And till it can be shewn that the Inferior Clergy have ever been rank'd among these Sapientes, I must beg Leave to Conclude, that only Those are meant by them, who are elsewhere expressly said to fall under that Character. 4 Brompt. Col. 820.

⁶ The same is the Language of Edgar and Ethelred: They made their Laws Consilio sapientum suorum; the meaning of which was in those times sufficiently understood, and needed no farther Explication. The Laws of the next King Cnut, will afford us an Antient and Venerable Testimony in Proof of what I am now asserting. ⁷ He made them, says the Saxon, with the Advice of his pitena: Says the Old Latin of Brompton, sapientum. And who these were, let the ⁸ Textus Roffensis determine; Hæc est Constitutio quam Cnud Rex, cum Consilio Principum suorum Sapientum, made. And again, speaking of his Secular Laws, which he made with the Advice of his pitenan. ⁹ Sapientum; the same ¹⁰ Text. Roffensis gives this farther Interpretation to the same purpose. Hæc est Institutio secularis quam Ego per Consilium & Consensum Optimatum meorum servare per totum Regnum meum statui. 8 Text. It were an easy matter to Confirm this Interpretation with many ¹ other Authorities; but I shall offer but one more to the same purpose, and with Relation to a Council held in the same times under King Ethelred; the ² Council of Ænham. In the Saxon Ms. of this Council, the Laws are called Decreta Sapientum. Eruditi tulerunt, says the Introduction; and in several of the Constitutions it is expressly repeated, Decernunt Sapientes. Now, who those were, the Antient Latin Interpretation, expressly declares; ³ Regis Æthelredi Edicto concrepante, Archipræsulumq; Ælfeah & Wulfstan hortatu Instigante, Universi Anglorum Optimates, die Sancto Pentecostes — acciti sunt Convenire.

Thus did these Kings make their Laws; As for Edward the Confessor, the ⁴ Litchfield Chronicle tells us, that he renew'd the Laws of his Predecessors, Consilio Baronum Angliæ; and the Authority seems to be the greater, for that we find the self same Account inserted into one of his Laws; and that in the more Antient and Faithful Copy of them.

From what hath been said, it appears, upon what slender Grounds Dr. A. has laid his Foundation, in his Deduction of the supposed Rights of the Inferiour Clergy, viz. that in the Saxon ⁵ times, "They were called to the Great Councils of the Realm, and made a Constant and Necessary part of them. 'Tis true he has afterwards very much qualified his Assertion; and from being Constant and Necessary parts of these Councils, comes only to say, "That the Inferiour Clergy, as well as Laity, were then Oftentimes Called to the Great Councils of the Realm; ⁶ And "Opposes them to those who were the constant and standing Members of them. But neither thus will his Account hold true: For, indeed, they were not Called Oftentimes to these Conventions, tho' some of them might happen to be Oftentimes there. And even when they were Occasionally at them, yet they acted not as Members of them; Nor were they Called, that is Summoned, to Come, in any such Capacity to them.

But if this therefore be a meer Mistake of the Nature of those State Councils, as in Truth it is, then it will follow that all the rest of his Imaginary Scheme which he builds upon it, must be an Empty Hypothesis; and the issue only of his own Conceit. "That the Clergy being Obligated so frequently to Attend in that (their Civil) Capacity; they had neither Leisure, nor need to Observe the "Set-times of their Provincial Assemblies. The Ordinary Business of these was dis- patch'd at those State-Meetings, which were frequent; and gave the Clergy an "easy Recourse to the Civil Power for a Confirmation of their Decrees. And this, "by degrees, brought on a discontinuance of Provincial Synods — Thus the Mat- ter stood throughout the Saxon Times. Now all this, as to what concerns the Inferiour Clergy, to whom he applies it, is pure Invention. They were no Mem- bers of the State Councils; they had no Summons to come to them; nor were they ever Called so much as to give their Approbation, under the Character of Inferiour Clergy-men, in them.

They came, indeed, sometimes, to the Provincial Synods, in Attendance upon their Prelates; Or to be Witnesses of what was done; or, it may be, to Consent to it. But neither were they any proper Members of those Conventions, any more then of the Other: They were not Ordinarily Summoned to them; nor did they Sit, by Authority, but only by Permission, in them. And so the Deacons, nay, and even the Laity themselves did, as well as the Presbyters: Nor do I know any Right which the One can pretend to in this Case, that may not with as good Reason be alledged in favour of the other.

Let this then be the Result of what I have here been discoursing: 1. That sup- posing Dr. A's Argument to be true in every part of it; That the Convocation had been wont heretofore to Attend upon the Parliament, after the manner that he pretends; yet the Statute of the 25th of Henry the Eighth, C. 19 has made such a Change in this Matter, that from thenceforth the King became intituled to a Legal Power to Call, Prorogue, and Dissolve it, whenever he pleases; and that with- out any respect to any such Attendance for the future. If therefore the Custom of Calling it at the time of the Parliaments Sitting, since the making of that Act, has not limited his Prerogative; 'tis certain that nothing else has: And whether that has done it, shall hereafter be Enquired.

2. That as far as Concerns the Saxon times, his Allegation is utterly false. The Clergy were not, then, any Part of the Great Councils of the Realm; nor did they, as such, Attend upon them. The Bishops and Prelates only, of all the Ecclesiasti- cal cial State, had a Right to come to them; that Right they Enjoy'd throughout all the following Changes and Revolutions, only with some Limitation of the Latter, as long as there were any Regular Prelates left among us; and our Bishops continue, at this day, to Enjoy it. The Piety of our present times, is not at all less, in this respect, then was that of our Saxon Ancestors: Their Prelates only were Called to their Great Councils then; and Ours are, in like manner, Call'd to our Parliaments now.

CHAP. VI.

The History of the Clergy, and Church of England, continued from the Reign of King William the Conqueror, to the xxiiiid of Edward the First: In all which time it does not appear that the Lower Clergy were either wont to be Called to Parliament; or were accounted any Proper, or Necessary Members of our Provincial Councils. Dr. A's Allegations to the Contrary, Consider'd, and Answered.

WE are now come to the Second Period of our English History: And concerning that, Dr. Atterbury tells us, ¹ "The Norman Revolution made no Change in this Respect: Tho' the Conqueror is known to have divided the Court of the Bishop and Earl, who before mix'd Jurisdictions, yet he continued still to Assemble the Clergy Nationally with the Laity here, as in Normandy; and united them more closely than before, by his New Tenure of Knight-Service, which obliged all Persons that held of the Crown, whether Spiritual or Temporal, Equally to attend his Great Councils. And to these therefore were Summoned, not the Bishops, and Great Abbots, alone, but many others also of the Lower, and even of the Undignified Clergy; who as ² Domesday-book shews, held Lands of the King in every Shire, and to be sure therefore were present together with the other Crown Tenants, even in the Conquerors Curia held a-course at the Three Great Festivals; and Appear'd, no doubt, in greater Numbers, at his more Full, and General Assemblies of All the States of the Realm. This is his next Assertion; and it must the more carefully be examin'd, because we have here not only History, but the Grounds of it too, delivered to us; and both repeated again and again in the several other parts of his Book, as if it were a Matter of Clear and Unquestionable Authority.

The Point which he insists upon is this; That the Conqueror Assembled the Clergy to Parliament, Nationally, here, as in Normandy. That to oblige them to a more close Attendance upon it, he vested 4711 KNIGHTS-FEES in Parochial Churches, besides what were given to the Barons Spiritual; And that by vertue of these, all such as held of him were obliged to be present in his Customary Curia, at the Three Great Festivals; and yet much more in the Full and General Assemblies of the States of the Realm. Now if in all this there be not one Word of Truth; if not only his Matter of Fact, as to all these things, be false, but his Arguing upon them Inconsequent; then I think we may conclude him to have given as disingenuous an Account of the Norman, as he had before done of the Saxon Times; and that he is equally to be censured as, at least, mistaken in both.

That the Conqueror did not Assemble the Lower Clergy to his Courts or Parliaments here, shall be Fully, and Historically, proved by and by. In the mean time, let this Testimony of one who knew both Him and his Court very well, suffice to assure us of it; where speaking of his Solemn Celebration of the three Great Festivals, he tells us; That then there were present at it, ⁴ Omnes & Chroni. Sax. Optimates per totam Anglorum terram; Archiepiscopi, & Diocesani Episcopi, Abbates, & Comites, Thani, & Milites. These were the Persons who came to these Curia; No Inferior Clergy were either required, or observed to have come (as he speaks) a Course to them.

That the Lower Clergy were not Summon'd to his Full, and General Parliaments, let that very Statute, by which he divided the Court of the Bishop and Earl shew: A Statute which this Author had certainly seen, and should not have dissembled the the Authority by which it was made: It was "Communi Concilio, & Con-

"filio, Archiepiscoporum meorum, & cæterorum Episcoporum, & Abbatum, & Om"nium Principum Regni mei. These are the very Words of that Statute: And in the Petition of the Clergy, presented to King ² Edward the First, containing the Gravamina Ecclesie Anglicane, of which they desired a Redress, the very same Account recurs; "Cum Willielmus dudum Rex Anglie de Communi Concilio "Archiepiscoporum, Episcoporum, Abbatum, & Omnium procerum Regni sui. And if I may be allow'd to this to add another Argument which Dr. Atterbury, I am sure, ought not to except against from his Charter to Battle-Abbey, he tells us, that he made it ³ "Assensu Lanfranci Archiepiscopi Cant. & Stigandi Episcopi Cicestrensis (the one the Metropolitan of the Province, the other the Bishop of the Diocese, in which it was founded) "& Consilio etiam Episcoporum, ac Baronum meorum.

These are good Presumptions, at least, that the Lower Clergy were not Called by the Conqueror, either to his Solemn Courts, or to his Fuller Parliaments; for so I must speak, tho' I confess, improperly, with this Author. That they were not Called by him to the Parliaments in Normandy, I appeal to his own Instance, the Council of Lillebonne, to prove against him. ⁴ The Authentick Acts of which thus tell us who were present at it, "Sub ejusdem Regis presentia,
"presente Rotomagensi Archipræsule Willemo, Congregatis etiam Episcopis, & "Abbatibus, Consulibus quoq; & cæteris Normanniæ Principibus. As for his other Instance, it is of a proper Ecclesiastical Synod: And even that was held by the Archbishop of Roven and his Suffragan Bishops. They only acted Authoritatively in it: "Gulielmus Archiepiscopus, says his own Author, aliiq; præsules Au-"toritate sua Corroboraverunt: And again, Odo Bajocensis, &c. præfatum Sy-"nodum sanxerunt. All that is said of the Abbots and Clergy, is no more than what is said, in an equal manner of the Laity too, that they were present at the Sanction; Abbates cum Clero, & parte procerum, adfuerunt.

It is plain then that his Historical Account of these times, is not Good: Let us see whether the Grounds on which he builds, be at all better. As for the Romance of his ⁴⁷¹¹ Knights Fees vested in Parochial Churches; a very ⁵ Learned Man has shewn, that no such thing is affirm'd by the Eulogium, as we are sure that no such thing Occurs in the Domesday-book, to which he refers. Mr. Selden himself, from whom he borrowed this Instance, plainly understood it of the number of Parochial Churches, not of Knights Fees vested in such Churches. And for his Deduction from it, that by virtue of those Fees, the Lower Clergy were obliged to come to his Parliament; ⁶ Another Excellent Author has shewn him that he is out in that too. That it was not every Knights Fee that, in those days, either Obligated, or Entitled the Possessor, to Come to these Assemblies. That this was required only of such as held immediately of the King in Capite; and not of them neither, unless they had an intire Barony, to which, for the most part, a great many such Fees were necessary. This is indeed, the Truth; and it shews how utterly deceived this Gentleman has been in his Notions of these things: And with what little Success, he has entred upon the History of the Norman Times.

Let us see, how he proceeds, upon this Foundation.

⁷ "At such (Assemblies) only, Church Affairs seem to have been transacted, "not at his Ordinary Curia (tho' some of the Clergy of all Ranks might be pre"sent there) unless when these Curia, and those Greater Councils, were Coincident,
"and the latter Summon'd to meet, Extraordinarily, at the same time that the for"mer met a-course. As the Case was in that Mixt Convention at Winchester, "where Stigand was deprived; and in another at Gloucester, where several Bishops "were made. What this Author proposes to himself, in transferring the most proper Ecclesiastical Affairs, from the Synods of the Church, to the Civil Assemblies of the State, I cannot tell: But I believe he is one of the first who has discovered, that in William the Conqueror's time Bishops were Deposed, and others Chosen in their Room, by Authority of Parliament.

That this, in Fact, is not True, all the Histories of that time do clearly demonstrate. For the present I shall content my self to shew, in his own Instances alleged for it, that what he pretends was done in Parliament, was indeed done in a proper Ecclesiastical Synod; altogether distinct both in its Nature, Summons, Members, and even in Time it self, from the Parliaments with which he Confounds them.

In 1070 King William the First, kept his Easter at Winchester; and according to his Custom, held his Solemn Court there. The Wednesday following a Legatine Council was Order'd to be held at the same Place, to Examine the Cause of the Archbishop Stigand, and of some other Bishops, and Abbots, who were thought worthy of Deprivation. To this End Mandatory Letters were issued out by the Popes Legats to the Bishops, to be themselves in Person at Winchester, the Third Day after Easter, and to bring all the Abbots of their respective Dioceses along with them. One of these Summons, directed to Wulstan Bishop of Worcester, is still remaining in a Book Written by his Direction for the Use of his Church. And because it is the most Antient Conciliary Summons I have yet met with, and will serve effectually to Convince this Author how much he has misrepresented this Council, in ascribing that to the Conqueror; and his Parliament, which was done in a proper Church Synod, by the Popes Legats, with the Bishops and Abbots of the English Church; I will here insert a Copy of it.

Thus was this Synod Aſſembled, and of theſe Perſons did it conſiſt. Being met, they firſt Degraded Stigand for Three Cauſes, all of them Eccleſiaſtical; then his Brother, the Biſhop of the East Angles; after that ſeveral Abbots; and all this after a Conciliary manner, in a proper Church Aſſembly, not in a Parliamentary Convention.

The ſame was the Caſe of his ³ other Aſſembly, which he no leſs falſely calls ¹ Sax. Chron. a Mix'd Convention. The King kept his Chriſtmaſs at Glouceſter with his Lords, p. 186. An. 1085. and there held his Court Five days. After which the Archbiſhop and Clergy held a Synod for Three days. In this Synod, Mauritius was Chosen Biſhop of London; William Biſhop of Norfolk; and Robert of Cheſter-ſhire. This being done, the King laſtly held his Parliament with his Lords, and there agreed upon that Survey which was afterwards made of the whole Realm. This is the Account, which the Saxon Chronicler gives of this Meeting; and it ſufficiently proves, againſt this Authors Aſſertion, that there was a Church Synod held about the ſame time, but upon different Days, and by different Perſons, from that of the State-Parliament: And that what concern'd the Church was done in a proper Eccleſiaſtical Council, and not, as he is pleaſed to repreſent it, in a Civil or Mixt Aſſembly.

To ſtate therefore the Caſe of theſe times, which this Author has ſo much either Miſtaken, or Miſrepreſented: King William the Conqueror kept the Three Solemn Feſtivals of the Year, with great State and Magnificence. ⁴ At thoſe his ¹ Annal. Wa- Lords and Great Men generally reſorted to his Court: And the better to Manage verl. p. 134 the Great Affairs of State, Writs were commonly iſſued out to them, to hold a Parliament with the King at thoſe times. The Feſtival being celebrated with Pomp, and Solemnity; at the day aſſigned the Great Council began. To this, as far as I can obſerve, none but thoſe who held of the King by Barony; his Great Lords, Bishops, and Prelates, were Call'd. At the ſame time, if any thing were to be done in relation to Church Affairs, which fell not under the Cogniſance of the Civil Aſſembly; the Archbiſhop, with the King's Leave, ſometimes by his Command, ſent out his Conciliary Mandates for the Meeting of a Church Synod, at the ſame place, and about the ſame time, tho' on a different day, from that of the King's Council. Thus was both the King Royally Attended; and the Affairs of Church and State regularly and duly Managed, in their ſeveral Courts, and by thoſe to whom the Conſideration, and Determination of them did properly belong: And all this in an Orderly, and Diſtinct manner; firſt the Feaſt was kept; kept; then (if need were) a Synod was held; and lastly a Parliament was Assembled; not in that Mix'd and Confused way in which this Writer represents all this to have been done.

Dr. A. having thus finish'd his first Romance of the Norman Government, goes on with the same Liberty and Truth, to point out to us the Change of it; and in that we are, indeed, beholden to him; for 'tis a Discovery that none of our Antient Historians have favour'd us withal; which may make some Persons apt to think (upon his own Principles) that no such Change was made, because that if there had, our Histories would certainly have been full of it. But let us hear the Fable: "How long exactly the Saxon Manner of Mixt Councils continued, is not easy to say; however that for several Reigns after the Conquest it obtain'd, 'tis certain; and it is probable that the disuse of it might begin towards the middle of Henry the Second; when the Clergy, we are told, disjoyned themselves from the Laity in every respect, and set up to be Independent. And from³ thenceforth the Affairs of the Church came to be transacted in Two separate Provincial Synods; In which, as he afterwards tells us, "They Attended the Parliament under their several Archbishops: Which Synods of the Province were held⁴ Concurrently with the Parliament Sessions, and so it continued to King Edward the First's time.

Now that this must be all pure Fiction, is very certain; because that I have already shewn, there never was any Ground for such a Change as he here speaks of. The Lower Clergy had no place in the Conqueror's Parliaments: The Affairs of the Church, which were properly Spiritual, were not transacted in his State Assemblies. Those Councils were no more Mix'd Councils than our Parliaments at this day are; in such, if the Bishops still continue to sit as they did then; and several Matters relating to the Church, as it is a Member of the State, are Order'd and Determin'd now, as they were wont to be heretofore. To Point out therefore the time when a Change was made, where 'tis certain there was never any Change made at all, must be a meer Dream and Invention: And will serve for no other Use that I know of, but to vindicate to this Author the Character he seems above all things to affect, of Walking in Untrodden Paths; and making such Discoveries as no one before him had ever attempted to do.

But this will better appear in the Course of those Historical Allegations, which he offers in Proof of his Assertion: And to which I shall now apply myself, after I have just put the Reader in Mind what the Points to be Proved are; Namely, 1st, That the Lower Clergy were call'd to the Parliaments of these times: 2^{dly}, That in these Parliaments, or Mix'd Councils, the Affairs of the Church were wont to be transacted: 3^{dly}, That this Method continued till about the Middle of Henry the Second's time: And, 4^{thly}, That from thenceforth the Clergy separated themselves from these Councils, and from One another; and Attended upon the Parliament, in two Provincial Synods; till King Edward the First brought them back again to the antient Method of coming Nationally to Parliament, by the Premunitory Clause inserted into the Bishops Parliament Writs for that End.

the Conqueror.

Sect. 7.
1670.

These are the Points which he affirms, and in every One of which I look upon him to have been mistaken. Let us see, how the History of those times lies; and whether it makes for him or me, in these particulars.

Why Dr. Atterbury omitted the Great Councils and Synods of the Year 1070, the first year that, for ought appears, the Conqueror began, in good Earnest, to settle the Affairs of the Church and State, might deserve to be enquired. Especially when it shall be Consider'd that the Account given, of Archbishop Lanfranc's Election, by the Continuator of the Saxon Chronicle, does at least seem to favour his Cause, as much as any Authority he has alledged for it. He was Chosen, ⁶ says that Author, by the Elders of the Church of Canterbury with the Bishops and Princes, the Clergy, and People of England, in the King's Court. But indeed, ⁷ at that time, no Parliament was held; and the other Councils both Civil, and Ecclesiastical, of that year, speak so directly contrary to his Hypothesis, that we ought not to wonder if he was willing rather to slip over one insignificant Instance in silence, than to touch upon a year in which so much Business was done, and all in a manner intirely repugnant to his Representation of these Matters.

⁷ Die Assumpt.
B. V.

At Winchester that year the Conqueror kept his Easter; and thither on the Third day after, the Popes Legats Summon'd a National Council for Church Affairs. The Persons call'd to it were Bishops and Abbots; and in it they Degraded Stigand, and his Brother, Bishop of the East Angles; and several Abbots, by a Canonical Procedure.

The Synod being over, the King held his Parliament; and there order'd an Enquiry to be made into King Edwards Laws, "Confilio Baronum fuorum; or as Others have it, "Cum Principibus suis constituit. * These were afterwards settled by the same Authority; possibly in the Council of Pedrede, about the End of this same year. In what Council it was that the Order was made for separating the Bishops and Sheriffs Court, I cannot certainly determine: But the Authority by which 'twas done, the Instrument it self speaks; It was made in one of his Great Councils, and by the Advice of his ² Archbishops, Bishops, and Abbots; and of all the Princes of his Kingdom; who were therefore the proper Members of them. This is again confirm'd by the Charter to Battle-Abbey, before mentioned; which is expressly said to have been made by the Counsel of his Bishops, and Barons; as his Laws before had been.

At Whitsuntide following, the same year; the Conqueror kept his Court at Windsor; ³ and there disposed of the Bishopricks of York and Winchester. The next day Armenfride the Popes Legate held his Synod by the King's Command. There Agelric Bishop of the South Saxons, and some other Abbots, were injuriously Degraded. But tho' the Persons had not deserved such severe Treatment, yet the Process was made in an Ecclesiastical Council; not in this Author's Mix'd Assembly.

Lanfranc being Chosen Archbishop of Canterbury, August the 15th, and Consecrated the 29th of the same Month; Consecrated, some time after, Thomas Archbishop of York. And then the Cause of Wulstan Bishop of Worcester, in Behalf of the Revenues of his Church, which had been wrongfully transferr'd to the See of York, was brought upon the Stage in a Parliament of Pedrede, and there, as in a proper Court, determined. The Members of this Parliament are particularly Enumerated by many of our Antient Historians; Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Comites, & Primates, totius Angliae, say ⁴ some; Coram Rege, & Dorobernia Archiepiscopo, & Primatibus totius Angliae, say ⁵ others: But that the Inferiour Clergy were ever called either to the Councils of the Realm, or to the Synods of the Church, not one of them, that I know of, has any where asserted.

But what we cannot find in this busie year, we may perhaps meet with in our next step; the most early Instance offer'd to this purpose by Dr. A. 1072. out of a Cotton Ms. "Convenerunt ad Regalem Curiam, apud Civitatem Wentanam in Paschali Solemnitate, Episcopi, Abbates, Cateri ex Sacro & Laicali Ordine; and under these some of the Inferiour Clergy he thinks must be comprehended. And yet in that very Ms. of which he speaks, no others but Bishops and Abbots are mentioned, in the whole Course of the Cause between the two Archbishops, the great Point in Debate, both at Easter and Whitsuntide. ⁶ "Ex præcepto Alexandri Papæ, annuente Rege, in præsentia ipsius, & Episcoporum atq; Abbatum, ventilata est Causa de Primatu—apud Wentanam Civitatem, in Paschali Solemnitate; postea in Villa Regia, quæ vocatur Windlesore, ubi & finem accepit in præsentia Regis, Episcoporum, Abbatum diversorum Ordinum, qui Congregati erant apud Curiam, in festivitate Pentecostes, Says the Cotton Ms. In the Prefence of the King, the Bishops, and Abbots, says ⁷ Malmsbury. And in another of the ⁸ Cotton Mss. where the whole Agreement is Recorded, with the Subscriptions to it, we find no others. The same Instrument is preserved with the Subscriptions in the History of ⁹ Ingulfus; and the Subscriptions, as well as body of it shew, that no others of the Clergy were concern'd in this Accommodation. ¹⁰ Rad. de Diceto gives the same Account of it: So do other of our Writers. ¹¹ When therefore the Cotton Ms. speaks of the Cateri ex Sacro & Laicali Ordine; (which words are likewise the very same in the Epistle of ¹² Lanfranc to Pope Alexander, concerning this Meeting;) We are not to take them for proper Members either of the Conquerors State Council, or of the Legats Ecclesiastical Synod, (for such indeed this Meeting after all was) but as Persons admitted to be present at the Debate, which in such Cases was not unusual to be done. But the Members of this Council, who heard, and determined, were the Bishops and Abbots: These only Judged in this Case, and therefore both

R. WILLIAM in the Instrument of Agreement, and in the Relations of our Historians, these only are taken Notice of as present at the hearing of it.

I shall perhaps be thought to go a little out of my Way, to take Notice, that these were the Members who, this same year, Assembled in the Council of Rouen: But this Author at least ought not to complain of it, who has himself appealed to the Synods of that Country, for the Constitution of those of our own.

In 1075, Archbishop Lanfranc Summoned a ² National Synod: In that, not in any Mixt State Council, he renew'd several of the Antient Canons, which concern'd the Discipline of the Church. And tho' in some Copies of that Council to the Bishops and Abbots, there be added Other Religious Persons as present there; yet did the Prelates only Subscribe to it, and thereby approve themselves to have been alone the Authoritative Members of it.

Who they were that met in the ³ Synod of Winchester the next year, we do not distinctly find. But there again, in opposition to this Author's Notion of Mix'd Assemblies, we see a Church Synod transacting the Church Affairs: And tho' probably the King held his Court at the same time there, as he was wont to do at the Feast of Easter, yet the Archbishops Council was as distinct from this Parliament, as on other Occasions I have before shewn it to have been.

The next year following the King kept his ⁴ Christmasts at London. The Persons who attended him were the Archbishops, and Bishops, and Princes of different Ranks, and other Eminent Men; who together Confirm'd a Charter to Westminster Abbey; and, in a State-body, joyned in their Subscriptions to it. But here therefore our Author makes his Advantage: He tells us that it was a Mix'd Meeting of the Temporalty and Spirituality; and that as to the Spiritual part of it, those who the most Refrain the Words, yet allow that they must be understood to take in Deans, Archdeacons, and other Dignified Persons, of the Clergy.

That this was a Parliamentary Assembly, I readily agree: The Persons of whom it was compos'd; the Business which they did; and the Time at which they met, all agree to it. It was held within the Octaves of Christmasts, and both the Bishops and Lords are expressly said to have been present at it. Nor is it deny'd but that Dr. Brady, (whom as if he were some New Smeectymnus, he alone means by THOSE,) did suppose that upon so extraordinary an Occasion as he thinks that Parliament met about, the Dignitaries of the Church, which this Author has mentioned, might be Summon'd to it. But how justly those Words Illustrium Virorum Persona, & Regni Principes, can be stretched to such a Signification may nevertheless deserve a further Consideration. That something extraordinary Relating to the Church was to be done at that Parliament; and that for this some more Persons were cited to come to it, than were wont to be Summon'd on other Occasions, it is not improbable. But who the Persons so sent for were; after what manner they were called to it; or what the Business was which they met about, we are no where inform'd; nor can any thing therefore be concluded as to this Matter, with any clearness, or certainty, concerning it.

In the Year 1081, came on the famous Case between the Bishop of Theodford, or Norwich, and the Abbot of St. Edmundsbury; which we are told was determined in Parliament, and (if true) will afford us a clear Account of the Persons by whom it was adjudged. Of this we have two distinct recitals in the Instrument which was made upon it: They were, of the Church side, Archiepiscopi & Episcopi; but then, as under the General Word Fidelium, we must take in all the Baronage of the Laity, in one Place; and all under the Degree of Comites (who alone are particularly specified) in the other; so the Subscriptions shew, as well as the nature of their Tenures, assure us; that we must comprehend under it, the Regular Prelates of the Ecclesiastical State also: Who therefore without any others (except Bernard Capellanus Regis; who by his Place, and Dignity, is set before all the Abbots) alone Subscribed to the Determination.

These were the Persons of whom that Parliament consisted; and whom therefore the Historian, from the Instrument its self, aptly calls the Principes Terræ. And when, in the 23d. of Edward 3d. the Bishop of Norwich was impleaded for Acting contrary to this Decision, our Reports speak of it as a Parliament; and say that therein it was ordain'd by the King, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and by all the other Bishops, Counts and Barons; under that last title, comprehending the Ecclesiastical as well as Lay Barons; and so interpreting to us the Word Fideles; which whatever it may seem to import now, yet then extended to no others on these Occasions, but to the Barons; the only Members of Parliament in those days.

Word

Let me observe yet one thing more before I leave this Instance: That in reciting the Placing of Monks by ¹ King Cnut in this Abbey, the Instrument says he did it, "Communi Consilio Archiepiscoporum, Episcoporum, & Optimatum suorum." And in another Instrument out of a Register of the same house, Cum assensu & decreto Regni sui Dominorum Spiritualium & Temporalium in suo pleno Parlamento: Which shews that the Case was the same before the Conquest, that it continued to be after; and that the Lower Clergy had no manner of place in the Parliament of the Realm, in the one time, or in the other.

Whether this cause was again renew'd the year following, I cannot say; but by the Account of that Learned, and Honorable Gentleman ² Sir Robert Cotten, so it seems to have been: Who tells us that in the "Year 1082, the King, the Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Earls, the Chief Nobility of the Kingdom present (for so are the Words of the Records) the Cause between Arfast Bishop of Normich and Baldwine Abbot of Bury was argued.

Dr. A. having thus silently pass'd over all these Instances which make clearly against him, comes now in one of the following Years, to pitch upon an obscure passage which he thinks may be manag'd so as to seem to speak for him. And, indeed, 'tis by such doubtful, and dark Instances as these, or by none at all, that his Principles must be supported. "Whether more of the Clergy than these (his Knights Spiritual of whom he so much Romances) even some of those who held in Frank Almoigne, might not be present at that Extraordinary Convention at Sarum, to which all the Terrarii, or Land-holders of note in England, repair'd, cujuscunque Fædi fuissent,—may (he says) be worth an Enquiry. I cannot tell for what reason it may be worth it, if it were not a Parliament (as indeed it was not) but as he truly calls it an Extraordinary Convention; and for that very Reason, nothing to the Business in hand. But however to gratify him, I will Enquire into it, little as it is to the Purpose; and then shew some Regular Parliaments held these very Years, which would have been certainly to the purpose, tho' not to his Advantage, to have been taken notice of.

The History to which he refers is plainly this. ⁴ The Conqueror having held his Court at Westminster, and there at Whitsuntide, made his Son Henry a Knight: Aftwards took his Progress into several parts of the Realm, and so order'd his Journey as to be at Salisbury, August the 1st. Thither he had commanded all his Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, Sheriffs, with those who held by Knights Service of them, to come before him: Where being Assembled, he caused all the Knights of his Barons to Swear Fealty to him, as their Chiefs, upon the Account of their Tenures, had themselves before done.

This is the Account which our Ancient Histories give us of this Meeting: And from this the Answer to his Question is plain and certain: No Land-holders were Summon'd, but such as held by Knights Service under the Kings Barons. And these met to Swear Fealty to him; as well as their Lords: And therefore none of those Clergy who held in Franc Almoign, were either Summon'd to this Meeting, or had any thing to do at it.

To clear this Matter a little farther, I must observe, that not long before this Meeting, the Conqueror had order'd the famous Survey, of which so much is said in our Histories, to be made of the whole Realm. Upon the taking whereof, seeing how many held by a Subordinate Tenure from his Barons; he resolv'd that not only the Lords themselves should do their Homage to Him, but their feudatory Knights too; and Swear Fealty to himself, as the Supreme Lord, as well as to them.

But can this Author, in good Earnest, make a doubt whether the Clergy who held by Frank Almoign, might not have been comprehended under the Feudal Tenants, who were here called to this Extraordinary Convention? If so, I shall only beg leave to say that he Quoted that which he never Understood; a misfortune that I doubt has attended him more than once in the course of this present Work.

From what has been said, it appears, that neither was this Meeting a Parliament, nor, if it were, were any of the Lower Clergy called to it; unless we shall make an Exception for his Parish Priests who held by Knights Service; and who indeed, in that Capacity might have been obliged to come to it. Let us see who were the true Members of the Parliaments of the same Years.

¹ In the 18th of William the Conqueror, a Charter was Signed to the Church of Durham, in Council. The Persons present were the Bishops and Barons: So the Instrument speaks; And so the Subscriptions prove it to have been. 'Tis true among those who subscribed, three there are under the Name of Capellani, Mauricius, William, and Robert; who the next year were every one made Bishops; the first of London, the second of Norwich, and the third of Chester. And this as it shews them to have been all Men of Great Eminence at Court, so from what has been before said of the French Parliaments; we may conclude, That they had their Great Offices there; for which by their Places (as the great Lay-Officers also were) they were call'd to the Councils of the Realm, and admitted to a place in them.

² The year following, the King kept his Christmasts at Gloucester with his Princes: And after that held his Parliament with the same Princes; as the Saxon Chronicle informs us.

I have now pass'd thro' the Conqueror's Reign; and seen all that Dr. A. has been able to pick up from our Histories to make good his Two Assertions, * that the Lower Clergy were Members of the Parliaments of his time; and, * that in those Mix'd Councils, the Affairs of the Church were transacted. I may add, and all that he could find in the next Reign too; out of which he brings not so much as one single Proof in favour of his Opinion. And I shall leave it, upon the Evidence produced, to the Judgment of Mankind to determine, whether, in Opposition to both, it does not plainly appear, that only the Great Men of the Church; such as Bishops, and Prelates, were called to the Parliaments of those days; and whether any Affairs of the Church were then transacted in Parliament, except what have ever been, and still are done there; I mean such Affairs as are of a Mix'd Nature, and relate to the Church as it is a Part, and Member of the State; and is incorporated with it.

But tho' Dr. A. has thought fit to pass over in silence the whole Reign of King William the Second; I shall take the Liberty to insist very briefly upon it; and to produce such Instances as may suffice to shew, that neither in his time had this Gentleman's Lower Clergy any place in the Courts of the King, or Parliaments of the Kingdom.

⁴ This Christmasts was kept by the King at Windsor: In August 1097; he held a Solemn Parliament; in which the Controversy with Archbishop Anselm came on; and of which it will be necessary to give such an Account, as the present Argument requires.

Nov. p. 26.

Anselm having desired Leave to go to the Pope for his Pall; and the King not only refusing him Leave, but declaring that he could not at once both keep his Fealty to him, and against his Will pay Obedience to the Pope; 'Pray'd the King that the Determination of this Matter might be left to the Bishops, Abbots, and Princes of the Realm, when they should Meet together. The King agreed to it, and a Parliament was held the 5th of the Ides of March, Anno 1094, at Rockingham Castle, to Deliberate of this Affair: And by the King's Command Totius ferme Regni Nobilitas, were Assembled to it.

Of whom this Nobility consisted, the Acts of the Parliament, presently, tell us: They were Bishops, Abbots, and Princes (or Lay-Barons:) 'Tis true the Relator adds, that there was, besides these, a numerous Multitude of Monks, Clerks, and Laitie, standing by, to see the Event of this Cause: But that these were Members of Parliament, I believe this Author himself will not affirm. ⁶ " Anselm being resolv'd what to do, and the King enraged at it, advis'd with his Bishops, and Princes, what Answer to make to him. Then the Bishops and Princes went in the King's Name to Anselm. And again, the Lords with certain of the Bishops, came to him.

The Result was, that the Determination of this Matter should be put off to another Council, and in the mean time, Peace should be kept between the King and the Archbishop.

There we meet with the Bishops and Princes again Managing of it; but of any others we find no mention. Here an Agreement being again for the present made up between them, he was admitted to the King's Speech, in the presence of his Lords, and of a Multitude that was gathered together. Ibid., p. 33, 34.

² After this in the Month of August 1097, a full Parliament was held to consider of the State of the Kingdom. It consisted of the Bishops, Abbots, and Lords of the Realm. There the Archbishop repeated his Desire of going to Rome, and was again refused by the King. — But I shall not pursue this Affair any farther. From what has been said, it appears who were the Members both of the Solemn Courts; and Parliaments, of this King; at both which, tho' a Multitude of others came together (as on such Occasions there never fails to be a Crowd of Persons attending:) yet the proper Members of both were only Prelates and Lords; as from the Instances before mention'd does, I think, sufficiently appear. Ibid. p. 38. Comp. Selden. Tit. of Hon. par. 2. p. 581.

In all the last Reign, we met with no proper Ecclesiastical Synod; in this the very first year begins with one; and thereby sufficiently shews that the Spiritual Affairs of the Church were not debated of, or determined, in Dr. A's Mix'd Assemblies, but in proper Ecclesiastical Councils. King Henry being desirous to Marry Mathildis, Daughter of Malcolm King of Scotland; an Objection was raised, that she had been Vailed in the Monastery of Wilton, and therefore could not lawfully be Married. ³ To determine the Question, Anselm call'd a Synod to meet at Lambeth. Upon the day appointed there came together Episcopi, Abbates, Nobiles quique; ac Religiosi Ordinis Viri. These are afterwards called in general Ecclesia Anglia: And the Decree of this Synod, is by Anselm himself said to have been made per Episcopos & Religiosas Personas. By the Nobiles quique; therefore we are not to imagine that any of the Laitie were meant; but rather must conclude that it is there set to denote the Eminence of those who were called to this Synod; that they were the Bishops, and Abbots, and other Heads of the Religious Houses in England. King HENRY the 1st. Sect. 14. Eadmer. Hist. Nov. p. 57. Knyghton, Celebrato Londonie Pontificum Concilio. Col. 2375.

And as this shews that none of the Inferior Clergy were yet Summon'd to the Synods of the Church, so the next year will prove, that neither were they called to the Councils of the Realm. ⁴ At Winchester the King kept his Court, and that, says a Contemporary Author, "Episcopis, terrarum; Principibus, sub uno coactis." At London (as I conceive) the year following, he held his Council, adunatis Principibus Regni, says the same Historian. Sometimes we are told distinctly who these Principes were, viz. Episcopi, Abbates, & Proceres; Episcopi & Primates; Episcopi, Abbates, & Nobiles; but no where are any other of the Clergy named, as proper Members of these State Councils; as the Induction made of this Matter, and never yet Refuted that I know of, plainly shews: And to which alone it might suffice to refer this Author, for answer in this Case. Eadmer. Hist. Nov. p. 62. Dr. Bradys Introduct. Append. P. 54, 55, 56.

But that I may not seem to decline a more particular Proof, I shall enlarge the Authorities of this kind, and omitting the Collection of that Learned Person, insist only upon such Others, as have been overlook'd by him.

Anno 1101, we have a very particular Account which pretends to be as old as the Meeting it self, of the Parliament which sate in September that year. The Relation stands thus in ⁶ Mf. Registry of the Priory of Norwich: "Herbert Bishop of that See, coming to the Parliament of our Lord the King, where the Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, and Lords of England, and Great Men were Assembled; by the Consent of the King and Queen, and of Anselm then Archbishop of Canterbury, and of the Bishops, Abbots, and Great Men, made another Charter (for the Foundation and Dedication of that Church) to which they consenting Subscribed---- at Windfor. The Subscribers were, the King and Queen; the Archbishops of Canterbury and York; Eight Bishops; besides the Pope's Legat; Eleven Earls, and Lords; Seven Abbots; and Four Clerici. Who these Clerici were, it matters not much to Enquire. It is enough that the Relation expressly speaks of the Archbishops and Abbots only as the Spiritual Members of that Parliament; and that the Number of those Clerici, supposing them to have been of the Lower Order of Ecclesiasticks, (which yet does not appear) was too small to represent, in any wise, the Clergy of the Realm in Parliament; and might be Witnesses only for the Church of Norwich; or might be in some place about the Parliament, or might upon some other account happen to be there, which we neither can discover, nor need to be concern'd about. *Sect. 15. 1101. 6 Regist. ¹ At Michaelmas, the year following, there seems to have been another Assembly of the Civil, and together with that, a Synod of the Ecclesiastical State.

² Some, indeed, of our Historians take no Notice at all of any but the Church Council; which they tell us Anselm held in St. Paul's Church with his Suffragan Bishops, the King being also present. But others, more exact, speak of the State-Meeting too.

The Case seems plainly to have been this: ⁴ "The 27th of September, Anselm held his Council at St. Paul's, London. This lasted two days. The third, being, Michaelmas-day; the Parliament began at Westminster, at which the Principes Regni, as well of the Clergy, as Laity, were present."

But this is not all: The Historians who omit the Parliament, give a defective Account of the Synod it self too. They tell us that the Archbishop held it with his Suffragan Bishops. But the others are more particular; ⁵ They say with All the Bishops of England: And expressly name the Archbishop of York, as being Personally present at it.

I have been obliged to give the more distinct Account of this years Meeting, because that ⁶ one of our best Historians, seems wholly to have omitted the Session at St. Paul's, London; and only to have taken Notice of the Publication of the Acts of it, which was made, as I conceive, at St. Peters Westminster. The Archbishop was desirous that the Constitutions of this Synod should have their due Weight, and by that means a suitable effect. To this end, he solemnly recited before the Lords at Westminster, as I have shewn, I think, with great probability, and from good Authority, what had before been Decreed by himself, and the Clergy, alone in London.

The want of this Care has led Dr. A. into a fancy that there is somewhat in this instance very full to his purpose; whereas in truth, it is not possible to imagine any thing more directly opposite to his Principles. ⁷ In Henry the First's time, (says he) a Parliament met at London: And there the Spirituality went a-side and made several Ecclesiastical Constitutions. I wish he had told us where he found this Extraordinary Circumstance. ⁸ Eadmer, whom he Cites, is so far from saying any such thing, that he expressly says the Lords were present at the Assembly.

⁹ "The Lower Secular Clergy therefore were there, whose Consent to the framing of Canons, was requisite. That their consent was requisite in this Case, this Gentleman knows is utterly deny'd; and to suppose it without Proof, is to beg the Question. Let us see therefore how he makes it out in the Instance before us.

"And so Hemingfords Relation of it plainly implies, "Statuerunt (says he) Archiepiscopi, & Episcopi, cum Clero — Which word Clerus when opposed to Archbishops and Bishops, must signify some of the Inferiour Seculars, or Regulars, and not meerly Abbots, and Priors. What the word Clerus in that Case signifies, shall in due time be Considered: In the mean while this Author may please to know, that Hemingford has not said one word of this Synod at all; but speaks of another which was held about four or five years later, after a Journey of the Archbishops to Rome, and the Popes decision as to the Point of Investitures, brought back by him from thence.

The History is plainly this: ¹⁰ The King being Reconciled to Anselm in Normandy, and the Business of Investitures agreed between them, upon the First of August, Anno 1107, a Parliament was held for the full settling of that Matter. The Meeting is thus stiled by ¹¹ Eadmer, and the rest of our Historians, "Conventus Episcoporum, Abbatum, Procerum Regni: No others were either call'd to it, or Acted in it.

The year following, 1108, the King applying himself to the Regulation of several Disorders in the State, consider'd how to Remedy those of the Church too. In order whereunto having called together all his Great Men to his Court at Whitsuntide, ¹² he treated with the Archbishop and Bishops how to oblige the Clergy to part with their Wives, and to live Chastly; and promised to support them by his Royal Authority in the redressing of this supposed Crime. Upon which the Two Archbishops and all the Bishops of England, in the Presence of the King, and with the Assent of the Baronage, decreed that Presbyters, Deacons, and Subdeacons, should live Chastly, &c. This

This is the whole of that Meeting, as related from the very ¹ Acts of it : Let us see what Walt. Hemingford says, to Intitule the Inferiour Clergy to any part in it. "Statuerunt," says he, Archiepiscopi & Episcopi, cum Clero. And Clerus being there opposed (he might more truly have said added) to Archiepiscopi & Episcopi must signify some of the Inferiour Clergy, and not merely Abbots, or Priors. This Author will Excuse me if I cannot yet see the Necessity of any such signification. The Word is general, and the the Nature of the Meeting must, in all reason, determine the sense of it. Now that was a Parliamentary Assembly. In such Assemblies I have before shewn, only the Prelates (and such Clergy-men, if any such there were, who held of the King by Barony) were concern'd : And it will be much more reasonable to apply it to those, to whom alone it belong'd to come to those Councils, than to such of whom it is yet to be proved, that ever they came, in those times, to them.

But not to insist upon this Matter ; The truth is, Hemingford as he stands alone, so was he mistaken in his Relation : The Antienter Historians, and the very ³ Acts of that Meeting, transcribed by them, speak plainly, and fully, to us. They tell us who were present at it, and that without all Obscurity or Ambiguity of Expression. They were the Majores Regni, whom the King called to his Parliament ; they were the Archbishops, and Bishops, who with the Consent of the King and his Barons, made these Decrees in it. In this only the present Instance seems to favour this Gentleman's Hypothesis, that this order about the Manners of the Priests was made by the Bishops in Parliament : Who yet did not go aside for this End ; but, in Open Council agreed to these Constitutions.

From this Parliament Dr. A—— makes a large step of Fourteen years forward, before he can meet with any thing more to his Purpose : Tho' there wanted not many Parliaments within that Compass to have been taken Notice of ; and of which an Account, expressly contradictory to his Assertion, had been given by another hand.

To say nothing of the Assembly at ⁵ Burne, Anno 1114, at which were present with the King, the Archbishops, Bishops, and all the Nobility of England : The Parliament at Salisbury two years after, has made a great Noise in our Histories, and very full Accounts have been given us of it. The Controversy between the Two Archbishops was heard by it ; and the Persons concern'd are by all agreed to have been the ⁶ Optimates & Barones ; ⁷ Comites & Barones, as another has it ; Episcopi, Abbates, & Principes totius Regni, says ⁸ Eadmer : And lastly, to let this Gentleman see what Clerus signifies in ⁹ Hemingford's Chronicle ; Comites, Barones, cum Clero ; the Bishops and Abbots before mentioned, not his Inferior Priests ; of which there is not the least footstep to be found, in any of our Antient Histories.

The King this same year kept his Christmases at St. Albans ; And was present at the Dedication of the Great Church made upon Innocents-day there. ¹⁰ The Persons who attended upon him were the Archbishops, Bishops, Earls, Barons, and other Nobles : Among which that we must take in the Regular Prelates, neither the Place, nor the Occasion, will suffer us to doubt.

There was yet one Eminent ¹¹ Occasion for holding a Parliament, which should have tempted this Author to have look'd into the History of it : The King's advising with the Lords about a Second Marriage. He held this Council at the Epiphany at London : There with the Advice of the Archbishop of Canterbury, "Et Principum Regni, quos omnes sub uno Congregavit, he resolved to Mar- ry. And this Solemn Meeting, ¹² Hemingford calls only, in general, a Council ; Concilio Congregato ; ¹³ Simeon of Durham, "Concilium totius Angliæ : Which I observe to shew how we are to understand those Expressions upon other Occasions, when they may not be so clearly Expounded to us.

And now we are come to his next Instance ; in which if I do not comprehend what he would prove by it, more than his own unjust Accusation of Hemingford for a Fault which he never committed ; I am content he should impute it to my want of Penetration, not to any defect in his Judgment. ¹⁴ In the Council of Gloucester (says he) Anno 1123, (which Hemingford has Con-founded with the former) viz. Anno 1102, ¹⁵ William de Corboyl, was Chosen Archbishop of Canterbury. But not being a Religious, as all the Archbishops of Canterbury from Austin down to his time had been, the Prior and Monks of Canterbury Opposed his Election, and so did all the other Monks, of the se-

King HENRY "veral Orders there present; with whom most of the Earls and Thanes also sided, the 1st. "if the Monk of Peterborough be not partial in his Story. Monks only are mention'd here, because they only were engaged in the Struggle. If I take this Author's meaning a-right, his Argument lies thus: That others of the Lower Clergy, as well as the Monks here spoken of, were present at this Parliament, and Members of it; tho' in Discoursing of a Matter in which they only were concern'd, our Historians take no Notice of any others besides them.

But to this the Answer is easy, these Monks (all but their Superiours) were no Members of Parliament; nor did they appear at Gloucester in that Capacity: They were only the Delegates of the Prior and Convent of Canterbury, as from the true Account of this History will evidently appear.

The Archbishoprick being void, the King sent out Writs for a Parliament to meet at Gloucester upon Candlemas-day, in order to the Nominating of a fit Person to that See. He Commanded, says the Chronicle, his Bishops and Abbots and Thanes to meet him there, to hold a Parliament, Procerum Concilium with him. ¹ The Prior of Canterbury, with some of the Chief of his Monks, was there; and accounted to them, that they had pitched upon certain Persons of their Order, out of which the King and his Council might make Choice as they pleased. The King referr'd it to the Bishops to choose whom they would; and promised to Confirm their Choice. They chose Four, and left it to the Prior and his Monks to take One out of that Number. The Matter was warmly Debated on both sides; the King favour'd the Bishops; and, as the Saxon Chronicle tells the Story, the Lay-Lords, the Monks. However the latter were forced to Yield; and Choose William Corboyl out of the Four which were offered by the Bishops to them. Here now is the whole truth of this Matter, and it plainly shews for what end the Monks came thither. They were sent from their Monastery to assert their Rights in the Election of the Archbishop of Canterbury: And all the Monkish Prelates who were present, as it was Natural to suppose, took part with them. But to turn a Committee of Monks, into Members of Parliament; and then by the help of a good Fancy, to tell us that the Other Clergy (of which not a Word is said) were pass'd by, because they were not concern'd in the Struggle; is, I think, as Ridiculous, as I am sure it is false. Had they then been present, they would, I doubt not, have had a part in the Struggle. They would have been as stiff in asserting the Honours and Priviledges of their Bishops, as the Monks were of those of their Own Order. And we should have somewhere or other heard too as much of their Zeal, as we now meet with of the Struggle of those of their Rank upon the other Occasion.

nelm. Loc. Cit.

But there is yet one Circumstance more, which I must desire Dr. A. to Account for, in his Relation of this Controversy. He tells us that the Cause of this Contention was, that William le Corboyl was not a Religious. Yet his own Chronicler says, he was a Regular Canon of the Monastery of Chiche, in Essex. And ² William of Malmshury adds, that he was at the time of his Election, Prior of that place. Now certainly whatever difference the Monks may have made between their several Orders, yet a Regular Canon of St. Austins, as opposed to other Secular Canons, must be allowed to have been a Religious. That therefore was not their Exception: ³ But they were for One of their Own Order; a Benedictine, whom they call'd, in their Language, by way of Eminence, a Monk. Nor does the Chronicle say that All the Monks of the several Orders there present opposed his Election: It only says that all the Munec-hades-men, all the other Monks, as well as those of Canterbury, stood out against it; but of their several Orders, or that they were of several Orders, not a Word is mentioned.

When such far-fetch'd Imaginations, and uncertain Consequences as these, are obtruded upon us for true History; and the plain Words of our Antient Authors, on the other side, are taken no Notice of; 'tis, I think, a clear sign either that the Cause is not Good, or that it has had the misfortune of meeting with a very indifferent Advocate to plead for it.

And here Dr. A. shuts up this long Reign, out of which he could pick but two Instances that seem'd to favour his Pretences, and those, as I have shewn, nothing at all to his Advantage. He will Excuse me if I go on a little farther with it, before I come to his one only passage, which he alledges out of the next.

Of the Transactions of the Year 1129, some Account has already been given ; yet I must once more beg leave, here, in its proper place, to take Notice of them. Among other things which had been Establish'd in the Synod of 1127, this was one ; Can. V. To forbid the Lower Clergy the use either of Wives, or Concubines, under the penalty not only of Deprivation, but of Degradation likewise. But this Order not proving any more effectual, than the many others which had before been made ; the King, who had another View in it than the Bishops were aware of, moved them to commit the Correction of this Abuse to him ; who, in that Case, would take an effectual Order about it. He had before attempted this in the time of Archbishop Anselm, and used some undue severities under pretence of it. But that Archbishop stoutly opposed him in it ; and would not yield that he should meddle at all in such Matters as did not properly fall under a civil Cognisance, but belong'd only to the Governours of the Church to Correct. But the present Archbishop fell into the Snare, and with his Bishops, consented that the King should take the ordering of this Abuse into his hands. The Result was, that he turned it into a Money Matter ; and provided they did but pay him for a Dispensation, they might freely live on with their Wives as they had done before.

K. STEPHEN This was the Matter of Fact; and the only Question (as to our present Case) is, whether this were now agreed upon in a Church-Synod; or in a State-Parliament. Our Authors are plain that it was in the latter: They call it Concilium magnum: ² Concilium totius Angliae; and take notice that nothing else but this was done in it. Only the Saxon Chronicle seems distinctly to speak of it as a Church Synod; and (as I suppose) confounds the Council of 1127, with the Parliament of 1129; and patches up One, confused, Relation, of what was done in Annal. Waverl. Two distinct Assemblies, with respect to that Affair.

At Michaelmas, the same year, the King went to Winchester; and there, in his Great Council, made a Disposal of the Bishoprick of that Place. The Persons who composed it were Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots and Lords; as they are distinctly express'd, by a Contemporary Historian who speaks of this Matter.

In 1131, The King held his Parliament at Northampton, on the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin: The Persons who were call'd to it were Omnes Principes Angliae; as our ⁴ Historians unanimously Phrase it: A Character to which I do not see how the Inferior Clergy can in any wise pretend.

After Easter, the next year, he held the like ⁵ Council; and the same Expressions are used to denote the Members of it. One of the great things debated in that Parliament was the Controversy between the Bishops of St. David's, and Landaff, about the Bounds of their several Dioceses. Whether that Affair was referr'd by that Council to the Bishops, or no, I cannot say; but it is very probable that it was: ⁶ For about the end of that year, at the beginning of Lent, we are told there was a Convention of the Bishops at London for that Purpose; and another afterwards at Winchester, in the Rogation-week following. So that the Parliaments in those times were so far from transacting the Affairs of the Church, in common with the Clergy, as they are reported to have done; that even in Matters of a Civil Nature, wherein the Clergy were concerned, they seem to have referr'd them to their own Hearing; and to have shewn a more than ordinary Tenderness and Caution in Meddling with any thing, that had but the least relation to another Court and Cognisance.

We are now Entering upon the Troublesome Reign of King Stephen, in which ⁷ Dr. A. tells us, The Lower Clergies Interest in these State Meetings is set in something a better light. And so indeed it had need be; for hitherto we have met with very little that gives any Light, or Credit, at all, to it. But sure never was the Name of Light so ill applied, as this Author has done it, on this Occasion. For after all, in this whole Reign he produces but One, Solitary, Instance to Confirm this pretended Right; and that so little to the purpose, as to convince us there is nothing indeed to be said for it.

King Stephen being Crown'd King of England upon St. Stephen's-day, hasted from thence with his Barons to Reading, to the Burial of King Henry, his Uncle. Which being perform'd by him, with his Bishops and Lords, he went to Oxford, whither he had call'd his great Council, in order to make good what he had promised to them at his Inauguration. Who the Persons were whom he Assembled at this Parliament, one of our Antient ⁸ Historians who has preserved the very Acts of it, will not suffer us to doubt: Episcopos, & Proceres Regni sui, regali Edicto, in Unum Convenire præcepit; and with them he held Generale Concilium, a full Parliament, to the effect that is there mentioned. To the Charter of Privileges there Granted and Confirm'd, the very Persons who Subscribed to it are Subjoyned: Among which we meet with none but Bishops and Lords; and may therefore reasonably conclude, that none of the Lower Clergy were call'd to it.

The Easter following he kept his Court at Westminster; and held another Council there. ⁹ To this the Dean and Canons of St. Paul's were sent for: But it was to Choose a Bishop of London into the then Vacant See, not to sit as Members of that Great Assembly.

What to call that Meeting which was held the year following at Northampton, whilst the King was abroad beyond Sea, I cannot tell. But if it was held by his Authority, and so was a proper Parliament, we shall therein have another Evidence against this Author's Assertion. For the Members of it were only ¹⁰ the Bishops and chief Men of the Kingdom; none of the Lower Clergy were called to it.

And

And now I shall proceed to Consider that single proof, which he says sets ^{STEPHEN} the ¹ Lower Clergies Interest in these State Meetings in so clear a Light: It is taken from a Charter of this King to the Church of Westminster, which recites, that in his Third year there was at Westminster, Universale totius Angliæ Concilium; at which, Adfuerunt quidam Comites Regni mei, & Barones mei quam plurimi; & Innumera Multitudo Cleri & Populi; who gave voluntatem & assensum Authoritatis, to this Charter. He adds, that the Historians speak of this Meeting in the very same Words: Particularly Gervasius, who after saying there were Seventeen Bishops, and Thirty Abbots there; adds, Cum Cleri & Populi multitudine numerosa: So also Continuator Florentii ad Ann. & Hagustald; p. 327.

Who they were that Confirm'd this Charter, or what Authority, an Innumera multitudo Cleri, & Populi, has in such Cases, I shall not now Enquire. The Charter, I have not at present the Opportunity of Inspecting; nor is the other worth the Enquiring after. But will this Author give me leave to put him in mind what 'tis he has here Undertaken, to set in somewhat a better Light, viz. the Lower Clergies Interest in our State Meetings: And then to ask him, Whether he did not know that the Assembly which he refers to, was not a State-Meeting, but a Legantine Synod? In which no less than Sixteen Ecclesiastical Canons were made; and are at large enter'd by his own Author ² Gervase, before his own Eyes? To bring the Matter home to the very Sentence which he refers to: Did he not see in the same Gervase these Words, as well as those which he Cited; Idus Decembris Celebrata est SYNODUS apud Westmonasterium; cui præsuit Albericus Hostiensis Episcopus, & Domini Papæ in Angliam & Scotiam, Legatus. And are not the same, if not the very Words, yet the Sense, and Title of this Synod, in both his other Authors? Or, if this be not enough, let me ask him once more; In the very Subscription of the Charter which he refers to, did he not see these Words immediately before those he Quoted to us; "Habito in prædicto Loco Universali totius Angliæ Concilio; presente Viro Religioso D. Alberico Ostiense Episcopo, S. R. E. Legato, & Præsidente, eodem Concilio mense Decembris, xiii die Mensis"? And could he see all this, and not know that the Popes Legats, in their highest Exaltation, did neither Call Parliaments, nor Preside in them; nor did Parliaments (whatever he pretends) sit together with Legats, and make Church Canons.

Here therefore I must appeal to the Censure of Mankind against such a fraudulent procedure; and leave it to the World to pass that Judgment upon it which it deserves, and which he would not have fail'd severely to have urg'd, had he found it any other. But I have more to add, as to this Matter: It is plain Dr. Atterbury, had the Continuer of ³ Florence of Worcester before him when he Wrote this. Now in this very year, that Author gives an account of a true Parliament held at Northampton in the Octaves of Easter, (4) Idus Aprilis. In it were Assembled, Thurstan Archbishop of York, the Bishops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, and the rest of the Nobles of England. Here therefore was the true form of an English Parliament in those days. With what Conscience could this Author pass it by without taking any Notice of it; and at the same time delude us with the Story of a Legantine Synod nothing to the Purpose, instead of this State Council.

Nay, but let me ask him yet once more; Did he himself believe the Innumera Cleri, & Populi multitudo, to have been proper Members of that very Synod; and call'd to Sit, and Act, in it? 'Tis too absurd to suppose: And he had before his Eyes the ⁴ Legats Mandate to the Prior and Convent of Canterbury, to assure him that they were not. There he tells them in Express terms who were the Members of that Convention, that, by his Apostolical Authority, he had call'd together to a Conference which he intended to have at Westminster, the Bishops, and all the Abbots, and all the other Religious Persons of this Kingdom: But of his Innumera Cleri, & Populi, multitudo, there is not a Word. If he shall say that his Clerus are contained under the Title of Religious Persons, which the Legate speaks of; Another of his own ⁵ Authors will Contradict him in that too; who expressly calls them the Priors of the Canons Regular, and who together with the Abbots, took in the Governours of all the considerable Religious Houses of England. These then were the Members of that Synod; Episcopi, Abbates, ac Priores Canonicorum per totam Angliam: The multitude was indeed a very natural, but withal an Unsent for Attendant upon the Assembly; they were present at the Synod, but by no means Members of it.

K STEPHEN This therefore may suffice to shew that Dr. Atterbury must look yet farther for the Light which he speaks of ; for sure nothing could have given less light to any point, than this magnified instance, which stands for this whole reign, does, upon Enquiry, give to the Parliamentary Rights of the Lower Clergy in these times.

Abbots and Priors of the Province were called : These chose their New Arch-

Westminster, not as Archbishop of Canterbury, but as Legat of the Apostolick See.
This I mention to prevent any Mistake, as if our Parliaments had at least made Bishops, if they did nothing else ; whereas in truth they meddled not with any Spiritual Matters, which were, as we have seen, constantly transacted in Syno- dical Assemblies.

I now proceed to a Reign that must be very Carefully Examined by me: A Sect. 27.
Reign in which, if we will believe Dr. Atterbury, the Antient form of our Parliament received a most remarkable Change, by the intire Recess of the Inferiour King HENRY the II.
Clergy from it. They had hitherto been accustomed for Five hundred years together, to come to the National Assembly, and there make up One Common Council with the Laity in it. ¹ "The Clergy and Laity met together in the Rights, Sec. p. 74.
Great Councils of the Realm; in the Saxon Times, and for some Reigns after the Conquest, Nationally; Joyning closely with the Laity in Civil Debates, and taking their (the Laities) Sanction along with them, in all Ecclesiastical Acts and Ordinances. ² But about the middle of this Reign "They divided from ³ the Laity, and from One another, and Attended the Parliament not in One Body, but in two Provincial Synods, held under their several Archbishops. Ib.

To take the Account yet more fully from his own Words: ³ "How long, Rights pag. 36.
exactly, the Saxon Manner of Mix'd Councils continued, it is not easy to say. ^{36.}
 "However that for several Reigns after the Conquest, it obtained, is certain;
 "and it is probable that the Disuse of it might begin towards the middle of "Henry the Second, when the Clergy, we are told, disjoyn'd themselves from the "Laity in every respect, and set up to be Independent; being encouraged in "this Attempt by the Pope (whose Power was then very Great) and by the "Success which they had in their Struggle with the Crown about the Affair of "Archbishop Becket, and the Articles of Clarendon.

"And this Division of the Spirituality from the Temporality, which BEGAN in
 "Henry the Second's time, took root under his Successors; and was settled more "and more by the Absence of Richard the First in the Holy Land; by King
 "John's Weak, and Henry the Third's Troubled Reign.

⁴ "Now therefore the Clergy seem'd to have declined Obedience to the Lay-⁴ Rights, p. 37.
Summons, except such of them only as were Obligated to Attend the Great Councils of the Realm, by their Offices, or by their Tenures: So that in the
 "the Sixth of King John, when the King had a mind to have All the Abbots
 "and Priors present in Parliament, he was forced to Cite them by the several "Bishops of the Dioceses; and not by an Immediate Summons. And in the 49th
 "of Henry the Third, when every Abbot had his distinct Writ, they are said to "have been Voluntarie Summoniti, i. e. by their own Consent, not as of Right, or as "Owing the Crown any such Service.

liament was not in One National Council, but in two separate Assemblies of the "Province: Till King Edward the First "finding the Clergy thus divided from
 "the Laity hard to be dealt with, resolved to Restore the Old Practise, and to "bring them Nationally to Parliament; which he did, by inserting into the Bishops "Writ that Clause, which begins with the Word Premunientes.

Here therefore is that which Dr. Atterbury is to prove to us: That about the Middle of this Reign, the Clergy withdrew themselves from the Parliament; and would obey the King's Summons no longer; but Met by themselves, and Attended the Parliament in their own Provincial Synods. That this our Kings were forced to Consent to, as not being indeed in any Condition to oppose it; and that thus they continued till the time of King Edward the First, who by putting the Pra- munientes into the Bishops Parliamentary Writs, Restored the Old Practise, and brought them Nationally again to Parliament, as they had been wont to come before.

These are his Assertions: What Truth there is in them, comes now in Sect. 28.
 Order to be Enquired. And First, That his pretence of a Change in this Case must be meerly Fabulous, the Account already given of the Ecclesiastical Members of our antient Parliaments sufficiently shews. The Inferior Clergy were never yet called, in that Capacity, to our State Councils; and therefore could not now leave off to Obey the King's Summons, and to withdraw themselves from them. As for what he alledges from the Council of Tours, it is indeed very true in that Sense in which his Author affirmed it; but utterly false in his perverse Application of it. That Council determined nothing against Clergy- mens going to such Parliamentary Assemblies; or obeying the Lay Magistrate in that particular. The Bishops and Prelates went with the same freedom to them afterwards that they had done before; and so might the Other Clergy have done likewise. Neither the Third, nor Tenth Canon of that Synod, spake at all against it: Nor (which is more to our Purpose) was this any of those Points upon which

King HENRY which the Troubles of this Reign were founded; the King insisted not upon it, nor did the Archbishop, nor any of his Abbetors refuse to yield to it.

All therefore that the Author of the Antiquit. Britann. says concerning this Council, is no more (in effect) than what ¹ Brompton, whose Sense, and almost whose Words, he makes use of, had said before him; that after the Return of the Archbishop from this Council, where a Resolution seems to have been taken to Exalt the Prerogatives of the Church beyond all reasonable Bounds; the Kingdom and Priesthood began to be at Variance. ² The King desiring to keep the Peace of his People, would have had all Malefactors punish'd by his Laws without Exception: The Archbishop resolved to cover the Clergy in their Wickedness; by whom what great violations of the Peace were made, and in what Notorious Instances, the Histories of those times sufficiently shew.

As for the other Motives which he offers, as the Occasion of this great Change, it will be time enough to Consider them, when we shall see it first proved that any such Change at all was made. Till then it will be to little purpose to dispute what Grounds, or Reasons, may be imagined for an Alteration, which I must beg leave to say, was never Introduced; and would desire him to prove by some good Authorities, if he can, that it was.

Sect. 29.

But indeed, he is so far from doing this, that according to his usual Constancy, he proves the quite contrary: And, as if he had utterly forgot his former Hypothesis, is no where so eager in Asserting the Rights of the Lower Clergy to come to Parliament, as in these very Reigns, in which he had so positively Asserted, that they left off to come to it. This, I confess, is a pretty odd Turn; but Dr. Atterbury Affects to be all Original; and provided he does but trace out New Ways, he cares not whom he Opposes, tho' it should be himself, for the doing of it.

Let us therefore see, not what we hoped to have found, but what he has been pleased to afford us; how he proves the Lower Clergy to have still continued to Come to Parliament; till he shall favour us hereafter with the Arguments on the other side, to shew, that for all that, they now forsook the Old practise, and refused to come any longer to it.

Who they were that met at the General Council, or Parliament, which he held in Lent, about the End of this Year; we are not told: But from the Account which the ⁵ same Chronicle gives us of the next, which met not long after, we may take a certain Estimate of it: In which he says, the King commanded, throughout all England, that the Archbishops, Bishops, many of the Abbots, all the Earls and Barons, should come together, the Fourth day before the Feast of St. Benedict; and so by the Members of that Second Parliament sufficiently informs us, who they were that composed the foregoing.

What that Meeting was which ⁸ Dr. Atterbury produces as a clear proof of the Parliamentary Rights of the Inferiour Clergy, or where it met, I cannot tell. As he represents it, one would take it to be a plain State Council; there were Summon'd (says he) "Archiepiscopi, Episcopi, Abbates, multarumq; Ecclesiarum Prælati, cum Comitibus & Baronibus totius Regni, ut Negotia Regni & Ecclesie pertractarent." And these last Words are probably those of the Writ it self by which they were Summon'd, and which lay before ⁹ Paris in the Register of St. Albans, that he was then Transcribing. But then the following Words seems rather to imply it to have been a Legantine Synod; "Cum Theobaldo Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo, Apostolica sedis Legato, eidem Concilio presidente."

⁹ M. Par. Vit. Abbat. p. 72.

And

And to this the following Relation much better agrees; which tells us that the Bishops being upon a certain day Assembled, the Abbot of St. Albans presented to them the Popes Bull, for the the more solemn Observation of the Festival of St. Alban; which they all promised to Obey. Then the same Abbot produced another Order for the solemn Procession of the Clergy, and Laitie, of the County of Hertford, to the Church of St. Albans; against which the Bishop of Lincoln's Clerks appeal'd to the Popes Audience. Now all this seems to bespeak this Meeting to have been a Church Assembly: It mentions only the Bishops as Assembled together; And accordingly the Learn'd Editor calls it, Synodum Londini.

The most probable Account that I can give of this Matter is, that a Parliament, and Synod, were held both about the same time; to the latter of which as the Ecclesiarum Pralati were received, so with Relation to the former, it is certain that the Religious Houses not only in our Historians, but our Records too, are called by the Name of Ecclesia; and in several places in Domesday-book it self, have their Lands Convey'd to them under that Character. These Ecclesiarum Pralati therefore I take to be the Priors of such Houses; who we are sure in the Sixth of King John were call'd by Writ to Parliament; and possibly might have come thither from the time of which we are now treating.

But the next Year, we have a more difficult Relation to account for. The King being return'd from beyond Sea, kept his Whitsuntide at St. Edmund's; a great number being gathered together, viz. the Archbishop of Canterbury; the Bishops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, and a Multitude of the People. A Controversy was then depending between the Bishop of Chichester, and the Abbot of Battaile. To hear this the King, upon Tuesday after the Octaves of Pentecost, went into the Chapter-house with the Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, and no small Multitude of the People. And here it was, as the Battle Ms. Reports, that the Cause between the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Sylvester Abbot of St. Austins Canterbury; (which Gervase refers to Northampton, and tell us was ended in a Parliament there, about Two Months after;) was first Enquired into. And of which Dr. Atterbury thus tells the Story.

"With these Accounts agree those which Gervase of Dover (now Gervase of Canterbury if a late Author informs us a-right) has given us of some Great Councils in the same Reign. That at Northampton in 1157, was composed, he says, of the Præsules, and Principes Regni; Abbates nonnulli; aliaq; Inferioris Ordinis Personæ. But who does he think were these Inferioris Ordinis Personæ? Not the Lower-Clergy, I hope? No; they were the Populi Multitudo non modica, spoken of before; who were admitted to hear the Tryals that came before the King and his Council; but were not therefore Members of it. Let us see how the Instrument of Submission, upon which this Debate ended at Northampton, Expounds this Matter. "This profession was made at Northampton Anno Grat. 1157, the 3d of Henry the Second, in the Month of July, viz. xvi Kalend. of August, Eight Bishops being present; Twelve Abbots; King Henry himself, and many others, tam de transmarinis quam de Partibus Anglorum; who surely could not All have a right to sit in our English Councils.

That it was common on these Occasions to allow the People to be present at the Hearing of these kind of Causes, not only the Instances before alledged, but that which comes next, in order to be considered, shew. "In 1162, says Dr. A. (M. Paris) tell us that the "Universitas Episcoporum, Abbatum, & aliorum Magnatum, met at Westminster: And these Alii Magnates are in his History Explained by Comites, Barones, Archidiaconi, & Innumera Turba Regni. But sure he did not think of what he Wrote, when he gave such a strange Account of this Matter. Was M. Paris indeed so ignorant, as to rank an Innumera Turba Regni among the Barons of England? Or, was he so rude and unmannerly as to call the Magnates by so coarse an Expression? The Truth of the Story is this: In his History he tells us that Anno 1162, the Controversy between the Bishop of Lincoln, and the Abbot of St. Albans was amicably determined in the Presence of King Henry the Second; and of the Archbishops, and Bishops, whom he particularly Enumerates; "Robert Earl of Leicester, Justiciary of England, being also present, with the Earls, Barons, Abbots, Archdeacons, and an Innumerable Multitude of the Kingdom.

In his life of the Abbots, he prosecutes this Affair more at large: He tells us, that the King Commanded the Cause to be heard in the Council which he was about to Celebrate at Westminster, at Midlent. That the Parliament being Assembled, the King sitting in the Chappel of St. Catharines, Westminster, cum Universitate tam Archiepiscoporum, quam Episcoporum, atq; Abbatum & Aliorum Optimatum Regni; the Cause was begun by the Abbot of Westminster, and pursued by the Abbot of St. Albans. That the King, cum Optimatibus suis, was exceedingly taken with the Prudence of the latter of these. That he afterwards went aside with the Abbot, and Two of his Monks, to inspect his Charters; and then returned into the Chappel to the Archbishops, Bishops, and other Great Men, whom he had left there.

* Script. X.
Col. 533.

Here therefore we see who were the Members of this Parliament; and that M. Paris no where reckons the Innumera Turba among the Barons of England. I shall only observe this farther, to prevent any Mistake; that Radulphus de Diceto, an Exact and Contemporary Writer, giving a full Account of this Matter, not only makes no mention of the Crowd of Hearers, and Lookers-on; but (with M. Paris) expressly tells us who these Archdeacons were: viz. Geoffrey Archdeacon of Canterbury; and Richard Archdeacon of Poictou, afterwards Bishop of Winchester. By what Right these two Archdeacons were there present, it is not hard to Guess. The Archdeacon of Poictou, to be sure, could not be call'd to Parliament in Right of his Archdeaconry: Either therefore they must be said not to have been proper Members of this Parliament; but to have come Occasionally to it, for the Prosecution of this Cause; ³ (as indeed the former of them was warmly Engaged on the Bishops side, against the Abbot; and the latter seems to have been no less a Friend to the Abbot, against the Bishop) Or we must conclude that by some means or other, they had such Lands, as intituled them to a Summons; and brought Them only, of all that Order, at this time to that Great Council.

3 M. Par. loc.

This therefore may suffice to shew who were the Members of this Parliament; and that the Innumera turba Regni of which our Historian spake, came not to this Assembly under any such Capacity; much less were of the number of those whom he comprised under the general Title of Alii Magnates (or Optimates) in his other Book. But I must not pass by another great Transaction of this year, without taking some Notice of it: And that is, the Election of the famous Thomas Becket to the Archbishoprick of Canterbury, which was done, according to the Custom of those times, by the Convent of Canterbury, and Bishops of the Province, in a Parliamentary Assembly, a little before Whitsuntide. Our Historians speak variously, as to their Phrases, of this Meeting; but the meaning of them all is the same; and their Variety will therefore serve the better to shew, how we are to Understand them upon other the like Occasions.

* M. Par. p. 98.

* M. Paris tell the Story thus: That "Congregato Clero & Populo totius Provinciae Cantuariensis apud Westmonasterium, he was there unanimously Elected. Diceto takes no Notice of the People, as having no Voice in the Election; but says only that "Clero totius Provinciae Cantuariensis Generaliter Londonia Convocato; Henry, the King's Son, being present, with the Justitaries of the Kingdom, he was solemnly Chosen to the Archbishoprick."

* Script. X.

The Acts of the Archbishops Life, Quoted by Baronius, speak thus: That this Year a General Council was Celebrated at London, ⁶ Convenientibus Omnibus Episcopis, to Choose the Metropolitan of all England. But ⁷ Gervase, a Monk, of Canterbury, tells the Story with more Exactness; and thereby shews us how all the rest are to be understood. That in May, the Bishops of Chichester, Exeter, and Rochester, the Abbot of Battle, and Richard de Luci his Brother, brought the King's Orders to the Convent of Canterbury, that the Prior with certain of his Monks, together with the Bishops and Clergy of England, should come together to London to make Election of an Archbishop. That hereupon Wibert the Prior, taking with him the Senior Monks of the Church of Canterbury, came to London; and there found the ⁸ Prelates, and Nobles of England, gathered together. There the Prior and Monks, Elected Thomas the King's Chancellor; so he reports it; without taking Notice of the Bishops in this Particular. But this part of the Transaction Ralph de Diceto Supplies. He tells us that in their Account of this Matter to the Pope, they sent him Word that the Suffragans of the Church of Canterbury had Chosen themselves a Pastor. He adds, That the Election being made, it was Declared by the Bishop of Winchester in the Hall at Westminster: That together with the Bishops Letter to the Pope, another was sent sent to the same Effect by the Prior and Convent, to Certify the Election to ^{King HENRY} him. ^{the 11d.}

Upon the whole then it appears, who the Clerus, and Populus, of M. Paris; and the Bishops, and Clergy, of Gervase, were. A Parliament was then held at London: There the Præsules and Proceres Anglia were Assembled; the usual Members of that Great Council. Upon the day of the Election, the Archbishop was chosen by the Prior and Convent; and Accepted, and Proclaimed, by the Provincial Bishops. The Lords of the Parliament, and the other Prelats, attended only upon the Solemnity. Here were all that were called to this Meeting: If any others were present, (as at the Publication no doubt there were many) it was only the Innumera turba Regni (before mentioned) who Crouded in, to see and hear what was done; and who, tho' they seldom fail to be present on such Occasions, yet I believe were never Invited, much less regularly Summon'd, to come to these Conventions.

Having thus given an Account of the Election of this Archbishop; I proceed with Dr. A. to consider the great transaction of this Reign; in the Quarrel which happened soon after, between the King and Him, in the great Council; or, as ¹ Brompton plainly calls it, the Parliament of Clarendon. All that he tells us of this whole matter is this, ² "That to the Articles of Clarendon, in 1164, M. Paris says, there Swore Archiepiscopi, Episcopi, Abbates, Priores, Clerici, cum Comitibus, ac Baronibus, & Proceribus Cunctis. And this, not afterwards, but upon the spot, Viva Voce, in that very Meeting where these Constitutions were made." ^{1164. Sect. 33. Script. X. col. 1058. Rights, p. 299.}

There is hardly any part of our History of which so Authentick, and full an Account has come down to us, as of this Meeting: And because it will much illustrate, as well as confirm, our present Argument, I will beg leave to insist a little the more fully on what relates to my Subject in it.

The Archbishop being returned from the Council of Tours, and desirous intirely to restore the Rights of the Church of Canterbury, says ³ Gervase, did thereby provoke the minds of many Great Persons against him. The King on the other side being no less concerned for the Peace of his Realm; and for that end finding it necessary that the Clergy should be impleaded before his Lay-Magistrates, for their Offences against the King's Peace; Called together ⁴ all the Archbishops and Bishops of England at Westminster, there to Treat with them about it. ^{Script. X. col. 1384. Hoveden. fol. 282.}

The Question at last came to this, Whether they would observe the Antient Customs of the Realm? And the Answer was, That they would observe them, Salvo Ordine suo. The King being Enraged at this Answer; The Archbishop went to him to ⁵ Woodstock, and there promised that without any such Reserve he would observe them: With which the King being pleased, told him, that he would have this Promise made good in Episcoporum, & Procerum Regni conspectu & Audientia publica, says the Contemporary Writer of the Archbishops Life. ^{Herebert says to Oxford. Baron. Annal. ad Ann 1164. p. 485.}

Upon this the Parliament of Clarendon was called: Let us hear who were called to it. ⁶ The Acts of that Assembly, still remaining, Enumerate them thus: ⁶ Ib. Omnes Episcopi Anglicani, & Comites, & Barones, Magistratus & Nobiles. ⁷ Ralsde ⁷ Script. X. col. 536. Diceto, a Contemporary Historian, speaks thus in like manner of them; Episcopi & Proceres. ⁸ Gervase calls them Pontifices & Proceres: Præsules & Proceres; and ⁸ Ib. col. 1385, 1388. sometimes in one Word, Optimates. The Quadripartite History, Præsules & Proceres: And lastly ⁹ M. Paris himself, yet more particularly, Præsidente Jo. de Oxonia, præsentibus Archiepiscopis, Episcopis, Abbatibus, Prioribus, Comitibus, & Proceribus Regni. ⁹ Mat. Paris p. 100. These are all that our Antient Historians speak of; none else are so much as hinted at by them.

But what now was the Result of this Assembly? Did the Archbishop Swear to the Articles of Clarendon? If Dr. A. means by the Articles of Clarendon those Articles which were drawn up there; as he ought to mean them; 'tis certain he did not. ¹⁰ The King insisted upon the Promise made to him, to Observe ¹⁰ Baron. loc. cit. p. 482. Consuetudines Regias; or, as they are called by others, Consuetudines Avitas: But what these Customs in Particular were, it was not yet agreed. This at last the Archbishop was perswaded to do, and all this, in eadem forma, says the Historian, Sigillatim Universi Pontifices Juraverunt.

Having done this, the next thing resolved on, was to put these Customs in Writing. This was done in the Articles of Clarendon; of which one Copy was delivered to each Archbishop; and a Third remained with the King. To these Articles, the King Required the Bishops to set their Seals, for the greater Security of what was done. But this the Archbishop declined for the present, and afterwards went off intirely from what he had before Agreed to; and never allowed of, much less Swore to, the Articles drawn up at Clarendon, as Dr. Atterbury represents him to have done.

But to allow of this Mistake, into which M. Paris, seems naturally enough to have led him: Who were they that Swore to observe the King's Customs? Universi Pontifices, says William: Episcopi promiserunt & Juraverunt; says Gervase. Prelati; says Diceto: Archiepiscopus & Episcopi; says Birchington. Archiepiscopus, says Hoveden, received them, and granted that the Bishops should Receive and Observe them. And so says M. Paris too, if he were but rightly understood, and pointed as he ought to be; and is in the Accurate Edition of London 1640; and in Sir H. Spelmans Transcript of this History from him. This Recognition, says he, the Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Priors; the Clergy, with the Earls, Barons, and Nobles, Swore to. Not as if the Clerus were a Fifth Rank of Men (which tis certain from all our Histories, and even from M. Paris himself, they were not) but he resumes in that Word, what he had particularly delivered in the four Preceding Orders; the Clergy (i. e.) All the Clergy then present, and before specified, with the Laity then present, and next to be Enumerated, Swore to this Promise.

Dr. Atterbury seems to lay some stress upon their Swearing not "afterwards, but upon the spot; in the very place where the Constitutions were made. This is very true; and I allow that those who Swore, were Members of that Great Council, or Parliament. But shall I freely tell him what I think? I do look upon that Passage of M. Paris either not to be exactly published; or rather that M. Paris was mistaken in his Account of this Promise. For indeed he not only intimates, as Dr. A. does from him, that they Swore to the very Articles of Clarendon; which 'tis plain they did not; but he makes the Temporal Lords, to have Sworn with them; which no other Historian that I know of does, nor was there any need of it. On the contrary, it does not appear that any other of the Clergy there present, besides the Bishops, did Swear to this matter. In short; the Bishops only promised; the Bishops Swore before the Prelates and Lords; that was the Truth; and so our other Accounts do Generally agree. I shall close this with the very minutes of that Action, as I find them publish'd by Goldastus, and it is a piece worthy of Remark: "This Recognition was made before the Archbishops, and Bishops, and Clergy, and Earls, and Barons, of the Kingdom. "And the same Customs so Recognized, by the Archbishops, and Bishops, and Earls, and Barons, and by the more Noble and Antient of the Kingdom; "Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury, Roger Archbishop of York, and Twelve Bishops (there expressly mentioned) agreed to, and Promised to Keep and Observe; "in the Presence of Thirty eight Great Lords, (whose Names particularly follow) and of many other Lords and Nobles of the Kingdom, as well Clergy as Laity. This is a plain, and full Account of this Matter; and intirely determines the Case. The Two Archbishops, with Twelve of their Suffragan Bishops, made the Promise; the Parliament Clergy and Laity were present at it, and Witnesses to it. No others but Bishops Swore; no other Clergy but those who made a part of the Proceres, and Nobiles Regni, were present when they Swore.

The Archbishop having thus departed both from his Promise, and Oath; upon the 13th of October following, the King Called another Parliament at Norhampton. There were Assembled, Episcopi, Comites, Barones, totius Regni. This Brompton calls again a Parliament; and the Members of this, were the same as of the other, viz. Bishops, and Lords: No other besides, that we read of, were at it. 'Tis true the Mf. Life of this Archbishop, seems to carry this point a little farther; by telling us that the King Called to this Council Omnes qui de Rege tenebant in Capite. But Fitz-Stephens, a Monk of Canterbury, who attended upon Archbishop Becket at that very time, and gives the best and fullest Account of this Meeting, mentions only Episcopos, Comites, & Barones; and by the whole Course of his Narration plainly shews that no Others were Summon'd to it.

And as these Instances declare who were called to our State Councils at this time, so about two years after, we have a double Opportunity of discerning who were called to our Ecclesiastical Synods. At Oxford, some Hereticks were Judged K. HENRY in a National Council; the King and Bishops of the Realm being present, says ^{the 11d.} M. Paris. And so our other Historians tell us. And at London, the Bishops and ^{M. Paris, p.} Abbots Assembled to Appeal against the Archbishop; ^{105.} and they did it not only in their own Name, but in that of all the Persons under their Jurisdiction. ^{Neubrigens. lib. 2. cap. 13. R. Diceto. col. 39. Brompton. col. 1050.}

This Assembly, or Synod of the Bishops, ³ Dr. Atterbury (by Mistake) places Anno 1168; and delivers it to us for a Great State-Council, and tells us that Gervase particularly observes that the Sub-Prior and Monks of Canterbury, had their Writ to come to it. "He mentions those only, says he, because he himself was ² *M. Paris, p. 106. "one of their number. It is true that Historian in his Acts of the Archbishops of Canterbury does say that the Proceres were also called to this Assembly: But the end for which they were Summon'd, shews that they were not, in General, All the Parliamentary Barons, but only Such of them as were threatned by the Archbishop with Excommunication. And who those were ⁴ Ralph de Diceto tells us: Richard de Luci; Richard Archdeacon of Poictou, Jocelin de Bailol, Alan de Nevilla, and many others. These, as that Historian tells us, Appealed from his Sentence; and were accordingly, by Order of the Pope's Legat, Absolved by Godfrey Bishop of St. Asaph. ^{1400. Rights, p. 299. Rad. de Diceto. col. 539.}*

Nor does it appear that these Barons joyned with the Bishops in this matter: No; the same ⁵ Historian tells us that the Bishops, and Abbots met together for this End. ⁶ Mat. Paris takes no Notice of the Abbots, but mentions only the Bishops as Meeting and Appearing; so does ⁷ John Sarisberiens: And their Letter runs only in their Own Name, and the Name of the Parsons of their Dioceses. ^{Gervase Do. rob. col. 1400. M. Paris. p. 105. Apud Labb. Concil. Tom. 10. col. 1444.}

As for what he adds, that "Gervase mentions only the Summoning of the Sub-Prior and Monks of Canterbury to this Meeting, because he himself was "one of their Number; intimating thereby that all the other Religious were, in like manner, called to this Assembly; it is not only altogether precarious, but is certainly false too. ⁸ For this Assembly was held by the King's Order; and his Direction was that the Monks of Canterbury (the Archbishops own Church) should joyn in the Appeal: But as Gervase observes, they managed their Business so as to Excuse themselves, till they had spoken with the King about it; and by that Artifice they escaped the Obligation of Appealing at all against their own Primate. ^{Gervase Do. rob. col. 1400.}

But ⁹ Dr. Atterbury goes on: "And to this, or some such other Meeting the following passage in his Chronicle refers; ¹⁰ Congregatio Episcoporum & Abbatum, & aliarum Personarum Ecclesiasticarum apud Lundonias facta est: Sed & Supprior, & Monachi Cant. Ecclesie imperio Regis jussi sunt adesse. That to this Meeting it referred not the Account which the same ¹¹ Historian gave of it two years before, plainly shews. That it did to such another, is certainly true, and the Occasion of it was this. The King being provoked to the uttermost by the Pope Alexander, entertained the thoughts of joyning with the Emperour for Pope Paschal against him. The better to accomplish this Design, he called the Bishops, and Abbots, and Clergy, together to London. With these he joyned the Convent of Canterbury. They met accordingly; but the Bishops Refused to Unite against Pope Alexander, and so the Business came to nothing. This was Dr. Atterbury's other Meeting: And in his Account of which all that I can commend is this, that he was abus'd to call it a Parliament, as plainly perceiving by his own Relation, that no Lay-men at all were Summon'd to it, nor was any Civil Business done in it. ^{1168. Sect. 35. Rights, p. 299. Gervase Do. rob. col. 1404. Col. 1400.}

The King continuing still abroad kept his Christmas the year following at ¹² Nantes, 1169, Præsentibus Episcopis, & Baronibus totius Britania: And then returning into England the 5th of the Nones of March, he Summoned the Archbishop of York, and Bishops, to London, to the Crowning of his Son. He held his Court at Windsor at Easter, with ¹³ his Bishops and Great-Men; and then at a Parliament in London agreed upon this matter; and Summoned them to come to this Solemnity upon the Feast of St. Barnabas. At this Coronation the Earls, Barons, and Nobles attended; and the day following they altogether, with the King's Free-Tenants, paid their Homage to the new King. ^{Sect. 36. 1170. Mat. Whether it was in the same Parliament that he appointed certain Persons to go through the Kingdom, and make such Enquiries as the State of the Realm seemed to require, I cannot tell. But this the ¹⁴ Historian informs us, that ^{1410.}

3e8. 37.

Hitherto, I may, I think, presume to affirm, that nothing has been offer'd to prove the Lower Clergy to have been Members of our State Councils, or to have ever been Call'd under any such Capacity to them. Would Dr. Atterbury be constant to his own Principles, we might here stop our farther Enquiries into this Matter. For from henceforth, by his own Confession, they came not to them, till the 23^d of Edward the First; from which time, I do agree with him, that they did become the Ordinary Members of our Parliaments. But he has taken a new-method, and I must follow his Motions. Instead of shewing us, (which was what he once promised) that about this time the Lower Clergy broke off from these Meetings, and took Advantage of the Troubles in which the King's Affairs had brought him, to come no more to his Councils, as they had done before; he proceeds to prove both against himself, and all others who are of the same Opinion, that they still continued to come to them: And I hope, he will the rather Excuse me, if I shew that they did not, seeing which-ever side be true, he is sure to be in the Right; this one thing excepted, that he pretends they now left off to Come to Parliament, whereas I conceive I have pretty clearly shewn that they were never yet wont to come at all to it.

Becket being dead, the King call'd a Council to London, according to Custom, to elect a Successor; and order'd the Prior and Convent of Canterbury to come to it. They met accordingly, and Chose Roger Abbot of Bec; the Bishops Consenting to, and the King Confirming their Choice. But the Good Abbot declined the Promotion, and so the Matter was forced to be brought to a New Election.

In June following, another Council was therefore Summon'd, for the same purpose, at London: They Chose Richard Prior of Dover: And then in the Hearing of all the Bishops, and Barons, the Pope's Letters were Read, for Celebrating the Feast of his St. Thomas of Canterbury.

At this Council only the Greater Prelates appeared: Nor do we meet with any others in the Provincial Synod held by this Archbishop May the 18th, 1175. ⁴ Gervase indeed, speaks at first of it in very General Terms; that Convocato Clero Anglia, he Celebrated his Council at Westminster, xv. Kal. Jun. But then he afterwards particularly recounts who were present at it, and so explains his own Meaning, viz. All the Suffragan Bishops of the Province of Canterbury; (except Worcester, who was infirm, and Norwich who was dead) and the Abbots: To these ⁵ Brompton adds, the Bishop of St. David's out of Wales. ⁶ Hoveden, who speaks very fully of this Synod, says that there came to it almost all the Bishops, and Abbots of the Province of Canterbury. ⁷ Sir H. Spelman's Ms. mentions no others: No more does Walter Coventre. Yet ⁸ Neubrigensis speaks in larger terms of it, "Provinciale Concilium Londoniis Celebratum est, a Ricardo Cant. Archiepiscopo, Considentibus Suffraganeis, & Aliarum Ecclesiasticarum Personarum Cœtu Capioso: And thereby shews us how we are to Understand the like Expressions, upon other Occasions, where the Matter is less clear; and such kind of Language may be offered (as accordingly it has been by Dr. Atterbury) to prove a Right in the Lower Clergy to sit in such Meetings, as they were not yet wont to be called to.

In the Octaves of Michaelmas another ¹³ Great Council met at Windsor. The Members of it, are reckoned up by ¹⁴ Hoveden in this manner; the Archbishop of Canterbury, Bishops, Earls, and Barons, of England: But of Dr. Atterbury's Lower Clergy, there is not any Intimation.

On St. Paul's day another Great Council met at Nottingham: A Solemn Division was there made of the Kingdom into Six parts; and three Justices Itinerant, were appointed for each of them. ² This was an Affair of Common Concern, and therefore was transacted in the Common-Council of the Realm. And the Members of that Council are still represented after the same manner; ³ "Do minus Rex— Celebravit Magnum Concilium de Statutis Regni sui, & Coram Rege filio suo; & Coram Archiepiscopis, Episcopis, Comitibus, & Baronibus Regni sui, Communi Omnium Consilio divit Regnum suum, &c.

Indeed for what concerns the Lay part of this Council, ⁴ Diceto seems to extend the Call to all the King's Tenants in Chief: But of the Clergy, he makes no other mention, than what Hoveden had done before.

About the End of the next year following, a Memorable Accident fell out, which will deserve to be taken Notice of. ⁵ The Kings of Castile and Arragon having some Disputes with one another, mutually agreed to make our Henry the Umpire between them. To hear this Cause, the King called his Parliament to London, upon the First Sunday in Lent. There were present at it, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishops of England and Wales; the Abbots, Priors, and Barons of England; says ⁶ Roger Hoveden. The Cause being Heard, Comites & Barones— adjudicaverunt: And in the Instrument of Award, the King says, that the Cause was heard in Presentia Nostra, & Episcoporum, & Comitum, & Baronum Nostrorum: ⁷ The Names of many of whom are set to it; with a general Clause of Aliis multis tam Clericis, quam Laicis. Who these Alii multi were, Sir William Dugdale's Copy informs us; and indeed the whole Relation speaks: They were the Abbots, Priors, and other Barons. * "Aderant namq; huic Concilio, say his Acts, Abbates, Priores, & Barones Angliæ, ut supradictum est; " licet horum pauci, illorum nulli, ad subscriptionem accederunt.

'Tis true ⁸ Walter Coventry does seem to enlarge the Members of this Assembly: Which he thus particularly declares; Archiepiscopus Cant. Episcopi, Abbates, Decani, Archidiaconi, Comites, Barones. Nor will I deny but that some of these might hold of the King by Barony, and so by their Tenures have been Summoned to it. But thus much both the publick Instrument of Award, and the Process of the Cause assures us, that no other Clergy-men were there but Bishops and Barons; under which last, as many Abbots certainly were comprised, so it is not improbable but that some Deans, and Archdeacons too, by this time, may have been.

But I must not omit another Cause for which another Parliament had been called before, this same year. ⁹ The King of Sicily had desired our King's Daughter in Marriage, and his Proposals were laid by the King before his Great Council. To this were called tam Pralati Ecclesiarum, quam Regni Proceres, says ¹⁰ Diceto: Archiepiscopi, Episcopi, Comites, & Sapientiores Regni; as ¹¹ Brompton expresses it: Episcopi, Comites & Barones Regni; says ¹² Hoveden: And in like manner our other Historians.

The year following the King kept his Easter at Reading: ¹³ And the Morrow after the Close of it, being come to Eli, he held a Council with many of his Bishops, Earls, and Barons there, concerning the Peace and Establishment of the Kingdom. From thence he went to Windsor: Thither almost all the Earls, Barons, and Knights of the Realm, came to him with their Horses and Arms; and by the Advice of his Bishops, Earls, and Barons, he Changed the Keepers of his Castles, and gave them to others to Keep. And proceeding on to Oxford, in a General Council, says ¹⁴ Hoveden, which he Celebrated there, he made his Son John King of Ireland. Of whom this General Council consisted, Hoveden tells us not; but ¹⁵ Brompton supplies the Defect: He expressly Notes that the King did this, Coram Episcopis, & Regni sui Principibus; Who therefore were the Members of that Parliament.

In 1179, ¹⁶ after Easter, the King, with his Son, met at a Great Council at Windsor. There, by the Common Advice of the Archbishops, Bishops, Earls, and Barons, he divided all England into Four Parts; and Appointed certain Persons to Administer Justice in each Division, after the manner which the Historian at large Recounts.

In 1181, ¹⁷ at the Feast of Epiphany, the King called together the Majores Regni, at Waltham. There in their presence, and by their Consent, he applied a great Summ of Money to the Succour of the Holy Land. These ¹⁸ Mat. Paris

King HENRY the III. Paris calls by another Name, but to the same effect, Proceres Regni: And both shew, only the Greater Clergy to have been concerned in it.

To say nothing of the ¹ Councils held (as was Usual) for Choosing of a New Archbishop in 1184; and the Quarrels between the Bishops, and the Monks of Canterbury, on that Occasion; at all which only the Bishops and Convent of Canterbury were present. The next great Occasion for a Parliament, which I shall take notice of, was the offer which was made to our King of the Holy Land by Heraclius the Patriarch, who came hither on purpose for that End. To Debate of this Affair the King held his Parliament at Clerkenwell, ² March the 18th, 1184, Convocato Clero Regni, cum Populo; says M. Paris. But whom of the Clergy and Laity did he call to this Council? Totius Anglia Primores, says ³ Gervase: Episcopos, Abbates, Comites, & Barones Terra, says ⁴ Hoveden. Cantuariensem Electum, & Cant. Ecclesia Suffraganeos, Dunelmensem Episcopum, Abbates, Conventualium Locorum Pralatos, Comites & Barones; says ⁵ Diceto: These then were our Members of Parliament, Episcopi, Comites, & Barones, as the ⁶ Archbishop in his Letter to his Suffragans, relating to this Meeting reckons them up; let Dr. Atterbury shew us any Others, if he can.

Why yes, he will prove his Lower Clergy to have been there, by a clear Instance, in the last year of this King, in the Parliament at Gaintington; where we are told by ⁷ Hoveden, that he did Magnum celebrare Concilium, Episcoporum, Abbatum, Comitum, & Baronum, & Aliorum multorum tam Clericorum quam Laicorum; hold a Great Council of Bishops, Abbots, Earls, and Barons, and many Others, as well of the Clergy, as Laity. And so ⁸ Walter Coventry says likewise.

I will not now insist upon this, that the Design of this Council being to get Succour for the Holy Land, many might, for that end, be Called to it, who were not yet the Constant and Customary Members of our other Parliaments. Let us suppose all here to have been done in the Ordinary Course: The only Question is, who these Other Clergy, and Laity were? Dr. A. says the Lower Clergy, and People. I Affirm, from all that has already been offer'd, and shall hereafter be produced; that they were such only of both as held in Capite of the King; and were therefore concerned in Consenting to the Tax that was here to be laid upon them, for the Expedition to the Holy Land. For tho' in Making of Laws, in Judging of Causes, and the like Affairs, only the Greater Barons, Ecclesiastical and Temporal, Assembled, and Acted; yet in agreeing to Taxes, All who Held under the King (his Free-Tenants) began now to Consent for themselves, and were not otherwise Concluded than by their own Allowance.

And accordingly we find, even in this Assembly (notwithstanding this General Expression) no Notice taken of any but the King, his Bishops, and his Barons, in the Prosecution of it. ⁹ Gervase mentions no others, as present at it. "Convenerunt una cum Rege, Præsules & Principes Regni. Baldwin Archbishop of Canterbury, and Gilbert Bishop of Rochester, exhorting the Council to take the Cross upon them, are, even by ¹⁰ Hoveden himself, said to have preached to Admiration that day the Word of the Lord, Coram Rege, & Principibus suis. ¹¹ Neubrigensis speaking of this very Assembly says, that "Præsulum, & Procerum Anglie favore, the King confirm'd what he had agreed upon beyond the Sea, as to that Matter. From all which it appears that by the Clerici, and Laici, these Historians understood only the Barons of each kind. If Dr. A. will have us believe him that they were any Others; let him produce his Authorities for it, and shew us upon what Ground he would have us do so; or else we must conclude that he has no Ground nor Authority, as indeed I am pretty sure he has neither, for his Assertion.

I am now come to the end of this Troublesome Reign; and have shewn not only that there is no manner of Proof yet made of any Right of the Lower Clergy to Come to our Parliaments in those days, but that the whole stream of our best, and most antient Writers, runs directly Counter to it. I must now observe, that neither is there any more appearance of Truth in what he before Asserted, but has not once attempted to Prove, that about the middle of this King's time, they broke off from the State Councils, and (in his new Phrase) Attended upon them not in One National Body, but in Two Provincial Synods. These are such Discoveries as none of our latter Writers before had made, nor do any of our antient Ones favour. If herein I speak too largely, he will have the fairer

Opportunity of Calling me to Account for it. But then he must first Endeavour to know his own Mind, and which of his Positions he will stick to; and having settled that, he should, in the next place, take Care to bring at least some few Proofs, that will bear an Examination, in Defence of his Position.

Concerning the State of the Clergy in the next Reign, that K. of Richard the First, Dr. A. has a great many Observations, which tho' they do not very well agree with one another, yet must they nevertheless, Inconsistent as they are, be taken Notice of by me. There was a time when he thought fit to Interrupt the National Attendance of the Clergy in Parliament, from the middle of King Henry the Second's Reign, to the middle of King Edward the First's. The Success they had in their Struggle with the former of these, about the Affair of Archbishop Becket, and the Articles of Clarendon, he says, Encouraged them in their Attempt, of breaking off from their Parliamentary Service; (tho' in the whole Series of that Affair there is not a Word, or so much as a Hint, that looks that way:) And now he finds out another Circumstance to Confirm, and Settle it. For "this Division of the Spiritualty from the Temporality, which began in K. Henry the Second's Time, took root under his Successors; and was settled more and more, by the Absence of K. Richard the First, in the Holy Land. Which therefore, in Dr. Atterbury's Account, gave the Clergy an Opportunity of Confirming their Practice of leaving off to come Nationally to Parliament, and instead thereof to "Attend upon it in Two Provincial Synods, held under their several Archbishops." K. RICHARD the 1st. Sect. 42. Rights, &c. P. 36. Rights, p. 74.

But from this Opinion he seems in the Prosecution of his Book to have departed: When coming to the Historical Deduction of this Matter, he tells us that "in K. Stephen's time the Lower Clergy's Interest in these (very) State Meetings is set in something a better a light than it had been in the times foregoing: And that "M. Paris's Expressions relating to the following Reign (that of Henry the Second) are yet clearer: And from thence goes on to shew the same in K. Richard the First, and K. John's too." Ibid. p. 298. Ibid. 299, 300.

These Assertions, and Conjectures of his, therefore, thus Opposite to One another, cannot be all true; but they may be all false, and I will venture to say that they all are so. For the Lower Clergy never yet came to Parliament in that Capacity; and therefore could not either break off from it in Henry the Second's, or Confirm their Recess, in Richard the First's Reign. This I have sufficiently Proved before. King Richard's Absence in the Holy Land gave no Opportunity to such a Confirmation; Nor did they come to Parliament in his time; as I shall now proceed to shew.

It has been observed by one of our Antient Historians, that the Absence of King Richard, and the Confusions in which the Kingdom lay during that time, gave Opportunity to the Pope to Enlarge his Power, and to Dispose of Preferments in our Church, beyond what he had ever done before. But that this same Absence gave any Opportunity to our Clergy to break off from their Parliamentary Attendance, and to meet in their own Provincial Synods under their respective Archbishops, is a perfect New Discovery, which the Circumstances of those times, I doubt will hardly admit of. Sect. 43.

The Archbishop of Canterbury went along with the King to the Holy Land; and died there. Into his place, Reginald Bishop of Bath and Wells, being Chosen, died in a few days, before his Translation could be made. To him Hubert Succeeded; and was in Inthroned at Canterbury in November 1193. In March following, King Richard returned into England; and the great Business of Hubert in the mean while, was not to Menage the Clergy's Recess from their Parliamentary Attendance, but to Transact the Deliverance of his Master out of Captivity. Here therefore was no Opportunity for the Clergy of the Province of Canterbury, to settle the Custom of Meeting together in Provincial Synods, under their Metropolitan, during King Richard's Absence. One Archbishop was gone with him: The next died, without ever being Translated: The third was settled but Four Months, in his New See, before the King's Return; and was too much in the King's Interest, as well as too much taken up with his Affairs, to joyn in any Innovation of this kind against his Master.

In the other Province, Geffry was Chosen Archbishop of York, the year that his Father King *Henry the II*d died. He returned into England in September 1191; and was Seized by Order of the Bishop of Ely, and kept for some time in Prison.

K. RICHARD by him. The remainder of that Year was taken up in the Quarrels between the 1st. Earl John, and that Bishop; in which the Archbishop of York, was Engaged with his Brother against him. After this, that Province fell into great Disorder, by the Differences which arose between the Archbishop, and Bishop of Durham: In which the latter was Excommunicated; the former was, by Appeal, Cited to Answer to the Pope, for what he had done: Commissioners were Assign'd to hear the Controversy; and that was not presently Ended by them neither. All which being put together it will follow, that such were the Circumstances of our Affairs at home, that had the Clergy aimed at any such thing (which yet it does not appear that they did) as breaking off from a National Attendance on the Parliament, and settling into Two Provincial Synods, under their several Metropolitans; yet they were not in any Condition of doing of it: And therefore that Dr. Atterbury must seek out some better Reason, and pitch upon some more happy time, than that of K. Richard's Absence in the Holy Land, to Corroborate such their pretended Recess by.

But indeed all this Story of the Clergy's withdrawing from Parliament, in the time of King Henry the Second, is meer Invention: And we must now proceed to Consider a quite contrary Allegation; and that as false as the other, of their Continuing still to Come to it.

1189. Upon Sunday September the 3d, 1189, King Richard was Crowned. I insist not Sect. 44. upon the Clergy who were called to that Solemnity; but shall only Observe that the day following he received the Homage of his Archbishops, Bishops, and Abbots; the only Ecclesiastical Persons mentioned by our Historians to have payed their Homage to him.

What to call the Convention which met the 15th of the same Month, at the Abbey of Pipewell, I cannot tell. M. Paris says that what the King did there was done Archiepiscoporum, Episcoporum, & aliorum Magnatum suorum fretus Consilio. Hoveden adds, that he there made the Bishop of Durham, and Earl of Albemarle, Justices of England. And this should seem to imply that it was a Parliamentary Assembly: But this is clear from all our Historians, that no Ecclesiasticks under the degree of Prelates were Called to it, or had any thing to do with it.

Hoveden fol. 375. a. Hoveden particularly reckons up most of them: So does W. Coventre in like manner. 7 Gervase, in general, says Convenerunt apud Pipewell Episcopi & Ab-bates Angliae. To these Brompton adds the Priors too: But of any others, we find no mention. 'Tis true, upon their next Meeting, Brompton says, that the King, Archbishops, and Bishops, came to the Abbey "cum copiosa Clericorum & Lai-corum multitudine. But that All this Multitude were Members of the Conven-tion, and not Attendants at the Solemnity; or if they were Members, that they were the Inferiour Clergy, and not the Regular Abbots, and Priors, mentioned the day before, does not appear: Nor can any thing therefore be concluded from that general Expression, either way, as to this Matter.

The next Month following a Parliament was certainly held at Westminster, to settle his Expedition with the French King's Ambassador, to the Holy Land. The Persons called to it were Episcopi & Proceres, says one: Comites & Barones, says another. Episcopi, Comites & Barones, says a third: All agreeing in the same Members.

Who were Summoned to the Provincial Council, as M. Paris; the Regional Council, as an Elder Author styles it; the General Council, as Brompton calls it, of the Bishop of Ely Chancellor of England, and Legate of the Aposto-lick See; none of our Authors expressly tell us. But at the Parliament which met at Reading, after Michaelmas, the year following, they all again reckon them up to us. M. Paris speaks in the form of a Parliament Writ; and very probably from it; "Convenerunt apud pontem de Locdone inter Radingum, & Windleshores, die Sabbati proxime post festum St. Michael. ad Colloquium, MAGNATES Angliae, de magnis & arduis Regis & Regni Negotiis, tractaturi. Brompton mentions only the Episcopi, as present there. Hoveden, Episcopi, Co-mites, & Barones Regni. Ralf de Diceto has the very Writ of Summons to the Bishop of London, which Confirms the same thing: It requires only his own Per-sonal Attendance, and thereby shews that none of his Clergy were to be brought thither by his Order.

R. de Diceto col. 663.

Having

Having met there, they removed from thence to London : And there again ^{K. RICHARD} we have an Account of ^{the 1st.} Archbishops, Bishops, Lords, and Great Men, but no mention of any besides.

And now we are come to the only Proof of the Inferiour Clergy's Parliamentary Rights, which Dr. Atterbury has been pleased to offer us within the Compass of this whole Reign ; and we will take it in his own Words. " ^{1 Hoveden fol. 399. b. Brompt. col. 1226.} In the 6th of ² Richard the First, (he should have said the 5th) the same Writer (Hoveden) ^{Diceto col. 664. M. Par. p. 166. 1193. Sect. 46.} informs us, that the Bishops, Earls, and Barons, were called to the Commune Concilium Regni ; and the first day that they met, the Archbishops, the Bishops, Abbots, ³ & Clerici multi Cant. Dioces. went aside into the Chappel of the Infirmiry at ⁴ Westminster, and Excommunicated Earl John, and his Adherents. ^{5 Rights, p. 300.}

Will Dr. A. give me leave to say that he here Confounds Two distinct Assemblies, as well as Actions, together ; and, by so doing, imposes upon his Reader in this Case. The Story, as ¹ Hoveden relates it, is this : King Richard being delivered from his Confinement, and daily expected to return into his Kingdom ; ² his Bishops and Nobles were come together to London to attend upon him as soon as he should Arrive there. A little before the King's Landing, one of Earl John's Clerks coming into England, upon his Master's Designs, and Dining with the Archbishop of Canterbury, made great Boasts of his Master's Honour, and Power ; and being thereupon Suspected, was Seized by the Lord Mayor of London, and all his Papers, and Orders were taken about him. ^{3 Hoved. fol. 418. b.}

These being carried to the Archbishop, he, the next day, Called before him the Bishops, Earls, and Barons, of the Realm, says Hoveden, that is, as many of them as could on the suddain be got together, and shew'd them the Letters of Earl John : Whereupon, It was Resolved, Per Commune Concilium Regni, that Earl John should be Disseized of all his Lands in England ; and that his Castles should be Besieged ; and so it was done accordingly.

The same day, the Archbishop with the Bishops of Lincoln, London, Rochester, Winchester, Worcester, and Hereford, and the Elect of Exeter, and the Abbots, and many others of the Clergy, of the Province of Canterbury, Assembled in the Chappel of the Infirmiry at Westminster, and pronounced a Sentence of Excommunication against Earl John, and All his Adherents, and Counsellors, who had, or should disturb the Peace, and Realm of the King of England ; unless they should Cease from their Hostilities, and make Satisfaction for what they had done.

This is the whole of that Affair : Now to suppose that the former of these Assemblies, tho' without any Previous Warning, or Regular Summons, was not an Extraordinary Great Council, of the Nobles, then at hand ; but a proper Parliament, (which yet 'tis plain it was not :) How comes a Meeting of some few of the Bishops, Abbots, and Clergy of the Province of Canterbury only, to be so too ? Here were no Lay-men at all Assembled ; nor any Clergy but of One Province only. Yet this must pass for a Parliament, with this Author ; or he will lose his only Authority of this Reign, for bringing his Lower Clergy to these State-Councils.

No sooner was King Richard returned, but he held a Great Council at Nottingham. ⁴ Hoveden gives us the Names of many of the Persons who were present at it : And they are all of the Great Men of either Order. ⁵ There by the Judgment of his Peers, Earl John, the King's Brother, was Condemned ; or as the Annales of Margan more fully relate it, by the " Judgment of the Archbishops, ⁶ Bishops, Earls, Barons, and all the other Great Men of England. In this Parliament, a Subsidy was also granted to the King ; so that it cannot be doubted but that this was truly such a State Assembly as we are now particularly considering of. ⁷ Hoveden fol. 419. a. Brompt. col. 1250. Hemingsford. p. 540. Annal. Margan. ad Ann. 1199. p. 124.

Not long after this the King coming to ⁸ Northampton, by the advice of his Bishops, Earls, and Barons, gave answer to the King of Scotland, concerning his Demand of the County of Northumberland ; and made his Charter of Concession and Confirmation to him. ⁹ Hoveden fol. 419. b.

Such were the Members of our Parliaments under King Richard the First : If from thence we proceed to the Reign of his Brother King John, we shall find Dr. A. still going on in his own Method ; asserting, and offering Conjectures for that in one part of his Book, which himself Contradicts in another. The Absence of King Richard in the Holy Land gave Opportunity to the Clergy to Con-

King JOHN firm their Recess from the Parliaments of those Times, and to Attend upon them in two Provincial Councils, so he told us before : And now King John's weak Reign does the same thing, ¹ p. 36. But p. 300. They Continued still to Come on to the Parliaments of that Prince, and tho' some " of his Great Councils (says he) " seem as to the Spiritual part of them, to have been Composed only of Bishops, " Abbots, and Priors, yet in others of them more of the Clergy were plainly " present, and particularly in one of his 15th Year : Which shall in its proper place therefore not fail to be Considered.

It would be foreign to my present Subject, to say any thing of the ² Ecclesiastical Synod held by Hubert Archbishop of Canterbury, xiii. Kal. Oct. It shall suffice briefly to observe from One who was then Living, and in great Dignity in the Church, that to it only the Bishops, Abbots, and Priors were called. But in October the year following, there was a State-Meeting at Westminster, Archiepiscopo & Magnatibus Regni præsentibus, says ³ M. Paris. At that Council it was resolved to Summon the King of Scotland, to attend the ⁴ King's Parliament at Lincoln the morrow after St. Edmunds, November the 21st, which accordingly he did : And the two Kings came thither, ⁵ " Cum Universa Nobilitate tam " Cleri quam Populi Utriusquem Regni, with the Nobles of both Orders, of the Clergy and of the Laity.

Thus began the Great Councils of this Reign, and thus they continued to be held in the following Years ; as is evident from the Constitution of the Parliament of Winchester concerning the Assize Bread ; which the ⁶ Kings Writ tells us was made Communi Consilio Baronum nostrorum ; By the Common Council of his Barons, and no others.

This Parliament was held at Easter : It was the Christmas following, as I take it, that the King held the Colloquium at Oxford, of which * Dr. A. takes notice, as if it favoured his Opinion. The account which two of our ⁷ Historians give of it, is this : That the morrow after the Circumcision, the King with the Great Men of England Assembled ad Colloquium apud Oxoniam. There was Granted to the King a Military Aid, viz. Two Marks and a half of every Knights Fee : Nor did the Bishops, and Abbots, or the Ecclesiastical Persons go away without a promise. These Ecclesiastica Persona, Dr. A. will have to be the Lower Clergy ; and we must, against all the Evidence of these times, without any manner of Proof, take his bare Word for it, that they were so.

But what then shall we say to the Parliament of the next Year ? An Instance so express against this Pretence, that I cannot imagine what can be excepted against it : ⁸ The Writ upon Record, is directed to the Bishop of Sarum ; it Summons him to a Parliament at London, the Sunday next after Ascension-day ; and Requires him to Cite the Abbots, and Conventual Priors of his Diocese, to come to the same Council. These therefore were then the only Members on the part of the Clergy ; it being Absurd to suppose that the Lower Clergy should be called by Special Writs, when the Abbots and Priors were not ; but were included in that of the Bishop.

The same was the Case the year after : The King called his Parliament upon the Occasion of the Archbishop of Canterbury's Death, to Meet on the Feast of St. Peter ad Vincula, August the 1st ; and the Members which he Summon'd to it ; were the ⁹ Episcopi & Barones, as one of his own Writs Recites them to us.

The Case was so evidently the same again the next Parliament, that Dr. A. himself could not dissemble it. " Indeed some of this Prince's Great Councils (says he) seem, as to the Spiritual part of them, to have been Composed only of " Bishops, Abbots, and Priors, as may probably be Collected from a Writ in his " 8th year, Reciting that these Great Clergy-men had granted him an Aid in " Parliament, and Demanding the like Aid of the Secular Clergy of the Province " of Canterbury, below Bishops, then Assembled in Convocation. It is certain that Writ recites only Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, and Priors ; and probably refers to the Parliament held at ¹⁰ Oxford the Candlemas before. It is also certain from another Writ, Teste'd the same day, that the Clergy were called to a Synod at St. Albans, about that time. But yet I cannot agree with this Author that this Writ was directed to them as at that time in Convocation Assembled. There is no mention of any such thing in the Writ ; nor does the form of it seem at all adapted to such an Assembly.

This Parliament ¹ Dr. A. I know not why places in the year 1207 ; the Writ ^{King JOHN.} which Refers to it is Dated, at York, May 26th Reg. viii. i. e. Anno 1206. The ¹ Rights, pag. 221. Marg. Parliament to which it Refers seems to have met at Oxford the Candlemas before. The true Date of it therefore must be 1205, or at the latest 1206, Supposing it to have sate but a Month before the Date of the Writ which Relates to it. But Dr. A. has a particular Chronology to himself, which he follows in other places as well as in this ; and for which he has been justly Corrected by ² another Pen. ² Dr. Kennet Eccles. Syn. &c. p. 161. In the mean time, this is plain, and agreed on upon all Hands, that to the Parli- ment here mentioned the Inferiour Clergy were not Called ; but on the contrary, they are evidently implied not to have been present at it.

Nor is it any less clear the next year following : When the King having kept his ³ Christmas at Winchester, Præsentibus Magnatibus Regni, removed from thence to London, “et Convocatis Episcopis, Abbatibus, & Prioribus, Comitibus, & Baronibus, & Magnatibus Regni, held his Parliament there on the Octaves of Circumcision. There he Treated with the Bishops and Prelates to consent that their Beneficed Clergy might grant him a certain Part of their Revenues. The Prelates not agreeing to this, the Matter was Referred to another ⁵ Council to be held at Oxford, on the Octaves of the Purification : Where an infinite multitude of Prelates, and Great Men of the Realm being Assembled, the King again Ex- acted what he had before Required of them : The Archbishops on behalf of their Clergy, utterly refused to comply with his Desire ; and the King departed from his Demand. ⁶ But afterwards made a general Order throughout England, for a Thirtieth to be Paid by all sorts of Persons, as well of the Clergy as of the Laity ; to which they were forced to submit.

And now the Troubles of this King began ; which proceeded to the Interdiction of the whole Realm, and ended not but in the Subjection of the Crown it self to the Popes Authority. During this time, the Greater Clergy generally forsook the Kingdom. ⁷ Walter Coventre says that only one Bishop, the Bishop of Winchester, remained. ⁸ M. Paris speaks of three, Durham, Winchester, and Norwich : So that it would be in vain to Enquire after the Ecclesiastical Members of our Parliament during this time of Confusion and Disorder. In 1213, the Peace between the Pope and King was made. Upon this Occasion many Councils were held ; and it may be of some Use to Enquire who were called to them.

At that of Dover, ⁹ May the 13th, the King, and the Legat, met with the Earls, Barons, and Turba multa nimis. Two days after, they met a ¹⁰ second time, and then there were Assembled the King, and the Legat, cum Proceribus Regni. And who these Proceres were, the Historian thus subjoins, Bishops, Earls, and Great Men.

The Peace being thus made, a Great Council was agreed to be held at St. Albans, August the 4th, to which All the Sheriffs of England should come, with a certain number of Persons, to Enquire into the Damages which the Bishops had sustained, in order to a Satisfaction to be made for them. At this Council there were Assembled ¹¹ Jeffrey Fitz-Peter, and the Bishop of Winchester, with the Archbishops, Bishops, and Great Men of the Kingdom.

The ¹² 25th of the same Month the Archbishop called an Ecclesiastical Council at Westminster : This he opened with a Sermon of his own at St. Pauls ; where the ¹³ Barons being present, according to the Design before laid, the Archbishop privately shewed them a Copy of King Edward's Laws, Confirmed by the Charter of King Henry the First : And there Entred into a Combination with them, to force the King to a Concession of them.

This Meeting Dr. A. puts upon us for a State-Parliament, and urges it as a clear Proof of the Right of the Lower Clergy to come to those Councils. In some of this Princes Great Councils, he is willing to allow that only the Bishops, Abbots, and Priors, were Assembled. ¹⁴ “But in Others of Them (says he) more of the Clergy were plainly present : Particularly in one xv^o Jo. at London, to which “Stephanus Archiepiscopus, cum Episcopis, Abbatibus, Prioribus, Decanis, & Baronibus Regni, is said to have come. Here he thinks he has the Deans secure. Let us see how he hooks in the Archdeacons too ; which, tho’ not specified, yet were probably there : “For the Clergy, we find, went Synodically apart, and made Canonons : Which implies the Presence, and Concurrence of the Archdeacons, who “were a necessary part of every Synod ; and therefore almost an Hundred years “before King JOHN. "before this, Summon'd particularly by the Archbishop to the Council of London,

"Anno 1125.

That this Meeting, whatever it were, was no Parliament, but an Assembly of the Archbishops own Calling, and that for those secret Designs which accordingly he transacted in it; the Annals of Waverly, Compared with M. Paris's Account of it, plainly shew us. The whole History of it is this. Not long after the Archbishop was come into England, (viii. Kal. Septembr. says Paris, Crastino Bartholomaei, say the Annals, August 25;) he called together his First Council, ex viris Ecclesiasticis apud Westmonast. Of Ecclesiastical Persons to meet at Westminster. But first, he appointed a Sermon at St. Paul's, from whence they were afterwards to proceed to Westminster. Hither, by M. Paris's Account, the Barons came to hear the Sermon, and Wait upon the Archbishop. This was the Pretence, but the real Design was to Agree on their Conspiracy against the King. The Archbishop and Barons having thus settled their Business, he called his Clergy to Westminster; but first (as I conceive) gave leave to the Conventual, and Secular Priests, to Chant their Hours in their Churches, in the hearing of their Parishioners, with a low Voice, notwithstanding the Interdict was not yet taken off.

Being come to Westminster, the great Business there was to Charge the Clergy to Compute the Sum of what had been taken from them, or otherwise unreasonably granted by them to the King, that so he might know what to demand of him.

This is the plain History of this Assembly; which Dr. A. is pleased to Call a Parliament. And now I should be glad to know first upon what Authority he says that the Clergy at this Meeting went Synodically a-part, and made Canons? Next, how it does appear that the Presence, and Concurrence of the Archdeacons would thereby have been implied? Or to suppose that too; how it follows that because in this Case, they ought to have been present with the Bishops at their Synodical Action; therefore they must have been present at their Parliamentary Assembly also? And lastly, by what Rules of Reason he inferrs, that because the Archdeacons were once upon a time called to a Legantine Synod by the Archbishop; and being so Called, were Obligated to Obey, and Come to it; therefore the Archbishop was bound Always to Summon them, as a Necessary part of every kind of Synod; which I have before shewn, and shall again particularly prove, that a Hundred years after this they were not accounted to be?

p. 161.

In his Marginal Note upon the Summons to that Council, Anno 1125, he tells us, that it is the most antient Summons, of any kind, that he has ever Observed: He will hereafter find it needful to correct this too. ¹ I have before shewn him a Summons above Fifty years Older, of the same kind; in which the Regular Prelates alone, are inserted, and the Archdeacons not taken any notice of.

² M. Par. p. 249.
p. 178.

But I insist too long upon an Instance so little to the purpose, how Specious soever it may appear in Dr. A's imperfect Representation of it. ² At Michaelmas following, upon the coming of the Bishop of Tusculum from the Pope, there was another Meeting at St. Paul's London, October the 3d; the Archbishop of Canterbury, with the Bishops, and Lords, being present. There it was agreed to Assemble at Reading, November the 3d: and to settle the Damages of the Bishops.

³ M. Par. p. 247.
p. 178.

³ The King not coming, a new Assembly was fixed at the same Place, December the 6th, and there appeared there the Bishops, Lords, and Religious, say M. Paris; Omnes Ecclesiastici Prælati, as the Annales of Waverly relate it.

There is yet one Meeting more which may deserve to be taken Notice of, tho' not a State-Assembly; that of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and his Suffragans, at Dunstable, after the Octaves of the Epiphany. They Assembled ut de Negotiis Ecclesie Anglicanae tractarent ibidem; says the Historian: And the Persons Assembled, were the Archbishop and Bishops, the proper Provincial Council of Canterbury, under its Metropolitan. In all these State, and Church Assemblies, we find not the least mention of the Lower Clergy being at all concerned; or that they were either Called to, or did otherwise Appear, at them.

The next year, the King having before he went over the Sea, Committed his Authority to the Legate, and the Lord Marechal, for that Purpose, a new Council was Called to Conclude this Troublesome Affair, which had been so long depending. This was held at St. Paul's, London, ⁴ July the 2d: The Persons who were Called to it, are thus Reckoned up by ⁵ M. Paris, Archbishops, Bishops,

Abbots,

Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons, and Others, who having settled what they met about, the Legate on the day of St. Peter and Paul, says Mat. Paris,¹ but others more Rightly of, Processus & Martinianus, solemnly Released the Sentence of the Interdict.

This is that Assembly to which the Author of the Eulogium Refers: And accordingly² Mr. Selden places it rightly in this year; xvi Jo.³ Dr. A. Constant to his false Computation; refers it to the xviiith of that King. And this clearly enough Interprets who the Clerus were, of whom that Author spake: And withal confutes the Intimation which has been given, as if there were somewhat of force in it, on behalf of the Lower Clergy; whereas 'tis plain, that the One consisted only of the Bishops, Abbots, Priors, as the Secla Laicalis, in like manner, did, of the Earls, Barons, and Other Members, usually Called to these Councils.

Rights, p. 300.

But the Truth is whatever the Eulogium says, yet 'tis plain this Meeting was no proper Parliament at all. M. Paris calls it Grande Concilium; Walter Coventre and Others, Concilium, only. The Persons mentioned are not said to have been the Bishops and Lords of the Realm; as on other Occasions is wont to be done by M. Paris; and M. Westminster expressly limits them to those Earls, and Barons only, who had been Sworn on the King's side, that he should perform what was agreed to. It is therefore of no great Importance to our present Subject, to dispute who were the Members of this Assembly; tho' at the same time it is plain that they were only the Prelates and Lords, as both M. Paris, and M. Westminster expressly inform us.

By a⁴ Clause Writ of King John not yet taken Notice of by any of our Historians, it appears, that a Parliament was held at Reading Fifteen days after Christmas, this same year. The Persons Summoned to it are thus recited in that Writ; "Ds. Legatus, & Nos, & Dominus Cant. & Suffraganei sui, & Alii Mag"nates nostri apud Radyng, pro Arduis negotiis nostris. It is probable, by the Account which⁵ M. Paris gives of the Designs and Actions of the Barons about this time, that this Meeting was put off till after Easter:⁶ Or rather that the Bishops only met, and settled with the Legate what was to be done, on their account there. But however the Writ shews who should have been at it, and therein who the Ecclesiastical Members of our Parliaments, as yet, were.

We are now come to the last year of this King; and in that to a clearer Settlement of these Great Councils, than what we have hitherto met with, in Relation to those who were from henceforth to be Called to them. It was the Business of one part of that Charter, which he then Granted to his Barons, to Regulate the Method of Holding of these Assemblies; and to determine, in part, what should be done in them. I shall therefore set down, at large, the Clause which concerns this Matter, for the full Decision of the Point before us. "Ad habendum Commune Concilium Regni, de auxiliis assidendis, aliter quam
"in tribus Casibus prædictis (Scil. ad Corpus nostrum Redimendum; ad Primogenitum Filium nostrum militem faciendum, & ad Primagenitam Filiam nostram semel maritandam) Et de Scutagiis assidendis, submoneri faciemus Archiepiscopos, Episcopos, Abbates, Comites, & Majores Barones Regni, Singillatim, "per Literas nostras: Et præterea faciemus Submoneri, in Generali, per Vice Comites & Ballivos nostros, Omnes Alios qui in Capite tenent de Nobis, ad certum diem, scilicet ad terminum xl dierum ad minus, & ad certum Locum. In
"omnibus Literis Causam Submonitionis illius Exponemus, & sic facta Submonitione, Negotium procedat ad diem assignatum, secundum Consilium
"Eorum qui præsentés fuerint, quamvis non omnes Submoniti venerint. These are the Words of that Charter; the Substance of which is this; That two sorts of Persons should from thenceforth be Summoned to Parliament; and after two different manners, Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Earls, and the Greater Barons of the Realm, by Special Writs: And all Others who held in Capite of the King, in general, by the King's Sheriffs and Bayliffs, Forty days before the Parliament should meet. These were now agreed to be the Members of our Parliament in all such Cases where Taxes were to be Granted; in the last year of King John, and Settled and Ratified by his Great Charter. Let Dr. A. either shew us under which of the several kinds of Members here specified, his Lower Clergy are comprehended; or let him Confess, as the Truth is, that they were no part of the Parliament at that time, at all.

We now proceed to the Troubled Reign of King Henry the Third: In which we are told the Clergy's Recess from their National Attendance in Parliament, which began under King Henry the Second, was by the Disorders of this Reign more Confirmed, as it had been by the Weakness of the foregoing. This, I say, we are told, ¹ p. 36. but p. 301. we meet with another Account: For there it is said, that in this "Reign the Archdeacons presence in Parliament is frequently taken Notice of by our Historians; as may appear by the following passages in M. Paris, and the Annals of Burton. These passages shall be Considered in their proper places: In the mean time, that we may the better know what Dr. A. asserts, let us take it, once more, in his Own Words. p. 314. "I was proving (says he) that there was frequent mention of (the Archdeacons) as "Called to Parliament in Henry the Third's Reign; and of this I gave several "Instances. There are others which prove the yet Lower Ranks of the Clergy "to have been present there, for Example, &c. Now if the Archdeacons were still Call'd to Parliament; and if the Lower Ranks of the Clergy were also present there; then I humbly conceive it will follow that, as yet, they had not "divided "themselves from the Temporality, and left off to Come to Parliament, as he before asserted; and will (for all this) tell us again hereafter.

But we will hear Dr. A. delivering his own Sense yet once more: p. 316. "These Testimonies are, I think, sufficient to shew that from the Conquest down "to Edward the First, the Inferior Clergy had PLACE and Interest in Parliament: "Being there, sometimes in BODY, and as Representing the whole; sometimes in "Part only, and as Intituled by their Tenures. The Lower Regulars and Seculars "appearing now and then by distinct Proctors of their Own; but more frequently by their Proctors and Archdeacons, particularly Impowered to that purpose. Now to have PLACE in PARLIAMENT; to be there in BODY, and as REPRESENTING the ABSENT CLERGY; to be intituled to Come thither by their Tenures; all this shews that he must mean their coming to a National Parliament; and imply that they continued so to do to King Edward the First's Time. How this agrees with what he had before Asserted to the contrary, or will hereafter tell us in contradiction to what he is here affirming, and proving, is a mystery that I must not adventure to search into; it shall suffice to Represent it, in the close of this Chapter, in his own Words, and so leave it to the Reader, to make what he can of it.

King John being Dead, October the 19th, the Lords who held to his Interest Crowned his Son, being then but Nine years Old, at Gloucester, upon Simon and Jude's day, October the 28th. Lewis, the French King's Son, who at the Instigation of the Factious Barons had Invaded England, the May before, was then in Possession of the Eastern Parts of the Kingdom, so that this Solemnity could not be performed at Westminster, as otherwise it would have been. At this Coronation the ² Bishops and Regular Prelates are taken notice of, as the Persons who, on the Church side, were concerned in it: And that not only by our Historians, but, which is more remarkable, in the Publick ³ Instruments of State too. "Convenerunt apud Gloucestr. plures Regni nostri Magnates; Episcopi, Abbates, "Comites, & Barones, says the King, in his Letter to G. de Mar, Justiciary of Ireland. This being done Gualo the Legat, held a Council at Bristol, November the 11th; So the ⁴ Waverly Annals speak: But I rather take it to have been a State Parliament, at which the Legat was present; where having seen all the Barons which came to it, do Homage, and Swear Fealty to the King, he Excommunicated Lewis, and all the other Barons, who held with him against their own Prince.

Of this Parliament we have an Account in the Clause Letter, I before mentioned; and it not only Confirms the Relation of our Annals, but Explains them too, with Regard to the Persons who were Called to this Council, and were therefore the proper Members of these Assemblies at that time: "Episcopi, & alii Prælati inferioris Ordinis; & Comites, & Barones, ac Milites, say our Histories. And who the Alii Prælati Inferioris Ordinis were, which Dr. A. could Conjecture down (if need were) even into Parish Priests; the King's Letter tells us: "Celebrato nuper Concilio apud Bristol; ubi Convenerunt Universi Angliæ Prælati, "tam EPISCOPI, ABBATES, quam PRIORES. These Conventual Priors therefore, and Abbats, were the Prælati inferioris Ordinis; in respect of the Superior Prælati, or Bishops, before mentioned: And these only, of the Church side, were called to this first Parliament of this Reign.

Who

Who were called to that ¹ Council, which met three Weeks after Easter, Anno K. HENRY 1218, to settle the Nation after the Civil Wars, I cannot expressly say. But at Michaelmas, following, Convenerunt apud London Sapientes Angliæ, say the ² Waverly Annals; and there renewed the Laws and Liberties of the Realm, according to the Charter of King John. These were certainly mentioned with Allusion to the Saxon Witen. The ³ King in his Writ to the Sheriff of York, where he Com-manded the Charter here Established to be published, calls them his Fideles: That Word also is commonly used in the same Sense, and both together may warrant us to conclude the same Persons to have been at this, that we before shewed, were Summoned to his first Parliament.

In the 4th of this King; Anno 1220; at a Parliament where a Tax was laid upon the Kingdom; the Persons who imposed it are Called in the King's * Writ, * Magnates & Fideles. Who the latter of these were, is plain from King John's Charter: They were such as held of the King in Capite; without whose Consent no Levy of Money could be made. But neither here do we find the Lower Clergy to have been at all concerned. ⁴ Walter Coventre thus reckons up the Members of this Assembly; Archiepiscopi, Episcopi, Abbates, & Proceres Angliæ.

In the xv. of Easter, Anno 1222, the Archbishop of Canterbury held his ⁵ Provincial Synod at Oxford, April 17; and he held it with the Prelates of his Province, says Wikes; "Pralatis omnibus Angliæ, suæ Diocessis Subjectis, Congregatis:" Which to præclude any forced Interpretation of Dr. A. ⁶ Walter Coventre (a Contemporary Writer) thus Explains; "Cum Episcopis Suffraganeis, & Abbatibus. So far were the Lower Clergy from being yet, as some pretend, Members of Parliament, that they were not yet admitted to be Members of our Provincial Synods; unless by special Favour, or upon some extraordinary Occasion, they were called to it.

But there was a Parliament this year as well as a Synod; and in it a Subsidy was Granted for the Relief of the Holy Land. This was done, say the ⁷ Waverly Annals by the Advice of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the other Lords of the Land. But the King's own ⁸ Writ to the Sheriff of Essex for Collecting of it is more full: "Scias quod Exigente Necessitate Terræ Sanctæ, Provisum est & Concessum coram Nobis & Concilio nostro, Præsentibus Archiepiscopo Cantuar. Episcopis, Comitibus, Baronibus, & Magnatibus nostris, de Communi Omnium Voluntate— That such a gathering should be made.

By a ⁹ Writ to the Sheriff of Kent. Test, xxiv. Novemb. the same year, there seems to have been a Second Parliament held this year about Michaelmas; and a New Grant made to the same purpose; Præsentibus (again) Archiepiscopo Cantuar. Episcopis, &c. As before.

The same was the Case of his next Parliament at Oxford, in the Octaves of Epiphany. He held it with his Barons, say the ¹⁰ Historians, and was there Required by the Archbishop, & Magnatibus aliis, to Confirm the Liberties and Free Customs of the Realm; and with them he Advised about the doing of it.

In the 8th of this King, a great Parliament was called to Northampton in the Octaves of Trinity. There Assembled, says ¹¹ M. Paris, "Rex, cum Archiepiscopis, Episcopis, Comitibus, Baronibus, & Aliis Multis, de Regni Negotiis tractaturi. Here now is a general term that might have offered a Colour to bring any others to Parliament, that either a weak Cause needed; or a Teeming Fancy should suggest. But the Historian spoils all in what immediately follows; "Voluit enim Rex uti Consilio Magnatum suorum. So that all the rest before spoken of, were still but Magnates; of which it will be hard to prove the Lower Clergy to have been a part.

Whilst this Parliament was sitting, a suddain Accident obliged the King immediately to remove to Bedford, to Besiege the Castle there. The whole Parliament removed with him; and Granted to him a Subsidy for that Expedition. This ¹³ M. Paris says, was Granted, "tam a Pralates quam a Laicis. But ¹⁴ Walter Coventre is more full: He gives us the King's Writ of Caution to the Clergy, that this Grant might not be drawn into a precedent for the future; and both the Historian, and King, expressly tell us that this Grant was made by the Bishops and Regular Prelates, without mention of any others to have been concerned in it.

But more Solemn was the Parliament which the King held towards the latter end of this same year, upon February the 2^d. And the terms wherein our King HENRY the III. Historians speak of it will deserve to be taken notice of. The King kept his Christmas at Westminster, says ¹ M. Paris, "Præsentibus Clero & Populo, cum Magnatibus Regionis." This being over, he proposed to the Archbishops, Bishops, Earls, and Barons, & Aliis Universis, the Damages and Injuries which were done him abroad. It was agreed that a xvth would supply the King's Wants; and thereupon the Archbishops and the whole Assembly of the Bishops, Earls, Barons, Abbots, and Priors, offer'd him a xvth, on Condition that he would Confirm their Two Charters to them. The King agreed to what his Magnates Required, and accordingly the Charters were Confirmed.

² So Mat. Westminster p. 284.

Here now we see a great variety of Expressions, first there is Clerus & Populus, cum Magnatibus; As if the one were distinct from the other. Then here are Archbishops, Bishops, Earls, and Barons, & Alii Universi; words of a large Extent. Yet all these, at last, amount only to Regular Prelates, on the Church side; and to the Tenants in Capite, as we shall presently see, on the the other.

² Chron. Tho. Wikes. p. 40.
⁴ Walt. Coventr. ad Ann.

The ⁵ Charters themselves speak thus: That the King Granted them, with the Advice of his Archbishops, and Bishops, of his Governour the E. of Pembroke; and his other Fideles, the Earls, and Barons of England. These were the Members with whose Advice the King Granted his Charters: And for this, the Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons, Knights, and Free-Tenants, & Omnes de Regno Nostro, Granted to the King a xvth.

From all which, the Conclusion, I think, is this; That the King's Parliament, for Advice, and Authority, in Matters of Government, Consisted of his Barons Spiritual, and Temporal; and therefore these only were mentioned in the beginning of these Charters. But for Aid, and Assessments, all the Free-Tenants, who held immediately of the King, were to give their own Consent: And therefore in the latter part of the Charters which relate to the Grant made by the Parliament to the King, these were added to the others, to shew, that they also were, as of Right they ought to be, Consenting to it. But for the Lower Clergy, we meet with them neither in the One, nor in the Other; and may therefore safely conclude that they were not at all there.

To clear this Matter yet more; let it be observed, that the ⁶ Pope, to Gratify the King, had at the same time sent a Letter to the Clergy of England, to cause a Collection to be made for him in their several Dioceses. This Letter the Archbishop sent to his Suffragan Bishops; requiring them to call together all the ⁷ Religious of their Dioceses, of whatsoever Order they were, together with their Clergy: And to admonish them to make a suitable Grant to the King, of all such their Revenues as were not taxed to the xvth before Granted in Parliament. Thus were the Lower Clergy brought into this Grant: They were Called together, not by the King to Parliament, but by their Bishops in their Respective Dioceses; and there they gave their Subsidy to the King.

I shall add only this one thing more, that in two of the King's ⁸ Writs, relating to this Grant, where he speaks of the Persons by whom it was made, he, in the One, calls them by the general Name of Fideles; in the Other, more particularly, recounts the several Orders of them; Archbishops, Bishops, Earls, and Barons, but no where speaks of any Ecclesiasticks under the degree of Barons; which the Regulars, who held Lands of the King by Knights Service, were looked upon to come under the Character of.

⁹ Mat. Paris p. 324, 325.

The year following the Archbishop of Canterbury seems to have held another ⁹ Synod with his Bishops only: And therein to have made those Constitutions of which our Historians speak, with Relation to the Concubinage of the Clergy.

¹⁰ Ib. p. 325.

Not long after this ¹⁰ Cardinal Otho, the Pope's Legate, came into England: He proposed his Business to the King; but it being a Matter of Publick Concern, the King refused to do any thing alone in it. By the Advice therefore of the Arch- bishop

bishop of Canterbury a day was fixed, on the Octaves of Epiphany; on which the Clergy and Laity being assembled at Westminster this Business might be Debated on by them. Before that day came, the King fell Sick; yet nevertheless the Bishops, and the other Prelates, with a Multitude of the Laity, met; and there the Legat declared his Business to them. It was, in short this, to obtain two Prebends for the Pope in all Cathedral, and Conventual, Churches: And the maintenance of Two Monks, in all the Monasteries of England. They Excused themselves on Pretence of the King's Sickness, and the Absence of many who were concerned in it: And the King, at the same time, sent a Prohibition to such as Held of him by Barony, not to Oblige his Lay Fees to the Church of Rome; and so another day was appointed to meet on, about Midlent, and nothing more done, at that time, in that Matter. But before this day came, the ² Archbishop of Canterbury procured the Revocation of the Legat, and that the Business for which he came might be left to his Management. In pursuance hereof, he called a Council at Westminster after Easter; and Summon'd to it all whom the Affair did concern: Vocatis ad Concilium Cunctis (says the Historian) quos Negotium tangebatur. The King and his Lords were present with the Clergy: They all agreed not to set an Example in this Case to other Churches and Countries, and so the Assembly brake up.

K. HENRY the III.

It is Evident from all the Circumstances of this Affair, that neither of these two were Common Assemblies, either of the Realm, or Church of England. The former was no proper Parliament, nor was the latter any Ecclesiastical Synod. They were extraordinary Meetings of the Clergy and Laity; and, as the Historians well observe, consisted of all quos Negotium tangebatur, who had a concern in the Business that was to be done there.

The same was the Case of that ³ Meeting about Three years after, which Dr. A. Produces as a true and regular Parliament. A new Legat being sent hither to obtain a Tenth for the Pope of all the Beneficed Clergy in England; the King caused the "Archbishops, Bishops, Abbats, Priors, Templars, Hospitalars, Earls, Barons, Rectors of Churches, and All that Held in Chief of him, to Assemble at Westminster, the Second Sunday after Easter. Being thus Assembled, the Laity absolutely Refused to give any thing: The Clergy for fear, yielded, and paid what was demanded of them. Who these Rectors, or, as they are afterwards called, ⁴ Prelates, of Churches were, I shall not Dispute with Dr. A. Let them be Deans, Archdeacons, or (if he Pleases) Ministers of Parochial Churches, to me it is indifferent. That which I insist upon is, that this was an extraordinary Assembly, not a Regular Parliament; as both the Occasion shews, and the Persons mentioned to have been called to it no less evidently declare.

Ibid. p. 361.

And accordingly Mat. Paris does not give us the least Ground to suppose, that he look'd upon it as a Parliamentary Meeting. Nothing was debated or done after a Parliamentary manner init. The King being engaged before to the Pope, said nothing either for, or against, the Demand: The Legat managed all. The Laity utterly refused to comply with his Desires. And when all the Clergy, for fear, yielded; yet the Earl of Chester would not suffer his Religious, or Clergy, to pay any thing. In this Meeting not only the Principals, as in Parliament, appeared; but their Vassals, and Tenants too: "Tam Laici, quam Clerici; & Eorum Subjecti. So that if all are to be looked upon as proper Members of Parliament, who came to this Meeting; we must quite alter the nature of our Great Councils; and make the Feudatories not only of the King, but of the Laity and Clergy, to become a part of those Assemblies also. But indeed, the Meeting was as Extraordinary as the Occasion: The whole Clergy were to be taxed, and therefore the whole Clergy were called to Consent to the Tax that was to be laid upon them.

Hence it is that in the following Parliaments, which were truly such, we hear no more of the Lower Clergy. In that of 1230, January the 26th, ⁵ "Convenerunt ad Colloquium apud Westmonasterium, Rex, cum Prelatis, & aliis Magnatibus Regni. In that of 1231, March 7th, there met by the King's Summons, says the same Historian, ⁶ Magnates Angliæ, tam Laici quam Prelati. In that of 1232, at Lamhithe,⁷ there met before the King Episcopi, & alii Ecclesiarum Prelati, cum Proceribus Regni. These gave the King the XLth part of all their Moveables: As they did, in the very same manner a XXXth some years after. Regn. XXI.

But here ¹ Dr. A. interposes: It is true, that in both these Parliaments the Persons Called by the King to it, are said to be only "Archiepiscopi, Episcopi, Abbates, Priores, but in the ² Grant, others are mentioned in both, viz. "Clerici terras habentes quæ ad Ecclesias suas non pertinent. And these therefore must be taken into the number of those who made the Grant, tho' not specified in the Writ of Summons to the Parliament. The Answer to this is not difficult: For, ¹st. It is not certain for all that, that these were Members of the Parliament. In the King's Writs, those are said to Grant, who Grant by Others, as well as those who are present in Parliament, and Grant for themselves. In the former of these very Writs, the Villani de Regno nostro, are said to have Granted, in the same Words that these Clerici were: Yet it is certain that the Villani were never Members of Parliament; but, as in the other Writ it is expressly set down, the Liberi homines Granted "pro se, & Villanis suis. In some other ³ Writs, Abbeesses & Prioreesses, are said to have Granted; yet Dr. A. will give me leave to affirm, that these were not proper Members of Parliament, for all that; nor did make their Grants, in Person, in those Great Councils. In like manner, be these Clerici whom they will; it does not follow that they were actually at the Parliament, because they are said to have Granted: All that follows is, that either by Themselves, or by Others, they did Grant a Subsidy to the King there.

Now this seems to be the meaning in which the ⁴ Annals of Waverly understood this Grant: Which speaking, in the very Words of the King's Writ, only change Granting, into Receiving, "the King, say they, Received from the Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Priors; & Clericis terras habentibus quæ ad Ecclesias suas non Pertinebant—

But however, Secondly; suppose that these Clerici were in Parliament, and there Consented to this Grant; yet this must be allowed, that they were there not as Clergy-men, but as Land-holders; not as Representatives of the Body of the Lower Clergy in Parliament, but as Persons who had Lands which did not belong to their Churches: And if any Clergy-men were such Free-Tenants, and had such Estates, I see no reason why they were not intituled, under that Capacity, to come to Parliament as well as any others. That which I deny is, that the Lower-Clergy, as an Estate, or Part of an Estate, of the Realm, were Called to Parliament before, after such a manner as they were from the 23^d of Edward the First; which is what this Author would have us believe, but is not able, by any one tolerable Instance, either of Law or History, to prove.

It is a wonderful thing what could move him, to offer a Passage to this Effect, so foreign to the Business of a Parliament, as another which he brings of this same year; ⁵ Page 301. "On the xvi. Kal. Jan. says M. Paris, there was held at St. Albans a great Consistory of Abbots, Priors, Archdeacons, with almost all the Nobility of the Realm, Doctors, and Clergy. And how came they to meet there? Per mandatum Domini Papæ; at the Popes Command; who did not usually call Parliaments in England. But what did they meet for? To hear the Controversy between the Earl and Countess of Essex; and to proceed to a Divorce between them, if they saw it Reasonable. But where were the Bishops? How came they to be Omitted, and yet the Meeting be a Good Parliament for all that? In short, to Crown all, when did this Consistory meet? xvi. Kal. Jan. (i. e. December the 17th) 123¹. says Dr. A. A new Way of Computation; and very fit to be joyned with the Assembling of such a new kind of English Parliament.

What to Call those ⁶ Meetings, to which the King the year following, "Vocavit Omnes COMITES & BARONES, I cannot tell; unless we shall suppose that under the latter of these, the Ecclesiastical Barons were included. But the year after, ⁷ April the 9th, at a Parliament at Westminster, we find the King with his Earls and Barons; the Archbishops, Bishops, and Prelates. So we do again at ⁸ Gloucester in June following: And either to this, or some other of the same year, ⁹ that Writ of this King to the Sheriff of Lincoln must Relate, concerning the Holding of the County-Courts, which was determined in presence of the Archbishop of Canterbury; "Et Majoris & Sanioris Partis Omnium Episcoporum, Comitum, & Baronum, totius Regni. There is, indeed, in one part of that Writ added & Aliorum; but that extends no farther than to the other parts of the Baronage; nor can reasonably be construed to include any others than the usual Members of Parliament under it.

it; as indeed they were, a long time after, esteemed the only proper Members of such Assemblies. ^{Prynne Re- cords Vol. 2. p. 443.}

But to return to our present Business, of State-Councils: Anno 1234, the King at Christmas kept his Court at Westminster, "Præsentibus Episcopis & Principibus they were made: And in a Writ of the 30th of the same Month, directed to the Sheriffs of Norfolk and Suffolk, concerning them, I find the same Members of this Parliament reckon'd up, almost in the same Words; "Scias quod die a Record of the Members of our Parliaments in those days, that I do not see how it is possible to make any reasonable Exception against it.

At Christmasts following, the King issued out Writs for a Parliament to meet at London, upon the Octaves of the Epiphany; So M. Paris; but it should be on the Octaves of Hillary. The King's Design was to demand an Aid of his People; and for that a full Assembly was to be held. Let us Enquire therefore who by Virtue of these Scripta Regalia were called to it. Now of that we have a very Authentick and very Particular Account. For, First, Our Historians thus Report them; Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Priors Installed, Earls and Barons: These they afterwards call in one Word Magnates, Fideles, Barones; in another Phrase Infinita Nobilium Multitudo, scilicet totius Regni Universitas. And the manner of the Grant one of them thus ² Relates: "First the Archbishop of Canterbury, with his Bishops and Clergy, Consented; and then the Others followed.

Thus M. Paris Reports this Matter: And that this he did upon the Authority of some Publick Instrument, the King's Writ Relating to that Aid, sufficiently shews. ³ "Upon the Octaves of Hilary, says he, in the Twenty first year of our Reign, came together, at our Command, the Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Priors, and Clergy of our whole Realm; and Treated with us of our State, and of the State of our Realm: And the same the Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Priors, and CLERGY HAVING LANDS WHICH BELONG NOT TO THEIR CHURCHES, Granted as before. These were the Members of this full Parliament; and these again demonstratively shew that the Lower-Clergy were not yet called to come to it.

And yet tho' all this be so, yet ⁴ Wikes, an accurate Historian, thus briefly, and generally Reports this Matter; that a Thirtieth was Granted to the King, tam a Clero, quam a Populo; and thereby shews how those Phrases are, upon other Occasions, to be understood by us.

About the latter end of July, the next year, Cardinal Otto, the Popes Legat, came again into England. The King held his Parliament at York, the Legat being present, Cum Omnibus Magnatibus suis, September the 14th. In November following a Legantine Council was Assembled, in which, tho' I am not concerned, yet it may not be amiss to take thus much Notice of it; that the ⁶ Persons Summoned to it, were Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, and Installed Priors; with Procuratorial Letters to Act in the Name of their Convents, as well as their Own. To these the ⁷ Annals of Waverly add, Aliisq; Ecclesiarum Prælati. So does ⁸ M. Westminster; Convocatis omnibus Prælati Anglia & Wallia. ⁹ M. Paris takes notice of the Archdeacon of Canterbury being present: And it is not unlikely but that the rest of that Order were there. The ¹⁰ Annals of Tueksbury, expressly name both them, and the Deans; Archidiaconis, Decanis, & Aliis.

But not to meddle with these kind of Councils, in which our Argument is not concerned: ¹¹ In the Octaves of Epiphany, Anno 1239, another Parliament was held; and at it were Assembled the Archbishops, Bishops, and Great Men; according to the Custom of those times.

In November, Anno 1241, the Bishops of England had a Meeting at Oxford, with many other Grave, Religious, and Discreet Persons, to Treat about the manifold Desolation of the Church, as ¹² M. Paris Expresses it. To these the King sent a ¹³ Prohibition; and in that tells us, who those other Persons were, viz. the Prelats of the Church; whom they thought fit to call together to that Colloquy with them.

And about the End of the same year a General Parliament was Summoned to meet at London, the Tuesday before the Purification. To it were called all the Great Men, Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, and Barons, to Treat with great Deliberation, de Arduis Negotiis Regni, as the ¹⁴ Historian (from the Writ of Summons) speaks. The day appointed being at hand, the Nobility of all England, as well Prelates as Earls and Barons, according to the King's Command, were gathered at London.

The Answer which the Parliament made to the King's Demands, is worthy of our Remark, because it affords us a Full, and Authentick Testimony of the Persons who were Assembled at it. It begins to this ¹⁵ Effect: "Whereas the Lord Archbishop of York, and all the Bishops of England, Abbots, and Priors by Themselves, or by their Proxies; as also all the Earls, and almost all the Barons of England, were Called together by the King's Writ, and the King having laid before them the State of his Affairs, desired all the Great Men of his Realm to give him their Advice and Assistance; at length the said Bishops, Abbots, Priors, Earls,

"Earls, and Barons, having Treated together, &c. These were our Parliament-Men at that Meeting: No others mentioned throughout the whole History of it. K. HENRY the III.

To Confirm this, let us Consider, how the very Writ of Summons to this Parliament runs. It is directed to the Archbishop of York; and he is Summoned to be at London a die S. Hillarii in xv. dies, "ad Tractandum Nobiscum, Una cum Ceteris Magnatibus Nostreis, quos similiter fecimus Convocari. Yet in this Parliament a Subsidy was demanded by the King; and tho' the Laity Refused, yet the Prelates (so the Historian calls them, and mentions no other of the Clergy) being set upon singly by the King, did, at last, Comply with his Demands. Dors. Claus. (26) Hen. III. m. 13. Apud Selden. Tit. Hon. part. 2. pag. 523. Dr. Brady's Introd. p. 87. M. Westminst. p. 307.

The Terms in which M. Westminster speaks of these Persons, may deserve to be taken Notice of: "Convenit tota Anglia Nobilitas; tam Prelatorum quam Magnatum. Yet these he afterwards calls, "Homines Regis Fideles & Naturales, without any other Addition; and thereby shews, how those Terms also are, in other places, to be Understood, with Relation to these Assemblies.

But to proceed in our View of this Reign: About the latter End of the year 1244, another Parliament was called, and that for Aid too, at London. The Persons Summoned to it were again, as before, Archbishops, Bishops, Earls, and Barons. These breaking up without Answering the King's Desires, met again at London three Weeks after the Purification; Magnates cum Prelatis; as M. Paris Phrases it. Here the King attained his Purposes, and Received a Parliamentary Supply. On the Morrow after All-Souls the same Persons met again: Convenientes Magnates, says the Historian; and the King again Demanded an Aid of them. 1244. Sect. 67. M. Paris p. 639. Ibid. 643. Ibid. p. 650. M. Westminst. p. 318.

Who they were that chose the Proctors whom the King sent the next year to the General Council of Lyons, has been a Question of some difficulty: M. Paris tells us that they were chosen, Nomine totius Universitatis Regni Anglia; which Universitas sent an Elegant Epistle to the Pope by them. M. Westminster says that the King sent them: But N. Trivet, almost a Contemporary Writer, delivers the plain Truth of the Matter, and puts an End to the doubt; that the King, by the Advice of his Parliament, the Representative of his whole Realm, sent them: "Missi sunt ad hoc Concilium per Regem Anglia, de Consilio Prelatorum, Comitum, & Baronum, Viri Nobiles, &c. 1245. M. Paris p. 659. M. Westminst. p. 321. Nic. Trivet. p. 591.

This Complaint having not had its due Effect, the King upon Midlent-Sunday, towards the end of the same year, called his Parliament to consider how to deliver the Church, and Realm, from their Oppressions. And because this is a Parliament which makes a great Figure in our English History, it will be fit that we Consider with the more Care, who were the Members of it. M. Paris speaking of the Summons of it, tells us, that the King, by his Writ Called to London at Midlent "totius Regni Magnates. M. Westminster styles them Nobiles Regni. The Annals of Burton distinguish the Lay-Members from the Ecclesiastical; and call them Magnates cum Clero. The Chronicle of Dunstable thus reckons up the Church-Members, Bishops, Abbots, and Priors. M. Paris p. 693. M. Westminst. p. 327. Annal. Burton p. 306. M. Cotton. Tiber. A. 10.

The time assigned for their Assembling being come, "Convenit ad Parliamentum Generalissimum, totius Regni Anglicani totalis Nobilitas, says M. Paris: And to take away all doubt whom he comprehends under that Character, he adds, viz. of the Prelats, as well Abbots, and Priors, as Bishops; with the Earls, and Barons. These were his Nobility, and these, he says, were Edicto Regis Convocati, called by the King's Writ to this Parliament. M. Paris, p. 696. Mat. Westminst. p. 329.

Being thus Assembled, the King first of all, spake to the Bishops by themselves; then to the Earls, and Barons; and afterwards to the Abbots, and Priors: And Complained greatly, says the Historian, toti UNIVERSITATI Congregata; to the whole Council of the Realm, there Assembled, of the Papal Exactions, The Heads of the Grievances being drawn up, and Considered by the Parliament; the Conclusion was, that Letters and Messages should be solemnly sent to the Pope for Redress of them. M. Paris, p. 698. M. Westminst. p. 328.

The Parliament being broken up, they Wrote their Letters according to what had been agreed: Episcopi per se, &c. the Bishops by themselves; the King by himself; the Abbots and Priors by themselves; Earl Richard, and all the Nobles by themselves; says M. Westminster; and the Letter of these last is thus Intituled, "Devoti Filii Comes Cornubiæ, &c. Et alii totius Regni Anglia Barones, M. Westminst. Loc. Citat. M. Paris, p. 700.

"rones, Proceres, & Magnates; ac Nobiles Portuum Maris habitatores; nec non their own Names; the Baronage therefore took in all the Rest of the Realm, which had not particularly sent themselves to him.

When these Letters thus sent, ¹ ex Parte Regis (&) Universitatis tam Magna-tum, quam Prelatorum, had no Effect; but a New Imposition was laid upon the Realm by the Pope, they were all astonished: And the King forbidding the Bishops to yield to the Collection of what was demanded; took notice that it was contrary to the Provision made by his GREAT MEN, as well Prelates, as Earls and Barons, in the Council before mentioned. In which Council, the Historian tells us, were gathered together totius Regni tam CLERI, quam MILITIÆ, (so from their Tenures by Knights-Service he calls those whom he had before Stiled Nobiles, & Magnates) Generalis Universitas.

² Annal. Burton
p. 305, 307.
Comp. Mat.
Paris p. 716.

Let me Observe this one thing farther: The ² Annals of Burton reciting the Letter which M. Paris tells us was sent by the Regular Prelates upon this occasion, gives it this Inscription, Litera ex Parte Cleri; and Confound the Answers afterwards made by the Clergy to the Pope, with the Letter sent by Order of this Parliament.

From this Account of this Parliament, these things are plain; that of the Clergy, none but Bishops, and Prelats, were present at it; of the Laity none but Nobles, and Barons. That these are in the Language of those times called UNI-
VERSITAS REGNI Assembled together in Parliament, so one stiles them: Tam Cleri, quam Militia Generalis Universitas, so another describes them. That these are the Magnates & Clerus; the Magnates & Prelati; of the Parliaments under this King; to which it is as plain as any thing can well be, that the Lower-Clergy were not hitherto Convened.

³ M. Paris
p. 709.

On ³ July the 7th, the Messengers being returned, which went to Rome, the King called another Parliament to meet at Winchester. The Magnates were again the Members of it. The Pope threatned; and the King with his Lords, were incensed against him: But Earl Richard joyned with some of the Papal Bishops against the King, and so all these Attempts for the Deliverance of the Church from its Servitude, came to nothing.

⁴ Rights, &c.

p. 719.

And now we come to that Parliament to which ⁴ Dr. A. tells us the Archdeacons were called. He Relates the matter fairly, as it stands in ⁵ M. Paris; and it is, I think, the first plausible Instance that has occur'd, of what he has been Asserting. The Bishops of England had, in the Council of Lyons, Obliged the Clergy to a great Subsidy to be paid to the Popes Use. The Pope pressed the Payment of it; and the King was desirous by some means or other to prevent it.
To this End he called his Great men, and with them, the Archdeacons of England, to London. Whither being come at the day appointed, the Bishops voluntarily absented themselves, that so they might not seem to go against their own Act.

⁶ lb. p. 720

Upon the day after the ⁶ Purification, the King had a diligent Treaty with his Lords, protracting the Council many days. The Subject of their debate was, how to preserve Gascony which the King of France was preparing to subdue; and which it would be both a Dishonour and Damage to the King to lose.

At this Meeting the Archdeacons of England were assembled, as I before Observed; and no small part of the Clergy of the whole Realm, together with the Great Men, complaining of the intolerable Exactions of the Pope. The Conclusion was, that solemn Messengers should again be sent to the Pope, and the Letters, inserted by the Historian, be Written on behalf of the Community of the Clergy, and People of England, to him, and to the Cardinals. This is the Account which M. Paris gives of this Assembly: From which those things are clear; That the Archdeacons were present at this Parliament; That only those of the Province of Canterbury came to it; For they only Wrote the Letters to the Pope; which, had those of York been present, we can hardly think they would have done. That a great number of the Clergy came with them: That these together made their Complaints of the Grievous Exactions of the Court of Rome:
That in the other Debates of this Parliament, none but the King, and his Lords, deliberated. The only Question, is, Whether these Archdeacons were Summoned in Course to this Parliament, as Ordinary Members, to Debate, and Conclude with the Lords, upon the Affairs of the Realm, there? Or whether they were only now Summoned, Extraordinarily, for this particular Purpose; to Remonstrate

strate to the King, and his Great Council, the Grievances of the Clergy, and to joyn K. HENRY the III. in such Resolutions as should be taken by them thereupon?

Now the latter of these I affirm to have been the Case, and that for these Reasons: First, That they did not joyn with the Lords in their other Debates; so M. Paris, clearly enough, shews. Secondly, He only says of them that Convenierunt, they came thither; and with them a great many Others of the Clergy, Unsummoned, for ought appears. There they Complained on behalf of the M. Westminst. Clergy, and joyned with the Lords in the Letters which were sent to Rome: p. 334. And this was necessary to be done by them, because the Bishops, having before Engaged themselves to the Pope, could not now Act in Parliament for the Clergy. To all which let me add (lastly) that in the very next Parliament they were not Summoned, as I now come, in Order, to shew.

The ² Parliament I mean, is that of Oxford, on the first Sunday after Easter: Of which the same Historian gives this account; that the King called the Nobility of the whole Kingdom to it; but especially the Prelates, who were most impoverished by the Papal Exactions. The Pope had moderated his whole demand to the Sum of Eleven thousand Marks. To this the Bishops and Prelates consented. M. Paris says, all but the Exempt Prelates, and three of the other Clergy. But ³ M. Westminster says, the Bishops shut out the Exempt (whether upon the account of their Obstinacy, I cannot tell) from a share in the Composition; and left them to the Rapine of the Court of Rome.

Thus we have the Story of these two Authors: ⁴ Wikes takes no Notice of it at all; but only says that in the xv^e. of Easter, a General Congregation was held of all the Great Men of England; Bishops, Earls, and Barons; before the King at Oxford; with whose Counsel and Assent he changed his Money, because it had been Clipp'd, and so was not of Value.

In the Octaves of the Purification another Parliament met at London. This Dr. A. fairly enough Reports; but forgets to tell us wherein it makes for his Advantage. The Relation of it runs thus: That on the Octaves of the Purification, all the Nobility of England being Summoned by the King's Writs, met at London. There came beside a Multitude of Barons, Knights, and Nobles; as also of Abbots, Priors, and Clergy; Nine Bishops, and as many Earls. These are afterwards stiled Magnates; and do plainly refer to such Prelates and Clergy, as by Vertue of their Tenures had a Right to a Summons; not to the Body of the Inferiour Clergy.

This Parliament refusing to Supply the King's Needs, another was held the xv^e. of Mid-Summer following. The Persons our Historians do not particularly reckon up: But their Characters are plain, ⁶ Totius Angliæ Nobilitas, ⁶ Omnes Regni Primates, Magnates, Universitatis Barnagium: And sufficiently Exclude all but such whose Tenures or Priviledges intituled them to a part in this Honourable Assembly.

But more Express is the Account which the ⁷ Annals of Burton give us of the next Parliament, which I shall take notice of, Anno 1252. To which, they tell us, were Summoned, the two Archbishops, the Bishops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, and Great Men of the whole Realm of England. ⁸ M. Paris leaves it almost a doubt whether this was a Parliament Summoned to Attend, or a Voluntary Meeting of the Barons to Celebrate the Feast of St. Edward with the King. But for the Ecclesiasticks who came thither, he says they were "totius Angliæ Prelati fere Universi"; that is, the Bishops and Regular Prelats, with the other Clergy before mentioned.

On the Quindene of Easter following, all the Nobility of England was Summoned to London, by the King's Writs; ⁹ "de arduis Regni Negotiis, simul cum Rege, tractaturi." Of the Church side, we find mention of the Archbishop of Canterbury, Bishops and Prelates: The Chronicle of Dunstable speaks only of Bishops, Earls, and Barons: ¹⁰ But N. Trivet is more large; he says that at the Instance of the Prelates, Earls, and Barons, the King Confirmed the Two Charters. And from a * Bull of the Popes relating to this Matter, it appears, that presently after, the Archbishop of Canterbury, with the Consent of the Archbishop of York, and the Concurrence of Fourteen Bishops who were assisting at it; did in the presence of the King, the Earl of Cornwall, Et aliorum OPTIMATUM Angliæ, ad hoc, quasi ad Concilium, Specialiter Vocatorum, Excommunicate all who should Violate these Charters; which Sentence the Pope Confirmed. In this they

K. HENRY the III. all Agree, that of the Clergy none but Prelates were Concern'd in this Affair; under which we may take in such special Clergy-men, as held Lands of the King, not amortiz'd to their Churches, and who, upon that Account, were wont to be called to these Councils.

The same were the Members of the next Parliament of the same year, which met January the 27th, "Universi fere Angliæ Magnates, as M. Paris calls them. Of the Church side he mentions Bishops only in particular: But the other term is more large, and comprehends all Barons, as well Spiritual, as Temporal; and so intitules the other Prelates, as usual, to a place there.

M. Paris Reports that this Parliament brake up without Granting any thing to the King: Yet by the Writs issued out not long after to all the Archbishops and Bishops, to Call together the Clergy of their several Dioceses, and ask a Supply, in the King's Name, of them, it appears, that the Regular Prelates had made him some promise in that Parliament, which he took Care to hold them to. The Persons to be called to these Diocesan Assemblies, were the Archdeacons, Religious, and Clergy of the Dioceses, who in these separate Meetings were now wont to Consent to their own Taxation; and therefore, we may the rather conclude that they were not Called to Parliament: The Regular Prelates, tho' present there, yet being only Asses'd for their Baronies, not for their Own, or Convents, Revenues, which were held in Frank Almoigne, or otherwise accounted meerly Spiritual.

Of this Gift a Return was to be made to the King's Council at Westminster, in xv. Pasch. and about the same time I conceive it was, that his next Parliament met, of which M. Paris tells us again, that the Magnates were Assembled at London. These he afterwards calls Proceres, and gives us no other account of them.

But of the next Great Council which met, at the same time, the year following, we have a more ample Relation, in our several Histories. All the Nobles of England came to it, as well Ecclesiasticks, as Laicks; says one: The Bishops, Abbots, Earls, and Barons, of the whole Kingdom, a very few excepted says another. These they all afterwards Call Magnates; Great men; but in all their Accounts of this Parliament, which are very particular, they take no Notice of any of an Inferior Degree.

The same was the Case of the next Assembly at Westminster, October the 13th, where M. Paris tells us, there Assembled Omnes fere Angliæ Magnates. Together with this Parliament a Legantine Council was held by Rustandus at London, the very same day. To this were called all the Prelates of England, says the same Historian: The Annals of Burton, (which Confound these two Meetings together) add the Procuratores Cleri too. The Reconciliation will be plain, if we say, with Dr. A. that the Archdeacons Came with Procuratorial Powers to Act for the Clergy, as on other Occasions we are told they were wont, about this time, to do.

These Meetings proving Ineffectual to the King's, and the Legat's Designs, a New Parliament, and Synod, were held about Midlent, the year following. As for the Parliament the Writ it self informs us, both when it was to Sit, and who were Called to it. The Pralati and Magnates, were the Members Summoned: And these were to Come to London, the Friday before Midlent. Upon the Sunday Seven-night, (Ten days after) in the Chapter-house at Westminster, the Archbishop of Messina, the Popes Legate, declared his Business, before the Prelates, Clergy, and People, who were gathered together in great Numbers there; and upon the Passion-Sunday after, Rustandus the other Legat, before the Archdeacons there Assembled from every Bishoprick, Published his Bulls too. Then the Archbishop admonished them to get their Procurations Ready, within the Octaves of Easter: And about the same time the King demanded of the Clergy an Aid, to clear the Obligation which he lay under to the Pope for the Kingdom of Sicily.

I have put this Account of the Burton Annals together, as well as I could, tho' it be plain that there must be a great Confusion in the Relation. For Rustandus was certainly gone out of England before the Archbishop of Messina came hither: And though he returned again, yet that was not till after these last Meetings were over; and then too his powers were taken from him, as M. Paris informs us. Of the Parliament in Midlent the same Historian takes notice. He says that there was present at it, "tota fere Angliæ Nobilitas: But for the Convocation he speaks nothing of it, unless it be included in that account, where having mentioned tioned the Popes Grant to the King of a Tenth upon the Clergy for Five years, He K. HENRY says, at last they promised the King to supply his instant Necessities; and after- the III.

wards, mentions both a Council and Parliament, Solutio Concilio & Parlamento Me- morato.

The want of distinguishing these Assemblies, and remarking this Confusion of Time, and History, has misled Dr. A. into several Mistakes as to these Matters, which must now be Corrected; or they may be apt to Mislead others into the like Errors. For, First, he applies the Passage of 1255, to the Parliament then Sitting; which M. Paris shews us belongs to the Legantine Council which Annal. Burwas held at the same time. It was in that the Bishops, and Clergy, Appealed ton. p. 355.
from the Legat to the Pope. Fulco Bishop of London began the Opposition; Wal- M. Par. p. 915.
ter Bishop of Worcester seconded him: And thereupon Invocata Sancti Spiritus Consolatione, they Appealed to the presence of the Pope; as the Burton Annals also observe. To this Assembly therefore, not to the Parliament, the Procuratores Cleri were called; Praelati Angliae Universi, says M. Paris; that is to say, the Archdeacons on behalf of their Clergy.

Sect. 74.

Secondly, The Bishop of Lichfield's Order to the Archdeacon of Stafford to have the Papal Procurations ready to be paid to him at a certain day in London; does not, in my Opinion, at all argue that the Archdeacons were to bring it themselves thither, or to pay it, in Person, there; much less does it follow that the Archdeacons were Members of that Parliament. The Writ sufficiently explains it self. The Bishops were to meet at Parliament; there they were to Agree whether these Procurations should be paid to the Legat, or not. The Archdeacon therefore was to be ready to Assign the Money for his Archdeaconry, if they should conclude to Pay it. This is the Purport of the Writ; And this was all that was meant by it.

But here therefore the Confusion of the Burton Annals again misled him. For having supposed, upon the Grounds now mentioned, that the Archdeacons then Attended the Parliament; he thus adds one Error to another. 2 "And accordingly the next time it (the Parliament) was Assembled, we again find them Rights, &c.
" (the Archdeacons) there. For a Debate arising, this Resolution was taken, p. 302.
" Commune Consilium super hoc refedit, quod Decani, Praelati Regulares, ac
" Archidiaconi, tractabunt cum suis Capitulis & Clericis, ita quod ad Menssem post
" Pascha Redeant per procuratores instructos ad plene Respondendum. But
Dr. A. will give me leave to say, that he applies this Passage to the Parliament without any manner of Authority for his so doing. In all that part of the Annals there was not the least word to shew, or imply, that this was done in Parliament; nor could it be the next time the Parliament Assembled; for Rustandus was gone before the Archbishop of Messina came hither; and the true state of time, according to M. Paris, who is here very Exact, lies thus.

3 Rustandus came over hither about Michaelmas, 1255. October the 13th he M. Paris p.

after, 6 that Meeting must have been held of which Dr. A. speaks. On the 6 Annal Burxve. of Easter, 1256; (according to his appointment) the Clergy again met: ton. p. 373.

Pope.

About the beginning of the Lent, after Rustandus was gone, the 9 Archbishop of M. Paris, p. raised, and the Sunday next after Midlent-Sunday, declared his Business in the Chapter-house at Westminster. The King had Summon'd his Parliament to meet Ten days before, viz. the Friday before Midlent-Sunday, as by the Dates of the Writ does appear. This I take to be the true account of this Confused matter; and it plainly shews all Dr. A's Pretence of the Archdeacons being in Parliament, to be a meer Mistake, for want of rightly distinguishing the Contemporary Parliaments, and Convocations, from one another, and of placing the several Relations not in the order that the Annals have entred them, but in the true Course of time to which they belong.

1257. The next ¹ Assembly to which the Archdeacons were Summoned and ordered to come with Procuratorial Letters, to enable them to act for the Diocesan Clergy, ² Dr. A. himself tells us was purely Synodical; and is therefore foreign to his present purpose of bringing the Lower Clergy to Parliament: So was the ³ Convocation of Merton the year after. But before that, on Hoke-day, a ⁴ Parliament met at London. Here we again find the Old Members, Nobilitas Regni, & Magnates, Assembled. This continued till the Sunday after Ascension-day; when the King engaging to Correct his Errors, an Adjournment was made till Barnaby-day, at which time they were to meet at the famous Parliament of Oxford: Some account whereof must therefore be given here.

The Barons having obtained such a promise of the King, as I before observed, at the Parliament of London, ⁵ Caballed together how to manage their Affairs at the next Meeting. The day agreed on being come, June the 11th, ⁶ Magnates & Nobiles terræ all hastened to ⁶ Oxford, where they were to meet; Commanding, at the same time, all such as held of them by Knights-Service, to attend them with their Arms there. What was done at that Assembly would be too long for me to recite: But in all this Parliament, M. Paris makes no mention of any but the Magnates, and Barones, and their Milites; the One the Persons who came to the Parliament, the Other such as were required to Attend upon them there.

1258. With him agrees ⁷ M. Westminster; or rather indeed he speaks more fully to the same Purpose: That the Milites, Barones, & Prelati, being Called by publick Writ, came to Oxford, and made the Provisions there. That some Opposed these, but were not able to Resist the Faction: All the other Prelates, Earls, and Barons, Sware to the Observation of them.

The same is the account which ⁸ Eversden gives of this Meeting: He says that the King's Foreigners enraged the Proceres Regni against them. That thereupon, Convenientibus cunctis Proceribus Angliæ apud Oxonford, the Establishments, there made, were published: And the Proceres Regni Obligated themselves to the keeping of them.

Of these Provisions it is, that the ⁹ Annals of Waverly tell us, that Comites, & Barones, Archiepiscopi, Episcopi, & Cæteri Magnates Angliæ; All Conspiring together, began to Renew and Reform the Ancient Laws and Customs of England.

In the same manner does ¹⁰ Wykes in his Chronicle speak of this Parliament. He calls the Actors in it Magnates: He says that they agreed to take all the Power of Government out of the King's hands, and to Elect xxiv "de Majoribus Potentioribusq; Regni, to Govern both the King and Kingdom; ¹¹ and Sware to adhere to what these xxiv should Establish. These Orders he afterwards calls Providentia Baronum; And we meet with nothing to make us think that any others were at all concerned in them.

¹² Hemingford goes on in the same Language: The Magnates were angry at the King's Conduct; the Comites & Barones, went to the King and Complained of his Foreigners: These were Ordered to meet at Oxford: These did what was done there: And Nine Bishops who came thither, Excommunicated all that should go against their Appointments.

The ¹³ Chronicle of Dunstable proceeds in the same Stile: On the Feast of St. Barnabas the King caused all the Magnates Angliæ to be called together to Oxford; as well of the Clergy as of the Laiety. So does ¹⁴ Walsingham, more plainly: The King, says he, Call'd his Parliament to Oxford; to which the Prelates, Earls, and Barons, being come, those Statutes were made, which to this day are called the Oxford Provisions.

And lastly, the King's own ¹⁵ Writs, all run in the same manner. By one dated the 2d. of May, a little before the Rising of his Parliament at London; he declares that he had granted and Sworn, Proceribus & Magnatibus Regni; to Reform the Government, by Twelve Persons whom he calls his Fideles, then chosen, of his own Council; and Twelve others to be chosen ex parte Procerum, who should meet at Oxford on June the 11th.

In his ¹⁶ Letters Patents to those who were Chosen of his Council, for this end, dated at Oxford June the 31st. he repeats it several times that he had granted Proceribus, & Magnatibus Regni: That he promised Proceribus; & Magnatibus; That Twelve others were to be Chosen, ex parte Ipsorum Procerum, &c.

Not long after this Parliament a new Legat coming over hither to Fleece the K. HENRY Realm, solemn Ambassadors were sent, according to the Government now Settled, the III.
Ex parte Regis, & totius Anglia Universitatis, to the Pope concerning the Affairs of the Realm. These had a Letter given them Wrote a Barnagio, says M. Paris, M. Paris, p. the Copy of which that Historian has preserved. ² The Title is, "The Letter sent to the Pope, by the Community of England: And what this Community was, the Inscription it self shews, "Communitas Comitum, Procerum, Magnatum, Aliorumq; Regni; the whole Body of the Lords and Barons of England. Here they take notice of the Reformation agreed to be made of the Realm, de Procerum & Magnatum Consilio; that Twelve should be Chosen by the King, and as many "Ex parte Communitatis, for this End. To this Letter two of them Subscribed, "Vice totius Communitatis; which from all that has been said plainly appears to have been the Community of the Great Men; the Barones, & Milites Regni; No others of the Clergy or Laity being concerned in it.

And now it may be time to Consider what Account the Burton Annals give of this Matter, which Treat the most largely, and fully of it. In the first place, ³ they tell us that this Ordering of the State of the Realm was made by the Barones Regni at Oxford. That the Magnates totius Regni were called, and came thither, "una cum Clero, which therefore must be the Praelati, mentioned by the other Historians. Annal. Burton. p. 387, 406, 407.

The ⁴ Petitions here made to the King, are thus Prefaced; "Petunt Comites & Barones: Item Petunt Barones: Item Petunt Remidium, quod cum Ipsi Comites & Barones, &c." Ibid. p. 408.

The ⁵ Resolutions agreed to, are called the Barons Provisions: The Barons Ordination, and Provision: And of the Barons one Writing from the Parliament at Oxford, says, that the Barons had a great and difficult work in hand; that they proceeded fiercely in their doings; he wished all might end well. Ib. p. 410, 411.

Of the Twenty four, the same Annals speak thus: ⁶ That Twelve were Chosen, "Ex parte Regis, & totidem ex parte Communitatis. And in the Catalogue of these they are thus inscribed: "Electi ex parte Domini Regis. Electi ex parte Comitum & Baronum; who therefore were the Community before meant. Ib. p. 412.

The same therefore must be ⁷ Le Commun, who as those Annals Relate, Swore to stand by One Another on this Occasion. Ib. p. 413.

Among other Provisions one was to have ⁸ Three Parliaments every year. To these Twelve persons were Chosen, by the Barons, to Come, and to Act with the King's Council, formed according to their Model, Pur tut le Commun de la Terre, of the Publick Needs. They had the Barons Power Committed to them; and were to do that, which the whole Baronage was wont to do in Parliament. Among all these there were, on the Church-side, the Archbishop of Canterbury and two Bishops; and no more. Ibid. p. 414, 415, 416.

These things being thus Effected, ⁹ the account I before mentioned of them from M. Paris, which is here also inserted, was sent to the Pope, Ex parte Domini Regis, & Communitatis: that is of the same Community of the Great men; and so the King and Barons of England, departed from this Parliament. Ib. p. 418, 419.

And now let us Consider a little what we have been relating: Here was a Parliament held for the Weighty Affairs of the Realm. The whole Government was settled upon a new foot; and all the Kingdom concluded by what was done at it. Yet in all this great Transaction no appearance of the Lower Clergy is taken notice of; Nothing that had Ground enough to Warrant even Dr. A. himself to make any such use of it.

About the latter End of this year, the King of the Romans purposing to come over hither, the ¹⁰ Barons being jealous of his design, sent Messengers to him to know the meaning of it. These in the Historians Phrase, were said to be sent a "Communitate Anglia, that is of the Baronage. The Earl of Leicester was yet abroad, and the Barons were doubtful what the King intended: It was also Reported, that King Richard would bring one, or more, of his Exiled Brethren with him, "quod Baronum Communio, says M. Westminster, ægre sustineret. Mat. Paris p. 982. M. Westminster p. 365. Chro. Wyket p. 53. M. Westminster p. 365. M. Paris p. 984.

Being come to ¹² London, on the Octaves of the Purification, a Parliament was held there, and the Nobles of England gathered to it. It was not long after this that the Committee of Lords Chosen by the King, and the Barons, to provide for the better Ordering of the Realm, debating upon that Occasion; ¹³ a Quarrel happened. M. Westminster p. 365. M. Paris p. 985. M. Westminster p. 366.

pened between two of the Barons side, the Earls of Leicester and Gloucester. The former being the Head of the Faction against the King, thought that the latter did not proceed so Vigorously as he should in the Common Cause; and the Dispute rose so high, that Montford in a passion left England upon it.

This being heard by the Earl of Hereford, and other Lords, & sui Compares, they all fell upon the Earl of Gloucester, desiring that Leicester might presently be Re-called; and that Gloucester should go on more steadily in the Common Cause; or they would all fall upon him. Gloucester promised to Comply; but yet by the Account of the ¹ Burton Annals, seems to have done but a little as to what had been agreed at Oxford. For at Michaelmas following the Faction of the Earl of Leicester, and their Adherents; whom I take to be meant by the Communitas Bachilerie Anglie; Remonstrated to the Prince, and to the Earl of Gloucester, and the rest who had been Sworn of the King's Council at Oxford; that tho' the King had done all that the Barons had Required of him, yet the Barons themselves had done nothing of what they had promised for the publick Good; nor minded any thing but their own private Interest: And that if some Amendment were not made by them, they must Recur to other Methods. The Prince declar'd that he was ready to stand to his Oath, and venture his Life for the Community of England. Whereupon the Barons (those I mean who had got the Government into their hands, but had made, as was said, a very bad use of it, for so the Annals imply, Barones de Concilio jurati) met in Parliament according to the Establishment, and there caused their Provisions to be published; which they call Provisiones Baronum, and tell us, were made at Westminster at the Michaelmas Parliament, by the King and his Council, and the Twelve Chosen for the Common-Council; Pordevant le Communance de Engleterre: That is, says Dr. A. before the Community of England, as distinguished from the Community of Barons, Represented by the Twelve. It is not any part of my present Concern to dispute this Matter with him: Let him enjoy his Conjecture if he pleases. But as we have before seen, that the Twelve who were to come to the fixed Parliaments of the Realm, were chosen in the Parliament at Oxford, where we cannot find that any besides the Barons, and their Milites were present; so it is evident, that they who were then Chosen, for that Purpose, were the very Persons who made these Provisions. The Communance de Engleterre therefore must be the Community of the Parliament which had been held at Oxford, not of this which now met at Westminster; for in that these Twelve were Chosen, not in this: And if no Commons therefore, as we now understand them, were there, neither can they be meant by the Communance here. The passage then which Dr. A. seems to me to have misunderstood, I should rather render thus; ² "These are the Provisions, and Establishments made at Westminster; at the Parliament at Michaelmas (by the King and his Council, and the Twelve chosen by the Community of England, for the Common-Council;) which was then held at Westminster in the Forty third year of the Reign of Henry the Son of King John. This I take to be the true Translation of that Passage; and this puts the meaning of the Community of England out of all doubt.

It will be much the same thing if we take it in his Sense: The Communance de Engleterre, will still be the Confederate Barons called before le Commune; only it seems more odd that a Select Council should make Provisions in the Name of the whole Baronage; at a Parliament where the Baronage it self was present. But for this let Dr. A. take his own way: It is none of my Concern to Oppose him in it.

At this Parliament, it seems to have been, that ³ Justices Itinerant were also settled to go through all England, before Easter following. The Historian calls it Parliamentum Generale Baronum; and thereby sufficiently declares who were called to it.

It was not long after this ⁴ Parliament before the Kings Affairs called him over into France: From whence being ready to Return about Easter, he was informed, that Prince Edward, by the Counsel of his Barons and Lords, and out of an ambitious Love of Rule, began to Aim at his Imprisonment and Deprivation. The King being afraid hereupon to come into England, his Brother the King of the Romans Assembling all the Lords at London, caused the Prince, and all the Nobles, to give him a full Assurance that he might freely and safely Return. This was, I suppose, the Parliamentum Baronum Port Pascha, of which ⁵ Wykes speaks. After Michaelmas another was held "totius Anglie Magnatibus apud London Con-

"vocatis, says the same Historian. There they treated about the Justiciaries of ^{King HENRY the III.} England, the Chancellor, and Treasurer, as ¹ Mat. Westminster informs us. In February, the same year, a third ² Parliament was held; and that too "Convocatis Magnatibus, as the others before had been. ³ M. Westminster p. 375.

The next year following the Pope sent a New Legat, Walter de Reygate, hither. ⁴ M. Westminster p. 377, 378. He Summon'd all the Prelates of England to appear before him at London in Quindena Paschat. ⁵ But the Meeting was held in two Provincial Synods before the two Archbishops; in the Province of Canterbury the Monday before the Feast of St. Dunstan, May the 16th. In that of York the Monday after, May the 23d. ⁶ M. Westminster p. 379. The Persons cited to these Synods Mat. Westminster thus Enumerates, Archbishops, Bishops, Abbats, Priors, Archdeacons, and other Ordinaries of Churches. The Archbishop of Canterbury had just before held his own Provincial Council at Lambeth, ⁷ M. Westminster p. 380. and therein published his Constitutions, May the 13th; Concilium Prasulum Provinciae suae, says our ⁸ Historian: And the ⁹ Acts of this Synod, yet more plainly shew ¹⁰ Spelm. Concil. Vol. 2. p. 305. that none but Prelates, that is, his Suffragan Bishops, Acted in it.

About two years after, a Legantine Synod was held at Westminster after Trinity-Sunday. Upon the 8th of September following a Great Parliament met at London: The Members of it, as set down by Mat. Westminster were Proceres & Cateri Prelati. ¹¹ There the Provisions of Oxford were publickly Promulged, and ordered to be generally observed: But the differences between the King and his Barons, were grown too great to be easily Composed. Another Parliament therefore met after Michaelmas; and about Midlent, a Third. ¹² This was held by the King, with his Nobles at Oxford: ¹³ Hemingford, in his Account of it, speaks of ¹⁴ M. Westminster p. 385. Bishops, Great-men, and Barons, but of no others. Here, by the Interposition of ¹⁵ Hemingford Lib. 3. cap. 28. the Bishops, it was Agreed to Refer the Debates between the King and his Barons to the French King, who giving Sentence for the Prince, the Barons Refused to Acquiesce in his Determination.

But ¹⁶ Wykes speaks of more of these Assemblies: One at the Purification 1261, ¹⁷ Chr. Wykes p. 55. in which the King and his Barons Referred themselves to the Arbitriment of the Kings of France, and of the Romans.

A fortnight after Easter, 1262, the Barons, says he, came again to London to Treat with the King; and were content to Abate many of their Articles, provided the King would Confirm the rest.

At ¹⁸ Whitsuntide, 1263, there was another Congregatio Magnatum at London. On the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin there was another, which lasted three days; and an innumerable Confluence of People, on the Barons side, came to it. This too, the Historian says, the King held "cum Magnatibus, nor mentions he any others. ¹⁹ Ib. p. 56, 57.

After divers Treaties between the two Parties, about ²⁰ Christmas it was agreed by the King and all his Friends, and by the Earl of Leicester and his, to Commit all things to the Arbitration of the French King, and ²¹ the King of the Romans. Prince Edward, the Earls, Barons, and Knights, Archbishops, Prelates of the Church, and, in general, the Clergy and People, All came into the Agreement, and All Sware, and set their Hands and Seals, to abide by it. ²² The King's Patent is Signed in December. See Dr. Brady's Hist. 1 Vol. Append. 233.

The King of France Pronouncing for King Henry, the King called such of his Lords to Oxford, about Midlent, as held firm to him, to deliberate how he might best Defend himself against his Enemies, or Punish them according to their Deserts. ²³ Chr. Wykes p. 58.

From this time forth all went into Confusion; till, at last, the King himself was taken Prisoner at the Battle of Lewes. ²⁴ In this State, Writs were issued out, after a new manner, for holding of a Parliament upon the Octaves of Trinity, ²⁵ Dr. Brady's Hist. 1 Vol. Append. p. 235. June the 22d. Four of the more discreet Knights of every County were ordered to be sent to it; to Treat with the Prelates, Great men, and other Faithful in it.

But we do not yet see any Change on the Ecclesiastical side. On the contrary, in the ²⁶ Writs dated the 1st. of September following, the Subsidy is said to have been Granted in the Old form, per Prelatos & Magnates Regni nostri; and the Writs to the Barons for this very Parliament ran in the ancient manner, as ²⁷ Dr. Brady shews. ²⁸ Ib.

It is in the next year then that we must look for the first Considerable Change on the Church, as well as on the Lay Part of our Parliaments. In that we find not only several Deans, but a numerous Roll of Religious Prelates assembled. And though

though the Summons be not Extant, yet it appears by our Records, that All the Priors of England were called to that Convention : Whether any others of a Lower Order were Summoned to it, I cannot tell ; it is probable that none were.

Here then it is that, as far as I can Observe, the number of our Parliament Clergy received its first Enlargement. From the time of the Conquerour, till the latter End of King John, the Bishops and Clergy who Held by Barony of the King, were the only Persons of our Order who were wont to be Called to the Great Councils of the Realm. After the passing of his Charter, such others as held in Chief of the Crown may probably have been Summoned to them on the Ecclesiastical, as they were agreed to be on the Lay Part. The King Obligated himself to Cite all such, and I know of no Exception that was made to exclude the Clergy from their Right to it. Thus, I conceive, this Matter stood, till the present Parliament, the 49th of Henry the Third ; when not only the other Priors who held not at all of the King were Universally Summoned, but, with them, Five Deans too ; under what Capacity, whether as Chief of their Churches, or by Virtue of their Tenures, I am not able to say.

But against this Notion, Dr. A. is more than ordinarily Violent : He charges me with two Assertions, relating to this Parliament, which he affirms to be utterly false ; and indeed as I Expressed my self, I cannot say that they were altogether true. The words which he reflects upon are these : " Whereas before the 49th of Henry the Third, only the Bishops, and Abbots, who held of the King by their Baronies, were wont to be Summoned to Parliament, that year, when the Commons began to be Called, several of the Inferiour Clergy were called with them ; and that, for ought appears, in a larger Proportion than the Laity themselves were.

p. 435.

" Here (says Dr. A.) are two Assertions, in the last of which he is kinder to his Function than will Consist with Truth, and in the first not so just as he ought to be. For long before the 49th of Henry the Third, not Bishops, and Abbots only, but (I hope) some Priors too, were Called to Parliament. I do Confess there were ; and therefore instead of Abbots, I should have said Prelates, or Clergy ; had I expressed my self so properly as I ought to have done.

Sect. 83.

But Dr. A. goes on : " We will suppose him to have Comprehended these under Abbots, yet even thus his Account is very Defective : For not those Abbots, and BARONS (he meant PRIORS) only, who held by Barony ; (for I know no other Barons that there were before that time who held not by Barony :) " were Called, but many more than these, and OFTENTIMES the WHOLE ORDER. " The ³ first Parliamentary Summons left Calls ALL the ABBATS, and PRIORS of the DIOCESE, together with the Bishop, to it : And the Priores Installati, & Ple-num sub se Conventum habentes, are (I have shewn already) several times mentioned by Paris, as having a General Call to Parliament.

³ Vito. Jo.

What Dr. A. has shewn already, as to this Particular, has been already Considered ; and, I think, Satisfactorily Answered. As for his Assertion now advanced, " That the WHOLE ORDER, of REGULAR PRÆLATES, had, before this, been OFTENTIMES Called to Parliament ; It is an Assertion that I will then Subscribe to, when he can prove it. 'Tis true in that Summons which he mentions vi^{to}. Johan. the Bishop of Sarum is Required to cause the Abbots, and Conventual Priors of his Diocese, to be Cited to that Parliament : But when Dr. A. says that that Summons Called them All, he Mistakes himself, and misleads his Reader. The Words of that Writ are these : " The Abbats and Conventual Priors of the whole Diocese : Not ALL the Abbots, and Conventual Priors ; no, but such of them as held of the King by Barony, and stood upon the Parliament Rolls ; and so were wont to be Called to Parliament. Thus I understand that Writ, and that, among others, for this Reason, which if he apporves not, I should be glad he would give me some plain Answer to it.

Apud Seld.
part. 2. p. 607.

In the time of King Edward the Third, the Abbot of Leicester being Summon'd to Parliament, desired to be Discharged of his Attendance, because he neither Held of the King by Barony, nor after any other Manner ; nor had any of his Predecessors ever been wont to be called to Parliament, before the 49th of King Henry the Third : Quo Anno in which Year ALL the Abbots and Priors of the Kingdom of England were Voluntarie Summoniti, freely Summoned ; that is, as I understand it ; with a Liberty to Come, or not Come, as they should think fit. If

this Allegation were true (and that it was found true upon Inquiry, the King's ^{King HENRY the III.} Writ Testifies;) then 'tis plain this Abbot was neither Summoned, nor went to that Parliament, in the 6th of King John. By Consequence, the Summons then issued out, was not, as Dr. A. pretends, a General Summons of ALL the Regular Prelates; like that other here mentioned; but a Common Summons of such Parliamentary Prelates, as were wont to be Called to Parliament, in those days.

But however to allow (which yet cannot be Proved) that King John did, that Year, Summon ALL the Abbots and Priors of England, as King Henry the Third did now: Yet it is plain from the Remonstrance of the Abbot of Leicester before mentioned, and allowed of by the King upon Examination, that this was a special Case, and of very Rare Practice. It is taken notice of in that Pleading, as a singular Instance, that ALL the Abbots and Priors of England, were this year Voluntarie Summoniti; and that therefore this Abbot's being Cited then, was to be no president against him, to oblige him to come at any other time. Which being so, Dr. A. must give us some more Instances of the like kind, before he can with any Truth affirm himself, that "the WHOLE ORDER was before this OFTENTIMES Called to Parliament; or with any Justice expect that we should believe him.

Here therefore he Recurrs to M. Paris Authority, who (he says) mentions these Priors several times as having a GENERAL CALL to PARLIAMENT. Dr. A. must not forget what it is he Asserts, viz. that the WHOLE ORDER (of the Regular Prelates, Abbots and Priors) were OFTENTIMES Called to Parliament. Now if M. Paris affirms this, I must submit: But if the Historian speaks only Indefinitely of Abbots and Priors, as K. John's Writ does, not Universally of ALL the Abbots and Priors of England; Dr. A. must Excuse me if I understand him, as I do that Writ, of such Abbots and Priors only, as either by their Tenures were Obligated to Come, or as the King thought fit sometimes, by a Special Summons, to Call to Parliament.

But this is not all: " M. Paris, he says, speaks also not seldom of the Decani, ^{Sect. 84.} Archidiaconi, & alia persona Ecclesiastica, as present. Dr. W. who would be ^{Rights, &c. p. 436.} thought to know all our Historians so intimately, should methinks have had some sort of Acquaintance with the best of them, M. Paris, at least he should not, till he had Read him, have ventured to determine any thing concerning the Constituent Members of the Great Councils in Henry the Third's Time, of which we have no where so just an Account as in that Accurate Writer. Who is best acquainted with our Historians, Dr. A. or Dr. W., is a point that shall never be Disputed by me. Let Dr. A. think as highly of himself, and as meanly of Dr. W. as he pleases. It is enough that Dr. W. has Read M. Paris sufficiently, to know that Dr. A. does Egregiously mis-represent him; and to have given, I believe an abundant Proof to Convince any impartial Person that he does so.

I will rather Observe that my Expression, unaccurate as it was, in that One Word, Abbots, for Prelates; or Clergy; yet, as to the Substance of it does give the true Account of this Matter, had Dr. A. thought fit to make a fair Representation of it. From the time of the Norman Conquest, ^{Authority, &c. p. 207.} I say, p. 207. that "All the Great Men and Clergy who held by Barony, were Summon'd to these Councils: And with those all such Others also as held in Capite, were Obligated to Attend at them, whensoever their presence should be required; and particularly when the Prince wanted Money, and expected a Supply from them. For this I refer to the Charter of King John, and affirm it to have been the true Constitution of our Parliament, till about the latter End of King Henry the Third's Time.

Here therefore I fully deliver'd my Opinion, and from hence, in all Reason, Dr. A. should have taken my Sense, of the Constituent Members of our Parliaments. The Passage he ^{Authority, &c. p. 208.} Descants upon in the next page, touches this Matter only by the by; and that with the less Accuracy, because I thought I had fully Explained my meaning before. Now in the very same Opinion I continue still, only to prevent his Mistake hereafter, I will a little more fully Repeat it to him.

First then, I take it for Granted, that All the Abbots and Priors of England, were not wont to be Called to our State-Councils: The Constant Members of them were only such of These as Held of the King by Barony first, and afterwards in Capite; who only, strictly speaking, were Obligated to come to them. This we are sure was the Case from the time that we have any Records of those who were wont to be Summoned to our Parliaments; and from the ¹ Pleas of such as desired to be Discharged from this Service afterwards, we have good Ground to conclude, that the Case was the same before.

But tho' such only of the Prelates, and Clergy, were Obligated to Attend at these Great Councils, as held by these Tenures, yet if the King at any time thought fit to Summon any others, they were bound to Come; and would have been punished for their Contumacy, if they had refused so to do. This the Modus tenendi Parliamentum, intimates: And tho' that piece be of no great Antiquity it self; yet may it sometimes serve to point out to us the Antient Practice in these Matters. Let us hear what it says in the present Case: ² "To the Parliament there ought to be Summoned, and to Come, Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Priors, and such other Great Clergy-men, as hold by Barony: But no Lesser Ones, NISI EORUM PRÆSENTIA ET ADVENTUS ALIUNDE QUAM PRO TENURIS SUIS REQUIRATUR. Nec debent ejusmodi Celerici minores SUMMONERI ad PARLIAMENTUM sed REX Talibus taliter mandare BREVIA sua Rogando quod ad Parliamentum suum interressent. But the Plea of the Abbot of ³ St. James by Northampton is more full, and of better Authority; wherein 'tis expressly acknowledged, as to this matter, "Quod Omnes de Regno, de quocunque, vel qualitercunque teneant, veniant ad Citationem Domini Regis"; and that under the Pain of Contumacy, as it is before said.

Now this being so, I shall not deny but that our Kings may, and, I believe, did oftentimes call several of the Prelates to their Parliaments, who were not strictly bound by their Tenures to come to them. But that they Called the WHOLE ORDER at any time before the 49th of King Henry the Third, (the Parliament of which we are now speaking) does not yet appear to me, nor is there any thing, except that Summons of King John, Anno Regni VIto, (which in truth is nothing) to give the least Colour to such a Supposition.

That among those who held of the King, by Barony, or in Chief, and so were Obligated to come to his Parliaments, if Summoned by him; there may have been several other Clergy-men, besides Bishops, and Regular Prelates, I shall not deny. But as Dr. A's Romance of the 7411 Knights Fees Vested by the Conquerour in Parochial Churches, is an Extravagance beyond Expression; so I do not think that there were very many, whose Benefices gave them this Right, or rather laid this Obligation upon them, to come to these State-Meetings.

The Clergy then who were hitherto wont to be Summon'd to Parliament under our present Division, seem to have been these: The Bishops, Abbots, Priors, and other Clergy, who held of the King, of what Kind, or Order, soever they were; together with such other particular Persons, as our Kings, at any time, thought fit by their Writs Specially to Call to it. But for any General Summons of Deans, Archdeacons, or Proctors, either of the Chapters, or Diocesan Clergy; there was yet none, nor do I believe we shall hereafter meet with any before the 23^d of King Edward the First. To this first Charge therefore of Dr. A. let this be the Return; My Assertion, in the Substance, and Import of it, was True; let him disprove it if he can.

Seet. 86.

In his other Charge he has greater Reason against me: For indeed it does not appear that the Lower-Clergy, properly speaking, were Called to this Parliament at all; and therefore it must have been an Error in me to say not only that they were Called, but were Called in a larger Proportion than the Laity themselves were.

But will Dr. A. give me leave to say, that here again the Mistake was in the Expression more than in the Sense; and the Proposition was faulty only by the Impropriety of the Word LOWER. For of the Clergy, in general, I still think it will hold True, and that Dr. A. is very much out in the Censure of it upon that Supposition. Let us hear how he delivers his Judgment against me. "It may be the Abbots, Priors, and Deans, that held not by Barony, are Dr. W's Inferiour Clergy? He is in the Right; they were the very Persons that Dr. W. meant, tho' his Expression was not so proper as it should have been. "Let them be so, says He;

The First Edition.

" Their Number, in this Instance, did " not amount to above Eighty, whereas " the Knights, Citizens, Burgeses, and " Barons of the Cinque Ports, must have " been, Four or Fivetimes that Number.

Will Dr. A. give me leave to say, that notwithstanding his second thoughts, he is still much more out, than he will ever be able to shew me to have been, in this Computation? The Abbots, Priors, and Deans, entred upon the Roll, are 106.
 " Besides these, the Writ, I before mentioned, tells us that this year, "Omnes Ab-
 " bates, & Priores Regni, All the Abbots, and Priors of the Realm, were Summon- " ed to Parliament. So the Record speaks, and so the Learned Mr. Selden under" stood it. The Question then, is, How many Abbots, and Priors there were at " that time in England? And whether was the Greater in Proportion, the Number " of the Ecclesiasticks, with Respect to the Number of the Clergy, or the Number " of the Lay-Commons, with Respect to the whole Commons of the Realm?

To this Dr. A. roundly Replies, That the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses, and Barons of the Cinque Ports, must have been Four, or Five times that Number.
 How many they were at that Parliament, neither Dr. A. nor I, can tell. But more they cannot be supposed to have been in that time of War, and Disturbance, when some Cities, and Boroughs, (as that of London) were not Summon'd at all to it; than afterwards they were, towards the latter end of King Edward the First's Reign. Now in the 23^d of his Reign, the whole Number of the Commons called to Parliament, amounted but to about Two hundred and Thirty, and that is not Three times as many as himself Computes the present Clergy to have been. To suppose then the Laity, now Summoned, to have amounted to the same Number, that they did in that other Parliament the 23^d of Edward the First. The Question is, Whether there were not above Two hundred and thirty Abbots and Priors, at that time in England; and by consequence whether the Ec- clesiasticks then Summon'd, may not reasonably enough be Conjectured (for that is at last all, that we now pretend to on either side) to have been rather more than the Laity were? Which is the sum of what I said; and against which he has made so great, but withal so insignificant a Clamour.

Nay, but this is yet too much: For I did not say that the Clergy called to that Parliament were Absolutely more in Number than the Laity; but that they were more in Proportion: That is, that the Greatness of the Two Bodies Consider'd, the Commons and Clergy, under the Degree of Barons; the latter were called to this Parliament in a Greater Proportion, as I thought, than the former were.
 Here therefore we must again Consider, what Proportion, in point of Number, did the Clergy then bear to the Laity? I shall be thought too liberal, to allow the One, to have been One Third with Respect to the other. However let us fix here: Then, supposing, the whole Number of Commons Summon'd to this Par- liament to have been Two hundred and Thirty: The Question will be, Whether the Abbots, and Priors, under the Degree of Barons, at that time in England, did not amount to above Seventy six? 'Tis a trifling Point, and not worthy a serious Examination: Yet if Dr. A. insists upon it, I will try my Skill in Computation, and see whether I may not venture to abide by my Assertion, thus truly Represented; That the Clergy were Summon'd to Parliament in the 49th of Henry the Third, in a larger Proportion than, for ought appears, the Laity themselves were.

In the mean time, I cannot conclude this Matter, without Observing with what quickness Dr. A. is pleased to take me up here, for Asserting that very thing, which I really thought, he had hitherto been endeavouring to Prove to have been the constant Practice for Six hundred years before, viz. that the Lower-Clergy were Summon'd at this time to Parliament. " Were they so? says this Blustering, Impetuous Author; " How came then our Histories and Records not to have " mentioned it? From none of which can it be learn'd certainly, that there " were any of the Clergy Called to this Meeting below Abbots and Priors, but " Five Deans only. It may be, many of Inferiour Rank might be Summoned too;
 " but if they were, 'tis more than can be proved; for there is not, I believe,
 " the least Hint of such a Summons remaining. Thus Dr. A. falls upon me, not Considering that he, at the same time, stabs himself through my Sides. * The K. HENRY the III. Lower-Clergy were not Called to this Parliament : * If they were, 'tis more than can be proved. * Our Histories and Records make no mention of it. So says Dr. Rights, p. 310. A. The same say I of all the Other Parliaments preceding : There is no more Proof of their being Called to them, than to this. And therefore from Dr. Brady's Introduc. p. 144, 153. his own Arguing, I will, for once, beg leave to Conclude, that they were not Called, as yet, to any of our Parliaments at all. Authority, p. 208. "That I should now go on to the remaining Parliaments of this Reign; but before I do that, I must remove one other Stop which Dr. A. has thrown in my Way. Having shewn, as he supposes, that the Commons were called to Parliament before this time; he concludes in these Words: "It cannot be therefore said that the Commons were first call'd to Parliament in the 49th of Henry the Third, but that they then, or thereabouts, began to be Summoned thither Uninterruptedly, and to grow a fixed, and necessary part of their Meeting. The Learned Advocate, I know, on the other side has doubted (and Dr. W. therefore is very pardonable in doubting after him) whether from the 49th of Henry the Third, to the 18th of Edward the First, ANY SUMMONS went out, because the Writs are lost; but this I think will bear no doubt: For that loss, as it happens is pretty well supplied by our Histories, and I shall produce the passages from thence that prove it.

What Dr. A. here means, it is pretty hard to know: Whether that Dr. Brady doubted whether any Parliamentary Summons, at all, were issued out from the 49th of Henry the Third, to the 18th of Edward the First; or whether his doubt were, whether Any were issued out like those of this Parliament; to Call the Commons to it. But indeed I do not find that he doubted of either. On the contrary, he expressly proves from that very Parliament, of the 49th of Henry the Third, to the 18th of Edward the First, by many Subsequent Parliaments, under both these Kings, that the Commons (as we now understand the Word) were not Called from the time of the One, to the time of the Other. And for Dr. W. he doubts of nothing in this Case but of the Constancy of the Practice now begun; in which he is indeed out of doubt, that there was, if not a Total, yet a frequent Interruption, in it; between the two Periods, here assigned: So that, in Truth, Dr. A. does utterly Mistake, or I am sure does very much Misrepresent us both.

The Fortune of the King prevailing, the next year, over the Barons; he Asssembled his Parliament at Winchester. To it, say the 4 Annals of Waverly, were called "Omnes Magnates terræ; and particularly, on the Church part, All the Bishops, Abbots, and Priors, who held by Barony; by whose Decree the King had all the Rebels Lands Granted to him, "Unanimi Consilio & Voluntate MAGNATUM Nostrorum apud Winton Convenientium, says the Record relating to this very Parliament.

But there was more Required to Settle the Kingdom than could at that time be done by them; and therefore the Parliament was, by Consent, Adjourn'd to Westminster in the Feast of St. Edward; when all the Rest were disinherited who stood out against the King after the Battle of Lewes, as the others had been before. At Christmas following, Regionis Nobiles, says M. Westminster, came again together to Treat about the Peace of the Realm, after their accustomed manner.

The year following several Great Councils were held: 8 One at Kennilworth, on St. Bartholomew's day; where we Read of Bishops, Abbots, and Barons, Meeting, and Acting, but of none else. 9 Another at Northampton the Tuesday before All Saints: Whither the King Called the Bishops, and Abbots, Priors, Earls, and Barons. 10 A Third at Westminster after Christmas; cum Potentioribus terra sue, says M. Westminster. To all which Wykes adds a Fourth at St. Edmundsbury, on the Octaves of the Purification; to which the King, by his Writs, Call'd all the Magnates Regni, as well Ecclesiastical Persons, as Seculars.

'Tis true, as to the first of these, the Record which relates to it after having mentioned the Common-Assent, and Common-Counsel of the Bishops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, and Barons, adds, & TUZ AUTRES; And All Others. And these Others, some will have to be the Commons there Assembled. To this Dr. Brady gives another Sense, more agreeable to the Practice of those times, that they were the King's Tenants in Chief, or by Knights Service. I meddle not not with the Dispute; it is enough for me that they were not the Lower-Clergy; K. HENRY or, at least, that it does not appear that they were. the III.

How the Grant made to the King by the Legate Ottobon, in the Pope's Name, upon the Clergy, about this time, was raised, I cannot certainly tell. But by his Order ¹ dated at London, Idus Julij 1267, and directed to the Archbishop of York, the Bishops of Durham, and Carlisle, and to all the Abbots, Priors, Deans, Arch-Deacons, Rectors, Vicars, and Other Prelates of the Church, within their several Diocesses, desiring and admonishing them to raise a Subsidy for making Peace between the King and his Barons, it seems to have been transacted in their several Diocessan Synods. This Subsidy, as appears by some ² Other Instruments, was a Tenth imposed upon both Provinces, and Consented to, in Obedience to the Pope's Order, by both. ^{1267. Sect. 90. Regist. W. Giffard. Arch. Ebor. fol. 44. Ibid. fol. 44. 81, 84, 97.}

Upon the Octaves of St. Martin, 1267. the Parliament met at Marleberg, where the Famous Statute of that Place was made. In the Preface to which all that is said of the Members of that Assembly is this; that there were met together the "Discretiores Regni, tam Majores, quam Minores. And who these were; that they were the Greater, and Lesser Barons, of whom King John's Charter speaks, two Antient Authors will tell us: the ³ One of which says, that "de Consilio DISCRETORUM, & Unanimi — Voluntate MAGNATUM Suorum, he made these Statutes: The ⁴ Other names the very Person who drew them; viz. Robert Walerand, "per comune Assent des GRAUNTZ — Seignours due Realme. To which last let me add the Authority of another accurate ⁵ Writer, where speaking of the Parliament of Marleberg, he has these express Words; "in quo de assensu Comitum & Baronum, edita sunt Statuta que ad Marleberg vocantur; These are the very Words of the ⁶ Continuer of M. Paris, and were probably transcribed from him. ^{Walt. Henr. ingford. lib. iii. c. p. 23. pag. 588. Britton. cap. 36. fol. 95. b. Walsingham Hypodigm. Neustr. pag. 471. Mat. Paris. pag. 1006.}

It is in the next Year following that our Historians Generally Place the Legantine Synod of Cardinal Ottobon: At this, ⁷ One tells us were Present, All the Prelates of England, Wales, Scotland, and Ireland. ⁸ Another Explains who those Prelates were; All, as well Greater, as Lesser, "qui quocunque Prælationis titulo præsidere Videbantur. And a ⁹ third Enumerates the Particulars; Five Arch Bishops, besides a multitude of Bishops, Abbats, and Other Prelats. But this by the way. As for the Parliaments of this Year, in which our present Concern lies, the ¹⁰ Waverly Annals tell us that one was held at Northampton, where the King, and Other Great Men, met; Another at Winchester, the Members of it not described. ^{1268. Sect. 91. Mat. West. pag. 400. Chron. Th. Wykes. pag. 85. Petr. de Rckham. ad Ann. M. S. 10 Annal. Waverl. pag. 224. Comp. Everiden ad Ann.}

Of the former of these two, that at Northampton, ¹¹ Wykes says, that there came to it the Legat, the Bishop of Winchester, and an Innumerable Multitude of the English Militia. Among these he in the next Words speaks, of the Earls of Gloucester, and Warren, William Lord of Valence, and Other Milites, to the Number of 120, who took the Cross upon them. But Dr. A's Carelessness, (for I am unwilling to Call it Prevarication) in the Representation of this Matter, is inexcusable: Where speaking of this Parliament of Northampton, he tells us ¹² Wyke's Words are, "that the King convened all the Prelats, and Great Men, nec non cunctarum Regni sui civitatum pariter & Burgorum potentiores; Confluente pariter Plebejæ Multitudinis (i. e. of the Commonalty of every County) turba non modica. ^{12 Rights, &c. pag. 310. 13 Wykes Chron. pag. 88. 89.}

The truth of the Matter is this: ¹³ The Year following, 1269. the King being returned into England, On the xiiijth. of October Resolved to remove the Reliques of K. Edward the Confessor out of the Old Shrine in which they lay, and to put them in a more noble Repository. To Grace the Solemnity of this Translation, he called together says the Historian, ¹⁴ All the Prelats, and Great Men, together with the Chief of all the Cities, and Burroughs of his Realm. Besides these, there came together (Un-Called) Plebejæ Multitudinis Turba non modica; Dr. Atterburies Parliamentary Commons; and in the Presence of All these this Translation was made, in the Conventual Church of Westminster. ^{1269. Sect. 91. CONVOCATIS universis Angliæ PRÆLATIS & MAGNATIBUS, nec non cunctarum Regni sui Civitatum pariter & Burgorum POTENTIORIBUS: CONFLUENTE pariter Plebejæ Multitudinis turba non modica.}

What Wykes thus Relates, the ¹⁵ Annals of Waverly more fully distinguish. They tell us, that in Order to this Solemnity, a Convention, or Assembly, was held of Bishops, Earls, Barons, Abbats, Priors, and Many Others. ¹⁶ The Translation being ing over, the NOBLES began, according to Custom, to Treat after a Parliamentary manner of the Affairs of the King, and Kingdom: And by the Consent of the GREAT MEN, a xxth Part of all the Movables of the Laity was Granted to him; and the same Lords and Prelates who gave this Money, assigned a great Part of it, to the Intended Expedition of Prince Edward to the Holy Land. Here is Wyke's distinct Account of the Translation, and of the Parliament. To one a Great Company of the People flowed together, and so were present with the Prelates, and Great Men, at it. But in the Other none but the Nobles, Majores Regni, Proceres & Prælati, are once mentioned. Let Dr. A. therefore tell us with what Conscience he could make so false and delusory a Representation of it.

But I must look Back to an Antecedent Parliament of this Year, which, to follow Dr. A's mistaken Application of this History to the Parliament of Northampton, the Year before, I was forced to pass by. Fifteen days after Easter the King having called together a Great Multitude Magnatum Angliæ, of the Great Men of England, treated a long time cum proceribus, as it was Customary to do. In this Parliament I conceive it was, that the xxth was Granted to the King for his Expedition to the Holy Land. † For by a Writ dated the vijth of August, for Swearing those who were to Chuse the Assessors of it in the County of Worcester, and the time limited, within which they were to Execute their Commission, viz. the next day after Michaelmas; 'tis plain the Grant could not be made in the Parliament in October following, as it must have been, if done in that Other Council to which the Chronicle of Wykes applies it. This xxth the Writ tells us was Granted to the King a Magnatibus & Aliis regni nostri fidelibus. To all which, let me add this Remark of the same Historian, that the Earl of Gloucester, being ill advised, about this time, refused to come to the Parliaments, of the King, and the Nobility, ad Parliamenta Regis & Procerum; to which he was called, and among which He ought to have been the Chief.

It was about the time of the latter of these Parliaments, in October, that the King pretending that the Triennial Tenth Granted him by the Pope, and now Ending, had not been Collected according to its full Value, demanded in Recompence of that Loss, the Continuance of it for a fourth Year. In Order hereunto, a General Assembly of the Bishops and Clergy met at the New Temple London. The Bishops were willing to Gratify the King in his Demand: But the Body of the Clergy Appealed against it. This Eversden tells us, and this is all the Account that I have any where met with in our Historians of this Matter. But the very Copy of their Appeal is fallen into my Hands: It mentions the Abbots, Priors, Rectors, and Vicars, being Assembled for this Subsidy; and that, as the Subscription shews, out of both Provinces. But there were no Bishops of York Province present; so their Appeal, was made before those of the Province of Canterbury only. The piece is a Curiosity that deserves to be known; and I shall therefore insert it in my Appendix, as it stands in an antient Manuscript of Corpus Christi College in Oxford.

Ann. 1270.

And now the time drew on, when the Expedition was to begin to the Holy Land. To determine about this, and some other Affairs of the Realm; a Parliament was held of all the Prelates, and Great Men of England, xv days after Easter; where the E. of Gloucester, and some Others of the Nobles not agreeing, the Matter was deferr'd to the Octaves of St. John Baptist. Then almost all the Great Men again Assembled, to treat of the same Matters: And by the good Conduct of the King of the Romans, all things were Accommodated, and the Earl came to the Parliamentary Treaties of the King, and Lords, as he was wont to do. What the Great Resolution here taken was, we may learn from the King's Letters Pattents, dated ivth of August following: Where he says, that tho' he was desirous to Go, together with his Eldest Son, to the Assistance of the Holy Land, yet because it seemed to the Prelates, Great Men, and Commonalty of the Realm to be neither Expedient, nor Safe, therefore by the Advice of the said Prelates, and Great Men, he committed that Affair to the Prince alone.

In the Parliament after Easter, the Bishops Granted to the King a Twentieth of their own Lands, and of the Lands of their Villains. This the King Raised, even upon such Bishops as were not present, nor had Consented to it. All the Ceremony that He used was to send his Letters to them to acquaint them with what the Others had done, and to desire them to Consent to the same; One of which, for the Curiosity, more than Pertinence, of the thing to my present Argument, I have inserted into my Appendix. That

That which will more deserve to be taken notice of is, that the King desiring ^{K. HENRY the III.} this xxth not only of the Bishops, but of the whole Clergy of England, the Bishops called them together for this End, in their Respective Diocesan Synods. The answer which those ^{Ibid. fol. 98. a. Et 107. a.} of York made, was to this Effect, that they would follow the Example of the Clergy of the Province of Canterbury, which being much larger than theirs, they thought it was also proper should first begin. To this I find the Clergy of our Province agreed, and made a present Payment of it. This I conceive they did in their Diocesan Synods, having not met with any Account of a Provincial Convocation called for this Purpose. The Clergy of the ² Diocese of York, I am sure were Assembled for this End, as I shall presently shew; And we cannot doubt but that the rest of the Clergy of that Province were Called together, in their respective Dioceses, after the same manner. From all which it appears that the Lower Clergy in this whole Transaction, were neither Present at these Parliaments, nor did meet in their Provincial Synods, as Attendants upon them; so that Dr. A. must either-way be mistaken in his Opinion with Relation to them.

After Christmas, another Parliament was held by ³ the Great Men, at London, ^{Annal. Wi-gorn. pag. 499.} about the Octaves of Epiphany, and the Disinherited were Restored to their Lands again. The second Week in Lent following, a Convocation of the Bishops met at Reading, to treat of the Jurisdiction of the Church of Canterbury, whether they ought to Obey the Chapter of Canterbury or not. ⁴ The Occasion of it was this: ^{Petr. de Tckham ad Ann. Chron. Wykes, pag. 95.} In January this Year Walt. de la Wyle Bishop of Salisbury died. Into his Place was Chosen Robert de Withampton Dean of the same Church. The See of Canterbury being Vacant, he was Confirmed by the Chapter of Canterbury, "which Chapter, " says my Author, has, and Exercises, All, and All manner of Jurisdiction in a " Vacancy, that the Archbishop does when the See is full. But this was a Jurisdiction, which, it seems, the Chapter had not been wont to Exercise before. The King therefore Refused upon their Certificat to Restore the Temporalities to him. Yet the Monks went on, and Summon'd all the Provincial Bishops to come to Canterbury, on a Certain Day, there to Consecrate their Bishop, whom they had Confirmed. The Bishops met at Reading to Consult of this matter; and there resolved to stand upon their Authority, and not to Obey the Chapter's Summons in this Particular. ⁵ To put the Whole of this Matter together: The 17th of May, the Day appointed for this Consecration, being Come, only One Bishop appear'd at Canterbury; the Rest had Appealed to Rome, and so the Consecration proceeded not. There was then no Pope there, as there was no Archbishop here. But the Cardinals determined on the Chapter's side, that, in the Vacancy, the Confirmation, and Ordering of the Consecration of Bishops, belongs to the Chapter of Canterbury as Petrus de Tckham Reports the Matter. ^{Petr. de Tckham loc. cit. 1271.}

The Clergy of the Province of Canterbury, had not only agreed to pay the xxth demanded of them for the Expedition to the Holy Land, but paid it in too, before those of York had finally agreed to it. To settle this Matter, ⁶ the Archbishop by his Official ^{Reg. Giffard. Ebor. Arch. fol. 107. a.} Summon'd the Clergy of his Diocese to appear in the Conventual Church of St. Leonard at York, upon All Saints day, to agree to this Contribution. But neither then did they fully conclude of it. The King had sent down two Persons to lay this Tax upon them; but by the Interposition of the Archbishop, was prevail'd with to Recall them; ⁷ In the Presence of those very Persons (if I take the Pro- ^{Ibid. fol. 98. a. Append. ad. Ann. 1271.} cess aright) He press'd his Clergy with all Earnestness to agree to what was demanded of them. But they still persisted in their former Resolution, " That " they would follow the Clergy of the Province of Canterbury, which was much " larger than theirs; and of whose Grant, it should seem by this Answer they were not yet thoroughly Convinced. For this Reason the Archbishop wrote to his Archdeacon of York, who was then at London, to Certify to Him what was Generally done in that Province, and what he would advise should be done in his Own. By the same Letter it appears, that a Parliament was held the Week after Midlent, about the xixth of March; in which He left it to the same Person to Excuse his Absence. The date of this Instrument is vi Kal. Januarij, or Decemb. 27th. Pontificatus Vto. Archbishop Giffard was translated from Bath and Wells, October the 9th. and Enthroned November the 1st. 1267. So that this Report must have been made Anno 1271. after the Meeting of the Clergy in November, of which I before spake.

We are now come to the last Year of this long Reign: in which some Disturbances at Normich gave occasion to a three-fold Assembly; a Diocesan, a Provincial, and a Parliamentary Council.¹ The first was held by Roger Bishop of Normich at Eye, not long after the Tumult there, August the 29th. In which the Bishop and his Clergy Excommunicated all those who were concerned in the Insult made upon the Priory, and in the mischiefs which followed thereupon. This Sentence was Confirm'd in a Council of the Bishops at London, October the 18th. Before which, on September the 1st. the King held his Parliament at St. Edmunds Bury upon the same Occasion, and call'd to it "Universos totius Anglia Proceres & Magnates, says Eversden; all the Barons of England; and de Consilio Magnatum Anglia, say the Normich Annals, by the Advice of the same Great Men, went himself to Normich to Enquire into the Matter.

Hitherto then it does not appear that the Lower Clergy were so much as Once Summon'd to Parliament, during the Reign of this Prince. The Bishops, with such Abbots, and Priors, and Other Clergy Men, as were either by their Tenures Obligated, or else were sometimes, by Special Writ from the King, Required, to Come to it, being All of the Ecclesiastical State, that as yet met in those Great Councils.

In the beginning of the next Reign, Dr. A. thinks he has a full Testimony for his Commons in Parliament; but the Inferior Clergy were not there. "In his first Year (says ² He) while he was yet Abroad in his Expedition, we find the Commons, (as we now understand the Word) Present in Parliament; and that in a Greater Number than they were in the 49th of his Father. But is Dr. A. sure that this was a Parliament? If so, I would be glad to know by whose Commission it was call'd? Or whether the Nobility had, of themselves, Power, in Law, without any Commission, in the King's Absence, to Call a Parliament? The plain Matter of Fact was this. King Henry the III^d. died November the 16th. His Son King Edward 1st. was absent in the Holy Land.³ Before the King was buried, the Earl of Gloucester in presence of the Archbishop of York, and Other Bishops, Earls, and Barons, swore to maintain the Peace of the Realm: so did all the Rest of the Lords and Bishops, who were there Assembled. After this they met together in a Greater Body at the ⁴ New Temple London. There they made a New Great-Seal, and under that, appointed Guardians and Ministers, to preserve the Treasure of the King, and the Peace of the Kingdom. After Hilary they all met again; and then caused All the Prelates of England, and all the Great Men, viz. Archbishops, Bishops, Earls, and Barons, Abbots, and Priors; four Knights out of Every County; and as many out of Every City to come to Westminster: And there they All again in Presence of the Archbishop of York, Roger Mortimer, and Robert Burnell Elect Bishop of Bath and Wells, who were appointed Guardians of the Realm, swore the same thing. There they made Walt. de Merton Lord Chancellor, and Commanded him to Reside at Westminster till the King's Return. And, lastly there they agreed, that there should be no Justices Itinerant in the King's Absence, but only the Justices of the Bench.

This was the Meeting which Dr. A. Calls a Parliament; but which was indeed a Convention of the Nobles, and of such a certain Number of Knights out of Every County and City, as they thought fit to Call to them, to secure the Right of the King, and Peace of the Kingdom: And the Annals of Waverley, which in Other Places Use the Proper term Parliamentum, here (as also those of Worcester do) call it a Convocation, as knowing it indeed to be no Other.

I will not now dispute who the Milites were of whom these Histories speak; tho' I look upon them to have been the King's Tenants in Capite; under the Degree of Barons. I will only leave it to Dr. A. to Consider these two things; If this were a proper Parliament, and if these were not such Knights, but proper Members of Parliament, as we now speak; then, 1st. How the City-Members, as well as the County Representatives, came to be call'd Knights, and not by their proper term Citizens. And, 2^{dly}. How the Burroughs came to be forgotten; who I suppose did not stand upon their Priviledges, and Refuse to come, to Parliament; as He confidently tells us, without any manner of Authority, the Clergy did.⁵ His Words are these: "But it does not appear that the Inferior Clergy were at this Meeting, who, it seems, standing upon their Priviledges, and Exemptions, were not so easy to be dealt with, in this Respect, as those of the Laity were. If he has any Authority for this Suggestion, let him shew us, us, that they were Call'd to this Meeting, but that for the Reason which he alludes They Refused to Come. If he has none, let him Confess that He here wrote History upon his own Fancy; and gave a Reason for the Absence of the Lower Clergy for which he had no Ground, but the Exigence of his Cause, and a happy Invention in the defence of it.

The Bishops being come together upon the Occasion of this Meeting, agreed about the same time to the Subsidy which the Pope had Granted to the King, and his Brother, to help defray the Charges they had been at, in their Expedition to the Holy Land. As for the Inferior Clergy, they were not so much as ask'd their Consent, but the Bishops having agreed to comply with the Pope's Grant, his Nuntio's, by his Order, oblig'd them to do likewise. Here therefore was no Assembly, either Convocational, or Parliamentary, in which they were Consulted; nor were they, tho' on such a reasonable Occasion, Called together, even to the Granting of their Own Money.

The next Year, tho' it affords no Parliament, yet presents us with a proper and Remarkable Council. Archbishop Kilmarby being come from Rome, was Consecrated at Canterbury the first Sunday in Lent. In May He Received his Pall, and was inthroned about the 7th. of September following. The same day he issued out his Mandats for a Convocation to meet at the New Temple London, the Wednes- day after the Feast of St. Denis, October 11th. Super Statu Ecclesiarum, & Ecclesi- asticarum libertatum, ac aliis quibusdam Articulis, Nobiscum tractaturi. To this He Summon'd the Bishops of his Province, and Commanded that every one of them should bring along with him three or four Persons de Majoribus, Discretio- ribus, & Prudentioribus, sue Ecclesie & Dioceseos, by whose Counsel the Business for which they met, might more happily be Expedited.

What the Articles were which chiefly fell under the debate of this Assembly, we are no where told; but if I might be allow'd to Conjecture, I should think that one of the Chief was, concerning the Peace, and Security of the Scholars in the University of Oxford. There had happen'd not long before great Disturbances among them; insomuch that the Place was left almost desolate, and in Danger of being totally forsaken. This was thought a matter of such Public Concern, that a Writ was issued out in the Kings Name to the Archbishop, August 12th, to take Care of it. The Archbishop transmitted his Orders to all his Suffragans thereupon; and we can hardly doubt, but that now it was brought under a Publick Consideration before them. To encourage our University the more, not only the King and this Archbishop took such Care of it, as I have said; But in the Council of Reading, six Years after, a Provincial Constitution was pass'd in favour of it; and very particular Priviledges were therein Granted to it. A Copy of this Constitution being fallen into my Hands, I shall take the Liberty in Duty to a Place to which I owe so much Respect, to publish it in my Appendix: And by the Addition of so Authentick, and Memorable an Order, of that Venerable Assembly, make some amends for depriving it of those Canons which the Liberality of our late Editors have without all Reason ascribed to it; as by an Irrefragable Autho- rity, I shall hereafter be forced to do.

The Year following King Edward was Solemnly Crown'd at Westminster, Aug- ust the 19th. He came into England, August the 2d. Made his Entry into London, August the 18th. And was the next day Crown'd with his Queen. To this Ceremony of his Entry and Coronation, flock'd together not only the Citizens of London, but all the Barons of the Realm, both Clergy and Laity, says Wikes; who, as well for the Novelty of the Sight, as for the Honour of their Prince, were Gathered together, per Evocationem Regiam: For to those I referr the Kings Call; not to the Turba which follows; tho' the Pointing of the History, as it now stands, turns it to the Other, and, I think, the wrong Sense.

Besides these, there came to this Solemnity a Multitude of Others from all Quarters. The City of London was Richly adorn'd; The Citizens were all in their best Apparel; Many Pageants were Erected; and in, short, the Entry was made upon Saturday, and the Coronation Solemnized upon the Sunday following. The King appear'd in Glory, "Coram Regni sui Proceribus: Nor was there wanting, together with the Citizens of London, those of the Other Cities and Towns of the Realm, who seem'd to outvie one another, in their Ornaments, and Dresses, upon that Occasion.

K. EDWARD the 1st. Will the Reader excuse me for transcribing such impertinent Stuff? But it was necessary to shew him Another of Dr. A's Parliaments. This, and this only Confluence, is the Assembly which he calls the Parliament of 1274. and from Wykes, delivers in such a formal manner to Us. ¹ "The Assembly that met per Evocationem Regiam, upon E. the 1st. Return into England, was composed of Comitum, Baronum, & Militum Copiosa Caterva; besides the Representatives of the City of London; & Caterarum Civitatum & Oppidorum totius Regni; to wit (says he) of such as sent Members to Parliament. But who told him, that the Citizens and Towns-folk who came to this Sight, were only of such Places, as sent Members to Parliament? This again is a New-Comment, for which he has no Authority; but that which never fails him at a push, his own Invention.

About the beginning of Lent, the Archbishop held an Ecclesiastical Council; concerning the Relief of the Holy Land, and the Affairs of the Church. To this the Bishop of Worcester, being Indisposed, sent his (a) Proxy: But what Resolutions were taken, or what Affairs were done there, I have not found.

(a) Registr. Giffard, fol. 48. a. 1275. Sect. 98. ² 2d. Instit. p. 156. In the last Year Dr. A. produced a strange Assembly of People, under the Name of a Parliament. He has now a true One, and that (as He might have observed from the Preamble to the Statutes of it) the first of this King: ² Son primer Parliament General apres son Coronement; are the Words of the Record. Who were call'd to it, on the Lay-side, has been a matter of Dispute, which I shall not Engage in. But on the Clergy, the very Record Cited by ³ Dr. A. is clear against his Notion; the Statutes being said expressly to have been made by the Assent of the Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, and Priors; and no Others so much as Pretended to have been there.

⁴ Registr. Giffard, Vigorn. fol. 50. a. Append. ad Ann. 1274. The Writ of Summons to this Parliament, I suppose, is lost; but ⁴ the Writ of Prorogation to the Archbishop of Canterbury, remains: And that Recites the King's Intention to have held it, cum Prelatis, & Magnatibus, on the Quindene of the Purification; but that for Certain Causes he had Prorogued it to the Morrow after Claus. pasch. and therefore Required the Bishop to be present at that time to Treat and Ordain, una Cum Prelatis, & Magnatibus Regni, as it a Second time Runs.

If after these Records it be needful to hear our Historians in this Case, they All close in with the same Language. XV days after Easter, a famous and solemn Parliament, was held at Westminster, ⁵ Congregatis totius Regni MAJORIBUS, tam VVykes, p. 102. "Secularibus quam personis Ecclesiasticis; says One. ⁶ "Facta Communi Convocatione Omnium MAGNATUM Regni, says Another. ⁷ "Rex ad Parlamentum Westmonaster. Omnes NOBILES Regni sui jussit Congregari, says a Third. A ⁸ Fourth, ⁷ Mat. West. pag. 407. "Facta Convocatione Omnium MAGNATUM Regni. Not one that I know of, dissenting from this Language.

In October following, Another Parliament was held. To that (as to the foregoing) Regni PROCERES jusserat Evocari, say the ⁹ Waverly Annals. And who the PROCERES were, they particularly tell us, Archbishops, Bishops, Earls and Barons. ¹⁰ Wikes calls them the MAGNATES: so does ¹¹ Eversden: The (a) Worcester Annals speak of the Archbishops, Earls, Barons, and All the Great Men of the Kingdom, as present at it.

But that which is more Considerable, is the ¹² Proxy of the Archbishop of York, still Remaining, to this very Parliament, and framed upon the Form of the King's Writ: Wherein he Empowers his Official to Appear in Parliament for him, and to concur in what the King should there Treat, and Ordain, cum Regni PROCERIBUS & PRELATIS; Who therefore were to be sure the proper Constituent Members of it.

The King having here obtain'd a xvth of the Temporality; call'd together before him the Bishops of the Realm, with totius Cleri MAJORIBUS, All the Greater Clergy, who were Summon'd to Parliament, and ask'd a Voluntary Contribution of them. But they neither thinking it fit to Grant such a Benevolence without consulting their Clergy, nor yet totally to deny the King, agreed, before Easter following, to Call together the Clergy of their several Diocesses, and to Consult with them about it; and to intimate to the King their Resolution, within xv Days after Easter next. How they perform'd this Promise, ¹³ the King's Writ of the next Year will, in part, inform Us: where having Recited the xvth Granted by the Parliament, it takes Notice of the Archbishops and his Suffragans Voluntary Contribution; and declares that it should not be drawn into Custom.

What the Method was which was taken in the Other Province for this Affair, I cannot tell; but do think that there also it was transacted wholly in the Diocesan Synods. Of that of York, the Case is clear; ¹ The Clergy met at Pontfract, and Granted a Tenth to the King; those of the Archdeaconary of Richmond Excepted; as by the Instruments themselves yet Remaining, does plainly appear.

But before I leave this part of our History, I must take Notice of one Capital Error, so often Repeated by ² Dr. A. and employed to so many Purposes by Him, that one would think he should have been very secure of the Truth of a Fact which He intended to lay so Great a Stress upon. That which he Affirms is this, that it was agreed in the Council at Reading that the Clergy of the Diocese should appear (not by their Arch-deacons) but by two Proctors of their Own, which (says he) I suppose, has ever since been Constantly Practised.

This p. 10. * He applies to their Synodical Meetings, and that not only as to their Representing of the Clergy, but for a Power of Treating with the Bishops, p. 11. * Pag. 38. He proves by it another Point; Of the Clergys Customary Meeting in Convocation, at the same time that the King held his Parliament. An Assertion as false, as the Proof of it is feeble and fallacious. * Pag. 39. He cites it to shew that the Numbers of the Lower-Clergy Called by the Archbishop to his Parliamentary Convocations, had born some Proportion all along to those of the Lower Laity, called at the same time to Parliaments. * Pag. 219. 220. He finds out no less than three several Reasons, why the Archbishop should, at this time, make such a Constitution in this Synod. * Pag. 303. He affirms that the Constitution of Reading (so often Cited) first made distinct Proctors for the Rural Clerks of every Diocese, a fix'd and necessary part of the Clergies Parliamentary Assemblies; that this was done not as a Privilege, but a Burden to the Clergy; Who were more Easy, as to their Charges, while the Arch-deacons were Commissioned to Act for them.

And now, would One not think, that Dr. A. should have been well assured that some such Constitution as this had certainly been made in the Council of Reading? And yet, after all, it is clear, even to Demonstration, that no such thing was thought of in that Synod. I insist not upon the other M. S. S. of these Constitutions tho' I have Examined several of Good Antiquity, and not found this Chapter in any One of them. I appeal to a Transcript made the very same Year, and probably within few Weeks, after that Synod met; That of the ³ Registry of Worcester: which precisely contains those Constitutions, and those only which have been publish'd in Sir William Dugdale's Copy of that Council; and wants all those Additional Articles, which the Editor of it, to whom Dr. A. Referrs, has (I know not by what Authority) Connected to the true Constitutions of it.

It was both the Law, and Practise of those Times, for the Bishops within a certain Term after the End of every Provincial Council, to Assemble their Clergy, and to Publish, or cause to be Publish'd, the Constitutions made in these Provincial Synods to them. This Order the Archbishop in Effect Renew'd in this very Synod, Cap. de senten. Excomm. publ. denuntiand. which ought to be placed (as in the Register of Worcester it is) in the Close of the Acts of this Council. Now as we cannot doubt but that for this End every Bishop had a Copy of the Constitutions which were here made, to carry, or send into his Diocese, so we may venture to conclude that the Copy Entred this same Year, and that within six Weeks after the Council was ended, into the Register of the Bishop of Worcester, ⁴ was taken from that which He brought with him to Publish, or Cause to be Published, in that Diocese. Here therefore we have an Evidence, beyond denial of the Falsity of Dr. A's Supposition; viz. That the Council of Reading made any such Appointment as he, so often, descants upon: And then the Foundation failing, all his Imaginary Reasons for the making of it, and a Great part of his Consequences too which He builds upon it, must fail also.

When this Constitution was truly made, has been probably enough conjectured by a * Learned Writer on this Subject. To that I Referr Dr. A. Only I must beg leave to add, that before I allow of any such Uses as he pretends to make of it, I must see it better proved than yet it has been, that any such Constitution was made even then, when that Other Author supposes it to have been: For hitherto I have not found it in any Ms. Copy that I have Examined, of our Provincial Constitutions.

Dr. Kennet.

It is plain then that there was no such Constitution published in the Council of ^KEDWARD Reading as Dr. A. pretends; I add, that neither did things pass that Year so, as, ^{the 1st.} in Consequence of this supposed Constitution, He would make us believe that they ^{Sect. 102.} did. ^{Rights, &c.} Dr. A's. Scheme is this; "that the Council of Reading order'd that ^{p. 219. 220.} "two Proctors should be Elected by the Clergy of every Diocese, and sent up to ^{Compare, 303.} "Represent them in the next Congregation of the Clergy to be held with the Next Parliament: And from thenceforward he takes it for Granted that such "Proctors were constantly Returned to all the Clergies Parliamentary Meetings; and therefore to be sure to the next of all, to which, if he be in the Right, they were particularly Summon'd.

The Words of the Constitution are these, Duo Electi ad Minus, that two at least should be chosen by the Clergy of every Bishoprick: The Number was not yet fix'd, as neither was it intirely settled a long time after. Dr. A. therefore is again in the Wrong when He represents this as the Stated measure, and manner of Representing the Clergy; which the very Words of the Constitution shew was but now beginning to be pitch'd upon; and not yet brought to any Certain or Regular Proportion. * And himself Observes that above ten Years after, Anno ^{Rights, &c.} 1290 more than two were, if not directed to be sent to the Synod at Ely, yet at ^{p. 39.} least were Allow'd to be deputed thither.

But his History is more faulty: For at Michaelmas the Parliament met, and the Bishops and Prelates came, as usually, to it. But the Lower-Clergy were not there, either in Parliament, or Convocation, as the History of what pass'd there does manifestly declare. ² Now that the Archbishop in his Letter dated November ^{Regist. Peck-} viith. (immediately after this Parliament) clearly shews: where he ^{ham. fol. 165.} ^{a. Append. ad} ^{Ann. 1279.} recounts how that the Laity, in Parliament, had Granted a Subsidy to the King; that the Bishops had set an Example in this Matter to their Clergy; and therefore Requires his Suffragans to Call their Clergy together in their several Dioceses, and to Excite them to a liberal Contribution. All which had been utterly needless, had the Convocation been sitting at the same time with this Parliament; and so the Proctors of the Clergy been there, in a Readiness to have done that together in their Provincial Council, which was here Required to be done by Every Bishop in his Diocesan Synod. But I proceed:

The account of what the Clergy would do, was Order'd to be sent to the next Provincial Council after Hilary, by the Bishops of the Diocese, or by special Proctors of their Own deputed for this End, to make Report of their Resolution in this Particular. It does not appear which of these the Clergy Chose: but having declined to Grant any thing that time, 'tis most likely they left it to their Bishops to make a Report of their Refusal.

Upon this, the Archbishop and Bishops, (at that Synod as I conceive) agreed ^{1280.} to have the Clergy Call'd again together, and that their Answer should now be Return'd to the next Parliament, which was to meet after Easter. Anno 1280. So the ³ Archbishop speaking of their Grant Implies; And our Histories tell us, ^{Registrum} that then the Archbishop of Canterbury, pro se, & Clero, Granted a xvth. for three ^{Peckham, fol.} Years to Come. Yet it does not appear that the Clergy were either at that Par- ^{25. a.} liament, or assembled in Convocation during the time of the Parliament, any more than they had been the Michaelmas before.

As for those of the Other Province, The Clergy of York met in their Diocesan ^{Fin. 9. Edw.} Synod, February 9th. and there agreed to a Benevolence. The ^{1. m. 14. de} ^{Decima Colli-} ^{enda. Pryme's} ^{Records. iii.} ^{Vol. p. 275.} ^{Regist. Gif-} ^{ard. Wigorn.} ^{fol. 108. a.} ^{1281.} ^{Sect. 103.} ^{Regist. Peck-} ^{ham. fol. 175.} ^{176. Vid. Ap-} ^{pend. ad Ann.} ^{1281.} ^{M. West. ad} ^{Ann. 1281.} ^{Append. ad} ^{Ann. 1281.} ⁱⁿ Other Bishopricks probably did likewise; so that to be sure they Attended not upon either the One, or Other, of these Parliaments.

Dr. A. then is utterly out in his first Attempt to bring the Proctors of the Lower-Clergy to his Imaginary Parliamentary Convocations. ⁵ What that Assembly was, which was Order'd to meet at Lincoln sometime before Christmas, this same Year, Jo. E- ^{versden} tells us: It was for the Consecration of the Bishops of Lincoln, and St. David, which was solemnly perform'd there.

Upon the viith. of October, the next Year, the Archbishop of Canterbury held his Provincial Council at Lambeth; and summon'd not only the Bishops, ⁶ but the other Prelates of his Province; the Deans of Collegiate and Cathedral Churches, with the Proctors of the Chapters, to it. But to the utter Ruine of Dr. A's. Hypothesis, the Diocesan Clergy were Omitted: as all the Others had been, in the Council of Reading, but two Years before. To this Council the ⁷ Regulars refusing either to Come in Person, or to send their Proctors, were order'd to be severely punish'd for their Contumacy, by the Archbishop. How his Order was Executed

K. EDWARD in the other Dioceses, we may in some Measure judge by the Return which was made to it by the Bishop of Worcester; which because it is a Curiosity that I have not elsewhere met with, I shall offer it to the Reader in my Appendix.

This Synod was hardly over, before a new Occasion was given to the Archbishop to Summon another. Upon ¹ December the 27th He received an Order from the Pope, to use his utmost Endeavours with the King for the Enlargement of Almaric de Montford. In Order thereunto He the very next day issued out his Mandate for an Assembly of his Suffragan Bishops to be held at London, three days after the Purification. To this none but the Provincial Bishops were Summon'd: Neither the Inferior Prelates, nor Diocesan Clergy, were called to it. Not long after this, a Third Congregation was appointed to meet at Lambeth upon the Saturday next after the Jubilate, or Third Sunday after Easter, April the 25th. ² The Business of this was to Regulate the Usurpations made upon the Bishops Authority, by the Judges and Officials of the Archbishops Courts. Several Projects were drawn, and a Constitution to that Purpose was agreed upon there. ³ But by some means or other it remain'd Unsealed, and was not publish'd for many Years after.

In the interval between these two Synods, the Archbishop seems to have been abroad upon his Provincial Visitation. A little before this last met, the Troubles of Wales breaking out, the King sent a ⁴ Letter to the Archbishop, being then in the Diocese of Exeter, to hasten his Bishops to this Assembly, and therein to do what He desired of them. What they did in Pursuance hereof, I have not yet been able to discover. ⁵ Most likely it is that the Expedition of the Archbishop into Wales, and the Excommunication of Llewellyn Prince of Wales, were concerted in this meeting: For the 25th of April, this Synod was held at Lambeth: The 2d. of May the Sentence of Excommunication pass'd upon Llewellyn, was publish'd, and sent to the Bishops of the Province of Canterbury; As by the Copy of it still remaining in the Register of the Bishop of Worcester does appear.

The King was now proceeding upon his Expedition into Wales: (a) He had order'd all which ow'd him Service to be ready to attend upon him at Rothelan Castle, August the 2d. But before that, He held his Parliament at Worcester, June the 24th. To it he called his (b) Proceres or Barons, to deliberate about the War which He was then entering upon. (c) Besides these, there was the Communitas Regni too; so the King's Writs relating to this Parliament tell Us. And by their Common-Advice, He proceeded upon that troublesome Undertaking.

The War of Wales being thus begun; and the Archbishop himself being still in those Parts, (as by a ⁶ Sentence of Excommunication dated at Rothelan ii Id. Novembr. this year appears) Upon the 22d of the same Month the King issued out his ⁷ Writs to the Archbishops to Call together their Suffragan Bishops, with the Abbots, Priors, and other Heads of Religious Houses, and the Deans and Chapters of the Cathedral and Collegiate Churches within their Respective Provinces, to meet the One, at Northampton, the Other at York, on the Octaves of Hilary; there to treat with the King, or such Other Persons, as He should send thither in his stead. This Writ the Archbishop of Canterbury not only Executed, but inserted it at large into his Mandate, dated at Hereford, ivto. Id. Decembr. Here now we have a proper State-Convocation, and yet no ⁸ Proctors of the Diocesan-Clergy; not so much as the Archdeacons called to it. To this Congregation the King deputed his Commissioners, the Earl of Cornwall, the Abbot of Westminster, (who was at that time his Treasurer) and the Archdeacon of Coventre, by his Letters dated January the 5th. Regni xio. But the Assembly being but thin, they would not Grant any Aid to the King then; but resolved that the ⁹ Archbishop should Call another Meeting, wherein they would Return their Answer to what had been demanded of them.

In pursuance of this Resolution, the very next day after the Rising of that Assembly, the Archbishop issued out his Mandate, dated at Northampton, January the 21st. for a ¹⁰ second Meeting at the New Temple, London, three Weeks after Easter; Anno 1283. To this he cited all his Suffragan Bishops; with the Abbots, Priors, and Other Heads of Religious Houses; the Deans of Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, and the Archdeacons to appear before Him. As for the Other Clergy, after Michaelmas, when they were to meet again for that Purpose. And true it is that they were Summon'd again at that time to Convocation for such an End.

But then by the Orders of the Archbishop, to this Effect, the Case seems to have been thus. ² That upon the last day of the Convocation after Easter, the Clergy ³ Regist. Peck-which he had now, at this Meeting, Required of them; because that being not before acquainted with it, they had Received no Instructions, nor brought any Powers with them, concerning it. For this Cause it was agreed by the Archbishop, with the advice of his Suffragan Bishops, that they should meet again at the New Temple, London, three Weeks after Michaelmas; and that then the Proctors of the Chapters and Clergy should again come, as they had now done.

This special Order, and Resolution, I take to be that which Dr. A. has so often, and Erroneously put upon the World, for a General Constitution of the Council of Reading. The time of their Assembly drawing on, to the End the Clergy might be the better prepared for it, on the 6th. of August the Archbishop issued out a ³ second Mandate, to require his Suffragans to call together the Cler- ³ Regist. Peck-

It is more to be consider'd, that, about the same time, as our Historians in-

Having thus endeavour'd to give the best Light I could to the Perplex'd History of these three Years, let us now see what Account Dr. A. has, after his manner, presented us of them.

In the beginning of the Year 1281, April 1st. he tells us " the Kings and the Arch" bishop's Authority were jointly, and interchangeably Employ'd (in calling the " Clergy to Convocation.) The Archbishop signifying the Kings pleasure in his Let" ters Mandatory to the Clergy, and the King, on the Other side, Executing the " Archbishops Mandate, by his Own Ministers. The Case he says was thus.
" The Bishops [and their CLERGY] were Summon'd to a Synod at London by an " Injunction from the Archbishop, in which they were commanded also to meet
" at

K EDWARD " at ANOTHER TIME, and PLACE, appointed by the King. And that they might the 1st. " be sure so to do, LETTERS of CITATION are directed (not to the Bishop of " London, but) to the King himself, to be by him Communicated to the seve" ral Bishops by Royal Messengers. This odd president we have an Account of
 " in the Register of Peckham. The Citatory Letters are dated: Kal. April
 " 1281.

Of this Letter I have met with two Copies; One that of the Archbishop's Register: The Other out of a Volume of Peckham's Letters; but could never till now find out the Year of it. The Kal. April I read indeed in the Register; but as for 1281. Dr. A. has I doubt by pure Invention added that; and, by Ill-luck, very Erroneously to it.

The Substance of this ¹ Letter, which Dr. A. makes such a Mystery of, is, as far as I can discern, no more then this. The Archbishop had some time before Summon'd his Suffragan Bishops, (for as to the Addition AND THEIR CLERGY, 'tis like the Year, intirely Dr. A's Own, nor is there in the Letter the least Ground for it) to a Congregation at London, three Weeks after Easter. The Archbishop was at this time at Clyst, in his Visitation of the Diocese of Exeter; when he received a Letter from the King, informing him of the New Troubles that were just then broke out in Wales. These began in the xth Year of this King: ² Lewellin having on Palm-Sunday surpris'd the Lord Roger Clifford, the Kings Justiciary there, and sent him Prisoner to Snowdon. Now this fixes the date of this Letter, to April 1st. 1282. And to the same time the Order of the Archbishops Register, which is very accurate, agrees. The King had (it seems) somewhat to be done at this Meeting which made him very desirous to have it as full as was possible. He therefore Wrote to the several Bishops of the Province himself; and he insinuated to the Archbishop after what manner He would have him also Write, upon this fresh Occasion, to Them. The time of their Meeting was very near; and the Archbishop thought that his Letters would be more quickly dispatch'd, and come more certainly to them, if they were Carried together with the Kings, to the several Bishops, by the Kings Messengers, than if he sent them by the Usual way, of a Mandate to the Bishop of London; to be by him Communicated to the rest of his Suffragans.

 p. 9.

Here now is all the Mystery, which Dr. A. makes such a work of: The Archbishop back'd his first Mandate, with a fresh and Earnest Order, after the manner that the King desired. The King join'd his Own Letters to the Archbishops; and by his Messengers conveyed both the One, and the Other, to the Bishops.

³ Regist. Giffard, Episc. Wigorn, fol. 133. 134.
 Regist. Peckham, fol. 46. b. 47. b.

³ The Bishops accordingly met at Lambeth on the Saturday after the Jubilate, or Third Sunday after Easter, according both to their first Summons, and to these Repeated Orders. There the Constitution which I before mention'd, was made for Regulating the Archbishops Courts, which is still Extant in the Archbishop's Register; and has from thence been publish'd in the Second Volume of Our English Councils.

But ⁴ Dr. A. goes on, and improves this first Error, with a second. " And the same formality (says He) I suppose, was used in Convening the Clergy of York Province, who met about this time at York, as appears from a Writ extant in Prynn, empowering the Bishop of Carlisle to Collect the Tenth of his Own Diocese; Granted at that Provincial Assembly. How that Tenth was Granted, the King's Writ does not expressly determine. But by Commanding the Bishop to Collect it in his Diocess, " Juxta formam Concessionis nobis inde facta in aliis Diocesibus Eborum Provincia, does seem to imply, that this Tenth was Granted, as the Others before had been, by the Clergy in their Diocesan Synods, and not in any Council of the Province Assembled together for that Purpose.

Dr. A. therefore must first shew us some Authority for the Meeting of such a Synod at all, before he must expect to gain Credit with us that it was Assembled in any such Extraordinary way as he supposes. In the mean time, it may suffice to observe, that the King might have Other Designs to serve in the Meeting of the Bishops of this, than in that of the Other Province: and the Archbishops Expedition soon after into Wales, to compose Matters there, and his Solemn Excommunication of Lewellin, and his Brother David, before-mention'd, may Give us just a Ground to believe that He had.

" The next Year the King holding his Parliament at Northampton command" ed the Archbishop, by Writ, to Summon his Clergy thither. This again is † intire intire New History : The King held no Parliament at Northampton, but only K. EDWARD Summon'd a Provincial Assembly of Bishops and Prelates, and the Cathedral Clergy the 1st.

there. To account for the Omission of his Friends, the Diocesan Clergy, Dr.
A. goes on upon pure Invention ; " that it may be these were by a Particular Writ
" to be applied to afterwards, and Requir'd to follow the Pattern which the " Superior Clergy should set, according to the way sometimes practised in for" mer Reigns. Should I ask him whether this was done, His Answer would be, that the Superiour Clergy not giving any thing, there was no Room for the Inferior to be Assembled ; and the Resolution there taken of Calling Both together, after Easter, (as I have shewn) superseded the Necessity of it. It is a Great Sagacity that some Men have to discover the secret Designs of Courts and Princes, at above 400 Years Distance. In the mean time, here we have a Convocation without any of the Diocesan Clergy ; who, therefore, as yet were not thought any Necessary Members of it. But he goes on : " And yet at the Synod " called on the same Occasion by the Archbishop of York in his Province, we find
" the Diocesan Clergy appear'd ; and which is very Remarkable, the Laity of " York Province, under Barons, had also their Summons to the same time and place " with the Clergy.

What a strange Confusion does this Author make of these Assemblies ? A Synod Called by the Archbishop of York, of Bishops, Abbots, Priors, Chapters, of Cathedral Churches ; the Diocesan Clergy, with all the Free-men, Knights and Communities, and All Others of EVERY COUNTY beyond Trent, Summon'd to the same time and place with them. This is as odd a Council in One Province, as he had before made a Parliament in the Other. But what then shall we say ? Does not the King's Letter mention all these ? I agree it does ; the Diocesan Clergy Excepted ; who being neither mention'd in the first Summons of November the 22d ; Nor in the Letters of Credence sent into the Bishoprick of Durham, no nor yet in this, as all the Others, (Bishops, Abbots, Priors, and Proctors of the Cathedral Churches) are, neither do I take them to have been meant, by the Communitas Cleri ; which I look upon as a General Phrase, and design'd to referr to the whole Body of the Clergy, not to specify the Proctors of the Dioceses, as distinct from the Other Orders before spoken of. It is in this Case, as in the Other of the Laity which immediately follows in the same Writ ; where having particularly mention'd Knights, Free-Men, Communities (of Burroughs and Towns) it adds, " Et " Omnibus Aliis de singulis Comitatus ultra Trentam. Now the same that Omnibus Aliis signifies on the one side, I conceive the Tota Communitas Cleri denotes on the Other. It is a General Expression relating to the whole Body of the Clergy, as the Other apparently does to the whole Body of the Laity. The one was no more intended to stand for Proctors of the Clergy, than the Other to import the Representatives of I know not whom, of the People. And therefore in the Writ to the Bishoprick of Durham, where all the rest, both of the Clergy and Laity are again specified as before, these General Words are on both sides Omitted : There is no Omnibus Aliis of the One ; Nor Tota Communitas of the Other. In short ; the King's WRITS Summon'd the same Persons, in both Provinces : In neither were the Proctors of the Clergy call'd ; nor could they therefore be considered by the King as Legally Present in either. Since therefore His Letters of Credence were sent to those only whom his Writs of Summons Cited to Appear ; We must interpret the Expressions of the Former, by the Terms of the Latter ; and not make the King apply himself to any in the One, but such only as were Called to be present by the Other.

But not to insist any longer upon this Point, which, but for the sake of Truth, I am very little concern'd in. What shall we say to the Metting it self ? Was it a Synod or Parliament ? Or what kind of Assembly was it ? A Parliament it could not be ; because it was an Assembly only of some of the Northern Counties, not a Convention of the Whole Realm, as all Parliaments ought to be. Neither was it a Provincial Synod ; for then the Bishop and Clergy of Durham must have been there, who now met separately in their Own Country.

To state this Matter aright, the Case was plainly this : The King was at this See the date time in Wales, prosecuting his War there. The Barons and Others who held of these Let-of him by Military Tenure were with him in his Service. The Spiritual Barons ters apud Rohad sent in their Services to him. A Parliament therefore He could not Hold in thelan : Jan. 1.

have answer'd his Desires. To get an Aid therefore both from the Clergy, and Other Laity who were not with him, nor had sent any Help to Him, He took the Extraordinary Method that we here see. He commanded the Archbishop of York to Assemble the Prelates and Capitular Clergy, of York and Carlisle, at York. Thither he order'd the Laity of those Parts to come at the same time. To these by his Commissioners He Represented his Needs, and demanded an Aid of them.

The Bishoprick of Durham was a separate Principality. When the Other Counties sent their Members to Parliament, they deputed none: Nay they scrupled to do the King any Service in his Wars out of their Own Bounds; much less would they now have Gone to such a Meeting as this, without the Limits of their Own Territory. The Assembly of the Clergy being upon a State-Account, the Bishop of Durham might possibly no less have stood upon his Own Exemption, in that Respect, than the People in the other. It was therefore expedient to Summon both the Clergy and Laity within their Own Precinct; and so the King did, and sent distinct Commissioners to Them. And when four Years after He laid Claim to the Promise of the Supplies made at these very Meetings, and the Archbishop of York thereupon Summon'd the Whole Clergy of his Province together, yet the Bishop of Durham would not join either in the Grant, or Return, with the Other Clergy, but made a separate Return for his Own Territory.

Thus were these Assemblies held in the North: In the Province of Canterbury, the Prelates and Capitular Bodies were called at the same time to Northampton. Where the Laity, on this side Trent met, or whether they met at all about this time, I cannot tell. It is not improbable but that they might have met at Worcester, where the Parliament was held the Midsummer before; and at which we are told the Communitas Regni was present, with whose Approbation the King says he began this present War. But this I offer only as a Conjecture, till I shall meet with some better Information in this Particular.

Such were these Meetings of which Dr. A. Gives so odd an Account. To Return now to the Pursuit of our History. Anno 1284. the King held a Council at Bristol with some of his Great Men; but neither Parliament nor Convocation seem to have met that Year.

At the same time, the next Year, another Parliament was, in like manner, Assembled, ⁵ "Congregatio maxima Magnatum totius Regni tam Secularium quam Ecclesiasticorum—ad tractandum de Regni Regimine, as Wikes represents it. During this Parliament, a Memorable Accident fell out, which will deserve our Notice. A certain Dominican Fryar, Richard de Knapwell, maintaining some Erroneous Opinions, the Archbishop calling to his Assistance certain of his Suffragan Bishops, and Others of a Right faith, by their Counsel condemn'd Them, and Excommunicated the Maintainers of them.

The Parliament being Risen, and the King's Necessities pressing him; He sent his ⁶ Letters to the Archbishop of York, dated August the 8th. In which he Charges the Clergy of that Province with a Promise made to him upon his late Expedition, to assist him, which as yet they had not taken any Care to fulfil: And therefore commands the Archbishop to Conferr with his Clergy, He having done that for which they Promised it.

In Obedience to this Message the Archbishop by his Mandates dated September the 6th. required his Provincial Bishops to call together their Clergy, and treat Effectually with them about the King's Demand, and to account to him before Michaelmas what they had done in Pursuance of it. Had the Bishops and Clergy agreed in their Diocesan Synods upon the Grant which was expected from them, there had been no Occasion for changing the Old Method, and Assembling them Provincially in Order thereunto. But the Proposition not taking in this Manner, Obligated the Archbishop to Call a Provincial Convocation for the more Effectual Prosecution of it. This he did by his Mandates, dated at Ripon, October the 6th.

and appointed the Wednesday after St. Martin, November the 20th. for the K. EDWARD Meeting of it. The Result there was, that the Clergy of the Dioceses of York and Carlisle agreed to a Thirtieth for three Years: As for the Clergy of Durham they made their Return by themselves, and the Bishop of Durham undertook to declare it personally to the King. the 1st.

A fortnight after Michaelmas, this same Year the Archbishop of Canterbury held his Provincial Synod at the New Temple, London. If the (a) Bishop of Worcester's Proxy to this Assembly be Accurate, and Framed, as commonly those Instruments were, upon the Words of the Mandate by which the Convention was Summon'd, for which it was designed; we must then conclude that it was a Congregatio Prælatorum, and that the Lower-Clergy were not Called to it. And in a (b) Memorandum, without date, entred not far after, either this, or some Other Assembly of the like Nature is thus described; Memorand. "that the Bishops of the Province of Canterbury are called to appear before the Archbishop at the New Temple, London, on the Feast of St. Edward the King, a Fortnight after Michaelmas. (a) Regist. Giffard, fol. cclix. a. b. (b) Ibid. fol. cclxxiii. b.

The same is the Character which the (c) Bishop of Hereford gives of the next Provincial Council which met the Year following, May the 2d, about three Weeks after Easter. He calls it a Congregation of his Brethren, and Lower-Bishops, but takes no Notice of any Other Clergy that were Called to it. About the Purification, the same Year "Convocatis Edicto publico Regni Magnatibus apud London, the Bishop of Ely the King's Treasurer demanded in the King's Name of all the Earls and Barons; and, generally, ab Universis Incolis Regni, a Subsidy for the King's Use. They made answer, by the Mouth of the Earl of Gloucester, that they would Grant nothing, unless they first saw the Face of the King in England. 1287. Sect. 106. (c) Regist. Swinfield, fol. xl. Chron. Tho. Wikes, p. 117.

The King being return'd, about Michaelmas following, did accordingly issue out his Writs for a Parliament to meet, upon the Feast of Hilary after. The Persons called were here again "totius Regni Magnates: The Annals of Waverley stile it a Parliament of all the Lords; and mention not any other as either Called, or Coming to it, 1288. Chron. Wikes p. 118. Ann. Waverl. p. 241.

In the 18th of this King, after Easter, a famous Parliament was held at Westminster in which the Third Statute of Westminster was made; and an Explication upon the Statute of Quo Warranto, as Hemingford Relates it. The Records agree with his Account, and will inform us who were called to it, and Acted in it. 1290. Mf. ad Ann.

For the Statute of Westminster, 'tis said, that the King, "ad Instantiam Magnatum Regni sui, Granted, Provided, and Established. c. 1. In that de Quo Warranto; "that the King of his special Grace, and Affection, towards his Prelates, Earls, Barons, and Cateros de Regno suo, Granted, &c. But there is another Record that will speak more plainly in this Case. For on the 1st of June, 7 the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and Great Men of the Kingdom, with one Assent in full Parliament, granted to the King for themselves, and the whole Community of the Kingdom, forty Shillings of every Knights Fee for an Aid to Marry his Eldest Daughter; as the Words of the Roll are. 2 Institut. fol. 500. Ibid. fol. 494. See Dr. Brady's Introduct. p. 149.

This Parliament first met after Hilary, Anno 1289. It Re-Assembled after Easter; and on the first of June, Granted the Aid I before mention'd. Upon the 14th of June, at the Request of the Lords, and Great Men, there Assembled, the King issued out Writs to the Sheriffs of every County, to Order two or three to be chosen for their Respective Counties, and Return'd up to this Parliament, (which was then sitting, and had sat so long, and done so much Business without them) within Three Weeks after the Feast of St. John Baptist, July the 15th. Before they Came, the King, with his Lords only, made the Statutes of Westminster before mentioned; which were pass'd in Parliament the xvth of St. John Baptist, that is to say, July 8th. The Knights being thus Summon'd for the several Counties, were return'd accordingly: From some Three, from others Two, as the Sheriffs thought fit; which shews this Matter not to have been yet come to any Certain Establishment. They were design'd to Represent all the Military Tenants of the Counties, in Capite; and they did accordingly Consent for them to a xvth then Granted, per Archiepiscopos, &c. by the Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons, & Omnes Alios de Regno; the very Stile that was used when the whole Body of those who held by Military Service were

K. EDWARD Personally Summon'd, according to the Charter of King John. This I confess is a Little Forreign to my present Purpose; nor should I have mention'd it, had the Learned Person, against whom Dr. A. disputes this Point, been living to speak for Himself. The Account here given is but a short Extract from his Own Writings, which Dr. A. should have Answer'd, or He should not, without Answering it, have publickly Censured his Opinion.

Sect. 108. It is now about four Years since we have heard of any Provincial Convocation, or found any thing to give the least Colour for a Pretence of the Lower-Clergies being call'd, in any way whatsoever, to Parliament. The Design was to give the King a Subsidy, ³ which accordingly they did, viz. a Tenth of all their Spiritual Goods for One Year. For which Reason, the whole Clergy was Called to it, and had ³ Eversden. ad (as it was now become Usual for them to have) their * Proctors in it.

Ann. Registr. Ol. Sutton. Linc. fol. xxvii. * Vid. Append. ad Ann. 1290. (a) Rights, &c. p. 39. It is observed by (a) Dr. A. as an early Congruity between the Parliament and Convocation, that this same Year when the King Summon'd duos vel tres de discretioribus Militibus to the One, the Archbishop of Canterbury Summon'd in like manner, duos vel tres procuratores of the Clergy, to the other: And this is made use of to shew, that the Numbers of the Clergy cited by the Archbishop to his Parliamentary-Convocations, had born some Proportion all along to those of the Lower-Laity called at the same time to Parliament. Now this might have been a Notable Proof, but for one defect in it; that the Parliament to which these Milites were Called fate at Midsummer, and the Convocation not till the 2d. of October. But the Truth of the matter is this; The King now first began to Summon the Knights, or Free-Tenants, not in Person, but by Representatives: And it was but a few Years since the Archbishop had called the Lower-Clergy by Proctors of their own to Convocation. The Number of neither was yet fix'd; and that is all the Mystery of this Chance Parallel, between the Parliament and Convocation; which met this same Year indeed, but yet at a sufficient distance from one Another to destroy all the Pretence of its being a Parliamentary Convocation, as Dr. A. very confidently, but withal very improperly, Calls it.

How the xvth. which the King, at Michaelmas exacted both of the Laity and Clergy, was Granted, I have before shewn. Hemingsford tells us it was Given in Consideration of the King's Proceedings against the Jews, and their Expulsion, at last, out of the Realm. I shall only Observe, that notwithstanding what they now did, in Convocation, yet ⁴ the Clergy, as well as Laity, were included in it; and accordingly paid their part of it.

And here at last Dr. A. thinks he has found out somewhat to Countenance his New Hypothesis. The Archbishop and Bishops of the Province of Canterbury, met October the 1st. at Ely, to Consecrate the Bishop of that See. The next day they held a Provincial Congregation there, about the same time that the King held his Parliament at Clipston: From whence the Consequence is Clear; This Convocation met at Ely, as an Attendant upon the Parliament which was held at Clipston.

⁵ "For these Clergy-Meetings; tho' Concurrent in time with those of the Parliament, yet were not necessarily to be held at the same Place also, where the Parliament was Open'd; but Assembled, often times, at some other, either in the Neighbourhood of it, or more Remote from it, as the Archbishop thought fit, or the Churches Occasions Required. This is a very strange Hypothesis; and if true, would prove that the Archbishop at his Pleasure might have defeated the King's Writs; and have so Order'd Matters, that neither the Bishops, nor Abbots, any more then the Lower-Clergy, should ever have come to Parliament at his Summons. And all the Ground of this strange Opinion is built only on the accidental Meeting of a Provincial Convocation at Ely, about the time that the King's Parliament (as he calls it) met at Clipston.

I will not now dispute whether that was a proper Parliament, as we now understand the Word: Let it be as Dr. A. pleases; tho' 'tis very certain, that in that too he is mistaken. But supposing it to have been a true Parliament, will he

he please to tell us where the Convocation of the Other Province sate at this time? K. EDWARD the 1st.
Or if that be too Remote, where the Bishops, and Clergy, of our Own met after Hillary, and in the Summer Parliaments of this Year before? We have very full and exact Registers of this time; and few Convocations I believe were held, of which some Notices do not Occur in some or Other of them. Let him shew Us from thence, or from our Historians who speak of this Meeting at Ely, and of most of the Other Synods; where the Concurring Convocations of those two Other Parliaments met in Either Province; or, indeed, of All the Parliaments of the many Years before mention'd. Or let him not think from a single Meeting, and that upon a Just and Reasonable Occasion, to raise an Hypothesis of such moment as this; and which all the Subsequent Practice as well as the Preceding History, does evidently Confute.

To shew the more clearly, that the Questions I propose are not without a just Ground, and withal to convince him, if possible, of the little Weight which there is in this Accidental Concurrence of the Council at Clipston, and the Convocation of Our Province at Ely, to prove the necessary Connexion of the One with the Other; He may please to know, that after both these Assemblies were over, on the * 4th. of November the King issued his Writ to the Archbishop of York to Summon the Convocation of the Other Province. In it he Recites what the Clergy of Canterbury had granted to him; and affectionately Requires them to Grant him the like. The Archbishop Cited his Clergy to meet for this Purpose the day after St. Nicholas; December the 7th. at a sufficient distance from Dr. A's New Parliament, and without any Regard to the sitting of it.

As for the Mystery which he discovers in the Proxy of the Church of Canterbury to the Synod of Ely; he is thus far in the Right, that it was held for a State End, to Grant an Aid to the King out of the Spiritualities of the Clergy, and for that Reason not only the " pax & Consolatio Domini Regis & Regni Angliæ, were inserted into that Instrument, but the very Proctors of the Lower-Clergy were Called to it, who were seldom Cited to these Meetings but upon such Occasions; at least were but seldom Obligated Peremptorily to come to them.

The next Year the Worcester Annals tell us, that the Archbishop of Canterbury upon the thirteenth of February, held a Provincial Council to deliberate of the Recovery, and Preservation of the Holy Land. Those of York, (if some Extracts which I have seen may be rely'd upon, and they do not confound this with the Convocation which was Assembled there the same Month the Year before) had met on the same Account, the 2^d Tenth of December before. In the Interval between these two a 3^d Parliament sate, after Epiphany: for by a Letter dated, vi. Kal. Februar. it appears that 4th the Bishop of Lincoln had Granted a Protection to one whose Barge he made use of to bring him Provisions, instanti Parlamento Durante; and to the End of the Provincial Council which was not long after, as is before said, to be held. So that here then Dr. A's Rule already fails him; for in the very next Parliament to that at Clipston (supposing that to have been a Parliament) two Synods met, and neither of them at the time of the Parliament: That of York was up before the Parliament sate; as, most probably, the Parliament rose, before that of Canterbury met.

But indeed these Synods were held for another Purpose than to Attend upon the Parliament. The Pope had sent over a Bull, by which he Granted to the King a 5th Six Years Tenth for the Aid of the Holy Land. This Bull was past at Rome in March, and came over hither about Michaelmas. The Management of the Contents of it was committed to the Bishops of Winchester, and Lincoln. For this these Synods were Assembled in each Province; that in York so early that the Archbishop, and Bishops, might have time after it was over to come up to the Parliament; that of Canterbury, so near to the Meeting of the Parliament, that the Bishops might have Opportunity to hold their Synod before they Return'd to their Dioceses from it. This was a Rational Order upon both sides; and this is all the Mystery that is to be found in this Matter.

I shall not insist upon those Parliaments of King Edward the 1st, which were held both this, and the Year following, in the North, upon the Occasion of the Scotch debate; which seem to Regard a particular Cause, and to have been held after an Extraordinary manner. That Affair being over, in the Beginning of 1293. the King return'd to London to hold his Parliament after Easter. There

The next Year, Anno 1294. a Parliament was Summon'd, October the 8th, to meet at Westminster the day after St. Martins, November the 12th. To this the King by his ³ first Writs Summon'd two Knights out of every County, to be there for the Community of the said Counties, with Power to Consent, on their behalf, to what the Earls, Barons, and Lords, should unanimously agree to. The next day, by Other Writs, he order'd two more to be added to them, and to come up to this Parliament with them. ⁴ They came and join'd with the Lords in Granting a xth to the King; the Writs for Collecting of which, thus Recite the Grant of it: "Whereas the Earls, Barons, Knights, and ALL OTHERS of our REALM, have liberally done, &c.—

Who these ALL OTHERS of our REALM here spoken of, as on Other Occasions before, were, the following Remark will clearly shew. ⁵ The Cities and Burroughs were not Summon'd to this Parliament, nor did they Grant any thing to the King there. But the King by special Commissioners applied to the City of London first, for a separate Aid: There he obtain'd a Sixth; and having so done, he sent by Other Commissioners to All the Other Cities and Burroughs of England, exhorting them to follow the Example which the City of London had set to them.

Here then, as Our Learned Dr. Brady, I think, well Observes, is a plain Evidence, that neither to this Parliament were any Representatives of the Cities or Burroughs call'd. They gave separately, as before, for themselves; and were not yet accounted among the ALII DE REGNO, or the COMMUNITAS REGNI; which took in only the Baronage, and such Others as held of the King in Chief, or by Knights Service; not the Citizens and Burgeses of particular Corporations.

Sec. 111.

But the next Year after, these also were called to Parliament by Writs dated at Canterbury, October the 3d. to appear at London the Sunday next after St. Martin. The Terms of this Writ are Remarkable; and will yet more confirm the Account which has been given of some Phrases, the want of Understanding which, has led many into a Mistake in this particular. ⁶ Having therefore Recited his Design of holding a Parliament with his Lords, and Great Men; the King thus Commands the Sheriffs, with Relation to the Rest: "That he should cause to be Chosen, and to come thither at the time and place, aforesaid, Two Knights of every County; and of every City, Two Citizens, and of every Burrough, Two Burgeses: Ita quod dicti Milites, &c. So as the said Knights may have sufficient Power for Themselves, & COMMUNITATE COMITATUS Prædicti; and the Citizens and Burgeses, in like manner, for themselves, and the COMMUNITIES of the CITIES and BURROUGHS, for which they came.

"The Parliament did not meet on the Sunday after St. Martin (as had been appointed) but was Prorogued, before Meeting, to the Sunday next before St. Andrew, November the 30th. And All the Treating, Ordaining and Doing in this Parliament, was only to Grant, and Consent to raise, such Supplies as the King demanded.

When these Citizens and Burgeses were thus Called to Parliament, they did not Act conjunctly together with the Rest who had been the Elder Members of it, but after a manner altogether distinct from them. The King's Writ Required that the Milites who Acted for the COMMUNITY of the COUNTIES should have a full Power to Act for them; and the Citizens, and Burgeses, for their Cities, and Burroughs, divisim; separately from one Another: And that so they did Act, the Writs for Collecting what this Parliament gave, expressly affirm: The Words of which are these. ⁷ "Whereas the Earls, Knights, &

" Alii de REGNO nostro, have granted us a xith. and the Citizens, and Burgesses, R. EDWARD the 1st.

I have laid the History of these two Parliaments together, to shew the more plainly by what steps the Commons, as we now understand that Word, were brought, about this time, to these Great Councils. To Return now where we left off, Anno 1294. After Whitsuntide, our ¹ Historians tell us that the King held his Parliament. To this only the Great Men were called; Magnates Angliæ; Comites & Magnates, as M. Westminster calls them: Proceres Angliæ (says Everſden) tam persona Ecclesiastica, quam Seculares. And these Consented to a Scutage for his War, of a hundred Marks upon every Knights Fee. 1294. Sect. 112. M. Westminst. p. 421.

But the King's Wants call'd for a larger Supply: To provide for which he issued out his ² Writs to All the Bishops of England, dated August the 19th. to call together the Clergy of their several Dioceses at Westminster, September the 21st. (being the feast of St. Matthew) to give their Counsel, and help to him. They met as he Commanded, and granted an ³ half of all their Goods to him; so both our Records, and our Historians inform Us. This Grant came hardly from them; as by the Account of One of our ⁴ Historians yet unpublish'd, from whom Knigh-ton seems to have borrow'd a Great part of his Relation, it does appear. About two Months after this Assembly of the Clergy, the King call'd the Lay part of his Parliament, the day after St. Martin, and had therein also a Subsidy Granted to him. Vid. Append. ad Ann. 1294. Vid. Regist. Memorand. Ol. Sutton. Lincoln, fol. cx. Prynn. Records Vol. iii. p. 587. Hemingsford, Mf.

The Meetings of this Year, were All upon a State Account; In the next we meet with one in the Province of Canterbury upon an Ecclesiastical. The Assembly I mean was the Provincial Synod of Archbishop Winchelsea, held at the New Temple, London, the middle of July. To this only the Bishops of the Province were called: The Business for which it was held was to treat about the Liberties of the Church. What the Constitutions were which M. Westminster says he revived there, in order to that End, I cannot tell: But by his Proceeding the next Year, it seems plain that he had already framed his Design, of withstanding the frequent Taxes which this King's Affairs had inforced him to lay upon the Clergy, as well as Laity of his Realm. ⁶ Not long after this, upon the first of August the King held his Parliament at Westminster. What this was called for, more then to Receive the two Legates whom the Pope had sent to make Peace between the Kings of England and France, I am not able to say. In September following new Writs went out for a Parliament to meet the Sunday after St. Martin. Here the Premunitory Clause was first inserted into the Bishops Writs. The Year before the King had divided the Laity and Clergy from one another; and called the Latter to Assemble Nationally at Westminster, in September; the former in November. Now he United both together; and at the same time joyn'd the Commons too, by bringing the Representatives of the Cities and Burroughs; as well as Knights of the Countys, to Parliament. This Parliament thus called to meet November the 13th. fate by Prorogation, November the 30th. The Archbishops and Bishops readily Executed the Præmonition; and the Clergy, for ought appears, as readily came to Parliament upon it. 1295. Everſden. Mf. ad Ann. 1295. M. West. p. 424. Regist. Winchelsea, fol. clxviii. b. Annal. VVi-gorn, p. 517. M. Westminst. p. 424. Annal. Norwic. p. 402.

And here I cannot but observe with what Exactness our Historians take Notice of these Changes. Of the Assembly of the Clergy, Anno 1294. (the first National Assembly to which the Lower-Clergy were ever called by the Kings Writ) "Rex Colloquium habuit cum Omnibus Episcopis, & Archidiaconis, & Abbatibus: & CLERUS ibi similiter habuit PROCURATORES; say the ⁷ Annals of Worcester. Of the Parliament of this Year, where the Commons were now called, ⁸ M. Westminster thus Expresses himself, "In Vigilia S. Andrea accersito Clero, Magnatibus & POPULO apud Westmonaster. Had not some Change been made in these Meetings, we should not have had so great a Change in their Expressions: And this Alteration the more fully assures Us, that as they before took no Notice of the Proctors of the Clergy and Commons in Parliament, so the true Reason why they did not, was, because till now they were not Called thither. Annal. VVi-gorn, p. 516. Ad ann. 1295.

Having thus given a just Account of the first beginning of the Premunitory Call to Parliament, (the Foundation of One Great Branch of the present Dispute) it will be necessary for me now to compare it with the Report which Dr. A. has made of it; and see which of Us has been the more Exact in our Relation of this matter. His Account of it is this. Sect. 113.

" At what time precisely this method was first set on Foot, I cannot be Positive, but SURE I AM that a Year before the xxiiid. Edward the 1st. (the Common Æra of the Præmunientes) it was Practised. Peckham was now dead, and Winchelsea not yet Returned with his Pall from Rome: and the See of York fill'd with an Obnoxious Person, ² fin'd lately Four Thousand Marks by Parliament; ³ and on that and ⁴ some other Accounts, now at the King's Mercy. Will Dr. A. Give me leave, before we go any farther, to ask him whether he be sure that the Archbishop was thus fined, as he affirms, BY PARLIAMENT? The Roll I am sure says Otherwise: and tho' it be not a very Material Circumstance, yet an Author that spares no body, but makes out-cries against Others for every the least Mistake, should be Careful not to slip, tho' never so little, Himself. Archbishop Roman was impleaded in Parliament, for publishing a Sentence of Excommunication against the Bishop of Durham, upon this Account; that his Servants had imprison'd the Archbishops Officers, whom he had sent to Durham to cite the Bishop to appear before him, to answer for his Refusal to Obey the Canonical Commands of the Archbishop; and that after three Admonitions, the Bishop continued still to detain them. The Bishop pleaded his Temporal Authority; that his Officers who had imprison'd them were his Temporal Officers; and the Prison they were Committed to, the Castle of Durham, which belong'd to his Baronie; and that from thence they were to be delivered by the Bishops Lay-Ministers according to the Law and Custom of the Realm. Upon this Ground the Archbishop was found Guilty of an Offence against the Crown and Dignity of the King; and it was agreed by the Lords that the Archbishop for his Offence should be committed to Prison; and that this should be the Punishment of all Others who should offend in the like manner. But before the Sentence was pronounced, the Archbishop submitted himself to the King's Pleasure; and desired the Lords to intercede for Him; by whose Mediation he compounded with the King for his Pardon under the Obligation of Four Thousand Marks; and gave Security to him for the same.

" This lucky Juncture the King seems to have laid hold on to bring the Clergy to a Compliance with his Will, when they had no body to head them in their Opposition to him. He Summons the Prior, and Chapter of Canterbury, therefore, as Guardians of the Spiritualities of that See during the Vacancy, and by them the Archdeacon of Canterbury, and two Proctors for the Diocese.
 " The Clause in this Writ differs IN NOTHING from what was afterwards Practised, Except that it begins with the Word VOCANTES instead of PRÆMUNIENTES, and mentions not the Prior, and Chapter of Canterbury, they being indeed the Persons Written to, and having already in the former part of the Writ been Cited under another Capacity.

Ibid. p. 224.

I will not here dispute with Dr. A. his Observation of the lucky Juncture which King Edward the 1st. took to Call the Clergy to Parliament. He had done as much long before, in effect, in Archbishop Peckham's time; and did much more in Archbishops Winchelsea's, the Year following. For then he called them Nationally together with the Lairy in Parliament; whereas now they were Assembled only into a National Convocation, by the King's Writ.

Let Dr. A. look into our Historians, and shew me any One of them, if he can, that complains of their being Assembled after this manner. What he quotes from Knighton discovers where they thought the Hardship lay: to wit, in the Demand of One half of their Goods, not in their Call to that CONVOCATION.

That this was no Parliamentary Summons, as Dr. A. here pretends, I will presently shew when I come to consider what he Offers to prove that it was. In the mean time till he had seen some other Copies of this Writ than that one which was directed to the Prior of Canterbury; he should not have pronounced so positively (give me leave to add, and so falsely too, as he does) that the CLAUSE of it DIFFERS IN NOTHING from the PRÆMUNITORY CLAUSE, but in putting VOCANTES instead of PRÆMUNIENTES. For tho' this be indeed true in such Churches where there was a Secular Dean and Chapter, (and even that I believe is more than Dr. A. was Aware of) yet in those Churches where there was a Prior and Convent, the Clause in ⁶ the Bishop's Writ, was altogether different; And summon'd only the Archdeacons, and Diocesan Clergy, leaving the Others to be Called by Particular Writs issued to the several Priors for that Purpose.

Ann. 1294.

Whether the Parliamentary Prelates were summon'd to this Meeting by Special Writs, I am not able to say. Eversden, and the Annals of Worcester, tell us that they were. But for the Rest, they were 'Summon'd together with the Diocesan Clergy to chuse their Proctors, and so were Represented in Common with them.

R. EDWARD

Dr. A. therefore is all over Mistake, when he makes that poor Pretence for the Prior and Chapter of Canterbury's being Omitted in this Summons, because they were the Persons, who under another Capacity, were sent to. In ² O-² Claus. 5. R. 2. ther Writs we have the same Case; yet were they nevertheless put into the Premunitory Clause. And in the Other Summons where the Writ was directed to the ³ Bishop of the Diocese, yet where there was a Prior belonging to the Cathedral Church, the same Method was taken: The Bishop Summon'd only his Archdeacons, and Clergy; but the Prior and Chapter had their Special Writs, as the Parliamentary Abbots and Priors had.

But since Dr. A. was now upon the Work of Collating, why would he not take the Pains to compare the other Parts of this Writ, with the Bishops Parliamentary Writs. Had he done that, he would have prevented another, and no less Capital an Error, of Calling this Meeting by the Name of a Parliament; and insisting with such Positiveness upon it (SURE I AM, &c.) that it was properly such; And thereby of advancing the date of the Premunitory Summons of the Clergy to Parliament, a Year before it began, as well as a Year before any Others had ever done it before. In the Writ there is no mention of any Persons to Meet besides the Clergy: No Proceres, Magnates, or Incola Terra, spoken of. No Comites or Barones: No, but 'tis, Vestrum Consilium (the Bishops) & Auxilium, sicut & Ceterorum Prelatorum, ac Cleri, de Regno Nostro. And again, Ad tractandum una Vobiscum, & Ceteris PRÆLATIS, ac CLERO Ejusdem Regni. These are All that were Called to this Meeting; the Laity being summon'd by Themselves above vii Weeks after, as I have before observed.

Sect. 114.

And this⁴ Dr. A. himself is forced, at last, to confess: "Only still we may observe that tho' the Call were REALLY to PARLIAMENT, yet it is not mention'd throughout the whole Summons, either in that Part of it which commands the Bishop to Attend, or in that which warns the Lower-Clergy to accompany him; but they are Cited only to Treat and Consult among Themselves. Let him shew me the same of any One true Parliamentary Writ that was ever issued out since we were a Nation, and I will yield that this shall be a Parliament, or any thing else that he pleases: But if this cannot be done, he must then give me leave to say that it is almost a demonstration, upon the Form of our Constitution, that that Meeting can be no true Parliament of this Realm to which the Bishops and Clergy ONLY are Cited to Treat and Consult, without any Laity to Treat with Them.

"Knyghton, and the Annals of Worcester, and Eversden mention the Clergy as present in this Parliament. They were in the right; for as we have sufficiently seen, they were Expressly Called by the King to it; and as himself tells us but a little after, the King's Writ was Executed, and so became Effectual to the Summoning of them. "For the Clergy, says he, deputed two Common Proctors to Represent the whole Diocese; and those Proctors sate and Acted for them in Parliament: i. e. in that Assembly of the Clergy which was Summon'd by the same Writ, to meet at the same Time and Place, that the Lay Part of the Parliament were. Now this, I again affirm to be all his Own Invention: There was no Laity Summon'd to this Meeting; Let him produce but one Authentick Instrument of any Lay Summons, and I submit.

But Dr. A. goes on so fast in his Mistakes, that it will be hard to follow him in them All. "And accordingly (these Proctors of the Clergy) did thus meet at the Opening of it Promiscuously; (He means, together with the Laity) for Proof of which He produces two Authors, M. Westminster and Knyghton. As for the former, M. Westminster, he jumbles the two Meetings of September and November into One; and whether his Relation, or the King's Writs to which I have Appealed, be of Greater Credit, let the Reader judge. But Knyghton is all on the Other side: He took his Relation, in great Measure from Hemingford, and agrees in the main with the Writs in it. "Eodem Anno no vocavit Rex, per literas suas, Archiepiscopos, Episcopos, Decanos Ecclesiarum Cathedralium, & Archidiaconos, in propriis personis; Clerumque Uniuscujusque Diocesis

Shall I add yet more; that Knyghton plainly intimates the direct Contrary to what Dr. A. quotes him for. For the Clergy having Complied with the King's Demand, the King bid them ask any Redress of Grievances that they would. They asked to have the Statute of Mortmain Repealed. The King's Answer was; that that Statute had been made "de Consilio Magnatum, & absque Eorum Consilio non erat Revocandum : Which had been no Answer at all, if this Meeting had been a true Parliament ; and by Consequence the Great Men had been present to Consent to the Repealing of it.

To Close all, Knyghton having done with his Account of this Meeting of the Clergy, adds with relation to the Other of the Laity ; Eodem etiam Anno , (He does not say Eodem Tempore) habuit Rex a Communitate Regni decimum Denarium, & a Civitatibus sextum Denarium. But to proceed :

"² And accordingly (they are Dr. A's Words) these Proctors did thus meet at the Opening of it promiscuously, tho' they afterwards Debated and Resolved separately : Which is all meer Fancy, and falls with the Mistake of the Laities being Called to this Assembly. One of the Resolutions they came to, was to give the King a Moiety of their Goods for one Year. Will Dr. A. please to tell us of any Other Resolution that they came to there ? If not, let him speak truly, that this was what they were called for, and this was the Result of their Meeting there. But he goes on : " This Gift however was, by the PROVINCE of CANTERBURY ALONE ; for the Clergy of YORK PROVINCE, IF PRESENT at this MEETING, yet did not make their Grant in it, as appears from the King's Letters Patents transmitted to them by the Dean of York, immediately upon the Rising of the CLERGY of CANTERBURY ; wherein they are commanded to do as the King's Agent shall direct ; that is, as the CLERGY of the OTHER Province had done before them.

Why Dr. A. should doubt whether the Clergy of York were PRESENT at this Meeting, I cannot Imagine. He allows that they were summon'd to it ; and to convince him that he was thus far, at least, in the Right, ² He may in the Appendix see not only the King's Writ to the Archbishop of York, but the Archbishop's Execution of it. Let me add to this, that Our Historians expressly speak of the Archbishop of York as present at it ; and give a Reason why the Bishop of Durham was not ; which they would not have done, had the Clergy of that Province refused to Come at all to this Assembly.

But is Dr. A. sure that the Clergy of York did not Grant their Subsidy there ? If he be, I will venture to say I am more sure that he is mistaken. This Assembly met September the 21st. The King demanding an Aid of them, they desired three days to deliberate upon it. In this time they consulted together, and agreed to Offer the King two Tenths. This therefore we may suppose they did, September the 24th. The King refused it : New-debates were had, and high Words arose, and great Threatnings were made, unless they should comply with what was demanded of them. Let us therefore agree, that all this was ended in two days more, September the 26th. Upon the very next day, September the 27th. the King's Letters relating to this Grant, were issued out ; in which the ⁴ King recites how that the Prelates, and the whole Clergy of this Realm, had Granted to him ; a Stile that I believe is no where to be found, when but One Province only gives ; but takes in the Clergy of both, as from a Multitude of Examples, might easily be made appear.

So our Historians also relate it : Mat. Westm. ad Ann. 1294. "Postulat Rex a TOTA Ecclesia per TOTUM REGNUM Angliæ leatā. And thus, he says, they Granted, what the King desired. The same may be shewn from a multitude of other Writs relating to this Grant. And particularly from all such as concern the Collecting of this Aid. Regist. Giffard. fol. 384. a. From such as exempt the Clergy from being Tax'd to the Tenth Granted by the Laity this Year. Regist. Oliv. Sutton, Linc. fol. 114, &c.

On 5 September the 30th. the King's Writs went out for Collecting of this Aid. In them again he Recites how that the Prelati & totus Clerus de Regno Nostro, had Granted a Moiety of their Goods to him. And that we may here be fully satisfied of the Extent of that Phrase, he appoints Collectors in every Diocesis of the Province of York, as well as in those of Canterbury, to receive it for him. And therefore tho' I cannot tell what that Letter of the Kings is, to which Dr. A. refers, nor do I believe that he knows any thing more of it himself himself than I do, yet this I am very sure, that the King by his Letter dated ^{K. EDWARD} September the 28th. could not Require the Province of York to grant a Subsidy ^{the 1st.} to him, which in his Letters dated the day before, He acknowledged the Prelates, and Whole Clergy of his Realm had already given to him; and by Others dated but Two days after, appointed to be Collected in that Province, as well as in the Other.

I have now done with the Second Period of our English History, during the Reigns of Nine Kings; and the space of about two hundred and thirty Years. I have shewn * that from the Conquest, to the time of King Edward the 1st. it does not appear that any of the Clergy were wont to be Called to Parliament, besides the Bishops and Prelates; and such Others, as by Vertue of their Temporal Tenures, were obliged (if Required) to come to it. * That of the Prelates, such only were Generally Summon'd, as had Temporal Possessions; tho' if the King, at any time, thought fit to Call them All, they were All obliged to Obey him. This was done in the forty ninth of Henry the 3rd. whether ever besides, and particularly, whether in the sixth of King John, (as Dr. A. affirms) is yet to be proved to Me. * That tho' King Edward the 1st. did sometimes Call together the Clergy after some Other manners; Provincially in his Eleventh Year; Nationally in his Twenty second; Yet to Parliament he never Called them, till his Twenty third Year, when the Clause Premunientes was first put in the *Bishops Writ*s; and by being so, did first Intitule, or rather Oblige the Lower Clergy, partly in Person, and partly by their Proxies, to come to Parliament. * That it has not yet been proved that in any Part of this Period they had any Convocations Limited either to the Time or Place of these State Assemblies; much less, * That it was a Matter of constant Practise for the Clergy to meet in Convocation, whenever the Lords, and Prelates, did in Parliament. * That the supposed Constitution of the Council of Reading (the only Ground upon which Dr. A. builds his new Hypothesis) is neither its self Authentick, nor if it were, would it prove any thing more, than that the Bishops agreed to require their Clergy to appear by their Proxies at their next intended Meeting; a Voluntary, or Special Order, both as to the time and manner of their Assembling. I shall only make a brief Remark, or two, upon what has been thus shown, and that with Relation both to my self, and to Dr. A.

In my former Book, I had said, with Reference to the Persons who are now ^{Sect. 117.} Called to our Convocations, that "I should not enquire how this came to be the ^{Authority,} setled Number of them: Whether this Manner of Choice was derived from the ^{Sec. p. 104.} Antient Manner of holding Convocations, into the *Parliamentary Writ*s; or from the *Parliamentary Writ*s of King Edward the 1st. into the Summons of Convocations. I spake with Relation to the King's Summons in both, and I waved the Enquiry concerning the Method of Assembling the Lower Clergy; viz. the Deans, and Archdeacons in Person, the Chapters by One; and the Dioceses (for so it should have been, not as in my last I wrote it, Archdeaconries, tho' that be the Case of the Other Province) by two Proxies. Whether the Premunitory Summons, led the way to the Provincial, or that, to the Premunitory.

For this Dr. A. falls very briskly, after his manner, upon me, and thus Reports the Matter. "He makes it a doubt whether the setled Number of the ^{Right, &c.} Inferior Clergy, Called by the Bishop's Writ, was derived from thence into the ^{p. 434.} Convocation Writ, or from the *Convocation Writ*s into those of the Parliament. Well, and what says the Learned Dr. A. to this? "Which is (says he) in Effect to doubt whether the Deans, Archdeacons, Capitular, and Rurall Proctors, were Called. (He should have added, by the King) to Convocation (in the same manner that they now are, the Chapters by One Proctor, the Dioceses by two a-piece) before the Bishop's Writ had that Clause in it: And he who doubts of this, puts it beyond a doubt how far he is Qualified to Write on this Subject. The turn is pretty enough, and perhaps Answers Dr. A's End a great deal better than a true Resolution of the Point would have done. But we are now seeking for Truth, not Wit; and this Reflection will be found to have but very little of the One, how much so ever may kindly be Allowed it as to the Other. Let us take the Matter as Dr. A. himself Represents it: The Question is, Whether the stated Number of the Inferior Clergy, was derived from the *Bishop's Parliament-Writ*s, into the *Archbishop's Convocation Writ*s, or from the *Convocation Writ*s, into those of the Parliament? And I do now affirm, what Dr.

K. EDWARD A. I believe will be surprized at, that this Method of Assembling the Lower the 1st. Clergy was first settled by the King's Parliamentary, (which He calls the Bishops) Writs; before it was made use of in his Provincial, or Convocation Writs. Or (which is the same thing) that the Clergy were wont to be thus Summon'd by the King to Parliament, before they were wont to be thus Summon'd by him to Convocation.

Sect. 118. The first Provincial Writ, that I believe, was ever Issued out by any of our Kings, was that of the Eleventh of King Edward the 1st; Anno 1282. In that he ordered the Archbishop to Cite his Suffragans, and the Regular Prelates, with the Proctors of the Deans and Chapters of the Collegiate Churches; and this is a Form sufficiently different from that which we are now enquiring after.

The next Attempt was in his Nineteenth Year, Anno 1294. and this Dr. A. affirms to be a Call to Parliament; so that upon his Hypothesis I need not Enquire how this Matter was ordered there. But indeed it was no such thing, but a Summons to a National, State-Convocation. In this the Deans and Chapters, the Archdeacons, and Clergy, were Summon'd; but not the Priors and Chapters: For so the Writ runs to such Bishops in whose Cathedral Churches these Regular Prelates were settled, "Vocantes Prius Archidiaconos totumq; Clerum Vestrae Dioceseos"; No Priors, or Chapters, mention'd. These, I conceive, were Cited by particular Writs; not by this Clause in their Bishop's Summons.

As yet then the Present Method does not Appear to have been fully settled, or used in any of the King's Writs. Let me add, nor yet in the Archbishop's Mandate neither. For but three Years before this, Anno 1290, in the Convocation-Writ for the Synod at Ely, the Morrow after the first Sunday in October, the Archbishop ordered the Diocesan Clergy to appear there by ¹ Two or Three Proctors for every Diocese, as Dr. A. himself truly observed from some Collections which were Communicated to him, tho' he mistook the Register from whence they were taken. Yet thus far this Matter was now come to a Settlement, that the Lower Clergy were called by their Own Proctors to Convocation: Those Proctors were determin'd to be One for each Chapter, and Two for each Diocese; And in such Churches (which at that time were not very many) in which there was a Secular Dean and Chapter, this Year, they were all Summon'd by the Clause of which we are now speaking, in the Bishop's Writ. So that nothing remained to fix things in the Method which did afterwards obtain, and concerning which my doubt was, but to compleat this way of Summons, by taking in All the Capitular Priors of the Cathedral Churches alike into the same Writ; and when that was first done, is the very Point to be determin'd between Us. Now this was, I say, the next Year, Anno 1295. For then the Premunitory Clergy came in; and there it Runs in Form to all alike: and from thence I do Affirm it was taken into the Convocation Writs, which afterwards Summon'd the Lower Clergy after the same manner.

This therefore determines the Case, as to the King's Writs, concerning which the Original Enquiry was; and shews the present manner of Assembling the Clergy to have been first settled by the King in the Parliamentary, and from thence to have been derived into the Provincial, Convocation-Writs. But if the Question should be carried yet farther; and it should be asked, when, or by whom, this Method was first brought up; I have before shewn that Dr. A. after all his Pretences, did not himself know how to Account for it. That he has Committed many a Gross Mistake, by his Implicite Relyance upon the Constitution of the Council of Reading; as if this Matter had been Originally settled by it. That in the Convocation held but three Years before, the Number of Proctors for the Lower Clergy was not yet settled. If therefore to Err in this Case be a Mistake of so Capital a Nature, as wholly to Unqualify a Man for Writing upon this Subject, let Dr. A. think a little with himself, whether his Censure will not fall back upon his own Head; and prove himself to have been as unfit to meddle with these Matters, as I am very well content he should think me to have been to Engage in them.

The Result of this Point is this: About the Year 1283. by order of Archbishop Peckham and his Brethren, the Deans and Priors of Cathedral Churches, and the Archdeacons, in Person; the Capitular, and Collegiate Bodies by One, and the Diocesan Clergy by Two Proctors, were first brought to Convocation. To Convocation I say, not to Councils: For as for those Assemblies which were properly

ly Ecclesiastical, they were not yet thought to be any necessary Members of K. EDWARD the 1st. them; nor were they a long time after, wont to be Peremptorily Cited to them. This Model thus begun by the Archbishop, and Bishops, but not yet form'd into any constant, or fix'd Method by them, the King first settled by his Parliament Writs: From thence it was derived into his Convocation Writs, as in the Process of this History I shall have Occasion hereafter to shew.

As for Dr. A. the Use I would make of what has been before said with relation to him, is this; To convince him that his New Hypothesis of the Clergies coming first Nationally to Parliament, from the time of King William the Conqueror, till about the middle of King Henry the 2d. and afterwards attending upon it in two Provincial Synods, and thus continuing till the time of King Edward the 1st. by whom they were again brought Nationally to Parliament, as before, is not only Precarious, but False too; and appears by the whole Current of our History so to be. Sect. 119.

The Truth is, Dr. A. himself does not seem to be very well satisfied as to this Matter; nor does he, I believe, yet distinctly know what it is that he would stand to, with Relation to it. Under the Saxon Times, he Professes not to determine "how, or in what Capacity, the Lower Clergy were Summon'd to these Great Councils; whether as Representing any Part of the Spirituality; or as the King's Servants, and Dependants; or in what Other Respect: Which is, I think, plainly to own that in those Times the Body of the Lower Clergy, for ought he knows, were neither Called to Parliament, nor Represented there. Rights, &c. p. 290.

And after all his Pretences, the same, is at last, his Uncertainty here. He affirms indeed, (and in that he is utterly mistaken) "that from the Conquest down to King Edward the 1st. the Inferiour Clergy had Place, and Interest in Parliament: But then he adds, what Overthrows his own Hypothesis, "being there sometimes in Body, and as REPRESENTING the WHOLE, sometimes in PART only; and as Entitled by their Tenures: Now and then by distinct Proctors of their Own, but more frequently, by their Priors, and Archdeacons, particularly Empowered to that purpose. Sect. 120. Rights, pag. 316.

What Confused Assemblies does this Man of Antiquity make our Great Councils, in these Times to have been? In which there was Nothing Certain, Nothing Established. Not so much as the Persons determined who were to have Place, or Representation in them. Sometimes the Clergy were there in Body, and as Representing the Whole. How came they to be there sometimes, under that Capacity? Or if thus there sometimes, how came they not to be so Always? Was it not known of what Estates the Parliament did Consist? Or who were the Members of those Estates? Neither what kinds of Persons were to Come to it? Nor by whom they were to be Represented in it? Let this Author think as he will; for my part, I cannot persuade my self that our Government, in those Days, was either so Arbitrary, or so Uncertain, as he would hereby Represent it to Us.

But he goes on: "Nor matters it much, whether they were thus Called up immediately by a Royal Writ, or by an Ecclesiastical Summons ONLY, issued out at the King's Instance: since whether Cited this way, or that, the Effect of their Citation was to Attend the Parliament: --- They might be Summon'd often, as they sate, apart from the Laity: but as they sate in Parliament tho' separately, so were they Called to Parliament; tho' perhaps after a Different Manner from the Laity, and did there together, with the Greater Prelates, compose a full Representative of the Clergy, and the first Estate of the Realm.

As to the manner of their Citation, so long as it was made at the King's Instance, as he speaks; or, as I would rather have said, by the King's Command, and in Obedience to his Writ; I am not Offended at it. They were Called by their Bishops, after Edward the first's time, at the King's Instance, and had they been so Called before, I should not have thought them ever the less proper Members of Parliament, for all that. But has this Author so soon forgot himself? Did he not, in this very Paragraph, say that the Lower Clergy were in Parliament sometimes, as Representing the Whole; sometimes in Part only, and as Entitled by their Tenures? And how does he now Affirm, without any such Reserve, that "they were (indefinitely) Called to Parliament, and did there together with the Greater Prelates, compose a full Representative of the Clergy, and the first Estate of the Realm? For if this were the End for which they were Summon'd

K. EDWARD mon'd thither, then they must not only have been Always Called; but have been Always Called under this Respect, as Representing the Body of the Clergy; and so Compleating the first Estate of the Realm in Parliament.

Let me therefore put the Case as it ought to be Stated, would Dr. A. deal freely, and fairly with Us; and then desire him to give a plain, and positive Answer to it. Were the Lower Clergy called to Parliament from the time of King William the Conqueror, to the middle of King Henry the II^d. as they were afterwards called by King Edward the Ist? Had they their Representatives there? Whether Archdeacons, or other Proctors, it is to me indifferent. And were they Regularly, and constantly Called; as the Great Men, and Prelates, were to it? If he can shew this, I must then own that I have hitherto been under a very Great Mistake in this Particular. If he cannot; (as I think I have now sufficiently proved that he cannot) all his other Pretences will signify but very little. For that not only Prelates, but all other Clergy-men whose Tenures Intituled them to a place there, were wont to be Summon'd upon the account of such of their Tenures, I readily agree: But what that signifies as to the Body of the Lower Clergy, to intitule them to Parliamentary Rights, or Priviledges, I cannot imagine; let Dr. A. make his Advantage, if he knows how, of it.

CHAP. VII.

The History of the Assemblies of the Clergy of England continued from the Twenty Third of King EDWARD the Ist. to the End of King RICHARD the II^d. That in all this Time the Convocations did not Attend upon the Parliament: Dr. A's Allegations to the contrary Consider'd, and Answer'd.

Sect. I.

WE are now come to that part of our History, on which the Determination of those Rights and Powers of the Clergy, for which Dr. A. Contends, will begin to turn. Hitherto our Enquiries have had more of Curiosity than Use, as to this matter: And whether Dr. A.'s Scheme, or mine be accounted the more true, the Cause in Hand will get, or suffer, but little by it. But here the Foundation was laid, on which both the Parliamentary and Provincial Assemblies of the Clergy were built. From henceforth therefore every step that is made will be of some Use to Us, either to Clear, Confirm, or Confute somewhat in Reference to the Points under Debate. I shall therefore need the less Apology, if I here pursue my History a little more fully than the Cause before Required, or I thought it proper to do. To those who desire a full Satisfaction in these Matters, I have no Apprehension that such a Procedure will appear tedious, because I am sure they will find it to have been Necessary: And for Others, I ought to have the less Regard, because it will give no trouble to them.

Had Dr. A. once for all handled this part of our History in a Full and Methodical manner, he would at least have let us into a clear Notion of what he aimed at, tho' we should not have approved of his Opinion, or been satisfied with his Proofs. But under the frequent, and disjointed Views which he has given Us of it, in the several Parts of his Book, 'tis hard to Resolve (in many Circumstances) what his Hypothesis is; and for that Reason only, it will be difficult to refute it. If this were Policy, and done by Design, I shall not blame the Artifice, whatever I may think of the fairness of it. But if (as I rather Hope) it was Owing to a want of Light, and possibly of Materials too, when he began to Write; I could only have wished that he had either better Understood what he was himself about, or had been more sparing in his Reflections upon other Mens Ignorance, in a matter wherein he himself was involved in utter Darkness and Obscurity. Be it which it will, I shall take his Scheme as I find it put together by himself in his Second Chapter; where he purposely States his own Opinion; and according to which it will therefore be the fairest Method for me to proceed in the Representation of it.

King

King Edward the 1st. by the Premunientes inserted into the Bishop's Writs, brought the Lower-Clergy, as we have before seen, to Parliament. " This Clause
 " how much soever to the Real Interest and Advantage of the Lower-Clergy,
 " was yet thought a burden by them, and an inroad upon their Priviledges;
 " and they tried all ways of withstanding, or declining of it. This they could not accomplish in King Edward the 1st's time; but they advanced it very far in Edward the 1st. and fully settled it in Edward the 3rd's Reign: Whereby this
 " Accommodation took Place, that the Premunientes should still Summon them
 " from the King to meet Parliamentarily, but that sufficient Obedience should
 " be Understood to be paid to it, if the Clergy met Provincially; tho' not At " the same Place, yet About the same Time, and to the same Purpose; to be rea" dy to hear what should be proposed from the King; to give their Advice when
 " asked, and their Consent when Requisite; to offer their Aids, and their Petiti" ons; and, in short, to answer the Necessary Affairs of the King, and King" dom.

K. EDWARD
 the 1st.
 Sect. 2.
 Rights, &c.
 p. 40.

" From henceforth the Business of the Premunientes became a matter of Form,
 " rather than an EFFECTUAL SUMMONS TO PARLIAMENT. The Clause was conti" nued in the Bishop's Writs, and Executed by the Bishops, and Clergy: But that was all. " Thus (says Dr. A.) the Forms were kept up, and by that means
 " the King's Right of Summoning the Clergy Asserted, and Owned; and so the " State's Ends of Summoning them, were also answered, they were left to do it
 " in an ECCLESIASTICAL WAY, and to Attend the Parliament, and the Business of
 " it, not in One Body, as they were Called, but in Two Provincial Assemblies.
 " This they did, at first, by the Connivance of the Crown, rather than by any
 " Express Allowance; the Archbishop of his own Accord sending out a Provin" cial Citation Concurrently with the Bishops Writs of Summons: Which Method
 " obtaining, and those Meetings of the Province being tacitly accepted in Lieu
 " of the Clergies Resort to Parliament; it grew Necessary for the King to Em" ploy his Authority also in Convening of them.— This gave Birth to the " Custom of issuing out Two Convocation-Writs when a new Parliament was to
 " be Chosen; which tho' set on Foot before, yet settled not into a Rule, till
 " some Years after Edward the 3rd. was in the Throne; and then it was Pra" ctised as duly, and regularly, and much in the same manner, as it is at this Day.
 " Take one Instance instead of many, &c.

Ibid. p. 42.

Ibid. p. 44.

" 4 Thus the Clergy were indulged in the Form, so the thing were but Ef" fectually done; which was, to have them Meet together with the Parliament,
 " and for the dispatch of the same Urgent Affairs of the Kingdom, for which the " Parliament met. And this was no New-Practice but a Method now Settled and
 " Customary; of which various Precedent Instances might, if they were need-
 " ful, be given; but it is a short and sufficient Proof of it, that the Words of " the King's Writ to the Archbishop run, More solito Convocari faciatis.

Ibid. p. 45.

The Form now settled was this; that the Province of Canterbury, met a little before that of York, to set the Example of a Grant, which it was Expected the Other should almost implicitly follow. 5 As for the Parliament; that, Generally, went about a Week before both, tho' here (18 Ed. III.) it followed. " And " this was the usual Distance throughout Edward the Thirds, and Richard the " Seconds Reign, till Henry the Fourth began to Enlarge it; in, and after whose
 " time, the Clergy held their Assemblies during, and near the Sessions of Parliament,
 " but not thoroughly Concurrent with them.

Ibid. p. 47.

" But this was only an Interruption of the Old Practice for a time, not a
 " through Alteration of it: For about the Entrance of the Last Age, when the " Prerogative began to Recover the Ground it had lost to the Church, we find
 " these Meetings of the Clergy and Laity, more closely United; the dates of
 " Henry the Eighth's Convocations being All One, or a few-days before, or after,
 " (if not altogether the same with) those of his Parliament.

" The Clergy therefore, tho' by a mistake in their Politicks separated from the
 " Parliament, yet continued still to Attend it in two Provincial Assemblies, or
 " Convocations.

This is Dr. A's Scheme concerning the Connexion of our Convocations, and Parliaments, within the Period We are here Enquiring into. Let us now take it to Pieces, and see wherein we agree or differ in our Notions of these Matters.

And

the 1st.

And 1st. It is agreed between Us ; that King Edward the 1st, brought the Lower Clergy to Parliament by the Premunientes Clause. In this we Differ, that Dr. A. affirms him herein to have only Restored the Antient Practice ; whereas I deny that ever the Body of the Inferior Clergy had before been Called to our State-Councils, or been Represented there ; and I referr my self to the Historical Proofs of the preceding Chapters, for the Ground of such my Denial.

2. Whether the Lower Clergy were Mistaken in their Politicks in Refusing all they could to comply with this New-Summons, and accounting it a Burden rather than an Advantage to them, as it is hard to Determine, so is it of no great Moment to Dispute. That hereby they were design'd not only to be put to the Charge and Trouble of a frequent Assembling ; but that in order to a farther Burden of coming into a large share of all the State-Taxes, from whence (as to their Spiritualities and Antient Demesnes) they had hitherto been almost wholly Exempted is very Plain : And the Endeavours they used both by their Own Management, and by the Popes Assistance, to avoid these Impositions, sufficiently shew that this was the Grievance of which they were aware. What they should have gain'd by a more constant Coming, to have recompensed so much Cost and Labour, and to have turned it to their Real Interest, I cannot tell ; being not yet able to find that the Lower Clergy ever Came and Acted in a Body in Parliament ; or were ever Considered as a Separate-State from the Lords, and so Allowed a Negative on such Acts as would otherwise have passed (oftentimes) to their Grievance there. All that I can perceive they did, when they Came to Parliament, was to Consult with their Bishops ; and, by them, send their Sense and Petitions to the Other States ; Who being intermixed with the Lords Temporal, had no more Privilege on the Account of the Lower-Clergy in those days, than what they Continue to Enjoy now ; but were Concluded by the Votes of the Upper-House, as they still are, notwithstanding the double Capacity in which they sit there.

num. 38.

I have already given an Evident Instance of this in the Parliament of the 3^d. of Richard the 2^d ; where tho' the whole Clergy Dissented, yet the Act passed for all that, and was not stopp'd upon their Protestations against it. So that I am still to learn what Advantage, more than that of advising with their Prelates, the Lower-Clergy could have gained by this Summons to Parliament : And whether that alone would have been an Equivalent to the Cost, and Trouble it was like to bring upon them, I shall leave it to Dr. A. upon further Thoughts to Consider.

But be this as it will ; the Lower-Clergy thought it a Grievance to be Obligated to come to Parliament, and try'd all ways of Declining of it. This Dr. A. allows ; in Point of Fact ; and in this I shall not differ with him : They were Uneasy at it ; and they came as little as possibly they could to it.

3. Now this brought up the Use, tho' I cannot say of Parliamentary, yet, at least, of State-Convocations ; and of which Dr. A. tells us, that the Accommodation, between the King and Clergy, was this ; " that the Premunientes should " still Summon them to meet PARLIAMENTARILY ; but that sufficient Obedience " should be UNDERSTOOD to be PAID to it, if the Clergy met PROVINCIALLY ; " tho' not AT the same PLACE, yet ABOUT the same Time, and to the same " Purpose. But in this I can by no means Agree with him, and indeed his Own Expressions shew some kind of Violence in his Notion. The King was, " by the " Premunientes to Summon the Clergy, he says, to meet Parliamentarily : but a " sufficient Obedience should be Understood to be paid to it, if they met Pro- " vincially. Now by Meeting, in this manner, Provincially, either they did truly Obey the Premunitory Summons, or they did not. If they did truly Obey it, then 'tis too much Mincing of the matter to say that thereby a sufficient Obedience should be UNDERSTOOD to be PAID to that Summons ; whereas it ought to have been Roundly Affirmed, that by such their Meeting they did Pay a due, and Legal Obedience to it. But if such a Meeting in Convocation, did not Answer the Obligation which that Summons laid upon them ; If it were so far from doing that, that it was, in truth, no Obeying of it at All ; then Dr. A. should plainly have told us how the Case stood, and in which I should not have differed with him : That tho' the Clergy, being Unwilling to come to Parliament, did not Obey the King's Premunitory Summons so duly as they ought to have done, yet so long as they met together in their Provincial Convocations, whenever he Required them ;

them, and gave him what he desired there, he was Content to bear with their Neglect in that Particular, and did not much insist upon their Coming to Parliament, whilst he got what he aim'd at of them in their Convocations. K. EDWARD the 1st.

This was the truth of the Case, but this would not have served Dr. A's Purpose: and therefore what he insinuates here; he elsewhere more plainly affirms, "that these Convocations (in some Sense) were held always by the King's Writ, that is, by the Præmunitory Clause in the Bishop's Summons: And for this he Referrs Us to the Authorities of Mr. Bagshaw, and Bishop Ravis; the One of which he says Owns, the Other Affirms, as much. Rights, &c. p. 66. compare pag. 79. Where he expressly says, that 'These

Dr. A. must Excuse me if I say that I cannot see any such Position, either in the Ones Argument, or in the Others Papers. But what does he mean by his new Qualification again in this Case? These Convocations, in some Sense, were held by the PRÆMUNITORY CLAUSE. The Bishops Writ is a Legal Summons; and has a Legal Force and Obligation. If therefore it Respects the Convocation at all, it Summons it Expressly, and not in some Sense only; and the Clergy by meeting there, must Legally Obey it, or I am sure a sufficient Obedience cannot be understood to be paid to it by such their Meeting. For, in Law, no Obedience is sufficient, but what is Legal, and answers the Terms of what the Law Requires. And to the Common Reason of Mankind I appeal, as well as to the Law of the Realm, whether a Writ framed (as both the Words shew, and Dr. A. himself Owns that it was) to Summon the Clergy of the two Provinces Nationally to Parliament, can be Obey'd in any Sense at all, by their meeting not Nationally, but Provincially; not in Parliament, but in Convocation; at another Time, in another Place, and with another sort of Men, from what that Writ Requires them to meet at, and withall. Provincial Assemblies, tho' held a part from the Parliament, yet belonged to it; met by the Parliamentary no less than the Provincial Writ; &c. And p. 251. He affirms the Original Design of the Provincial Writ to have been 'only to secure an Obedience to the Præmunitory Clause: This (he says) is IN-DUBITABLY TRUE.

In short; as the Lower Clergy were Summon'd, so are the Bishops: The Writs both for Parliament, and Convocation, Regard them both alike; and the same Reason must hold for both or neither. Here therefore let me ask Dr. A. When the Bishops are Summon'd to Parliament, would they in SOME SENSE Obey the KING'S WRIT by meeting only in Convocation? Should the Archbishop and Bishops of the Province of York (for Example) instead of coming up to London to Parliament, Assemble only in Convocation at St. Peters York; and tell the King that by this they did in Some Sense Obey his Call of them to Westminster; would Dr. A. undertake to defend their Plea, and prove that this was a Legal Obedience to the King's Parliamentary Summons? If not, then let him not tell us that the Lower Clergy do in Some Sense Obey the King's Parliament Writ, by meeting in Convocation; or sit there in Any Sense by Vertue of it: but let him Remember, what Himself, (according to the usual Consistency of his New-Notions,) elsewhere tells us, that in former times, when the Convocation and Parliament met together, the Clergy sat Personally in the One, and sent their Proctors to the Other, to Act there for them: Which had their Meeting in Convocation been such either in the Eye of the Law, or by the King's Avow'd Acceptance of it, as he here pretends, there would have been no need of their doing.

The truth then of this matter is this: The Clergy being Uneasy at their Parliamentary Summons, by degrees brought all their Grants to be made in Convocation; and the King, whose design in Summoning of them to Parliament was only to have Aids of them, comply'd with their Humour; and never enquired whether they Obey'd his Writs, by coming to Parliament, so long as they both met, and supplied his needs in Convocation. This is true History, and Good Sense: Whereas Dr. A's pretence has indeed, neither History, nor Law to support it; nor will the Nature of the Writs, admit of such a Use, as he pretends, to be made of them.

Let us hear how he himself goes on, to the Contradiction of his own Assertion. "Thus the Forms were kept up, and by that means the King's Right of Summoning the Clergy Asserted and Owned: and so the State-Ends of Summoning them were also Answered, they were left to do it in an Ecclesiastical way,—not in One Body, as they were Called, but in two Provincial Assemblies. This they did, at first, rather by the Connivance of the Crown, than by any Express Allowance. Now All this exactly agrees with what I affirm; and with the truth of the Case; but it shews, at the same time, that the Pretence of Meeting in this manner, in any Sense, by Authority of the Præmunitory Clause, is All but Fancy: A Principle which Dr. A's Case wants, Rights, &c. p. 44.

4thly. " This Method obtaining, (of the Clergies Meeting, and Granting Subsidies in two Provincial Assemblies) " and this their Meeting being tacitly Accepted in lieu of the Clergies Resort to Parliament; it grew Necessary for the King to employ his Authority in Convening of them. This, in the Sense before mentioned, I can agree to; but then what he adds is utterly false in point of Fact, ¹ " This (says he) gave Birth to the Custom of Issuing out two Convocation-Writs, when a New-Parliament was to be Chosen; which, tho' set on Foot before, yet settled not into a Rule, till some Years after Edward the Third was in the Throne: and then it was Practised as Duly, and Regularly, " and much in the same manner, that it is at this day. This, I say, is utterly false; as to the issuing out of two Convocation-Writs when ever a New-Parliament was Called. Our Kings never Obligated themselves, nor were they ever by Law Obligated, to any such thing: They often did Call them at the same time that they did their Parliaments, as having the same need of Both; and they more often held them, not only at different Times from, but without any Respect to one another. Sometimes Parliaments met without any Convocations at all; Often Convocations, without any Parliaments, to be either petitioned to, Advised, or otherwise Acted with, by them.

But ² Dr. A. will give us One Instance instead of many, of this. That indeed is Extraordinary: He will shew us, that once upon a time a Parliament and Convocation were held together, and that to prove that it was the Constant Custom for them to be held one with the other. A noble Induction, and worthy the Point that is to be proved by it. However let us hear what this One Instance says. He tells us that it " had been agreed for the Urgent Affairs of the Kingdom, to hold a Parliament at Westminster on the Munday after the Octaves of Trinity, and that the Archbishop should call a Convocation of the Prelates, and Others of the Clergy of his Province, to the Church of St. Pauls, London, on the morrow of Trinity for the dispatch of the said Affairs. The Words of the ³ Roll are more full; and will shew this to have been an Extraordinary Case. By Writs dated the 7th, of March, a Parliament, or Great Council, had been summon'd to meet at Westminster fifteen days after Easter. There, at that Council, says the Roll, " it was agreed by all the Lords, who were then Present, that " for divers great Occasions touching the Government, and Safety of the Realm of England, which could not, as it was there said, be Expedited " without a Parliament, a Parliament should be Summon'd, at the Time and Place " before mentioned; and that the Archbishop of Canterbury should hold a Convocation of the Prelates and Clergy of his Province about the same time. Here therefore was an Express Agreement, by order of a Great Council; for the holding of this Parliament and this Convocation. The Place and Time of both were settled by the Resolution of the Lords there Assembled: And Dr. A. therefore can infer nothing of a Common Usage from such an Instance, which was plainly of an Extraordinary, if not of a singular Nature; and the like whereof (unless in the same Case about five Years before in the 13th of Edward the IIIrd.) is not to be met with in this whole Reign.

However, since Dr. A. has pitch'd upon this Time for the thorough Settlement of this pretended Custom to hold a Convocation with every New-Parliament; I will comply so far with his own Choice, as to consider how the Case, in Fact stood, as to this matter, for some Years, on each side of this One Instance so Pompously Alledged by him.

In the 12th of Edward the IIIrd. Anno 1338. Three Parliaments were held; but with none of them can I meet with any Attending-Convocation: And having a very Particular Account of the Transactions of this Year, I conclude, there was none Called at all with them. Anno 1339. A fortnight after Michaelmas, a Parliament sate, and no Convocation with it. There it was agreed that another Parliament should be held in the Octaves of Hilary, and the Convocations called about the same time with it; but on Midlent-Sunday a third Parliament was Assembled and sate forty five days, without any Convocation, that I can find, of Either Province to Accompany it.

Anno 1340. The Parliament sate the Wednesday after the Translation of St. Thomas of Canterbury, July the 12th. About the Eleventh of December following, a

Convocation was held at York: but of any Convocation Concurrent with, or At- K. EDWARD tending upon the Parliament of this Year, I meet with no Footsteps. the 1st.

Anno 1341. a Parliament met fifteen days after Easter. In October an Ecclesiastical-Council was Called by the Archbishop of Canterbury; but neither this Year can I hear of any Convocation.

Anno 1342. On Wednesday after St. Edward the Confessor, about the middle of October, the Parliament sate. The Convocation of our Province went before it, and sate October the 9th. That of York met not till the Ninth of December; at too Great a distance to be called either a Concurrent, or Attending Convocation.

Anno 1343. The Parliament sate April the 28th; but for Convocations I can meet with none at all this Year.

Thus stood the Case for six Years before the time of which Dr. A. gives us his One Instance; let us go on with a View of as many after it.

Anno 1345. A Parliament, or Great Council, sate the morrow after the Purification: In May following, 1346. an Ecclesiastical Synod met; but no Convocation at all that Year. 'Tis true, by a Minute taken out of the Great Register Regist Mag.
of the Church of Worcester, I am inform'd that a Proxy was Granted by the Wigorn, fol.
Prior and Chapter for a Parliament to be held at Westminster on Munday next 189.
after the Octaves of Easter, about ten days before this Synod was held. It is of no Great Moment should we suppose such a Parliament to have Assembled at that time; seeing the Council which met in May following, was a proper Ecclesiastical Synod; and such as even Dr. A. himself will not allow to be one of his Attending-Convocations.

On Munday after the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin, September the 11th. of the same Year, the Parliament was Assembled; but the Convocations kept at a Great Distance from it. The One sate not till the 16th of October; the Other was not called till after the middle of December, and sate not till the End of January following.

Anno 1347. Two Parliaments were held: One the Morrow after Hilary; the other about Midlent. About three Months before the former of these, an Ecclesiastical Synod of the Province of Canterbury was Assembled: But for any Parliamentary Attending Convocations I am yet to seek; Dr. A. will please to tell Us when they met.

Anno 1348. A Parliament was called to meet the Munday after Hilary, and twice Prorogued, without ever sitting. Yet a Convocation met at York in Whitson Week; but of any Called at any of the times that the Parliament was Sum-mon'd, I find no mention.

Anno 1350, 1351. the Parliament sate in the Octaves of the Purification. The Convocation of Canterbury was not held till May the 2d after; that of York, not till the 18th, of the same Month.

And now from this short View of the Convocations of this time, for about Twelve Years space; I shall leave it to Dr. A. himself to Consider, with what little Reason he affirmed it to have by this time become the Constant Practise for Convocations to be Called with every New-Parliament, as Duly and Regularly as they are at this day. I omit any farther Enquiry into these Matters, till I come in Order of time to the Consideration of them; and then I shall not only more fully insist upon the Years which I have now CurSORily run over, but shall take in the whole Process of these Meetings, during this, and all the following Reigns.

5. The Time of the Convocations Meeting, is the next Circumstance which Sect. 6. comes to be Considered, and of that Dr. A. gives us this Account: 2 " The Rights, &c.

which I suppose he must mean, within the same Compass of Time that the Parliament was sitting. 3 " The Province of Canterbury usually met a little before Rights, &c.

Shall I add yet more; that Knyghton plainly intimates the direct Contrary to what Dr. A. quotes him for. For the Clergy having Complied with the King's Demand, the King bid them ask any Redress of Grievances that they would. They asked to have the Statute of Mortmain Repealed. The King's Answer was; that that Statute had been made "de Consilio Magnatum, & absque Eorum Consilio non erat Revocandum : Which had been no Answer at all, if this Meeting had been a true Parliament ; and by Consequence the Great Men had been present to Consent to the Repealing of it.

To Close all, Knyghton having done with his Account of this Meeting of the Clergy, adds with relation to the Other of the Laity; Eodem etiam Anno, (He does not say Eodem Tempore) habuit Rex a Communitate Regni decimum Denarium, & a Civitatibus sextum Denarium. But to proceed :

"² And accordingly (they are Dr. A's Words) these Proctors did thus meet at the Opening of it promiscuously, tho' they afterwards Debated and Resolved separately: Which is all meer Fancy, and falls with the Mistake of the Laities being Called to this Assembly. One of the Resolutions they came to, was to give the King a Moiety of their Goods for one Year. Will Dr. A. please to tell us of any Other Resolution that they came to there? If not, let him speak truly, that this was what they were called for, and this was the Result of their Meeting there. But he goes on: " This Gift however was, by the PROVINCE of CANTERBURY ALONE; for the Clergy of YORK PROVINCE, IF PRESENT at this MEETING, yet did not make their Grant in it, as appears from the King's Letters Patents transmitted to them by the Dean of York, immediately upon the Rising of the CLERGY of CANTERBURY; wherein they are commanded to do as the King's Agent shall direct; that is, as the CLERGY of the OTHER Province had done before them.

Sect. 115.

Ann. 1294.

Why Dr. A. should doubt whether the Clergy of York were PRESENT at this Meeting, I cannot Imagine. He allows that they were summon'd to it; and to convince him that he was thus far, at least, in the Right, ³ He may in the Appendix see not only the King's Writ to the Archbishop of York, but the Archbishop's Execution of it. Let me add to this, that Our Historians expressly speak of the Archbishop of York as present at it; and give a Reason why the Bishop of Durham was not; which they would not have done, had the Clergy of that Province refused to Come at all to this Assembly.

But is Dr. A. sure that the Clergy of York did not Grant their Subsidy there? If he be, I will venture to say I am more sure that he is mistaken. This Assembly met September the 21st. The King demanding an Aid of them, they desired three days to deliberate upon it. In this time they consulted together, and agreed to Offer the King two Tenths. This therefore we may suppose they did, September the 24th. The King refused it: New-debates were had, and high Words arose, and great Threatnings were made, unless they should comply with what was demanded of them. Let us therefore agree, that all this was ended in two days more, September the 26th. Upon the very next day, September the 27th. the King's Letters relating to this Grant, were issued out; in which the ⁴ King recites how that the Prelates, and the whole Clergy of this Realm, had Granted to him; a Stile that I believe is no where to be found, when but One Province only gives; but takes in the Clergy of both, as from a Multitude of Examples, might easily be made appear.

⁴ Registrum
gorn, fol. 383.
 b. See also Prynne. Rerecords, Vol. III.
 pag. 588.

So our Historians also relate it: Mat. Westm. ad Ann. 1294. "Postulat Rex a TOTA Ecclesia per TOTUM REGNUM Angliæ hecata. And thus, he says, they Granted, what the King desired. The same may be shewn from a multitude of other Writs relating to this Grant. And particularly from all such as concern the Collecting of this Aid. Regist. Giffard. fol. 384. a. From such as exempt the Clergy from being Tax'd to the Tenth Granted by the Laity this Year. Regist. Oliv. Sutton, Linc. fol. 114, &c.

On September the 30th. the King's Writs went out for Collecting of this Aid. In them again he Recites how that the Pralati & totus Clerus de Regno Nostro, had Granted a Moiety of their Goods to him. And that we may here be fully satisfied of the Extent of that Phrase, he appoints Collectors in every Diocesis of the Province of York, as well as in those of Canterbury, to receive it for him. And therefore tho' I cannot tell what that Letter of the Kings is, to which Dr. A. refers, nor do I believe that he knows any thing more of it himself than I do, yet this I am very sure, that the King by his Letter dated ^{K. EDWARD} September the 28th. could not Require the Province of York to grant a ^{the 1st.} Subsidy to him, which in his Letters dated the day before, He acknowledged the Prelates, and Whole Clergy of his Realm had already given to him; and by Others dated but Two days after, appointed to be Collected in that Province, as well as in the Other.

I have now done with the Second Period of our English History, during the Reigns of Nine Kings; and the space of about two hundred and thirty Years. I have shewn * that from the Conquest, to the time of King Edward the 1st, it does not appear that any of the Clergy were wont to be Called to Parliament, besides the Bishops and Prelates; and such Others, as by Vertue of their Temporal Tenures, were obliged (if Required) to come to it. * That of the Prelates, such only were Generally Summon'd, as had Temporal Possessions; tho' if the King, at any time, thought fit to Call them All, they were All obliged to Obey him. This was done in the forty ninth of Henry the IIIrd. whether ever besides, and particularly, whether in the sixth of King John, (as Dr. A. affirms) is yet to be proved to Me. * That tho' King Edward the 1st. did sometimes Call together the Clergy after some Other manners; Provincially in his Eleventh Year; Nationally in his Twenty second; Yet to Parliament he never Called them, till his Twenty third Year, when the Clause Premunientes was first put in the Bishops Writs; and by being so, did first Intitule, or rather Oblige the Lower Clergy, partly in Person, and partly by their Proxies, to come to Parliament. * That it has not yet been proved that in any Part of this Period they had any Convocations Limited either to the Time or Place of these State Assemblies; much less, * That it was a Matter of constant Practise for the Clergy to meet in Convocation, whenever the Lords, and Prelates, did in Parliament. * That the supposed Constitution of the Council of Reading (the only Ground upon which Dr. A. builds his new Hypothesis) is neither its self Authentick, nor if it were, would it prove any thing more, than that the Bishops agreed to require their Clergy to appear by their Proxies at their next intended Meeting; a Voluntary, or Special Order, both as to the time and manner of their Assembling. I shall only make a brief Remark, or two, upon what has been thus shown, and that with Relation both to my self, and to Dr. A.

In my former Book, I had said, with Reference to the Persons who are now Called to our Convocations, that "I should not enquire how this came to be the settled Number of them: Whether this Manner of Choice was derived from the Antient Manner of holding Convocations, into the Parliamentary Writs; or from the Parliamentary Writs of King Edward the 1st. into the Summons of Convocations. I spake with Relation to the King's Summons in both, and I waved the Enquiry concerning the Method of Assembling the Lower Clergy; viz. the Deans, and Archdeacons in Person, the Chapters by One; and the Dioceses (for so it should have been, not as in my hast I wrote it, Archdeaconries, tho' that be the Case of the Other Province) by two Proxies. Whether the Premunitory Summons, led the way to the Provincial, or that, to the Premunitory.

Authority,

C. p. 104.

For this Dr. A. falls very briskly, after his manner, upon me, and thus Reports the Matter. "He makes it a doubt whether the settled Number of the Inferior Clergy, Called by the Bishop's Writ, was derived from thence into the Convocation Writ, or from the Convocation Writs into those of the Parliament. Well, and what says the Learned Dr. A. to this? "Which is (says he) in Effect to doubt whether the Deans, Archdeacons, Capitular, and Rurall Proctors, were Called. (He should have added, by the King) to Convocation (in the same manner that they now are, the Chapters by One Proctor, the Dioceses by two a-piece) before the Bishop's Writ had that Clause in it: And he who doubts of this, puts it beyond a doubt how far he is Qualified to Write on this Subject. The turn is pretty enough, and perhaps Answers Dr. A's End a great deal better than a true Resolution of the Point would have done. But we are now seeking for Truth, not Wit; and this Reflection will be found to have but very little of the One, how much so ever may kindly be Allowed it as to the Other. Let us take the Matter as Dr. A. himself Represents it: The Question is, Whether the stated Number of the Inferior Clergy, was derived from the Bishop's Parliament-Writs, into the Archbishop's Convocation Writs, or from the Convocation Writs, into those of the Parliament? And I do now affirm, what Dr.

Right, &c.

p. 434.

the 1st.

A. I believe will be surprized at, that this Method of Assembling the Lower Clergy was first settled by the King's Parliamentary, (which He calls the Bishops) Writs; before it was made use of in his Provincial, or Convocation Writs. Or (which is the same thing) that the Clergy were wont to be thus Summon'd by the King to Parliament, before they were wont to be thus Summon'd by him to Convocation.

Sect. 118.

The first Provincial Writ, that I believe, was ever Issued out by any of our Kings, was that of the Eleventh of King Edward the 1st; Anno 1282. In that he ordered the Archbishop to Cite his Suffragans, and the Regular Prelates, with the Proctors of the Deans and Chapters of the Collegiate Churches; and this is a Form sufficiently different from that which we are now enquiring after.

The next Attempt was in his Nineteenth Year, Anno 1294. and this Dr. A. affirms to be a Call to Parliament; so that upon his Hypothesis I need not Enquire how this Matter was ordered there. But indeed it was no such thing, but a Summons to a National, State-Convocation. In this the Deans and Chapters, the Archdeacons, and Clergy, were Summon'd; but not the Priors and Chapters: For so the Writ runs to such Bishops in whose Cathedral Churches these Regular Prelates were settled, "Vocantes Prius Archidiaconos totumq; Clerum Vestra Dioceseos"; No Priors, or Chapters, mention'd. These, I conceive, were Cited by particular Writs; not by this Clause in their Bishop's Summons.

As yet then the Present Method does not Appear to have been fully settled, or used in any of the King's Writs. Let me add, nor yet in the Archbishop's Mandate neither. For but three Years before this, Anno 1290, in the Convocation-Writ for the Synod at Ely, the Morrow after the first Sunday in October, the Archbishop ordered the Diocesan Clergy to appear there by ¹ Two or Three Proctors for every Diocese, as Dr. A. himself truly observed from some Collections which were Communicated to him, tho' he mistook the Register from whence they were taken. Yet thus far this Matter was now come to a Settlement, that the Lower Clergy were called by their Own Proctors to Convocation: Those Proctors were determin'd to be One for each Chapter, and Two for each Diocese; And in such Churches (which at that time were not very many) in which there was a Secular Dean and Chapter, this Year, they were all Summon'd by the Clause of which we are now speaking, in the Bishop's Writ. So that nothing remained to fix things in the Method which did afterwards obtain, and concerning which my doubt was, but to compleat this way of Summons, by taking in All the Capitular Priors of the Cathedral Churches alike into the same Writ; and when that was first done, is the very Point to be determin'd between Us. Now this was, I say, the next Year, Anno 1295. For then the Premunitory Clergy came in; and there it Runs in Form to all alike: and from thence I do Affirm it was taken into the Convocation Writs, which afterwards Summon'd the Lower Clergy after the same manner.

This therefore determines the Case, as to the King's Writs, concerning which the Original Enquiry was; and shews the present manner of Assembling the Clergy to have been first settled by the King in the Parliamentary, and from thence to have been derived into the Provincial, Convocation-Writs. But if the Question should be carried yet farther; and it should be asked, when, or by whom, this Method was first brought up; I have before shewn that Dr. A. after all his Pretences, did not himself know how to Account for it. That he has Committed many a Gross Mistake, by his Implicite Relyance upon the Constitution of the Council of Reading; as if this Matter had been Originally settled by it. That in the Convocation held but three Years before, the Number of Proctors for the Lower Clergy was not yet settled. If therefore to Err in this Case be a Mistake of so Capital a Nature, as wholly to Unqualify a Man for Writing upon this Subject, let Dr. A. think a little with himself, whether his Censure will not fall back upon his own Head; and prove himself to have been as unfit to meddle with these Matters, as I am very well content he should think me to have been to Engage in them.

The Result of this Point is this: About the Year 1283. by order of Archbishop Peckham and his Brethren, the Deans and Priors of Cathedral Churches, and the Archdeacons, in Person; the Capitular, and Collegiate Bodies by One, and the Diocesan Clergy by Two Proctors, were first brought to Convocation. To Convocation I say, not to Councils: For as for those Assemblies which were properly

ly Ecclesiastical, they were not yet thought to be any necessary Members of K. EDWARD the 1st. them; nor were they a long time after, wont to be Peremptorily Cited to them. This Model thus begun by the Archbishop, and Bishops, but not yet form'd into any constant, or fix'd Method by them, the King first settled by his Parliament Writs: From thence it was derived into his Convocation Writs, as in the Process of this History I shall have Occasion hereafter to shew.

As for Dr. A. the Use I would make of what has been before said with relation to him, is this; To convince him that his New Hypothesis of the Clergies coming first Nationally to Parliament, from the time of King William the Conqueror, till about the middle of King Henry the 2d. and afterwards attending upon it in two Provincial Synods, and thus continuing till the time of King Edward the 1st. by whom they were again brought Nationally to Parliament, as before, is not only Precaious, but False too; and appears by the whole Current of our History so to be. Sect. 119.

The Truth is, Dr. A. himself does not seem to be very well satisfied as to this Matter; nor does he, I believe, yet distinctly know what it is that he would stand to, with Relation to it. Under the Saxon Times, he Professes not to determine "how, or in what Capacity, the Lower Clergy were Summon'd to these Great Councils; whether as Representing any Part of the Spirituality; or as the King's Servants, and Dependants; or in what Other Respect: Which is, I think, plainly to own that in those Times the Body of the Lower Clergy, for ought he knows, were neither Called to Parliament, nor Represented there. Rights, &c. p. 290.

And after all his Pretences, the same, is at last, his Uncertainty here. He affirms indeed, (and in that he is utterly mistaken) "that from the Conquest down to King Edward the 1st. the Inferiour Clergy had Place, and Interest in Parliament: But then he adds, what Overthrows his own Hypothesis, "being there sometimes in BODY, and as REPRESENTING the WHOLE, sometimes in PART only; and as Entituled by their Tenures: Now and then by distinct Proctors of their Own, but more frequently, by their Priors, and Archdeacons, particularly Empowered to that purpose. Sect. 120. Rights, pag. 316.

What Confused Assemblies does this Man of Antiquity make our Great-Councils, in these Times to have been? In which there was Nothing Certain, Nothing Established. Not so much as the Persons determined who were to have Place, or Representation in them. Sometimes the Clergy were there in Body, and as Representing the Whole. How came they to be there sometimes, under that Capacity? Or if thus there sometimes, how came they not to be so Always? Was it not known of what Estates the Parliament did Consist? Or who were the Members of those Estates? Neither what kinds of Persons were to Come to it? Nor by whom they were to be Represented in it? Let this Author think as he will; for my part, I cannot perswade my self that our Government, in those Days, was either so Arbitrary, or so Uncertain, as he would hereby Represent it to Us.

But he goes on: "Nor matters it much, whether they were thus Called up immediately by a Royal Writ, or by an Ecclesiastical Summons ONLY, issued out at the King's Instance: since whether Cited this way, or that, the Effect of their Citation was to Attend the Parliament: --- They might be Summon'd often, as they sate, apart from the Laity: but as they sate in Parliament tho' separately, so were they Called to Parliament; tho' perhaps after a Different Manner from the Laity, and did there together, with the Greater Prelates, compose a full Representative of the Clergy, and the first Estate of the Realm.

As to the manner of their Citation, so long as it was made at the King's Instance, as he speaks; or, as I would rather have said, by the King's Command, and in Obedience to his Writ; I am not Offended at it. They were Called by their Bishops, after Edward the first's time, at the King's Instance, and had they been so Called before, I should not have thought them ever the less proper Members of Parliament, for all that. But has this Author so soon forgot himself? Did he not, in this very Paragraph, say that the Lower Clergy were in Parliament sometimes, as Representing the Whole; sometimes in Part only, and as Entituled by their Tenures? And how does he now Affirm, without any such Reserve, that "they were (indefinitely) Called to Parliament, and did there together with the Greater Prelates, compose a full Representative of the Clergy, and the first Estate of the Realm? For if this were the End for which they were Summon'd

K. EDWARD mon'd thither, then they must not only have been Always Called; but have been Always Called under this Respect, as Representing the Body of the Clergy; and so Compleating the first Estate of the Realm in Parliament.

Let me therefore put the Case as it ought to be Stated, would Dr. A. deal freely, and fairly with Us; and then desire him to give a plain, and positive Answer to it. Were the Lower Clergy called to Parliament from the time of King William the Conqueror, to the middle of King Henry the II^d. as they were afterwards called by King Edward the Ist? Had they their Representatives there? Whether Archdeacons, or other Proctors, it is to me indifferent. And were they Regularly, and constantly Called; as the Great Men, and Prelates, were to it? If he can shew this, I must then own that I have hitherto been under a very Great Mistake in this Particular. If he cannot; (as I think I have now sufficiently proved that he cannot) all his other Pretences will signify but very little. For that not only Prelates, but all other Clergy-men whose Tenures Intituled them to a place there, were wont to be Summon'd upon the account of such of their Tenures, I readily agree: But what that signifies as to the Body of the Lower Clergy, to intitule them to Parliamentary Rights, or Priviledges, I cannot imagine; let Dr. A. make his Advantage, if he knows how, of it.

CHAP. VII.

The History of the Assemblies of the Clergy of England continued from the Twenty Third of King EDWARD the Ist. to the End of King RICHARD the II^d. That in all this Time the Convocations did not Attend upon the Parliament: Dr. A's Allegations to the contrary Consider'd, and Answer'd.

Sect. I.

WE are now come to that part of our History, on which the Determination of those Rights and Powers of the Clergy, for which Dr. A. Contends, will begin to turn. Hitherto our Enquiries have had more of Curiosity than Use, as to this matter: And whether Dr. A's Scheme, or mine be accounted the more true, the Cause in Hand will get, or suffer, but little by it. But here the Foundation was laid, on which both the Parliamentary and Provincial Assemblies of the Clergy were built. From henceforth therefore every step that is made will be of some Use to Us, either to Clear, Confirm, or Confute somewhat in Reference to the Points under Debate. I shall therefore need the less Apology, if I here pursue my History a little more fully than the Cause before Required, or I thought it proper to do. To those who desire a full Satisfaction in these Matters, I have no Apprehension that such a Procedure will appear tedious, because I am sure they will find it to have been Necessary: And for Others, I ought to have the less Regard, because it will give no trouble to them.

Had Dr. A. once for all handled this part of our History in a Full and Methodical manner, he would at least have let us into a clear Notion of what he aimed at, tho' we should not have approved of his Opinion, or been satisfied with his Proofs. But under the frequent, and disjointed Views which he has given Us of it, in the several Parts of his Book, 'tis hard to Resolve (in many Circumstances) what his Hypothesis is; and for that Reason only, it will be difficult to refute it. If this were Policy, and done by Design, I shall not blame the Artifice, whatever I may think of the fairness of it. But if (as I rather Hope) it was Owing to a want of Light, and possibly of Materials too, when he began to Write; I could only have wished that he had either better Understood what he was himself about, or had been more sparing in his Reflections upon other Mens Ignorance, in a matter wherein he himself was involved in utter Darkness and Obscurity. Be it which it will, I shall take his Scheme as I find it put together by himself in his Second Chapter; where he purposely States his own Opinion; and according to which it will therefore be the fairest Method for me to proceed in the Representation of it.

King

King Edward the 1st. by the Premunientes inserted into the Bishop's Writs, brought the Lower-Clergy, as we have before seen, to Parliament. " This Clause
" how much soever to the Real Interest and Advantage of the Lower-Clergy,
" was yet thought a burden by them, and an inroad upon their Priviledges;
" and they tried all ways of withstanding, or declining of it. This they could not accomplish in King Edward the 1st's time; but they advanced it very far in Edward the 1st. and fully settled it in Edward the 3rd's Reign: Whereby this
" Accommodation took Place, that the Premunientes should still Summon them
" from the King to meet Parliamentarily, but that sufficient Obedience should
" be Understood to be paid to it, if the Clergy met Provincially; tho' not At " the same Place, yet About the same Time, and to the same Purpose; to be rea" dy to hear what should be proposed from the King; to give their Advice when
" asked, and their Consent when Requisite; to offer their Aids, and their Petiti" ons; and, in short, to answer the Necessary Affairs of the King, and King" dom.

" From henceforth the Business of the Premunientes became a matter of FORM,
" rather than an EFFECTUAL SUMMONS to PARLIAMENT. The Clause was conti" nued in the Bishop's Writs, and Executed by the Bishops, and Clergy: But that
" was all. " Thus (says Dr. A.) the Forms were kept up, and by that means
" the King's Right of Summoning the Clergy Asserted, and Owned; and so the
" State's Ends of Summoning them, were also answered, they were left to do it
" in an ECCLESIASTICAL WAY, and to Attend the Parliament, and the Business of
" it, not in One Body, as they were Called, but in Two Provincial Assemblies.
" This they did, at first, by the Connivance of the Crown, rather than by any
" Express Allowance; the Archbishop of his own Accord sending out a Provin" cial Citation Concurrently with the Bishops Writs of Summons: Which Method
" obtaining, and those Meetings of the Province being tacitly accepted in Lieu
" of the Clergies Resort to Parliament; it grew Necessary for the King to Em" ploy his Authority also in Convening of them.— This gave Birth to the " Custom of issuing out Two Convocation-Writs when a new Parliament was to
" be Chosen; which tho' set on Foot before, yet settled not into a Rule, till
" some Years after Edward the 3rd. was in the Throne; and then it was Pra" ctised as duly, and regularly, and much in the same manner, as it is at this Day.
" Take one Instance instead of many, &c.

Ibid. p. 42.

Ibid. p. 44.

" Thus the Clergy were indulged in the Form, so the thing were but Ef" fectually done; which was, to have them Meet together with the Parliament,
" and for the dispatch of the same Urgent Affairs of the Kingdom, for which the
" Parliament met. And this was no New-Practice but a Method now Settled and
" Customary; of which various Precedent Instances might, if they were need-
" ful, be given; but it is a short and sufficient Proof of it, that the Words of " the King's Writ to the Archbishop run, More solito Convocari faciat.
The Form now settled was this; that the Province of Canterbury, met a little before that of York, to set the Example of a Grant, which it was Expected the
Other should almost implicitly follow. 5 As for the Parliament; that, Generally, went about a Week before both, tho' here (18 Ed. III.) it followed. " And " this was the usual Distance throughout Edward the 3rd. and Richard the " 2nd's Reign, till Henry the 4th began to Enlarge it; in, and after whose
" time, the Clergy held their Assemblies during, and near the Sessions of Parliament,
" but not thoroughly Concurrent with them.

Ibid. p. 45.

" But this was only an Interruption of the Old Practice for a time, not a
" through Alteration of it: For about the Entrance of the Last Age, when the
" Prerogative began to Recover the Ground it had lost to the Church, we find
" these Meetings of the Clergy and Laity, more closely United; the dates of
" Henry the 8th's Convocations being All One, or a few-days before, or after,
" (if not altogether the same with) those of his Parliament.
" The Clergy therefore, tho' by a mistake in their Politicks separated from the " Parliament, yet continued still to Attend it in two Provincial Assemblies, or
" Convocations.

This is Dr. A's Scheme concerning the Connexion of our Convocations, and Parliaments, within the Period We are here Enquiring into. Let us now take it to Pieces, and see wherein we agree or differ in our Notions of these Matters.

And

the 1st.

And 1st. It is agreed between Us ; that King Edward the 1st, brought the Lower Clergy to Parliament by the Premunientes Clause. In this we Differ, that Dr. A. affirms him herein to have only Restored the Antient Practice ; whereas I deny that ever the Body of the Inferior Clergy had before been Called to our State-Conneils, or been Represented there ; and I referr my self to the Historical Proofs of the preceding Chapters, for the Ground of such my Denial.

2. Whether the Lower Clergy were Mistaken in their Politicks in Refusing all they could to comply with this New-Summons, and accounting it a Burden rather than an Advantage to them, as it is hard to Determine, so is it of no great Moment to Dispute. That hereby they were design'd not only to be put to the Charge and Trouble of a frequent Assembling ; but that in order to a farther Burden of coming into a large share of all the State-Taxes, from whence (as to their Spiritualities and Antient Demesnes) they had hitherto been almost wholly Exempted is very Plain : And the Endeavours they used both by their Own Management, and by the Popes Assistance, to avoid these Impositions, sufficiently shew that this was the Grievance of which they were aware. What they should have gain'd by a more constant Coming, to have recompensed so much Cost and Labour, and to have turned it to their Real Interest, I cannot tell ; being not yet able to find that the Lower Clergy ever Came and Acted in a Body in Parliament ; or were ever Considered as a Separate-State from the Lords, and so Allowed a Negative on such Acts as would otherwise have passed (oftentimes) to their Grievance there. All that I can perceive they did, when they Came to Parliament, was to Consult with their Bishops ; and, by them, send their Sense and Petitions to the Other States ; Who being intermixed with the Lords Temporal, had no more Priviledge on the Account of the Lower-Clergy in those days, than what they Continue to Enjoy now ; but were Concluded by the Votes of the Upper-House, as they still are, notwithstanding the double Capacity in which they sit there.

num. 38.

I have already given an Evident Instance of this in the Parliament of the 3^d. of Richard the 2^d ; where tho' the whole Clergy Dissented, yet the Act passed for all that, and was not stopp'd upon their Protestations against it. So that I am still to learn what Advantage, more than that of advising with their Prelates, the Lower-Clergy could have gained by this Summons to Parliament : And whether that alone would have been an Equivalent to the Cost, and Trouble it was like to bring upon them, I shall leave it to Dr. A. upon further Thoughts to Consider.

But be this as it will ; the Lower-Clergy thought it a Grievance to be Obligated to come to Parliament, and try'd all ways of Declining of it. This Dr. A. allows ; in Point of Fact ; and in this I shall not differ with him : They were Uneasy at it ; and they came as little as possibly they could to it.

Sect. 4.
p 75.

3. Now this brought up the Use, tho' I cannot say of Parliamentary, yet, at least, of State-Convocations ; and of which Dr. A. tells us, that the Accommodation, between the King and Clergy, was this ; " that the Premunientes should " still Summon them to meet PARLIAMENTARILY ; but that sufficient Obedience " should be UNDERSTOOD to be PAID to it, if the Clergy met PROVINCIALLY ; " tho' not AT the same PLACE, yet ABOUT the same Time, and to the same " Purpose. But in this I can by no means Agree with him, and indeed his Own Expressions shew some kind of Violence in his Notion. The King was, " by the " Premunientes to Summon the Clergy, he says, to meet Parliamentarily : but a " sufficient Obedience should be Understood to be paid to it, if they met Pro- " vincially. Now by Meeting, in this manner, Provincially, either they did truly Obey the Premunitory Summons, or they did not. If they did truly Obey it, then 'tis too much Mincing of the matter to say that thereby a sufficient Obedience should be UNDERSTOOD to be PAID to that Summons ; whereas it ought to have been Roundly Affirmed, that by such their Meeting they did Pay a due, and Legal Obedience to it. But if such a Meeting in Convocation, did not Answer the Obligation which that Summons laid upon them ; If it were so far from doing that, that it was, in truth, no Obeying of it at All ; then Dr. A. should plainly have told us how the Case stood, and in which I should not have differed with him : That tho' the Clergy, being Unwilling to come to Parliament, did not Obey the King's Premunitory Summons so duly as they ought to have done, yet so long as they met together in their Provincial Convocations, whenever he Required them ;

them, and gave him what he desired there, he was Content to bear with their Neglect in that Particular, and did not much insist upon their Coming to Parliament, whilst he got what he aim'd at of them in their Convocations. K. EDWARD the 1st.

This was the truth of the Case, but this would not have served Dr. A's Purpose: and therefore what he insinuates here; he elsewhere more plainly affirms, "that these Convocations (in some Sense) were held always by the King's Writ, that is, by the Præmunitory Clause in the Bishop's Summons: And for this he Referrs Us to the Authorities of Mr. Bagshaw, and Bishop Ravis; the One of which he says Owns, the Other Affirms, as much. Rights, &c. p. 66. compare pag. 79. Where he expressly says, that 'These

Dr. A. must Excuse me if I say that I cannot see any such Position, either in the Ones Argument, or in the Others Papers. But what does he mean by his new Qualification again in this Case? These Convocations, in some Sense, were held by the PRÆMUNITORY CLAUSE. The Bishops Writ is a Legal Summons; and has a Legal Force and Obligation. If therefore it Respects the Convocation at all, it Summons it Expressly, and not in some Sense only; and the Clergy by meeting there, must Legally Obey it, or I am sure a sufficient Obedience cannot be understood to be paid to it by such their Meeting. For, in Law, no Obedience is sufficient, but what is Legal, and answers the Terms of what the Law Requires. And to the Common Reason of Mankind I appeal, as well as to the Law of the Realm, whether a Writ framed (as both the Words shew, and Dr. A. himself Owns that it was) to Summon the Clergy of the two Provinces Nationally to Parliament, can be Obey'd in any Sense at all, by their meeting not Nationally, but Provincially; not in Parliament, but in Convocation; at another Time, in another Place, and with another sort of Men, from what that Writ Requires them to meet at, and withall. Provincial Assemblies, tho' held a part from the Parliament, yet belonged to it; met by the Parliamentary no less than the Provincial Writ; &c. And p. 251. He affirms the Original Design of the Provincial Writ to have been only to secure an Obedience to the Præmunitory Clause: This (he says) is IN-DUBITABLY TRUE.

In short; as the Lower Clergy were Summon'd, so are the Bishops: The Writs both for Parliament, and Convocation, Regard them both alike; and the same Reason must hold for both or neither. Here therefore let me ask Dr. A. When the Bishops are Summon'd to Parliament, would they in SOME SENSE Obey the KING'S WRIT by meeting only in Convocation? Should the Archbishop and Bishops of the Province of York (for Example) instead of coming up to London to Parliament, Assemble only in Convocation at St. Peters York; and tell the King that by this they did in Some Sense Obey his Call of them to Westminster; would Dr. A. undertake to defend their Plea, and prove that this was a Legal Obedience to the King's Parliamentary Summons? If not, then let him not tell us that the Lower Clergy do in Some Sense Obey the King's Parliament Writ, by meeting in Convocation; or sit there in Any Sense by Vertue of it: but let him Remember, what Himself, (according to the usual Consistency of his New-Notions,) elsewhere tells us, that in former times, when the Convocation and Parliament met together, the Clergy sate Personally in the One, and sent their Proctors to the Other, to Act there for them: Which had their Meeting in Convocation been such either in the Eye of the Law, or by the King's Avow'd Acceptance of it, as he here pretends, there would have been no need of their doing.

The truth then of this matter is this: The Clergy being Uneasy at their Parliamentary Summons, by degrees brought all their Grants to be made in Convocation; and the King, whose design in Summoning of them to Parliament was only to have Aids of them, comply'd with their Humour; and never enquired whether they Obey'd his Writs, by coming to Parliament, so long as they both met, and supplied his needs in Convocation. This is true History, and Good Sense: Whereas Dr. A's pretence has indeed, neither History, nor Law to support it; nor will the Nature of the Writs, admit of such a Use, as he pretends, to be made of them.

Let us hear how he himself goes on, to the Contradiction of his own Assertion. "Thus the Forms were kept up, and by that means the King's Right of Summoning the Clergy Asserted and Owned: and so the State-Ends of Summoning them were also Answered, they were left to do it in an Ecclesiastical way,—not in One Body, as they were Called, but in two Provincial Assemblies. This they did, at first, rather by the Connivance of the Crown, than by any Express Allowance. Now All this exactly agrees with what I affirm; and with the truth of the Case; but it shews, at the same time, that the Pretence of Meeting in this manner, in any Sense, by Authority of the Præmunitory Clause, is All but Fancy: A Principle which Dr. A's Case wants, Rights, &c. p. 44.

K. EDWARD but such as neither Law, nor Reason, will allow of. To Proceed therefore.

4thly. " This Method obtaining, (of the Clergies Meeting, and Granting Subsidies in two Provincial Assemblies) " and this their Meeting being tacitly Accepted in lieu of the Clergies Resort to Parliament ; it grew Necessary for the King to employ his Authority in Convening of them. This, in the Sense before mentioned, I can agree to ; but then what he adds is utterly false in point of Fact, " This (says he) gave Birth to the Custom of Issuing out two Convocation-Writs, when a New-Parliament was to be Chosen ; which, tho' set on Foot before, yet settled not into a Rule, till some Years after Edward the Third was in the Throne : and then it was Practised as Duly, and Regularly, " and much in the same manner, that it is at this day. This, I say, is utterly false ; as to the issuing out of two Convocation-Writs when ever a New-Parliament was Called. Our Kings never Obligated themselves, nor were they ever by Law Obligated, to any such thing : They often did Call them at the same time that they did their Parliaments, as having the same need of Both ; and they more often held them, not only at different Times from, but without any Respect to one another. Sometimes Parliaments met without any Convocations at all ; Often Convocations, without any Parliaments, to be either petitioned to, Advised, or otherwise Acted with, by them.

But ² Dr. A. will give us One Instance instead of many, of this. That indeed is Extraordinary : He will shew us, that once upon a time a Parliament and Convocation were held together, and that to prove that it was the Constant Custom for them to be held one with the other. A noble Induction, and worthy the Point that is to be proved by it. However let us hear what this One Instance says. He tells us that it " had been agreed for the Urgent Affairs of the Kingdom, to hold a Parliament at Westminster on the Munday after the Octaves of Trinity, and that the Archbishop should call a Convocation of the Prelates, and Others of the Clergy of his Province, to the Church of St. Pauls, London, on the morrow of Trinity for the dispatch of the said Affairs. The Words of the ³ Roll are more full ; and will shew this to have been an Extraordinary Case. By Writs dated the 7th, of March, a Parliament, or Great Council, had been summon'd to meet at Westminster fifteen days after Easter. There, at that Council, says the Roll, " it was agreed by all the Lords, who were then Present, that " for divers great Occasions touching the Government, and Safety of the Realm of England, which could not, as it was there said, be Expedited without a Parliament, a Parliament should be Summon'd, at the Time and Place before mentioned ; and that the Archbishop of Canterbury should hold a Convocation of the Prelates and Clergy of his Province about the same time. Here therefore was an Express Agreement, by order of a Great Council ; for the holding of this Parliament and this Convocation. The Place and Time of both were settled by the Resolution of the Lords there Assembled : And Dr. A. therefore can infer nothing of a Common Usage from such an Instance, which was plainly of an Extraordinary, if not of a singular Nature ; and the like whereof (unless in the same Case about five Years before in the 13th of Edward the IIIrd.) is not to be met with in this whole Reign.

However, since Dr. A. has pitch'd upon this Time for the thorough Settlement of this pretended Custom to hold a Convocation with every New-Parliament ; I will comply so far with his own Choice, as to consider how the Case, in Fact stood, as to this matter, for some Years, on each side of this One Instance so Pompously Alledged by him.

In the 12th of Edward the IIIrd. Anno 1338. Three Parliaments were held ; but with none of them can I meet with any Attending-Convocation : And having a very Particular Account of the Transactions of this Year, I conclude, there was none Called at all with them. Anno 1339. A fortnight after Michaelmas, a Parliament sate, and no Convocation with it. There it was agreed that another Parliament should be held in the Octaves of Hilary, and the Convocations called about the same time with it ; but on Midlent-Sunday a third Parliament was Assembled and sate forty five days, without any Convocation, that I can find, of Either Province to Accompany it.

Anno 1340. The Parliament sate the Wednesday after the Translation of St. Thomas of Canterbury, July the 12th. About the Eleventh of December following, a

Convocation was held at York : but of any Convocation Concurrent with, or At- K. EDWARD tending upon the Parliament of this Year, I meet with no Footsteps. the 1st.

Anno 1341. a Parliament met fifteen days after Easter. In October an Ecclesiastical-Council was Called by the Archbishop of Canterbury ; but neither this Year can I hear of any Convocation.

Anno 1342. On Wednesday after St. Edward the Confessor, about the middle of October, the Parliament sate. The Convocation of our Province went before it, and sate October the 9th. That of York met not till the Ninth of December ; at too Great a distance to be called either a Concurrent, or Attending Convocation.

Anno 1343. The Parliament sate April the 28th ; but for Convocations I can meet with none at all this Year.

Thus stood the Case for six Years before the time of which Dr. A. gives us his One Instance ; let us go on with a View of as many after it.

Anno 1345. A Parliament, or Great Council, sate the morrow after the Purification : In May following, 1346. an Ecclesiastical Synod met ; but no Convocation at all that Year. 'Tis true, by a Minute taken out of the Great Register of the Church of Worcester, I am inform'd that a Proxy was Granted by the Prior and Chapter for a Parliament to be held at Westminster on Munday next after the Octaves of Easter, about ten days before this Synod was held. It is of no Great Moment should we suppose such a Parliament to have Assembled at that time ; seeing the Council which met in May following, was a proper Ecclesiastical Synod ; and such as even Dr. A. himself will not allow to be one of his Attending-Convocations. Regist Mag. Wigorn, fol. 189.

On Munday after the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin, September the 11th. of the same Year, the Parliament was Assembled ; but the Convocations kept at a Great Distance from it. The One sate not till the 16th of October ; the Other was not called till after the middle of December, and sate not till the End of January following.

Anno 1347. Two Parliaments were held : One the Morrow after Hilary ; the other about Midlent. About three Months before the former of these, an Ecclesiastical Synod of the Province of Canterbury was Assembled : But for any Parliamentary Attending Convocations I am yet to seek ; Dr. A. will please to tell Us when they met.

Anno 1348. A Parliament was called to meet the Munday after Hilary, and twice Prorogued, without ever sitting. Yet a Convocation met at York in Whitsun Week ; but of any Called at any of the times that the Parliament was Summon'd, I find no mention.

Anno 1350, 1351. the Parliament sate in the Octaves of the Purification. The Convocation of Canterbury was not held till May the 2d after ; that of York, not till the 18th, of the same Month.

And now from this short View of the Convocations of this time, for about Twelve Years space ; I shall leave it to Dr. A. himself to Consider, with what little Reason he affirmed it to have by this time become the Constant Practise for Convocations to be Called with every New-Parliament, as Duly and Regularly as they are at this day. I omit any farther Enquiry into these Matters, till I come in Order of time to the Consideration of them ; and then I shall not only more fully insist upon the Years which I have now Cursorily run over, but shall take in the whole Process of these Meetings, during this, and all the following Reigns.

5. The Time of the Convocations Meeting, is the next Circumstance which comes to be Considered, and of that Dr. A. gives us this Account : 2 " The Rights, &c. Sect. 6.
" Clergy (says he) were indulged in the Form, so the Thing were but Effectually done ; which was to have them meet together with the Parliament ; by pag. 46.
" which I suppose he must mean, within the same Compass of Time that the Parliament was sitting. 3 " The Province of Canterbury usually met a little before " that of York ; and the Parliament generally went about a Week before both ; Rights, &c.
" and this was the Usual Distance throughout Edward the Thirds, and Rich- pag. 47, 48, 75,
" ard the Seconds Reigns : " Till Henry the IVth began to Enlarge it ; in, and 258, 259, &c.
" after whose time, the Clergy held their Assemblies DURING, and NEAR the " SESSIONS of PARLIAMENT, tho' not THOROUGHLY CONCURRENT with it. But " this was only an Interruption of the OLD PRACTISE ; (which therefore must " have

K. EDWARD ^{the 1st.} " have been, by this Account, to hold the Sessions of Parliament and Convoca- " tion THROUGHLY CONCURRENT with one another :) and was Reformed a" gain about the Beginning of the Last-Age; when the Convocations began to " be Altogether of the same date, or but a few days before, or after, with that " of the Parliament.

This therefore I take to be Dr. A's Hypothesis as to this matter. The OLD PRACTISE was, to have the Convocations Altogether Concurrent with, or within a few days, of the Parliament. In Edward the Third, and Richard the Second's time the Parliament sat about a Week before the Convocation of Canterbury; and somewhat more before that of York. In Henry the IVth, and the following Reigns, They met during, and near the Sessions of Parliament, tho' not Altogether Concurrent with it. But this was only an Interruption of the Old Practise; which was Restored again the beginning of the last Age, and so has been continued from the time of King Henry the VIIIth (as he here says) of ¹ King Henry the VIIth, (as he elsewhere affirms) to this day.

How true this Account is, as to the time of King Edward the IIIrd, the short Specimen of that part of his Reign to which Dr. A. himself Appeal'd, may suffice to shew. In which, to pass by the many Parliaments which sat without any Convocations at all; The Parliament of 1338. met at Northampton, July the 26th, the Convocation of Canterbury, October the first at London, that of the Other Province, about the same time at York. In 1340. the Parliament met in July; the Convocation of York not till December the 11th. In 1342. the Parliament in October, the Convocation of York, again in December. In 1346. the Parliament in August; the Convocation of Cant. not till October, that of York not till January after. In 1350. 1351. the Parliament in February; the Convocation of Canterbury, a fortnight after Easter: that of York, May the 19th, at three Months distance from one another.

So many are the Contradictions to Dr. A's Rule in this very Period, within the Compass of Eleven Years. I have already shewn that he has been no less mistaken in the times of King Henry the VIIth, and to the twenty fifth of King Henry the VIIIth, before which time there was no such Stated Union between our Parliaments and Convocations, as he pretends; and how there came to be so afterwards, I shall hereafter declare. In short; Our Kings were as free in this Particular, as they were in All the Others; they Called their Convocations at their Own Pleasure; sometimes nearer their Parliaments; sometimes at a greater Distance from them; as they thought most Convenient for their Affairs: Oftentimes the Archbishops were left to take their Own time for it; and when prescribed to by the King's Writ, yet (if they saw it needful) they departed from it, and fixed a different time in their Mandate, from what the King, by his Writ, had limited them unto.

Sect. 7.
 pag. 46.

6. There is yet one Circumstance more remaining to be Considered, viz. the Business for which they met, and that Dr. A. thus declares: ² " It was for the dispatch of the same Urgent Affairs of the Kingdom, for which the Parliament met. And what those Urgent Affairs were, is a question that must a little be Enquired into. The Convocations made no Civil Laws, nor so much as Debated about them, or gave Consent to them. They treated not of Peace, or War; of Trade, or Commerce: Nay it was a long time before they made any Ecclesiastical Canons or Constitutions by their own Spiritual Authority there. What therefore were these Urgent Affairs of the Kingdom, Common to the Convocations with the Parliament, for which they met? Dr. A. must Excuse me; (for Truth is neither to be frightened by Calumny, nor to be Overborn by Noise and Clamour; and the Truth it is which I formerly Asserted, and do here again Repeat; and will Undertake to Defend against all his Arguments and Revilings) I say he must Excuse me, if I tell him, that it was to debate on the Necessities of the Government, and to agree upon Suitable Aids for the Supply of them. This was the Great End for which our Kings Summon'd them: This the Writs by which they were Called, for the most part, Expressly Declared: This our Princes constantly Demanded of them, and Recommended to them: And, lastly, This, upon Enquiry, will be found, to have been All that was Generally done by the Clergy in them.

As for Church-Affairs, they had their Provincial Synods to transact them in. There they Managed them before ever any Convocations were Called, and there they they Continued to Manage them above an Hundred Years after they were EDWARD wont to be Summon'd. the 1st.

Their Parliamentary Petitions were drawn up by, and presented in the Name of, the Parliamentary, not the Convocational Clergy. And these might Equally have been framed in any of their Meetings; and tender'd on their behalf, as commonly they were, by the Bishops and Prelates in Parliament.

Their Addresses to the King, were usually Delivered by their Metropolitans; and those might have been sent from a Church-Synod, as well, and (the Circumstance of Money being laid aside, as Acceptably too) as from a Convocation.

In short let Dr. A. turn himself into, what Forms he pleases; let him Ransack all his Stores; he will find nothing besides the Granting of Money, that moved our Kings either to Countenance, or Call, these State-Convocations. All the Other Matters that were ever done by them, were either such things for which the Government needed them not; or such, as might have been done, in another manner, and in some other Assemblies, as well as in these.

This then is the Difference between Dr. A. and Me with Relation to this Period of Time; upon the Scheme which He here lays down. Sect. 8.

1. Dr. A. tells us that in bringing the Clergy, by the Premunitory Clause, to Parliament, King Edward the 1st Restored only their Antient manner of coming thither: I assert, that He thereby first Obliged the Body of the Lower-Clergy to come at all to it.

2. Dr. A. tells us, that this the Clergy Erroneously thought to be a burden to them; and therefore Endeavoured all they could to get free from it. 'That' Rights, &c.
" this they could not accomplish in Edward the First's time, but they advanced p. 40.
" it very far in Edward the Second's, and fully settled it, in Edward the Third's " Reign. I think the Clergy had Good Reason to be Apprehensive of the Trouble, and Charge of a Parliamentary Attendance: That they were not therefore out in their Politics when they desired to decline it, tho' they fail'd very much in their Duty, in the Ways which they sometimes took for the avoiding of it. That they came but Uneasily, and but in small Numbers to Parliament; and being come they did little or nothing there; I agree with him: But that they fully settled the Method of two Convocations, instead of one National Assembly, and thereby totally left off to Come to Parliament so Early as Edward the Third's time, that again I deny.

3. Dr. A. ² affirms that this brought up the Use of two Parliamentary (so Rights, &c.
He calls them) but I say, of two Provincial Convocations, for State-Ends. Dr. P. 75.
A. adds, that by meeting in these, the Clergy not only answered the King's Purpose, which I allow; but Obey'd his Premunitory Summons too: And, that 'tis in this Sense, that these Convocations were said, 25 H. 8. c. 19. to have been " Always Summon'd by Authority of the King's Writs, because they met by Vertue of his Premunientes. This I deny to be either true History, or Good Law. Because neither did they Always meet in Convocation when ever the Premunientes was issued out; nor if they had, would they thereby have paid any Legal Obedience to the King's Parliamentary Writs; nor could they have Legally met, after that manner, by Vertue of them.

4. In Consequence hereof, Dr. A. pretends that whenever a New-Parliament was Called, a Convocation was evermore Summon'd together with it; and (after his Obliging, Modest, way) Challenges Dr. W. to prove the contrary. This I have shown in some Measure to be utterly False already; and to gratify his Desires, if not to accept his Challenge, will hereafter prove, as to any Establish'd Custom, or Constant Practise; much less as to any Law of our Constitution, throughout this whole Period, from King Edward the 1st, to King Henry the VIIIth, to be no less Erroneous.

5. Dr. A. adds, That these Convocations, tho' notheld at the same Place with the Parliament, yet met, at first, Concurrently in Time with it; afterward about a Week after it: Then at a Greater Distance, [but still within, or near the Session of it; till at last, about King Henry the Seventh's Reign, they came again to the Old Practise of Meeting Concurrently with it. This I affirm to be intirely False in Every Part of it. The Convocations never had any such Regular Concurrence in point of Time as he pretends: Sometimes they met with the Parliament: Sometimes near it: Sometimes at a Greater Distance from it: Often not at all with it: And all, as the King thought fit to Order it.

6. Lastly;

the 1st.

6. Lastly, Dr. A. affirms that the Convocations met for the same Urgent Affairs that the Parliament did: I say that by that Phrase we are chiefly, if not only, to understand, the Granting of Aids for the Support of the Church and Realm: The only way they had (besides their Prayers and Preaching) of supporting them. And tho' Other things were sometimes done by the Convocation, when met; yet this I undertake to shew, was the Great, prevailing, and indeed Original Motive, that Induced the King to the Summoning of them.

Whereas therefore Dr. A's Argument in Proof of his Pretensions, stands thus: * Those Convocations which Succeeded into the place of the Parliamentary Conventions of the Clergy; * Which were called by the Premunientes, as well as by the Provincial Summons; and * thereby met as constantly and duly, as every New Parliament was held: * Which always sate, either at the very same time, or within the time of the Parliaments sitting; and * Treated of the same Affairs of which the Parliament Treated; are properly PARLIAMENTARY CONVOCATIONS; and by our Constitution NECESSARY ATTENDANTS upon an English Parliament: But this has been the Case of our Convocations, from the time of their first Establishment, to the present Reign: He will give me leave not only to deny his Assumption, and thereby to destroy his Argument, but by proving the quite Contrary; to turn it against himself: That those * Convocations which succeeded not into the place of the Parliamentary Assemblies, but were held for above One Hundred Years together with them: * Which never did, nor by Law could have met by Authority of the Premunitory Clause; but only by virtue of the Kings and Archbishop's Provincial Summons: * Which oftentimes were not Called at all when Parliaments were Called, and * frequently were Assembled when no Parliaments were held: Which * never were Confined to the time of the Parliament, till the 25th of King Henry the Eighth; and then not by any Law, but only by the free Prudential Choice, and Will of our Princes; * Which never treated of any Parliamentary Affairs, unless upon an Extraordinary Occasion, when Required by the King, and Desired by the Parliament, so to do; and that very seldom, if ever at all; but met purely (as to the King's design) to Grant Aids out of their Spiritualities to Him; which could not be taxed by any but themselves, nor would they tax themselves in Parliament, but only in Convocation; and for the Rest, acted not as a Parliamentary Body, but as a meer Ecclesiastical Assembly of the Province; were no Parliamentary Convocations, nor can with any Reason, or Justice, be call'd Attendants upon a Parliament. But this I do affirm to have been the Case of these Convocations; and shall presently proceed Historically to confirm it from the time of King Edward the First, to the twenty fifth of King Henry the Eighth: And therefore I conclude, in the Reverse both of his History, and his Position founded thereupon; that our Convocations were not all this while, either any part of our Parliaments, or any Necessary Attendants upon them; neither by the Laws of the Realm; nor by the Nature of our Constitution; nor by any constant or regular Practise of our Princes; in Consequence of both, or either of those Grounds.

This is my Argument in answer to Dr. A's Pretences in this Case; the Proposition whereof being directly Opposite in every Particular, to his; must I think not only intirely destroy his Assertion, but he allow'd to inferr the contrary Conclusion: And the Assumption I now come to make good in my Historical-View of these Times.

Sect. 9.

Tho' the Lower Clergy were not call'd to Parliament, till the latter End of the Year 1295, yet it may not be amiss to take a View of the History of the Whole, as far as the present Argument is concern'd in it. If a Minute which I have out of the Register of Jo. Roman, (but do put no great value upon) be right, the Year began with a Synod of the Province of York, xi Cal. Maij, April 21. Sure we are that Archbishop Winchelsea Summon'd a Council of his Province to meet at the New Temple, London, on the Ides of July.¹ This was only a Provincial Synod: None but his² Suffragan Bishops were called to it; nor does it appear that any thing was done, but meer Ecclesiastical Business in it. About three Weeks after the Letters of the Archbishop were issued out for calling of this Council; the King sent forth his Writs for a Parliament to meet at Westminster, August the first.³ At which I cannot find any thing was done more than to receive, and treat with, the Cardinals who were sent about that time to mediate a Peace between the Kings of England and France; and to lay the Grievances of the Realm before them.

In this posture were our Affairs when the King called the Lower Clergy to ^{K. EDWARD the 1st,} Parliament: The first Summons for which, was to meet at Westminster, the Sunday after St. Martin; but for the King's Convenience it was Prorogued a fortnight, till the Sunday next before the Feast of St. Andrew. To this Parliament the ¹ Clergy were Cited by the Premunitory Clause; ad tractandum, ordinandum & faciendum Nobiscum & cum Cateris Prelatis & Proceribus, & aliis Incolis Regni nostri; concerning the Business of the French War. On November the 28th, the second day of the Parliament, the King demanded of the Archbishop an Aid from the Clergy: ² The Archbishop having deliberated thereupon with them, Granted a Tenth; ³ promising withall a farther Supply the next Year, if in the mean time a Peace were not made, or at least a Truce, in Order to a Peace

With what difficulty this Grant was accepted by the King, ⁴ Mat. Westminster informs us: The matter was no less than twelve days in Agitation; and at last as ⁵ Eversden owns, it was but unwillingly received by him. ⁶ Yet they made their Own Terms, as to the Assessing and Collecting of it: And had farther Promises of Redress of Grievances from the King, which nevertheless were but little thought of afterwards.

^{ter acceptavit.} ⁶ Ibid. Concessa est ei à Clero Decima—ita tamen quod tam Taxatio quam Collectio per Ecclesiasticos, non Regios ministros, Ordinaretur.

The War with France going on, and the King's Necessities Calling for a farther Supply; a new Parliament was Summon'd to meet at St. Edmundsbury the third of November the next Year. In the ⁷ Writ of Summons the King put them in mind of their Promise of Assisting of Him, in the last Parliament, if the Peace or Truce were not in the mean time concluded between the King and the French, neither of which he told them was yet done: And that therefore he expected that they should now make good their Promise to Him. This was no more than the Clergy had foreseen; and by the Interest of the Archbishop with the Pope were provided against. They now plainly perceived what they were to expect: That the King having once begun to Call them to his Parliaments would go on duly to Summon them to them; And that there they must resolve to comply with his Desires, or to suffer the Effects of his Resentments, for opposing of them. To avoid this, the Archbishop of Canterbury, secretly procured a Bull from the Pope to prohibit the Clergy from Granting any Aids to their Secular Princes without his Leave; and to threaten severe Penalties to those, who should either Exact such Aids, or Comply with them being Exacted. And in the next place He consulted with his Suffragan Bishops in the Summer, to know their Sense; and thereby to be the better Prepared when they should be Called together to come to such a Resolution, as his designs required; and to be firm and Unanimous in it. This is a Circumstance which tho' not hitherto taken notice of, that I know, by any of our Historians, yet ought to be Observed; because it shews the more clearly how they came to be so stiff in Opposing the King's demands when they met in Parliament; and for the Truth of it, ⁸ I refer my self to an Authentick Instrument which sufficiently speaks it to Us.

contingeret dare promissis, unanimiter, liberaliter, & libenter; Cujus quidem Reformationi Pacis vel Initium treugarum dictus Rex Franciæ hæcenus non Consensit, &c. Cl. 24. Edw. I. dors. m. 7.

⁸ Appendix ad Ann. 1296.

What the Result of this Procedure was, I must the more carefully Consider, because ⁹ Dr. A. has been pleas'd, not only to employ a more than usual Exactness in the Relation of it; but to charge me in a Strain, peculiar to himself, for the Account which I before gave of it. Twice in my Book I had occasion to take notice of this Passage; In the Course of my History, as I shall now do; and at the Close of my Book in answer to a most Invidious Use, which the Letter to a Convocation Man had, in the Close of his Treatise, made of it. I sought not Occasion in either place to bring it in; Nor did I relate it Otherwise than I found it, in some of our best, and most Accurate Historians. I will compare my own Account with Dr. A's Reflections; and shall then submit it to the Reader to judge which of Us, after all, has made the truest, and fairest Report of it.

In the ¹ former of the Places where I mentioned this History, I rather hinted at some parts, then entred on any particular Account of it. I said not one Word of a Parliament held without the Clergy: I made no Inference from it, not so much as a Reflection upon what was done on either side. In short, I barely pointed out a Circumstance or two of it; and so left it to the Other Place, where I had an unavoidable Occasion given me to insist upon it. ² Dr. A.
therefore can hardly be Excus'd for saying that Dr. W. has "very amply and "often, dilated upon it: Seeing that in Truth I told the Story but once; and that without making the least Use of it to the Prejudice of the Parliamentary Interests of the Clergy, as upon Examination it will now appear.

My Account of it is this. ³ "King Edward the First having exhausted his Stores in the War of Scotland, and that with great Honour to Himself, and Advantage to the Nation, called his Parliament to St. Edmundsbury, the Day after All-Souls, and accounted his Circumstances to them. The Laity readily granted him a Subsidy, as desir'd: but the Clergy pretending their Fear of the Pope's Bull, deny'd in any wise to assist him. For this I refer to ⁴ Wal- singham, One of our most exact Historians, as Dr. A. himself Allows; and whether I have not Reported his Sense aright, let his Words, now transcribed in the Margin, shew.

⁵ "Pope Boniface the Eighth being desirous to advance the Liberties of the Church, had the Year before publish'd a Constitution, by which he forbad the Clergy to pay any Taxes to their Prince without the Pope's Consent, and Excommunicated as well the Receivers as Payers of such Taxes. This was the Bull which those Good Men stood upon; and this that Pope publish'd at the Particular Desire of Robert Winchelsea, Archbishop of Canterbury, and of the Rest of the Clergy of England. For this I again refer to ⁶ Walsingham, and by his Words I now desire the Reader to acquit or condemn me, for my Relation. But indeed hitherto Dr. A. is pleas'd himself to agree with me, and that even to the Circumstance of the Pope's Bull, which he says, ⁷ "the Clergy by Archbishop Winchelsea's Means procured; forbidding them to give any farther Aids, without Consent of the Holy See, and upon this Head they Excused themselves in the Parliament held the next Year at St. Edmundsbury.

⁸ "The King, tho' he were sufficiently sensible of their Jugling, and dis-pleas'd at it, nevertheless gave them time till the next Parliament to consider what they had to do, and how to make some better and more Satisfactory Answer to him. But in the mean time, he caus'd all their Stores to be seal'd up. And the Archbishop to be even with him, at the same time Or-der'd this Bull of the Pope to be publish'd in all (I should have added the Cathedral) Churches of his Province. This I related from ⁹ M. Westmin- ster, I referr'd to his Authority; let his Words be considered, whether I reported his Sense aright or no.

But ¹⁰ Dr. A. goes on, and adds, that the "Excuse of the Clergy not being accepted, They referr'd themselves for their final Answer to a Full Convo- cation of the Province which should be call'd by Ecclesiastical Authority; for now they met only upon a Lay Summons. This indeed the ¹¹ Fragment of the Chronicle of Canterbury does say, but with what Truth I cannot tell. Our other ¹² Historians speak generally after another Manner. They tell us that, this respite was granted

granted by the King to them; and that not for any Exception they took at the Lay Call; but, as I shall by and by shew, to meet again in another Parliament; tho' it is true withal, that the Archbishop of Canterbury, the better to carry on his own Designs, did Call (as Dr. A. styles it) a Full Convocation of the Province with it. One ¹ Ms. indeed there is, which says that this delay was granted to them by the King at the Archbishop's Request, upon this Ground, that several of his Suffragans, and of the Other Clergy, were not present there; but of their Exception against the Lay Summons, I have yet met with no other Instance; and therefore must beg leave to think that this was not the Point which they Principally, if at all, insisted upon.

nei sui, & alij viri Ecclesiastici multi, non essent ibi Praesentes; quos fecit Citari statim per totam Provinciam suam ut venirent ad diem praefixum apud London. Chron. Anonym. Ms. Laud. K. 84.

Of the King's sealing up the Stores and Granaries of the Clergy in the mean time, Dr. A. takes particular Notice: ² But why not a Word of the Archbishop's ordering the Pope's Bull, in Requital, to be publish'd throughout the Chief Churches of his Province? This I think was a Circumstance that deserv'd to have been remembred: I mentioned both in my Account; and no more dissembled what the King did, than I did the Archbishop's Procedure upon it.

But since Dr. A. will not tell this part of the Story, 'tis necessary for me to do it. The Archbishop not only caus'd, in the mean time, the Bull of Pope Boniface to be publish'd, thereby to prevent any farther Supplies to be granted from the Clergy to the King; ³ but the more to provoke Him, the Bishops at the same time, issued out their Orders to the Collectors of the Half, and Tenth, Granted the two Years before, on the Pretence of the same Bull, to forbear Collecting of those Subsidies, and revok'd all the Commissions, or Letters before Granted, as Void, and of no Effect.

neye, &c. ⁴ "The next Parliament being met at London the Day after Hillary; the King again demands a Supply of them. They persist in their Denial. And the King thereupon puts them out of his Protection: And holding his Parliament with his Barons, without them, an Act is pass'd by which all their Goods are confiscated to the King's Use. For this I refer to ⁵ William's Unde Archiepiscopus cum Clero super his Consilium habuit; Et deliberatione habita propter Novam Constitutionem super hoc editam, Viam Thorn's Chronicle; and to his Words I appeal for the truth of my Relation. If the Historians, whom I follow'd were of the best Note; and if I have been Exact in following of them; neither Adding any Circumstances of my Own to make the Case of the Clergy the more Invidious, nor yet disguising any of the King's Proceedings, to justify his Severity; then to the Conscience of Mankind I appeal against the Calumny of this bold, and Uncharitable Writer, that ⁶ I related this Transaction between the King and his Clergy, neither like a Good Historian, a Good Church-Man, nor a Good Englishman.

⁶ Rights, &c. p. 323.

It must indeed be confess'd that, in the Account of this last Meeting, One considerable Passage was Omitted by me, which I must therefore now take this Opportunity of mentioning; that the Archbishop of Canterbury, and his Convocation, did not only refuse to comply with the King's Demands, but pass'd an Order for solemnly publishing a Sentence of Excommunication against all such as should lay hands on the Goods of the Clergy, or seize them without the Consent of themselves or their Bayliffs. This every Bishop was commanded himself to publish in his Cathedral Church; And other proper Persons in

K. EDWARD the Other Churches of their Dioceses; which I think was not only to Refuse the the Ist. King's Just Demands, but to bid Defiance to his Authority; to dare him to a Tryal; and to put it to an Issue, whether the Spiritual, or Temporal Power, should have the better.

Señt. 12. But let us see how this more Accurate Historian; this Son of the Church, and True-born Englishman, mends the Matter. "On the day prefix'd, (viz. Hilary Day) the Clergy Assembled at Pauls by a Mandate from Archbishop Winchelsea; and after Eight days fruitless Debate, Separated: Upon which they were (as it should seem) prosecuted in the KING'S BENCH, and Judg'd out of the King's Protection.

That the Clergy of the Province of Canterbury met at Pauls by the Archbishop's Summons, I do agree. But I affirm withal, that the King at the same time held his Parliament at Westminster, and I hope Dr. A. will allow that those two Assemblies are by no means Inconsistent with one another. The Chron. Dunst. Chronicle of Dunstable, speaking of the Assemblies at Pauls, tells us that they consisted of the Archbishops and Clergy of both Provinces. Let Dr. A. say how came the Bishops and Clergy of York to meet there? Did they come thither by the Archbishops, or by the King's Call? For that the Elect of York Summon'd his Clergy to a Convocation at all; much less to St. Pauls London, does not yet appear; and it must be very well proved, before it will be received.

That Walsingham, and Knyghton, speak of a Parliament at Hilary, Dr. A. confesses; but he thinks there is Great Reason to suspect their Exactness: "The Eldest of them living an hundred Years after the time they Write of; whereas there is No CONTEMPORARY AUTHOR that mentions such a Parliament, or speaks of this Meeting at St. Hilary any otherwise than as a Provincial Council of the Clergy. That this could not be a Provincial Council of the Clergy is certain, because the Archbishops and Clergy of both Provinces were there. That Walsingham, and Knyghton, wrote out of Antienter Histories, the Design of the Latter in Compiling of a Polychronicon; and the Evidence of the others Transcribing, to say no more, the Annals of St. Albans, sufficiently assure Us. And Dr. A. who magnifies, and that justly, the Exactness of Walsingham, particularly in Parliamentary Concerns, elsewhere, should methinks have been more sparing of his Censures of him in such a matter here.

But will Dr. A. give me leave to tell him of some Contemporary Authors, who have said the same thing. First, then, Nich. Trivet, who by Leland's Account must have been at this time between thirty and forty Years Old, whose Father was one of King Henry the third's Judges, in the last of his Reign; speaks expressly of a Parliament at this time: And Walsingham (to justify his Integrity by the way) transcribes his very Words as to this matter. "The King delay'd this Affair (at the Parliament of St. Edmundsbury) in ALIUD PARLIAMENTUM, &c. to another Parliament, to be held at London the morrow after Hilary. In which PARLIAMENT at London after Hilary, the Clergy persisting in their Denial of a Subsidy, the King put them out of his Protection.

243. Wals. Hyp. Neustr. p. 486.

Ibid. Anno 1297. In PARLIAMENTO Londoniensi post festum S. Hilarij, &c.

Walt. Hemingford is another Contemporary Author. He lived says Leland in the time of King Henry the Third, and his Son King Edward the First. And in the 9 Ms. History of this King, speaking of their Refusing the King a Subsidy at St. Edmundsbury, he adds "Unde adjornati sunt ad Aliud Parliamentum, London, in Crastino S. Hilarij: That they were thereupon adjourned to ANOTHER PARLIAMENT at London, the morrow after Hilary. From this History of Walt. Hemingford, (to add that in defence of the other Historian so injuriously Reflected on by Dr. Atterbury) Knyghton took his Relation. Their Words agree; and, the difference is so very small, that one may Confidently say, that Knyghton either followed Hemingford, or some other Chronicler who had transcribed this Passage from him.

Would Dr. A. have yet more; I will then give him the Account of this matter from Another Author, who appears to have seen the Original Acts of this Assembly. His account of this Meeting is this. That the Archbishop and his Clergy, consulting apart at St. Pauls, according to his Summons, sent their Refusal Chr. Anonym. Ms. in Bibl. Bodleian. Oxon. inter Mss. Laud. K. 84. Vid. Appen. ad An.

Refusal to the King in a Letter which the Reader will find at Large in the K. EDWARD the 1st.
Appendix. This Letter being brought to the King, and read before his Lords, and Council, he was greatly moved, and all the Militia with him. "Whereupon calling together the Chief of his Council, He demanded of them, how he should Revenge himself upon the Ecclesiasticks. They answered that he should Summon his Earls, Barons, Milites, and other his Leige-men, to his PARLIAMENT in some certain Place, shutting out the Clergy altogether from it, and then proceed as they should advise him. This the King promised to do notwithstanding any Interdict, or Papal Mandate, to the contrary. Hence the Laity only were called to New Sarum on the day of St. Matthias. In the mean time an Edict went out from the King that all their Chattles and Tenements, that were of Lay-Fee, should be taken into the King's Hands. The Officers employ'd upon this, did much worse than the King had Order'd. Yet no one durst complain of their Extortions, because the King had put them out of his Protection; Ordering that no Brief should go out of his Court at their Motion, saying that they were Perjured, and Faithless to Him and his Kingdom, who had done Homage, and sworn Fealty to him; and yet now in the very Article of his Necessity, and the no small Danger of the whole Land, had forsaken him. One only Remedy he offer'd, if before the Day of his Parliament, any of the Clergy would secure him a fifth of their Goods, they should have his Protection. Annal. Wi-gorn. p. 520. After the Brief for seizing the Goods of the Clergy, it follows, 'Et in Aula Regis Jo. de Meringham publice Proclamavit, ne quis Causas in Curia Regis Religiosorum defenderet, vel Clericorum.—Et quod Religiosi & Clerici fuerunt extra pacem & defensionem Regiam pronuntiavit: Et quod nullum Breve transgressione de Cancellaria exiret pro Religioso, vel Clerico qualicumque; quocumque modo Gravati fuerint contra pacem. All this as Judge of the Common-Pleas, he had no Power judicially to do: But he was Order'd to Proclaim this; to Pronounce that they were put out of the King's Protection; that no Writ should go out of the Chancery for them. He declared what was done; but gave no Sentence, as a Judge, upon the Cause in this matter.

From what has been offer'd, I will now venture to affirm against Dr. A. that a Parliament as well as a Convocation was held at Hilary: That this Procedure of the King against the Clergy, was then Order'd by the advice of his Great Men; who both Consented to what was done, and Agreed how the King should further Proceed with them. But I must beg leave to pursue this History a little farther; and to beseech Dr. A. to let us know how he was inform'd that the King upon the Refusal of the Clergy to Grant him an Aid prosecuted them in the KING'S BENCH? Upon what he founded his Action? And by what Law they were adjudged, in that Court of Law, to have incurr'd an Out-Lawry? And since he falls so severely upon me for mistaking (as I did) the Court of Sir Roger Brabazon; who was, as he rightly Corrects me, Chief Justice at that time of the King's Bench; how Jo. de Mettingham, Chief Justice of the Common-pleas, came to pass Sentence upon them out of his own Court, in the King's Bench; where Dr. A. (I suppose forgetting himself) says they were Prosecuted, and judged out of the King's Protection?

Let me add, one thing more; It cannot be unobserved by any one who has Read Dr. A's Book, in what Danger all Men are of being either Fools, or Knaves, who oppose his Notions. I have done some Service to two Good Authors in this Case already, who fell under his Censure for no other Reason in the World but because he had no mind to have it thought that there should have been any Parliament sitting at Hilary this Year; but that the Clergy should have been Arbitrarily put out of the King's Protection without any Judgement at all; or at most by an Illegal Sentence in the King's Bench. He now Resolves that the Judge who made this Declaration at Westminster against (them, tho' in pursuance of a Parliamentary Sentence of the Baronage in that Particular,) shall, at a Venture, have been a very ill Man, and therein have done a very Wicked Thing. Let those who gave this Sentence in Parliament, answer for the Justice of it: I neither Condemn nor Excuse them in it. But for an Inferiour Judge to declare what that Court had made Law, I have before shewn is no Crime, nor was his Declaration any thing more than a Publication in Court of what had been elsewhere done, and of the Incapacity which it put the Clergy under. And for the Man, he has an Illustrious, standing, Testimony given to his Worth in our History. I will set it down in the Words of a late Eminent Writer of that Robe:

K. EDWARD ^{the 1st.} " At this Parliament of this Noble King Edward the 1st. in the Eighteenth Year of his Reign, another kind of Jews were severely punish'd, viz. the Judges of the King's Bench, and of the Common-Pleas, the Barons of the Exchequer, and the Justices Itinerant, except Two, whom for their Honour we will name (in Memoria eterna erit Justus) viz. Sir. Jo. of Mettingham, chief Justice of the Common-pleas, and Elias de Bekingham, One of his Companions, Qui positi fuerunt in fornace & prodierunt Aurum. For they had dealt Uprightly in their Places, and had never stain'd their Hands with sordid Bribery. A Man who deserved this Testimony, and bore such a Tryal, but Six Years before, One would hope should not have Violated his Integrity on such an Occasion as this. Let Dr. Atterbury now shew how he proves him to have been that ² Wicked, and Unjust Judge, that, without any Reason, but meerly in pursuit of his Own immoderate Resentments, He here (as much as in him lies) brands him to Posterity, to have been. If he cannot, let him fear least by his Rash Characters of Worthy, and Innocent Persons, he, in the End, gives Occasion to all Good and Charitable Men, to fear that they belong more truly to himself.

There was, indeed, a Clergy-man of that Time, who was at the head of most of these Transactions, and whom Dr. A. therefore, had he known it, might with more Colour of Reason have vented his Anger upon; William de March, Bishop of Bath and Wells, and Lord Treasurer of England. It was by his Order and Advice, that the Scrutiny was made which gave so much Offence two Years before, into all the Treasures of all the Churches of the Realm. This was the beginning of those Troubles which afterwards ensued, and seems to have given birth to that Bull of Pope Boniface, on which they were founded. Winchelsea was then at Rome, and in great Reputation with the Pope: He was Consecrated Archbishop of Canterbury there, but two Months after; and at that time seems to have settled this Matter with that Court. And this Bishop for his Zeal in these Matters to serve his Master, is with Bitterness reflected upon by ³ Mat. Westminster, an Historian of no small Reputation in our Affairs. Here therefore was a Person, and a Bishop too, upon whom Our Author might have let loose his Passions with some Appearance of Justice. He might have Quoted Mat. Westminster for his Text; and have Commented at Pleasure upon it, till He had even wearied himself with his Own Rudeness, and Ill-Nature. But for Jo. de Mettingham, he is One whom no Historian, that I know of, gives any Ill-Character of, besides himself; and better Authors, as I have now shewn, speak more Justly and Honourably of him.

But let us proceed with him in his Account of what Remains of this Great Transaction. ⁴ " While they were under this Out-lawry, the King called his Lay-Nobles to Sarum, and there held a Council, Excluse Clero; at which High Words arose, and Great Heats happened between him and his Barons. To let alone what pass'd, not between the King and his Barons, but between Him and a party of his Discontented Lords; What was there done at this Parliament, with Respect to the Clergy? My ⁵ Author says, that this Law either was, or was pretended to be made there, " per ipsum Regem, Militia non Contradicente; that either the Clergy should make their Peace with the King within a certain time to be limited by the Barons and Militia; that is to say, before Easter; or they should lose all that was now seized by the King; and that it should not be Lawful for any one from thenceforth to have any Common Dealings with them. Upon which a great many began to make their Peace with Him.

⁶ " The Archbishop of Canterbury hearing of these severe Proceedings, went Personally to the King to Sarum; having first Order'd another Council of his Clergy to meet at London, upon Midlent-Sunday: And in the mean time publish'd a Sentence of Excommunication against all the Violators of the Ecclesiastical Liberty, and against such as in Contempt of the Pope's Constitution should seek by unlawful means to preserve themselves; in Opposition to which the King publish'd his Prohibition, dat. Febr. 27. Upon the 7th of March the Archbishop came to Salisbury, and found the King at Mass in the Cathedral Church there. The King Received him with great Respect, and the next Day gave him a Private Audience, with leave to say what he would to him. The Archbishop spake without Interruption, and the King

King patiently heard him : After which he told him, that if the Pope himself, like the Archbishop, had Temporal Possessions in England, he might Lawfully take of them, for the Defence of his Realm, and the Church of England : Adding that this was a Cause in which he could dare to die, and that he thought he did nothing Unlawful in it ; so great was the Necessity that lay both upon himself and the Kingdom.

The Archbishop Replied, that he did not see that the Necessity was so Great, as to Excuse them from the Danger of the Pope's Constitution, if they should give any thing to him. And then proposed, that the Matter should be stated to the Pope, and his answer expected to it. The King told him that that Way had not before been proposed ; and thereupon agreed that they would on both sides Consider what was safest to be done. But because the Archbishop would come to no Conclusion before the meeting of his Synod, it was Resolved, that the King should send some of his Council to it, to deliberate about that, or any Other way, that God should suggest to them, with the Prelates and Clergy there. In the mean time, he desired the King to Suspend his Rigor against the Clergy, which the King promised to do.

And now the Great Expectation was, what Resolutions the Clergy would take in their Convocation, to make up this unhappy, and dangerous, Breach. The Project of Accommodation which the King set on Foot, the Chronicle of Dunstable tells Us was this ; that the Clergy should not Grant him an Aid ; but pay a Fine to Him, for their Contumacy, and to Redeem their Liberty. In this Convocation, some undertook to defend the Lawfulness of the Clergies Assisting the King, notwithstanding the Pope's Prohibition. And a Motion was made (and a debate held upon it) that the Bishops in their Respective Bishopricks should gather and lay by a fifth of their Revenues, and keep it in a safe Place, so that the King's Officers should not meddle with it ; only for the Defence of the Realm of England. But the Archbishop stood to his Point, and so the Assembly brake up without doing of any thing for the King's Satisfaction.

Thus (says Dr. A.) the matter Rested till the Counts and Barons came in Openly to their Quarrel as they did in a Parliament that Year at Lincoln. I shall not blame Dr. A. for alledging the History of this Parliament, because he has a Contemporary Author to justify him in it. But his Author was certainly out both in the Place, and in the Time, of this Parliament. By Letters dated at London the 15th, and 24th of May, it appears that the King ordered All the Landed-Men of the Realm, who had Lands above a Certain Value, to be at London, the Sunday next after the Octaves of St. John Baptist ; prepared to pass over the Sea with him. The first of August following He held his Parliament at London : In order whereunto, He the day before Received the Clergy into his Favour, as he had done the Archbishop a fortnight before. Here therefore was no room for Eversden's Parliament at Lincoln on the Octaves of St. John Baptist, at which time the King was not only himself at London, but Summon'd all his Military Tenants to Attend him there. What Demands were made in this Parliament in August, I cannot tell ; but Dr. A. speaks a little too largely, even for his Own Historian, when he says that the Counts and Barons in this Parliament came in openly to the Quarrel of the Clergy. All that Eversden himself says is but this ; " That the King demanding a large Supply, a difference arose between Him, and Some of the LORDS and BARONS : The Earl of Hereford, and Earl Marshal, with their Faction, who had before begun to Oppose him, taking this Occasion to Raise a new Disturbance against Him.

But however these Counts, and Barons, might here Quarrel with the King themselves, yet they could not come into the Quarrel with the Clergy : For the King was before this Reconciled to them ; and the Archbishop began to come into his Interests : So that Dr. A. and his Author must be either way mistaken ; For at Lincoln there was no such Parliament in July, as Eversden talks of ; and in August, when the Parliament did indeed sit, the King and Clergy were Reconciled to One Another ; so that the Counts and Barons had no Opportunity of coming in to their Quarrel there.

But it is no wonder if Eversden (no where very Exact in his Accounts) who in the famous Meeting of 1294, Mistook Michaelmas for Matthew : And in this very Year placed the Convocation which Assembled upon St. Lau-

K. EDWARD ^{the 1st.} rence day, on the Sunday following it; Erred also in his Account of this Parliament. In that Convocation the Archbishop seemed inclined to favour the King's Demands: But the Prelates thought it not safe to do any thing without the Pope's Consent; nor to Grant by themselves, in a matter of such a Publick Concern, till they saw whether the Laity would join with them. Yet this they did after Michaelmas; and which is wonderful, ¹ Solemnly justified their doing of that without the Pope's Consent then, for denying of which they had thrown themselves, and the whole Church, into so much Trouble and Confusion before: When meeting first in a Great Council, and then in a Parliament, the King confirm'd their Charters, and made such Additions to them as they desired; and the People thereupon Granted a Supply to him, the Laity the Ninth Penny, the Clergy of Canterbury, ² the Tenth; and those of York ³ the Fifth. For this the ⁴ Parliament met October the 7th. ⁵ The Convocation of Canterbury, November the 26th; and ⁶ that of York, November the 29th. The Mandate for this last Congregation is very Remarkable: It shews where the Pretence of Conscience in the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Clergy of his side lay, and that it was not their Regard to the Pope's Bull, but to their Own Designs, that made them refuse a Subsidy to the King, till they had forced him to Grant what they desired of him. And for this I refer to the Instrument its self, which I have therefore given a Copy of in the Appendix.

And now, let Dr. A. say; Wherein have I made any such Misrepresentation, as he pretends of this matter? Or in what Circumstance almost has he offer'd to Correct my Account, in which he has not been proved to have been Himself apparently mistaken? How the Clergies Parliamentary Rights should suffer by this Procedure I cannot tell. I am sure I was so far from having any Design in my Report of this Passage, against them, that I never thought it did at all Affect them. It was an Extraordinary Case; and I pretend no more to Justify all that the King did, than Dr. A. will, at last, undertake to Excuse some things that the Clergy did in it. In the mean time, that here was a plain Contrivance between the Pope, and Them, to delude the King, is Evident. Our Writers have freely Own'd it, and that without the Censure of any, but the Papal Party, that I know of. And the ⁷ Clergy of France, took Other Measures; and so managed Matters with the Pope, as not to give any just Cause of Offence to their Prince. And their Own Proceeding in the latter Convocations of this Year, sufficiently shews, that they might have complied with what the King desired, much sooner, had they been willing any sooner to do it.

In the mean time, what the King did in this Case, was plainly with the Advice and Authority of his Parliament. This is clear against all Dr. A's new Relations: And 'tis as plain that his Necessity forced him to it, as both Himself constantly profess'd, and his Circumstances sufficiently shew.

Seft. 16.

But Dr. A. has one stroke more, and then we have done with this long Narrative: 'Tis a parting Remark, and is Worthy our Notice. "For (says he, speaking of the Parliament at Sarum) it must be Remembred that this was not only Excluso Clero, but Excluso Populo too. This is strange News. What did the King hold his Parliament without either Clergy or Laity? Neither Clerus, nor Populus there? But because this is not his meaning (tho' it be the true meaning of his Words) He will give me leave to tell him, in answer to what I guess was his Intention, that 'tis One thing not to Call the Commons (a part of the People, but newly brought to Parliament, and that for matters of Aid, not for Sentences of Judgement) and another to exclude, or shut out, the Bishops and Prelates; the Antient, standing Members, of our Great Councils; who had a Right of being present in all such Judicial Proceedings. Parliaments in those times, had often been held without either the Lower Clergy or Commons: They were not Called, but neither were they Excluded. But here the whole Body of the Clergy, Bishops and Prelates, as well as those of an Inferiour Rank, were purposely laid aside, whilst the Lay Barons, and the King's Council only were Summon'd to Parliament; how justly or legally I am not concerned to determine.

Seft. 17.
⁸ Hemingf. Ms. Comp. Knyghton, Col. 2524.

Having thus consider'd, and I hope effectually Answer'd Dr. A's Exceptions, against my Account of this Transaction, I Return to the Series of my History from which I have been led. On the ⁸ Octaves of Hilary 1297 A Parliament Was was held by the King's Command at York, to which the Scots, now in Arms, were Summon'd. The beginning of the next Year, a Great Council was called to Westminster, on ¹ Palm Sunday, March the 30th. And Eleven Days after a Parliament Summon'd, which Eversden says met at York, June the 2d. the morrow after Trinity; ² where the King promising to observe the Charters, all Parties were Reconciled to one Another.

How the Convocations of the other Province answer'd the Civil Councils of this Year, I cannot certainly tell. In Our Province, at the King's Desire, a Convocation was held June the 25th, about three Weeks after the Parliament at York. Hither the King sent the Prince his Son; with four Requests to the Clergy. What Answer the Convocation made to them, my ⁴ Author says not: but tells us that some of the Court Clerks mixing themselves with the Convocation Clergy, the Archbishop drove them out; and then treated of some Secret Affairs, which before the time appointed were not to be known by any.

piscopus tenuit Concilium Londoniis, ubi accessit filius Regis sub Patris nomine à Clero Quatuor Petitiones Postulatus — Affuerunt interea quidam Aulici Clerici volentes elatâ fronte Arcanis Eorum se immiscere tractatibus, quos Archiepiscopus sub Excommunicationis interminatione expulit de Synodo. Tractabantur autem ibi quedam Secretiora Negotia, quæ usq; ad diem præfinitum ad Aures Communes pervenire non poterant. So Eversden: But Others Refer this to the Convocation after All Souls, the next Year. Angl. S. Vol. I p. 524.

On February the 26th. New Writs went out to Call a Parliament at Westminster, the ⁵ first Sunday in Lent: ⁶ Where adding of that Circumstance to his Confirmation of the Charters, Salvo jure Corona sue, the King again Renew'd the discontents of his Barons. This Eversden places in Midlent; (but Erroneously) and, by a like mistake, says, that the King to avoid the Confirmation of the Charters withdrew from the Parliament; and that nevertheless it was there agreed, as it had before been Resolved by the Archbishop in Convocation, that a Sentence of Excommunication should be published against all the Infringers of them; and be Solemnly Repeated twice every Year.

With this Parliament no Convocation, as far as I can find, met in Either Province. The beginning of the next Year ⁷ the Parliament was Assembled Fifteen Days after Easter; May the 3d. ⁸ where the King coming heartily into the Confirmation of the Charters, Reconciled the Minds of his Lords to him. To say nothing of the ⁹ Great Council called to London on St. Luke's Day the same Year: That another Parliament was held on St. Martin's Day, November the 11th, at York; our ¹⁰ Historians tell us. After which on ¹¹ the 29th of December, other Writs were issued out for a Third Parliament to assemble the Second Sunday in Lent, March the 14th, at London; as accordingly it did, and sat three Weeks. ¹² Here the King again Confirmed his Own Confirmation of the Charters, to the Great Satisfaction of his People.

Such were the Parliaments of this Year: As for the Convocations, I find only one, in the Province of Canterbury, and none in that of York. ¹³ The Clergy of our Province met at the New Temple London, the Second Court-day after All Souls. To this Convocation the ¹⁴ Annals of Worcester Refer that Secret Debate of the Archbishop and his Clergy, which Eversden applied to the Assembly of the foregoing Year; and add, that the Clergy were obliged under the Sentence of the Greater Excommunication, not to declare the Subject of it to any. There is this Presumption that these Annals are in the Right; that the Archbishop having Order'd the Bishop of London by his Mandate dated September the 25th. to Summon this Convocation, "pro quibusdam Negotiis arduis in sede Apostolica promovendis; ¹⁵ by Second Letters dated a Month after, October the 28th, order'd this farther Intimation to be added, peculiar to this Convocation; "pro Relevandis Necessitatibus Eccles. Prov. Cant. variis subjecta periculis hiis diebus, & ipsius utilitatibus Promovendis. A Clause of an Extraordinary Nature; and which shews that the Archbishop had some particular Design to carry on in that Convocation; which might cause the Secrecy of which the Worcester Annals (a History more to be rely'd upon by much than Eversden's) speak.

We are told by Eversden that after Whitsuntide, in the Year next following, (Anno 1300.) the King held his Parliament at York, and that there his Barons for some time Opposed their Attendance upon him into Scotland; alleging that they owed him no Services there. But this I believe is a Mistake, like like many others, of that Historian ; and that the Truth of the Case was this. ¹ The King by his Writs order'd three Knights to be chosen out of every County, to meet him at York the day after the Ascension ; there to receive Instructions about putting in Execution what had been Ordain'd concerning the two Charters. This Meeting I suppose, Eversden calls a Parliament : and puts it a little after, instead of a little before, Whitsuntide.

He is more in the Right in his next Parliament, which he says met at Lincoln upon Hilary Day after ; tho' neither is he there Exact. For as Mat. Westminster tells us, and the ² King's Writ shews, it met not on Hilary Day, but eight days after ; and fate to the End of the Month. To this Parliament, the Lower Clergy were not (generally) Summon'd : The Præmunitory Clause was Omitted ; and only such of them Called by Particular Writs, as the King thought fit to send for to it.

³ Here that Famous Letter was drawn up, which the King directed to the Pope in Vindication of his Right to the Realm of Scotland : The Charters were Confirmed ; and a Fifteenth Granted to the King by the Laity for it. ⁴ But the Archbishop of Canterbury would not Grant any thing for the Clergy without the Consent of the Pope. This Eversden Refers to another Parliament which met at Stamford the Midlent before, contrary to the General Report of our Other Historians ; who in this nevertheless agree with him, ⁵ that there was a Parliament held there, and that the Barons came Arm'd to it, and thereby obliged the King to a final Confirmation of the Charter of the Forrests to them. But ⁶ the time of that Parliament, if I mistake not, was after Easter, in the beginning of this Year ; as by a Writ dated there May the 2d, may reasonably be supposed.

It is plain then that two Parliaments, at least, were held this Year ; and to one of them the Clergy were not Summon'd ; whether they were to the Other I cannot tell. Yet in all this Year I do not find any Convocation called to Attend, as the Modern Phrase is, upon either of these Great Assemblies. On the ⁷ thirteenth of June the Archbishop, with the Bishops of Sarum, Rochester, and Lincoln, who the day before had been Consecrated there, held a kind of Provincial Synod, at Canterbury, the other Bishops of the Province having sent their Proctors thither : And some Orders were made concerning the Admission of the Preaching Fryars to make Sermons, and hear Confessions ; and about the Cloystering of Nuns. But this was a proper Ecclesiastical Assembly ; which being met for the Consecration of the Bishop of Lincoln, the Archbishop took the Occasion to hold a Synod with his Suffragans and their Proctors, and there to agree upon their Orders as to these Matters.

In the next Year 1301. ⁸ I can meet with but One Parliament ; held at London about the middle of Lent. That any Convocation fate this Year, does not yet appear to me, and the King having now Running the half of a Triennial Disme Granted by the Pope to him, ⁹ besides the Fifteenth of the Temporalities of the Clergy, given with that of the Laity the Year before, I do believe there was none Called at all.

Anno 1302. The King held his ¹⁰ Parliament on the Octaves of St. Jo. Bapt. July the 1st. I call it a ¹¹ Parliament by the Authority of the next Writ of Summons which was issued out in pursuance of this, tho' there be no Præmunientes in it for the Lower Clergy, nor does it appear that the Commons were called to it. This Second Parliament was Summon'd to meet on Michaelmas day : but by ¹² a New Writ, dated September the 13th, was Prorogued to the Morrow after St. Edward, October the 14th. A little before the former of these a Convocation was held, ¹³ the Morrow after Ascension, June the 8th. But tho' another Convocation met after the latter, yet was it at a Great Distance from it, the ¹⁴ Munday after St. Nicholas day, December the 10th, before which time we may be Confident the Parliament was Risen.

In this latter Convocation the Clergy seem willing to have Granted a Subsidy to the King, but would not do it without the Pope's leave. By ¹⁵ Letters therefore dated 12 Kal. Januarij, they sent a Proctor to obtain this Licence, for them, the Result of which I can give no certain Account of.

Having no Instance either of Parliament or Convocation the next Year, I go on to 1304. In which a Parliament was call'd to meet on ¹⁶ Tuesday the Quindene of the Purification ; but by Prorogation before it Assembled was put off to

to the Sunday after Matthias, March the 2d. How Sir William Dugdal came to K. EDWARD Omit the Premunitory Clause in these two Writs, I cannot tell. In the former the 1st. of them it is expressly entred upon the Clause Rolls; but of that He has given us no Copy to a Bishop. And we are sure it must have been inserted into, because we find it to have been Executed by the Archbishops and Bishops, in the latter: both the 2 Executions of it and the Returns upon it, remain upon Record; and put this matter out of doubt.

The Forms of these 3 Procuratoria are Observable: Those of the Church of Worcester were directed to the King, by whose Writ they were Summon'd.
That of the Clergy of Lincoln, tho' not directed to him, yet expressly take Notice of appearing in his Parliament, and Treating with the Prelates, Lords, and Proctors of the Clergy, about the Affairs of the Realm there. And the Prior and Chapter of Worcester having each of them distinctly given a Proxy of the former kind, afterwards join'd together in One Common Proxy of the latter Form; and by all these shew that as they were here Summon'd by a Civil Call to meet in the Parliament of the Kingdom, and to Treat with the Laity to be Assembled there; so they did Obey, and meet accordingly.

The Archbishop of Canterbury indeed, in the 4 Execution of the former of these 4 Regist. Henr.
Writs acted after a Singular manner. He Recited not the Words (as the Prior. Cant.
5 Bishop of Lincoln did) but only the Substance of it; and then "Required fol. 103.
" his Clergy to appear before himself at Lambeth the Sunday before, to treat Lib. Memo-
" with him of such things as Related to the State of the Church, and to do rand. Jo. Dal-
" farther with Him in the said Parliament, as the Orders of the Holy Canons derby, fol. 78.
" permitted. 6 Dr. A. (an Author who never fails to improve a Good 6 Rights, &c.
Hint) takes Notice of this, as a Method " made use of by the Archbishop, of p. 252.

" salving in some measure the (Pretended) Priviledges of the Clergy, without disobeying the King. But he is not content to take the matter as he found it;
No, he will add much more from Conjecture, than he could Recover from History; and therefore supposes that He not only Summon'd, after this manner, the Clergy of his Own Diocese, but the Rest of the Province, by the Bishop of Lon- don. Had any such thing been done by him, we should certainly have had some Account of it. The Registers of Canterbury, Lincoln, and Worcester, which have preserved the Executions and Proxies of this Parliament, would hardly have fail'd to have preserved much more Carefully the Memory of such a PROVINCIAL CONVOCATION as this, in that Case, would have been. But so far was the Archbishop from doing any such thing, that the same Parliament being Prorogued, as I have said, to the Sunday after St. Matthias, in his Execution of the Premunientes for that day He Required no such Previous meeting of those of his Own Diocese; but left them to send their Proctors directly to Parliament, without taking Lambeth in their way to Westminster; as the 7 Form of their Procurations, in the very Register to which he Refers would have shewn Him, had he been willing to be Inform'd.

Regist. Henr.
Prior. fol. 103.

But indeed Dr. A. ought to be Excused for this Conjecture. He could find no Convocation to attend upon this Parliament, unless he could thus form One out of the Execution of the Premunitory Summons. And such a One would have been of Singular Advantage to his Cause: He resolved therefore to try how a Happy Conjecture would take; and so Called this Convocation, by meer dint of Fancy, four Hundred Years after, to Attend upon the Par- liament, which the Archbishop, high as he was for the Rights of the Church, never thought of doing.

The next Year following a 8 Parliament (so the Writs call it) was Sum-mon'd to meet at Westminster upon the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin, August the 15th, and from thence Prorogued to the Octaves of the Nativity, September the 15th. There was at this time no Archbishop of York, and the 9 Arch- bishop of Canterbury, was under Suspension, and absent on his Way to Rome.
And we may therefore securely conclude, that as we have no Account of any Convocation called this Year, so neither was any held. The same was the Case of the Years following. The King call'd his Parliament to meet at Carlisle on the Octaves of Hilary, 1306. 10 He Summon'd the Clergy by the Premunito- ry Clause thither: and they Attended upon him from both Provinces there.

K. EDWARD the 1st. Much was done in that Parliament relating to the Church. The Pope had Reserved to himself the First-fruits of all Ecclesiastical Benefices, within the Realm. Against this the King and his Lords Opposed themselves. Other Grievances were Committed by his Agent W. de Testa; and both the Clergy and Laity, solemnly Remonstrated in Parliament against them. Several other matters, of the like kind, were Establish'd: But that any Convocation was called for the Advising, or Establishing of them, in either Province, is yet to be proved; and will always, I believe, continue so to be.

² Spelman: If the ² Ms. Copies of the Constitutions of Archbishop Greenfield be to be Relied upon, we must conclude, that he held an Ecclesiastical Council of his Province, Anno 1306. to publish them in. This is placed at Rippon 2 Kal. Octobr. Sept. the 30th; but besides that this was a Provincial Council, not a State Convocation, its distance from the time of the Parliament of Carlisle was too Great, to imagine it should have been design'd for an Attendant upon a State Council not yet Summon'd; nor to sit till almost four Months after this Synod was risen.

Concil. Vol. II. p. 438.

Thus stood this Matter during the last twelve Years of King Edward the 1st. The Clergy met often, in Parliament, and Convocation: But that the latter of these had any Dependence, by this New-Constitution, upon the former; that either in Law it was Obliged, or in Fact was wont, to meet with it, is so far from Appearing, that I think I have plainly proved the contrary. Let us see how these Assemblies were held under the next Reign, of his Son,

King EDWARD the 2d.

Being come to the Crown July the 7th, he called his Parliament to ³ Northampton Fifteen Days after Michaelmas, October the 13th. In this Parliament the Clergy Granted a ⁴ Fifteenth part of their Goods to the King: ⁵ Dr. A. observes that the Pramunientes in this Parliament was duly Obey'd. This he concludes from one single Instance of the Church of Canterbury out of Hen. Priors Register; in which He will give me leave to correct a Mistake easily made, yet fit to be amended, in the date of April, for ⁶ October the 3d. 1307. But by the Execution of the ⁷ Bishop of Lincoln for this very Parliament it appears that this Clause was Obey'd not only in the Execution, but in the Actual Attendance of the Lower Clergy at Parliament. It takes notice of the Great Charges which the Clergy of the Diocese had been at, in their long stay at the last Parliament at Carlisle for twelve Weeks; and Requires the Archdeacon that if any of the Money Levy'd for that Parliament Remain'd in his Hands, it should be employ'd for the Expence of their Proctors at this; and the Clergy not be Grieved with any New Impositions.

Another Parliament, (so the ⁸ Writ styles it) was held this same Year, on the first Sunday in Lent at Westminster. In this the Pramunitory Clause was omitted; but all the Bishops, with the Parliamentary Abbots, and Priors, the Lords, and Justices, and Others of the King's Council, were Assembled. But that any Concurrent Attending Convocation of the Clergy was held with either of these Parliaments, my Enquiries have not yet given me the least Cause to believe.

Anno 1309. ¹² A Parliament was called to meet at Westminster, a Month after Easter. To it the Clergy were Summon'd by the Pramunitory Clause, which, as Dr. A. Observes, was Obey'd by them. ¹³ The Bishop of Lincoln in this, as in the Parliament of the last Year immediately foregoing, constituted his Proctor by two different Instruments. One to be delivered to the King, and directed to Him; the other to be kept by the Proctor with a General Address

Address to all Persons. These Proxies this Year were made to Hugh de Nor- K. EDWARD manton, and Tho. Bray, Canons of Lincoln, and dated 16 Kal. Maij, 1309. Two the II^d.
Days after a Third Proxy was sent to Hugh de Normanton with a General Power " of Doing and Consenting to, such things as by God's Assistance should " be Ordained there, but with this Trust, that if Necessity Required he " should Use that Proxy, otherwise not. The same I have observed in some Other Cases, and the Ground of it I conceive to have been this; that they were to manage themselves as well with the King as they could. If a Pretence of Want of Powers, or Instructions would be taken in their Excuse for Refusing of Money, or the like, they should then alledge it: But yet should be provided to Comply with the King's Demands, rather than Expose Themselves, or their Principals, to any Great Inconvenience by an Obstinate and Peremptory Refusal.

There is one thing more which I shall take the Occasion of this Parliament par. I. fol. to Observe. We find by the Forms of several Proxies, that the Clergy meet- 166. b. Pro-ing Nationally in Parliament, on the Premunitory Summons, did yet give their curatorium Commissions to treat Provincially only with their Respective Metropolitans Waltero de there. Of this there are Instances enough in the Province of Canterbury. The Thesaurar. Ec-Archbishop of York being absent from this Parliament gave his Proxy to the cles. Ebor. & same purpose to his Representatives there, to Treat with his Clergy, and to Wmo. de Pick-Consent with them in Parliament, to what should be Ordain'd there. So Je- ering Archialous were they of their Provincial Rights, that they stood upon them, even in diacono Nor-their National Assemblies: The Archbishops, with the Prelates and Clergy, of their tingham: — Provinces debated asunder of their Parliamentary Affairs; agreed severally what Ad tractand.
to do; and (as I conceive) the Archbishops delivered their Resolutions so pro nobis und taken in their Respective Meetings, when they came together before the King, cum CLERO and Lords, in Parliament. NOSTRO

On the Sunday after St. James, July the 27th, another Parliament was held in eodem Par-at Stamford: In this the Premunientes being Omitted, the Lower Clergy were liamento, not troubled to come to it; as neither were they called to the next, which nec non Conwas Summon'd first to York, and then to Westminster, to meet the Sunday sentiendum next after the Purification, February the 8th. nostro Nomine,

These were the Parliaments of this Year: On the 24th of November, the CLERO Archbishop of Canterbury held a proper Provincial Council, by the Pope's Order, NOSTRO about the Affair of the Templars. To this he Cited, besides the Bishops, and pradiſto, in Regular Prelates; " the Deans, Provosts, Arch-Priests, Archdeacons, and All the diſto Parlia-

the King, in the first Year of his Reign; and was now begun to be put in muni Consilio Execution. Of this we shall hear more in the two following Years, as for the favente Deo our English Councils, may suffice to shew what kind of Synod it was, and how it tigerit, &c.

was Assembled. Dugd Sum-

But yet, for all their Own Agreement, they held their Convocation in December, as we have seen, to take the Consent of their Clergy to it ; whether they did the like in the Province of York, I am not able to say.

And these are all the State-Meetings of the Clergy that Occur in this Year ; in which a Parliament was first held about Midsummer, without a Convocation ; and then a Convocation of the Province of Canterbury in December, without a Parliament. But there was an Ecclesiastical Provincial Council, different from both these, in either Province. That of Canterbury met the Wednesday after St. Matthew, September the 23^d. To it were Summon'd the Bishops, and their Chapters only : No Deans ; No Abbots, Priors, Archdeacons, or Diocesan Clergy. It prosecuted the Affairs of the Templars, and continued sitting a very great while. For by Letters of Proxy dated the 3rd of November, by the Bishop of Lincoln who was gone off Sick from the Meeting, it was still sitting at that time, and not in any near Prospect of Rising, as from his Constitution of Proctors to Act in his Absence may reasonably be infer'd.

The Provincial Synod of York had met a long time before, May the 20th. But little seems to have been done there, it being Dissolved the next day. This only I shall Observe as to the Members of it, that the Diocesan Clergy were not Summon'd to it ; nor had so much as any Invitation to be there, if they had any Cause, or Business, to bring them thither.

But to leave these Councils, and come to the Famous Parliament of the Fifth of Edward the II^d. Anno 1311. where Dr. A. fixes (and that rightly enough) the first Beginning of a Provincial Summons to Parliament, and of which I must beg leave to give a more full Account than He has thought fit to do. King Edward the II^d being on the Borders of Scotland, by his Writ dated at Berwick upon Tweed, June the 16th, Called his Parliament to meet at London, the Sunday before St. Laurence Day ; August the 8th. This Parliament having Great Affairs in Hand, and much Business to do, sate from thence till the 8th of October, above Nine Weeks ; and was then, at the special Request of such of the Prelates, and Lords as continued there, Prorogued for about five Weeks ; Propter moram diutinam ; as the King's Writ of Prorogation tells Us.

To this Parliament the Clergy were called by the Præmunitory Clause ; and that Clause was Executed after the Usual manner by the Bishops. Yet something the Archbishop was then about, that produced the Measures which were afterwards taken. For on the Margin of the Great Register of the Prior and Chapter of Worcester ; there is this Note fix'd upon their Procuratorial Letters, which they gave upon that Writ ; " That these Proxies were not delivered, because the Clergy is not bound to Obey the King's Call, without the Command of the Archbishop. And by a Proxy of the Bishop of Lincoln dated the Day before this Parliament was to meet, it appears that the Suffragan Bishops had certain Articles then on foot, deliver'd to the Archbishop, for Reformation, and for the Ease of the Flock Committed to them.

Whether the Clergy hereupon did not appear at all, or not in any Great Numbers at this Parliament, I cannot tell : But upon the Prorogation of it before mentioned, dated the 8th of October, the King Required the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Vicar General of the Archbishop of York, (who was then Abroad at the General Council, as one of the King's Ambassadors to it) to Give Notice, or indeed, to Præmonish the Lower Clergy of their whole Provinces, as the Bishops of Each Diocese had hitherto been wont to do. The time assign'd for their Coming was on the Octaves of St. Martin, November the 18th, about forty Days from the time that the Writ was Dated. The Lords were Summon'd to meet the Fryday after All-Saints, November the 5th, the Commons the Morrow after St. Martin, November the 12th, at which time they met, and sate from thence thirty four Days.

The Archbishop either really took somewhat amiss in this New Writ, or at least Pretended that he did. It may be he had no mind to Execute such a Writ, as he knew would destroy the Pretence which seems to have been set on Foot at the last Parliament by the Clergy, in order to their total withdrawing of themselves from these Councils; namely, that they were not bound to Assemble by the King's Summons, unless they were Required so to do by the Archbishop's Mandate. However, it were, the King by a Second Writ, dated at Eltham, October the 24th, gave the Archbishop a longer time to bring the Clergy thither; a fortnight, or three Weeks after St. Martins; and promised, that if there were any Expressions in this New Form prejudicial to his Rights, they should be Amended in the Next Parliament.

Upon this Second Writ the Archbishop ² Obey'd, and sent out a Provin- cial Mandate to Summon the Parliament Clergy, to the Place of Parliament; to meet and Consent, as Usual, to what should be done there. This Mandate having not Occur'd to Dr. A. it may possibly be a Satisfaction to him to peruse it, in the ³ Appendix. The Parliament coming thus late together (for the Temporal Lords, made no more haste than the Clergy; as appears by the King's Writs issued out ⁴ November the 28th, to prohibit them from coming, as some of them had design'd, with Horse and Arms) fate but till the 18th of December, and was then Dissolved: But more Business Remaining to be done, a ⁵ New One was Called the very next Day to meet the first Sunday in Lent, which on January the 20th, was put off, and never met at all.

This is the whole of that Affair; let us now see what Use Dr. A. either by Mistake, or by Design, has made of it: "And here (says He) for ought
 "I can find, the Foundation was laid for that Practise of a Double Summons of "the Clergy, (He should have added, to Parliament) which grew afterwards "to be the settled Course (he should have said, for some time, till towards "the middle of Edward the Third's Reign) and does even to this Day, with
 "some small Variety as to the Form, Obtain.

What does this Author mean by some small Variety? Are the Clergy at this day Summon'd to Parliament by double Writs, as now they were? By their Me- tropolitan's Mandate, as well as by the Bishop's Premonition? Or have they been Once thus Summon'd for Three Hundred and Fifty Years past? That this Pro- vincial Summons was only a Provincial Execution of the Parliament Writ is certain:
 Nor can Dr. A. himself deny it. It Summon'd the same Persons, and to the same Place, Business, and Purpose, that the several Writs to the Bishops were wont to do. But no such Provincial Writ has been issued out for Three Hundred and Fifty Years past. The Provincial Writs now in Use, or that have been in Use all that time are of a quite different kind: As different, as a Sum- mons to Convocation is from a Summons to Parliament, and how different that must be, I have too fully shewn already, to insist upon it again here.

But Dr. A. is not Content with this Original Mistake, he must improve his Conjectures, and thereby add Error to Error. Thus therefore he goes on.
 "That the Archbishop might be the more ready to comply with this Summons
 "of his Clergy, it was so framed, as not to take in the Whole Body of them:
 "For the Priors that presided not over Cathedral Churches were purposely "Omitted. Let Dr. A. look again into the Writs; and see whether any besides the Parliamentary Clergy were order'd to be Summon'd by the Archbishop; or whether he did not precisely Summon the Whole Body of those that were then wont to be Called to Parliament. Let us hear how he Enumerates the Persons whom the King Commanded him to Summon: "The Deans and Priors of "the Cathedral Churches, and their Chapters; as also the Abbots, Priors, and "Archdeacons, and All the Clergy of our Diocese; and of our Whole Province; will Dr. A. please to tell Us what other Clergy besides these were wont to be Summon'd to Parliament? Or what Priors he finds Omitted here, that had ever before been Called thither? But he goes on: "And it order'd him to Call "them, tho' to a Parliament, yet not till a fortnight after the Temporal Mem- "bers were to meet. That was accidental; the Laity were only to return to Parliament; but as 'tis plain from the New-Elections upon these Writs, the Clergy were to be Chosen for it: And therefore a little farther time might be necessary to be allow'd for it. In the first Writs the Lords and Prelates, November the 5th, were Summon'd to the same Day, ⁶ the Friday after All-Saints;
 The ⁷ Commons, at the same time, were Order'd to come the Morrow after
St. Martin, November the 12th. a Week after; so that this coming at differ-

EDWARD rent times, signifies nothing at all in the present Case. But be the time of their coming what it will, this is plain, and that is enough for my purpose, that still they were to come to Parliament; in Parlamento Prox. apud Westmonaster. Celebrando, says the Writ; “in predicto Parlamento apud Westmonasterium ut praedicitur Celebrando: And therefore that this was, in truth, no more than a Provincial Execution of the Parliamentary Præmunientes; which from henceforth was often, I may say Commonly, (tho’ not Constantly, for that is another of Dr. A’s Mistakes, to say it became the settled Course) Executed both ways; by the Bishops in their Dioceses, and, by the Archbishops, throughout their Respective Provinces.

The Archbishop however Check’d at this Writ, thus qualify’d, as derogatory to the Priviledges of his Church, and Sea: Or rather, I believe, as cutting off the Pretence which they had thought to have set up to Excuse their Coming to Parliament altogether; “that the Clergy were not to obey the King’s Summons, without the Archbishop’s Mandate; which no doubt he was very unwilling to issue out, if he could have told how to Refuse it. But tho’ the King, as Dr. A. Observes made him a Complement in the Words of his Second Writ, yet he Insisted upon the Execution of it; and by so doing put an end to all the Shifts of that Troublesome, and Haughty Archbishop; and to the Design of the Clergy, Encouraged, no doubt, in their Attempts by him.

I say nothing of the ¹ Parliament which was designed to have met the first Sunday in Lent; but by ² Other Writs, dated January the 20th, was intirely put off, without coming to a Session. A Third Meeting there was, which seems to have been held the next Month on the Munday after the Feast of St. Gregory; but what to call it I cannot tell. ³ The King was in the North; and this Assembly was to be a Tractatus of the Archbishop, with his Suffragan Bishops, and Lords of the Realm, at St. Pauls Church London. It is probable that the Party who Caball’d against the King, might here meet together upon their own Designs; and to take some Measures how to Proceed in them. But be this as it will; thus much is plain, that here were two Sessions of one Parliament held, almost from August to Christmas; and a Second Parliament Called, and yet no Convocation of the Province of Canterbury, either Called, or held with them. Indeed in the Province of York, a Convocation there was, as well as a Council, of which therefore some Notice must be taken, before I proceed any farther. By a ⁴ Mandate dated February the 20th, a Provincial Council was Summon’d to appear at York the 24th of May. To this all Doctors of Divinity, and Professors of the Canon-Law, were Summon’d; but the Procuratores Cleri were not mention’d in the Citation. But the King desiring a Subsidy of Twelve Pence per Mark, to be Granted to him, a ⁵ New Mandate was issued out, April the 24th, to Summon totum Clerum to appear by their Proxies at the same place, May the 24th, the same Day. The Clergy refused to grant any Subsidy, as well upon the Account of the Pope’s Constitutions, which forbid it, and involved both the Givers and Receivers of such Aids, under the Sentence of Excommunication; as because the Triennial Disme granted for the Use of the Holy Land, was not yet expired, and so they were in no Capacity of answering the King’s Desire.

Ibid.

This was the Result of that Convocation; as for the Council held at the same time with it, but without any Proctors of the Clergy; it agreed to adjourn to the 1st of July; and then to meet in the Conventual Church of Blide, according to the Form of the Preceding Citation, that is without any Proctors of the Diocesan Clergy in it. ⁶ But by a New Mandate, dated the last of May the Archbishop Changed the place from thence to York; and in that the third time Omitted the Diocesan Clergy, who neither now were Summon’d to come to it.

Both these Councils were held about the Affairs of the Templars, the Determinations of which the Archbishop was to carry to the General Council with him.

This latter continued to July the 30th: ⁷ The Result was, that the Templars who had Abjured their Heresies there, should be Absolved from their Sentence of Excommunication, and be sent to several Monasteries of the Province, there to Continue, and fulfill the Pennance to be enjoyn’d to them. Whether the Constitutions published the ⁸ Eighteenth of the same Month were here also pass’d, I cannot tell: It is not improbable but that here they may have been agreed to, tho’ they were not promulged till some Days after, for Common Observation.

⁸ Spelm. Con.

In the Province of Canterbury a¹ Council was held about the same Affairs of the Templars, on Fryday after the Octaves of Easter. To this the² Clergy were Called, and every Bishop order'd to send, three Weeks before, a Doctor of Canon and Civil Law; to prepare matters, and to consider how the Council, when met, should proceed against them. This Synod sate long, from the beginning of May to June, says Adam de Murimuth; but it should have been July; for so long it appears by the Acts, which I have by me, of the Process against these Persons, to have lasted. The Council sate in the Bishop of London's Hall, the whole Clergy and People of London being allow'd to be present at it.

The Result then of this Year is this: There was a Convocation Summon'd for Aid in the Province of York, almost Two Months before the Parliament met, but none (that appears) in the Province of Canterbury. This Convocation was Called only for Money, nor did it meddle with any thing beside. In all the time of the Parliament, (tho' One of the longest that had ever yet been held) no Convocation was called in either Province, nor was any Summon'd to have Attended upon the next, which should have met in Lent following; but was Adjourned without sitting.

Anno 1312. The Parliament was called to meet at³ Lincoln, the Sunday next after the Feast of St. Mary Magdalene, July the 23d, and the Lower Clergy were Premonished to come to it. But by a second Writ, dated July the 8th, it was Adjourned to Westminster the Sunday after the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin, August the 20th. Here the Præmunientes were again inserted, but no Provincial Writ issued out to the Archbishops to oblige their Clergy to come to it. However, that the Clergy did still continue to come to these Councils, an ancient Clause in the Procuratory Letters of the Prior of Durham to this Parliament, shews: ⁴ Where having in due form constituted a Proxy to appear in Parliament on his behalf, "He humbly beseeches the King favourably to excuse his Personal Absence, and to admit of his Proxy to Act there in his Stead.

The Archbishop of Canterbury had, before either of these, Summon'd his⁶ Provincial Council to meet the xivth of the Kal. of May; April the 18th. to proceed against certain of the Templars, upon some Matters which had risen since the Meeting of his last Provincial Council. He had, besides this, another Work to do, to Grant a Subsidy to the King; and for this the Lower Clergy, as well as the Bishops, were to be called to it. By some Miscarriage in the Execution of this Mandate, several of the Bishops, and Clergy of the Province were not present, nor made any Returns at the time appointed. ⁷ This obliged the Archbishops to issue out new Mandates, and to direct them himself immediately to the several Bishops to come to his Council at another Day now settled, the Monday after Ascension, to which he continued his Council in Expectation of Them. These Mandates were dated in Council, April the 20th. And like the Others before, summon'd the Chapters and Convents to appear by their Deans, Abbots and Priors, if they thought fit; or else by any other, One or More, sitting Proctors; and the Diocesan Clergy by One or Two Proctors, at their own Choice.

From this Council⁸ Letters were sent to the Pope on the behalf of the University of Oxford: But the most considerable Transaction to our Purpose of this Ecclesiastical Council, was the Giving of the King iv. Pence in the Mark, of all their Ecclesiastical Goods, and Benefices⁹. This was so Precipitated, that the Archbishop's Mandate for Collecting of it, was dated in Council, May the 27th. and the King's Writ for paying in what was Collected, June the 16th following. This was ordered to be laid up in safe Custody¹⁰ for the Benefit and Honour of Holy Church, the King and Kingdom, and to Repel their Enemies; and was Levied to carry on the Scots War, who were now preparing to invade the Kingdom.

But the Archbishop called another¹¹ Provincial Council this same Year, and that (which Dr. A. will be glad to hear of,) at the very time that the second Parliament in Lent met. But two Circumstances there were which quite spoil all the Use that he might otherwise have made of this Assembly: First, That the

the Archbishop held it as a strict Provincial Council, according to the Canons of the Church; And accordingly, secondly, Called only his Suffragan Bishops to it, which will by no means suit with the Design or Constitution of a Parliament-Attending Convocation. 'Tis true, in the Close of the Mandate, there is a Provision for some of the Lower Clergy: "He order'd the Bishops to signifie to their Deans and Chapters, That if they came to the Council, and Petition'd to be Admitted into it, as the Law Required, they should be Admitted. This, I doubt, will look a little Hardly in some Mens Opinions: But such was the Power of the Metropolitan, and the Canonical Practice, Then. The Dignitaries of the Cathedrals were as yet only Invited, not Summon'd (except when the Archbishop thought fit) and they must Petition too, before they were to be Admitted; to shew that it was a matter of Grace, not of Right, to Admit them to a Place in these Assemblies.

Besides these Conventions of the Bishops and Clergy in Parliament, and Council, another there was, which tho' not much to the present Purpose, yet I shall take thus much Notice of it, That it was Summon'd by the Archbishop of Canterbury by Order of the Pope's Legate, to meet at London, September the 28th, and from thence Prorogued to November the 9th. These were all the Assemblies to which they were called this Year: The Result of which is therefore the same with that of the Preceding; two Parliaments were held, without any Convocation, either Attending upon them, or so much as Meeting at the same time with them.

Nor will the Case appear to be much different in the next following: Anno 1313. In which the King² Summon'd his Parliament to sit at Westminster fifteen Days after St. John Baptist, July the 8th; and Re-summon'd it at the same distance after³ the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin, September the 23d, the Sunday after St. Matthews day: Yet with neither of these Parliaments was any Convocations held in the Province of Canterbury; nor indeed within the whole Year. But tho' neither with these Parliaments, nor at any Other time, this Year, was any Convocation held within the Province of Canterbury, yet at the beginning of it a Provincial Council was Assembled; and continued to the Fryday after Ascension day, May the 25th. To this, as I conceive by the Form of⁴ the Bishop of Hereford's Proxy, only the Prelates were called; and that not before the Archbishop, who, I suppose, was not able to Attend upon it, but before the Commissioners deputed by him.

Such were the Assemblies of the Clergy of this Province: In the Province of York a⁵ Convocation was called at the King's Desire to meet at York, September the 3d; In his Mandates for which, the Archbishop fairly sets out what they were to do when they came together. He tells them that the Clergy of the Other Province having granted to the King four Pence in the Mark, of their Ecclesiastical Benefices in their Provincial Council, the King had Required him with great Earnestness to induce the Prelates and Clergy of his Province to Grant him the like Subsidy; and that the rather, in that they were nearer to the Danger, and so ought the more readily to Contribute to the Prevention of it. Thus the Archbishop declared the Cause of this Convocation; and thereby Warrants me, in despite of Dr. A's Wrath, to say that this was the true Ground to the King's desiring such Assemblies first, and of his Summoning of them afterwards, as I have hitherto in some Measure shewn, and shall, as I go on, more fully observe. At present I shall only Remark this one thing, that here again were two Parliaments held, and no Convocation at all in One Province, nor any Concomitant Convocation, tho' at 150 Miles distance, in the Other.

Hitherto, since the Year 1311, we have heard but little of the Ecclesiastical Rights of the Church, and the Zeal of the Clergy in Asserting of them. We must now proceed to a New Archbishop, and a Busy Year; full of Clamours, yet all at last Ending in a meer Noise, without any Real Benefit obtain'd by it. A difficult piece of History it is; of which my Positive Adversary knew but very little; and has therefore given, not only an imperfect, but a wrong Account of it. I shall endeavour to set it in the best Light I can; and try what may be done, at least to clear the method of their Proceedings.

The Clergy of the Province of Canterbury had about two Years before Granted to the King a Subsidy of four Pence in the Mark for the Defence of the Realm, and the King, the last Year, demanded the same of those of the Other Province.

This

This not sufficing to answer his Needs; ¹ the Pope laid a Six Years Tenth upon them, and Assign'd it over to the King for his Use. In this State were our Affairs, on the Church Part, when the ² King Summon'd his Parliament to meet fifteen Days after Easter, the beginning of this Year, and by the Præmunitory Clause Called the Lower Clergy, as usually, to it. Accordingly ³ Dr. A. tells us this Parliament met, and the Præmunientes Clause was Actually Obey'd by the Inferior Clergy, and there it was agreed, to Summon the Clergy after the Extraordinary Manner of which I shall give an Account by and by. But in this he is certainly mistaken; for by ⁴ New Writs dated April the 1st, it appears, that the King was Obliged to go into Scotland, and therefore that instead of their Coming to that Parliament, he Required the Bishops to meet in that Other Assembly, which he had Summon'd to Westminster the Morrow after Ascension; of which Dr. A. speaks, and at which such Offence was taken by the Clergy.

In farther Proof of which let it be Observed, that the Parliament at which he affirms this Resolution was taken; should have met fifteen Days after Easter, April the 21st: But the King's ⁵ Writ for the Provincial Assembly of the Clergy the Day after the Ascension, was dated March the 25th, almost a Month before that Parliament should have sate.

It is certain then that the Resolution of Holding this Assembly could not have been taken in the Parliament which should have met a fortnight after Easter. As for the Assembly its self; the King's Writ gives this Account of it: That the " Scots having invaded the Realm, and Committed great Outrages upon the Borders of it; had Obliged him to be at New-Castle upon Tyne, Three Weeks after Easter (but a Week after that Other Parliament should have met at Westminster) and because the Clergy in such Cases of Eminent Danger and Necessity were Obliged, not only to advise; but to Aid him too, he therefore Required the Archbishop of Canterbury, &c. to appear at Westminster upon the Morrow after Ascension, before such Persons as he should appoint to treat with them about a Competent Subsidy from the Clergy of the Province (for that still appears to have been the Ground and Cause both of the King's Calling of these Assemblies and of their Unwillingness to be brought to them.)

To make this Meeting the more secure, the King not only issued out Particular Writs to the several Bishops of the Province, in like manner, to come thither at the time appointed, and to Premonish their Clergy, as in the Calling of a Parliament, but Commanded the Archbishop to Cite them all Provincially in the same manner, that he had done to Parliament in the fifth of his Reign. The Persons Called by both kind of Writs, were the Parliamentary Clergy only; viz. The Suffragan Bishops, the Deans, and Priors of Cathedral Churches, the Archdeacons, and Abbots, of the Province, in Person; the Chapters by One, and the Diocesan Clergy by Two Proctors. So that the Assembly was a Convocation of the Parliament Clergy, of each Province; (for the same was done in the ⁶ Other, that we have now been speaking of, as to our Province;) Called both by the Diocesan, and by Provincial Writs, only (like that 1294.) without the Laity, who were otherwise Engaged with the King in the Defence of the Kingdom.

The Archbishop Readily ⁷ Executed the King's Writ, both upon his Province, and upon his Diocese, as I conceive the Suffragans also did within their Respective Districts. In Obedience to both, the Clergy came together, upon Fryday, May the 17th: Eleven Bishops were there in Person, the Rest by their Proxies. To these the Clergy upon the Munday following presented those Reasons against the Method of their Assembling, which Dr. A. has Published (but imperfectly) in his Appendix; and which will be found from a more correct Copy, in mine. ⁸

To descant upon the Reasons alledg'd by the Clergy against this way of Summons is no Part of my Business; and might be ill Construed by some Persons, tho' I should do it never so fairly. I will only observe, that nothing was done in this Meeting (unless the Recital of the King's Writ in Terms may be accounted a Greater Infringement of their Rights, than delivering the Sense of it) but what had before been done in the Assemblies of 1294. and 1311. against which yet we find no such terrible Outcry to have been made by them.

However the Archbishop was not unwilling to Comply with their Desires, and therefore brake up that Assembly on Wednesday, without doing any other Business than that of Resolving upon a Second, which by a ¹ Mandate issued out the very next day he order'd to meet the Morrow after the Translation of St. Thomas, July the 8th. This was a proper Provincial Convocation against which they had no Exception; and yet they seem to have done nothing at all in it, unless they agreed to that Twentieth there, which they afterward s changed into a Tenth, in the Parliament of January following.

By the like Writs by which the King Required the Clergy of our Province to meet at Westminster the Morrow after Ascension, he Commanded those of York to Assemble at York the Morrow after ² Trinity Sunday. Whether the Clergy of that Province entred into the same Measures with those of Canterbury, I cannot tell: But the ³ Result of their Meeting was to the same Effect; That a proper Convocation should be called by the Archbishop, to meet at York upon Wednesday after the Nativity of St. John Baptist, June the 26th, to consider of a Subsidy to be Granted there to the King. They met, and gave a ⁴ Subsidy of Twelve Pence in the Mark; and in that led the way to what the Other Province might reasonably have done, tho' they did not think fit to follow their Example.

Upon the 29th of July the King being Return'd to York after his Unfortunate Engagement at Strivelyn, ⁵ called his Parliament thither, September the 9th. The Premunitory Clause was inserted, as usually, into the Bishop's Writs; and readily Obey'd and Executed by them. To prevent any New Misunderstandings here, about a Week before the Parliament was to meet, the King sent a ⁶ Writ to the Archbishop of York, not to put any Affront upon the Archbishop of Canterbury, or do him any Injury upon the account of his Carrying his Cross within the other Province; whereby to hinder the Business that was to be done there.

To secure the Clergies Attendance here, together with his Writs to the Bishops, and the Premunitory Clause inserted into them; the King return'd to what he had done two Years before to Archbishop Winchelsea, and by a Provincial Writ to the Archbishop, Required him to Cause the Parliament Clergy of his Province to Attend upon the Parliament to which they were Summon'd. They met and sate Eighteen Days: Yet in all that time it appears not that either the Clergy or Laity Granted any Subsidy, or came to any Resolution in that Particular.

⁷ Dugd. Sum-
p. 99.

Enforced by this, the King called another ⁷ Parliament to meet at Westminster on the Oftaves of Hilary: And he called it after the very same manner he had done that before; by the Premunientes in the Bishop's Writ, and by a Provincial Writ to the two Archbishops, to bring all the Clergy of their Provinces, so Summon'd, to Parliament. Whether the Archbishop of Canterbury forbore to Execute the King's Provincial Writ for that Parliament at York; Or tho' Executed by him, yet the Clergy of his Province went not to the Parliament which was held out of it, I cannot tell. But tho' ⁸ Dr. A. again mistaking the Meeting, tell us that the Clergy protested in that Parliament at York against the Provincial Mandate of their Metropolitan, 'tis Certain he is deceived: Their ⁹ Protestation was in this Parliament after Hilary; and the true Ground of their Concern was, that they were hereby endeavour'd to be brought to grant their Subsidies there, which they Resolved not to do, but only in Convocation. This I think their Reasons, tho' Colour'd with Other Matters, sufficiently shew; and this I doubt not was at the Bottom of their Zeal for their Ecclesiastical Priviledges.

In the mean time the Laity here Granted the King an Aid, and the ¹⁰ Clergy of the Province of Canterbury, under certain Conditions, did the like. They increas'd their Twentieth before Granted, now into a Tenth; the first Payment to begin the third of May following. As for those of the Other Province, they had given a large Supply before; and even after ¹¹ that the Clergy of York but a little before the Parliament met, had added Two Pence in the Mark, for a farther Aid to it.

To put together now the Business of this Troublesome Year: A Parliament was called after Easter, but no Convocation was Summon'd to meet with it. Two Convocations were held, in June, and July, but no Parliament held near them. A Second Parliament was called at York in September; a Third at Westminster minster in January following, but no Convocation in either Province was Called, or Held, that can be pretended to have had any manner of Relation to them. K. EDWARD the III.

The next Year no Parliament was Summon'd till the middle of October, when Writs were issued out for One to meet at Lincoln, in the Quindene of Hilary, January the 27th. To this the Clergy of both Provinces were Cited after the usual manner, by the Premunitory Clause; which was accordingly Executed by the Bishops. To secure their coming thither, the King again order'd two Provincial Writs to be directed to the Archbishops, as he had done the Year before. But the Archbishop of Canterbury to avoid any more Remonstrances against his Proceedings, took another Course in the Execution of it. He recited not the Words, but the Substance only of the Writ, in his Mandatory Letters to the Bishop of London; yet so as to take Express Notice of the King's Command to Call his Clergy to Lincoln, on the Quindene of Hilary, where the King then intended to hold his Parliament. Nor did he formally Summon them to Parliament, but to appear before himself, in the Cathedral Church, at Lincoln, the Morrow after St. Paul, January the 26th; a Day before the Parliament was to Meet. To such hard Shifts was the Archbishop driven, and so difficult a thing was it for him both to Obey the King, and to keep himself free of the Clamours of his Clergy. Sect. 29. 1315. Dugd. Summ. monit. Parl. p. 101.

But notwithstanding all this Care, the Clergy were resolved not to suffer themselves to be brought to make their Grants in Parliament, and therefore now a New Contrivance was set on Foot, that the Bishop of London should make no Certificate of his Execution of this Mandate; and so the Archbishop's Summons should after all be defeated. ³ Of this the Archbishop makes a Just Complaint in his Mandate for the Convocation which met after Easter the next Year, and to that I refer, for a more full Satisfaction in this Particular. See the Appendix. ad Ann. 1315.

How the Archbishop of York proceeded in this Affair, I cannot tell: His Mandate for Executing the Premunitory Clause is dated November the 21st, and it was one of the last things that he did; for within a Fortnight after he died, December the 6th. Upon his Death the King order'd New-Writs to be sent to the Keepers of the Spiritualities of the Archbishoprick, and to the Deans and Chapters of the Cathedral Church, to put his Writs in Execution, and to come to the Parliament, as they should have done if that Accident had not happened. See the Appendix. ad Ann. 1316. Regist. Greenfield, Parl. II. fol. 32. b. Pryme's Register, Vol. I. p. 152, 153.

In Obedience to this double Summons, tho' apparently design'd for the same End of bringing the Lower Clergy to Parliament; ⁶ double Letters of Procuration were Granted by the Bishop of Lincoln, to the same Person; One directed to the King for his Parliament, the Other to the Archbishop for his Convention; and this Method continued when these Niceties were Overcome, and the Provincial Summons called them in as Express Terms to Parliament, as the Premunitory Clause did. But yet for all this, the Number was but small which appeared there this Year. One Archbishop was dead, and the Other went not to Parliament, but only sent his Proxy: And therefore tho' they Agreed to give the King an Aid, yet was it with this Condition, that a Convocation should be Called in each Province to Consent to it, as we shall see hereafter, it was accordingly done. Memorand. Dalderby, fol. 313. The same was done by the Bishop of Hereford: Register. Swinfield fol. 196.

But I must first stop, and encounter with the Visions and Errors of One, who seldom meddles with any of these Matters, without leaving a great deal of Room for Censure and Correction. In the Execution of the Parliamentary Provincial Writ, ⁷ he tells us, that the Archbishop called not only those specified in the Premunitory Clause, but the Whole Clergy of his Province; and for this he Refers us to Archbishop Reynold's Register, a large Volume, and fit to cover over a great Mistake. But to Observe that first, I dare venture to say, that this Mandate is not to be found in All that Register; at least I am sure, that after a Careful perusal of it, I am in the Condition of another, more diligent ⁸ Person, who, in like manner Professes his Inability to discover it there. This Mandate of the Archbishop he says was dated 15 Kal. Jan. or December the 18th. But indeed it was dated 10 Kal. December; or November the 22d. the Other was the date not of his Provincial Letters, but of his Diocesan Mandate, to the Prior, and Chapter of his Church; the only Record, I doubt, that Dr. A. saw of this matter. Rights, &c. p. 232. Dr. Hody.

EDWARD
the III.

As for the Persons who were Cited to this Meeting, he is mistaken in them too: The Archbishop Called none of the Clergy, but such only as by the King's Provincial Writ he was Expressly Required to do. The Clergy of the Province, who were at the same time Summon'd by the Bishop's Writs to Parliament; Them, and Them only, he called by his Mandate to Lincoln. But this Author's Mistake was this: He saw the Mandate, or rather some Extracts from it, which was sent by the Archbishop to those of his Own Cathedral. In that He followed the Form not of his Own Pramunientes for his single Diocese, but the Provincial Form which he had sent to the Bishop of Lincoln for all the Diocesses of his Province; and in that, and that only, the Difference lay; which indeed had he Understood it, was no difference at all. For it was Necessary for the Archbishop, if he would issue out any Provincial Mandate at all, to Summon'd the WHOLE CLERGY of his Province; but that WHOLE CLERGY was the PARLIAMENTARY, not the CONVOCATION CLERGY: Those who had been wont to be Summon'd by the Pramunientes in the Bishop's Writs to Parliament; not those who were wont to be Called by the Provincial Mandates to Convocation.

But his next Mistake is more inexcusable, because it carries an Air of Assurance, to deceive first, before 'tis Own'd to be All but Conjecture, and that, as I shall shew, an utterly false One too. "The Clergy thus Convened, stood by him (the Archbishop) in what he had done, and made their Excuse for not appearing at the Place the King directed; praying the Archbishop, and his Suffragans, to be Instant with the King that he would not insist on his Summons, but give them the Liberty of declining it. So I gather from a Petition of theirs, said to be made Tempore Edm. II. but without any Date. Whether they carried their Point at this time, I know not. As for the Petition on which this Author builds his New-Discovery, certain it is, that it could not be presented to the Archbishop in this Assembly:

Henr. Prior.
Cant. fol. 168.

For by the King's next Writ it appears that he was not at that time at Lincoln; and his Absence was one Great Reason why the Clergy could not absolutely agree upon the Subsidy which was Required of them.

As for the matter of Fact he is mistaken in that too: The Clergy were there at the Place of Parliament, as much as ever (I believe) they used to be. They were at Lincoln the Place where it was held. There they met with their Bishops, and Treated with them about the Affairs of the Parliament. This was all, as far as I can Observe, that ever they did do; Let Dr. A. shew if he can, that they were wont at any other time to come Personally to either House, and Act together with the Lords, or Commons in Parliament.

In the mean time thus much the King's Writ, for their next Convocation testifies, that being met at Lincoln, and Required to Grant a Subsidy to the King, they did Consent to it; Ita tamen, upon Condition nevertheless that as well they, as Others of the Clergy, qui in dicto PARLIAMENTO presentes non fuerunt, should be Assembled to agree to it. The Clergy then who met at Lincoln were PRESENT IN the PARLIAMENT there, and therefore it must be a vain Conjecture in this Author to talk of their standing by the Archbishop, or making Excuses to the King, or praying for the future, in a Case wherein the King was Obey'd as far as he either desired, or used to be; and had the full End of his Writs answer'd by them. They came to Lincoln where the Parliament was held; They came at the Time that it was held; They came from both Provinces thither; There they debated with their Bishops concerning the Business for which they were Summon'd; They gave their Answer to the King's Demand in Parliament; Whether they did it in Person, before the Lords and Commons, or by their Bishops; Whether they sate in the very Place of the Parliament (the Chapter-House, not far from the Cathedral Church) Or by themselves in One of the Chappels belonging to it, it matters not; Nor would the King, I believe, have ever insisted upon these Points with them.

To Conclude the Affairs of this Year: Here was a Parliament held at Lincoln; To it the Clergy of both Provinces were Called, and Some, at least, of Both Provinces came to it: For the King's Mandate speaks of their being in Parliament; in the same Words, with Relation to the Clergy of York, that it does with Respect to those of the Other Province. Yet for all this, no Convocation was Summon'd with this Parliament. Of this we have a Demonstrative Proof in the Allegation of the Clergy, and their Desire that not only the Parliamentary Clergy, but the Convocational, might be Assembled in their Respective Provinces (as we shall presently see they were) to agree to the Aid with the King had Demanded of them. K. EDWARD the 1st.

And indeed thus far ¹ Dr. A. if he will stand to his Own Concession, seems to Act fairly with us. For tho' by his mentioning these Provincial (Parliamentary) Writs, one would think oftentimes that he meant thereby for a Convocation, as we now Understand that Word; yet Pag. 254. he gives us Once for all the true key by which to interpret all his other doubtful Representations of this matter: ² "Hitherto (Viz. 14th. Edw. III. Anno 1340 ³ Ibid. p. 254. " says he) the Writs for a Convocation (or as for Distinction sake I would rather chuse to Call the Parliament-Meetings of the Clergy, a Convention) went not out only together with those for a Parliament, but were DESIGN'D PURELY to SECOND and INFORCE them, and to be a DOUBLE TIE upon the CLERGY to COME TO PARLIAMENT, being called THITHER both by the Bishop's WRIT, and by a PROVINCIAL CITATION from their Metropolitan. This, I say, is the true Account of these Provincial Writs; They were designed to SECOND and INFORCE the Parliament-Writs; and to be a DOUBLE TIE upon the Clergy to COME TO PARLIAMENT; by adding the Summons of their Metropolitans to their Bishops Citation

Tho' the Parliament at Lincoln were call'd to meet January the 27th, yet they entred not upon Business till ³ Thursday, February the 12th. On Fryday, February the 20th, the Laity Agreed upon a Subsidy to the King. The Clergy had given their Answer before; for on Munday, February the 16th, the King's Writs for the Convocations to meet, were Dated at Lincoln, during the Sitting of the Parliament there: The Inscription of these Writs, upon the ⁴ Roll is this; De Convocatione Cleri fac. ⁴ Rot. Claus. pro SUBSIDIO Regis, &c. So that I hope I may without Offence of any presume to say that these Convocations were Expresly Called to give Money to the King. 9 Edw. II. m. 17. dors.

The Archbishop of Canterbury took the same Course in Executing this ⁵ Convocation Writ, that he had used in the Execution of the Parliament Writ before. He inserted not the Words of it into his Mandate, but ⁶ Proposed it after his Own manner, and called it by his Own Authority: But he called it at the very Time, and to the same Place, which the King by his Writ had prescribed to him. And so did the ⁷ Guardians of the Spiritualities of the Archbishoprick of York in like manner; to whom the King sent the very same Writs, only with this difference, that the Clergy of Canterbury were to meet at London the Wednesday fortnight after Easter; Those of the Other Province at York, a Month after Easter Day. Sect. 30. 1316. ⁵ Claus. ut supr. See the Appendix ad Ann. 1316. ⁶ See the Appendix. Ibid. ⁷ Regist. Decan. & Capit. Ebor. Custod. Spir. sed. Vacant. fol. 135. ⁸ Ibid.

In the ⁸ Province of York, the Clergy either met not at the Time appointed, or they comply'd not with the King's Desires. For which Reason they were Summon'd to meet again soon after, viz. the morrow after Trinity; but what they did, I am not able certainly to say. The Archbishop of Canterbury having Order'd a Provincial Council to meet at London the Sunday next after the Octaves of Michaelmas, the King by his ⁹ Letters dated at York the 1st of October, earnestly Pressed the Archbishop to move his Clergy to give some Effectual Supply to him. These he followed with ¹⁰ New Letters, not only to the Archbishop himself, but to all the Bishops of the Province, and to the chief of the Abbots and Priors; three days after. By this Conduct he Obtain'd his Desires of them: ¹¹ They Granted him a Tenth to be paid One half at the Purification, this Year, and the Remainder on the same Day the Year following. ⁹ Claus. 10 E. II. m. 25 dors. ¹⁰ Ibid. See Regist. Winchelsea, fol. lxxiv. b. ¹¹ Registr. Winchelsea, fol. lxxv. a. Claus. 10 Edw. 2. m. 19.

Having had this Success in One Province, he immediately issued out his ¹² Writ for a Convocation to be held within fifteen Days after the date of it, in the Other. This Writ was in French, and given under the King's Privy Seal: It was dated the 11th of October, and the Convocation was Summon'd, in Obedience to it, to be held the Morrow after the Translation of St. Jo. Beverly, October the 26th. But tho' it was call'd then, yet either the Clergy came not so soon, or they did not presently agree on a Subsidy; for they Granted not their Tenth till ¹³ St. Clement's Day, November the 23^d, as by the Commission for Collecting of it, dated, December the 15th following does appear. ¹² Regist. Jo. de Halton. Episc. Carleol. fol. 189. Et Regist. Decan. & Capit. Ebor. Sed. Vac. fol. 136, 137. ¹³ Ibid. Regist. Dec. &c. Ebor. fol. 86. ¹⁴ Registr. Winchelsea, fol. lxxvii. lxxviii. See them in Spelm. Council. Vol II p. 483.

The King having received this Bounty from his Clergy, the very next Day, November the 24th, passed the Articuli Cleri, to which the Answers had been given in the Parliament at Lincoln, and were now confirm'd in the way of a Charter by him.

But tho' so many Convocations met this Year, yet was there no Parliament to Accompany them: That was held without them the Year before, as these now without any Parliament, on which to Attend, this Year. ¹ Mr. Prynne does indeed make mention of a Parliament, or Great Council, which met this Year at Lincoln, July the 29th, and continued to August the 10th. Which ever it were, it makes nothing to the Advantage of those who set up for Concomitant-Convocations; that a Parliament met, and rose, Eight Weeks before the Synod of One Province began, and Eleven before the Convocation of the Other was Assembled.

Anno 1317. The Pope's Legates being come into England, the King was desirous to hold a ² Great Council at Nottingham, to deliberate with his Lords concerning the Business which they were sent about, and some other Difficult Affairs of the Realm. This was order'd to meet July the 18th, by *Writ*s dated the first of the same Month.

The Pope had Assign'd to the King a part of the Tenth imposed upon the Clergy by the Council of Vienne for the Use of the Holy Land, and sent his ³ Bull to the Archbishop of Canterbury for that Purpose. He also took part with Him against the Scots, against whom they brought their Bulls with them, if they Refused to accept of such Reasonable Offers as should be made to them. For these, and some other Affairs his Legates were now sent over hither; but the King had a farther Design in hand to Pleasure the Clergy by obtaining a Moderation of the Decree against Pluralities, for which He ⁴ wrote this Year to the Pope and Cardinals.

In the Quindene of Hilary, January the 27th, another Parliament was call'd to meet at ⁵ Lincoln; but by Other *Writ*s dated the 4th of the same Month, was Prorogued to the 1st Sunday in Lent. Then it was farther put off to the Morrow after Trinity, when the Scots invading England, the King utterly Revoked it, without ever Assembling of it at all.

About a fortnight before the Second of these Sessions, ⁶ February the 23d, the Archbishop of Canterbury called his Provincial Convocation to meet in London; and this perhaps Dr. A. will tell us was design'd for an Attendant upon the Parliament which should have met at Lincoln, March the 8th, but then it must be consider'd that had that Parliament sate; the Convocation must necessarily have Risen before it met, that so both the Bishops, and Prelates, and Clergy, might have been at liberty to go to it. That any Convocation met about the same time at York I cannot find: nor, indeed, do I believe that any was held there till the latter End of the Year following.

The Prorogation of one of those Sessions to the Morrow after Trinity being made ad Requisitionem Pralatorum, & Cleri Regni nostri, ⁷ Dr. A. infers, that the Parliament was then Sitting, and the Clergy sitting in it, and he brings it as a Proof of their coming to Parliament at that time. The thing I dispute not, on the contrary I agree with Him that the Clergy did come in those Days, to Parliament. But his Argument is not Good: The former Prorogation was made from four Days after Hilary, January the 27th, to this 1st Sunday in Lent, ad Requisitionem Pralatorum dicti Regni: The Writ, by which it was done, is dated January the 4th. Will Dr. A. conclude that the Prelates were therefore sitting at that time in Parliament, twenty three Days before the Parliament was to Sit? This latter was made in like manner ad Requisitionem Pralatorum & Cleri: But the Writ bears date March the 3d, and the 1st Sunday in Lent was not that Year till March the 8th. Let Dr. A. tell us how they came to be Sitting in Parliament, five Days before the Parliament was Open'd. To defend a Truth by such Proofs as these, is to Weaken, not Confirm the Point which is design'd to be proved or strengthened by them: And for the Truths sake, it was therefore Necessary to make this short Reflection upon his present Erroneous Allegation.

But I go on to the next Year, in which the Parliament met at ⁸ York Three Weeks after Michaelmas: In this Parliament the Archbishop of York promised the King that he would call a ⁹ Convocation at York on the Octaves of Hilary, in Order to the getting an Aid of the Clergy of his Province for Him. The Archbishop of Canterbury not being at that Parliament, and the Prelates who were present Excusing themselves from Granting any Subsidy to the King in the Absence of their Metropolitan, the King Required the Archbishop to call a Con- convocation of his Province the Day after the Purification, at London, to Treat of, and Consent to, a Subsidy on his behalf. This is the Sense, if not the very Words of the King's Writ, and it plainly Confirms these two Material Points in this Debate; 1st. That there was no Convocation of either Province held with the Parliament at York; and 2^{dly}. That the Convocations afterwards to be held, were called purely upon a Money Account, to Grant the King a Subsidy against the Scots.

The Archbishop of York kept his Word with the King: ¹ He called his Clergy to Convocation, on the Octaves of Hilary, and freely own'd the Supply of the King's Wants to have been the Occasion, and End of it. The Appearance of the Clergy being but small at that time, nothing was Resolved upon by them; but a ² Second Convocation was Summon'd for the same Business to meet at York the Munday next after Sunday in Midlent. What the Result of that Meeting was I have not found; but either there, or in the Parliament which was held after Easter, the beginning of the next Year, a Tenth was Granted to the King by them. This is plain, that tho' the Parliament met at York, and Two Convocations were held at the same place, this Year, yet they met at different Times, and so put the Doctrine of ATTENDANCE quite out of Doors.

Whether the King dropt his Order for the Convocation in the Other Province; or whether being met it did nothing, I cannot tell; but this we know, that they met for that purpose at London the beginning of the next Year; on the ³ Fryday after the Octaves of Easter, April the 20th. In this Convocation the King demanded a Subsidy of the Clergy against the Scots, who were come into England, and in Rebellion against the Roman Sea; but the Prelates would not grant any thing till they had asked the Pope's leave. ⁴ To Obtain this they sent Adam de Murimuth, at the King's Charge, to his Holiness; who thereupon Consented to their Granting of a Years Tenth to him. This Account I take from the Person himself who went on this Errand, and the Instruments relating to it are still extant in the Register of ⁵ Stephen Gravesend, who was then Bishop of London.

About a fortnight after this Convocation, ⁶ a Parliament was held at York, about May the 6th. To this the Clergy were called by the Premunitory Clause in the Bishop's Writ; which the Archbishop, and Bishops, not only Executed, but ⁷ Proxies were Granted by the Clergy of this Province thereupon, to appear in their Names there. The Archbishop of York had a ⁸ Provincial Writ to the same purpose, which he Executed: Whether the Archbishop of Canterbury proceeded in like manner in his Province, I am not able to say; but no such Writ to him appears either in the Clause Rolls, or in any Registers of the Province which I have yet Examined. In this Parliament the King had a Subsidy of the Laity; and either ⁹ here, or in Convocation at Midlent before, a Tenth from the Clergy of the Province of York.

The Messenger sent by the Clergy of Canterbury to the Pope made such quick dispatch, and had such good Success in his Business, that a ¹⁰ Bull was dated at Avignon for the Granting of their Tenth, May the 29th. But the King's Necessities called for an Advance of Money before the times on which he was to Receive it: This therefore he desired by particular ¹¹ Letters, and the more to Oblige the Clergy, who complained that they were Taxed, not only to their Own Tenth, but to the Twelfth, and Eighteenth Granted in Parliament, issued out his Letters to forbid the Collectors to Assess, or Receive, any thing to those Aids, out of such Profits of which they paid the Tenth which the Pope had imposed upon them.

To clear this Matter, I must observe that when the Twelfth, and Eighteenth were Granted in the Parliament at York, at which both the ¹² Prelates and Clergy of Canterbury were present; they caused this Condition to be inserted into the Grant, as far as they were concern'd in it, that if the Pope imposed a Tenth upon them, for which they had sent (as we have seen) to him, then they should not be obliged to pay to those Aids, out of such Goods of which they were wont to give their Tenths to the King. The Pope therefore having done this, they were to be Excused the Other, by Vertue of that Proviso; and accordingly they had the King's Writ to defend them against that double Payment to which they would otherwise have been Exposed.

Hitherto then the Clergy not only Came to Parliament, but Consented to the Subsidies which passed with Relation to themselves there. On the Octaves of Hilary, another Parliament met at York; but without any Premunitory Summons of the Clergy to it. So that here now we have again a full Distinction of all these Meetings, and a new Evidence of their Independence upon One another. The Convocation of York met in Midlent; the Convocation of Canterbury about a fortnight after Easter; and the Parliament at York, a fortnight after that; when neither of these Convocations were sitting. The Clergy both met, and acted, as we have seen, distinctly in Each of these Assemblies. The Parliament after Hilary, had no Convocation near it, in Either Province. The Clergy of York, gave their Tenth first, and freely: Those of Canterbury followed, at the Pope's Direction. And in all this, so contrary is the matter of Fact to Dr. A's Scheme, that 'tis impossible to Reconcile the One with the Other.

Sect. 34.

As for the next Year a ¹ Parliament was held at Westminster upon Munday, in the Octaves of Michaelmas. The Pope gave the King another ² Tenth upon the Clergy, but of any Convocation that fate this Year, I have met with no Account.

1321.

Anno 1321. A Parliament was Summon'd to meet at London, ³ Three Weeks after Midsummer, July the 15th. To this the Clergy were called by the Premunitory Clause, and a ⁴ Provincial Writ was issued out to the Archbishop of Canterbury, Requiring him to Summon the Clergy of his Province to it. This Parliament being held in the Province of Canterbury, no Provincial Writ, that I can find, was sent to the Archbishop of York, to Cite his Clergy to it. As two Years before 1319. none was sent to the Archbishop of Canterbury, when the Parliament was to meet at York. The Archbishop, being thus Required by the King, Obey'd, and Summon'd the Clergy by his Provincial Mandate to Parliament; and the Bishops of the Province Executed both the King's Writ, and the Archbishop's Precept, to that Purpose. Thus Henry Burghersh, Bishop of Lincoln, by his ⁵ Orders dated May the 30th, Called his Clergy to this Parliament, in pursuance of the Premunientes; and by ⁶ Second Orders of June the 11th following, Executed the Archbishop's Provincial Citation of them to the same Parliament.

With this Parliament no Convocation of either Province met: In December following the Archbishop of Canterbury Summon'd a Provincial Council; and in the ⁸ Second Volume of our Councils, we meet with several Constitutions pretended to have been made in it, which yet it is plain were drawn up, at least in the Form in which they there stand, many Years after, in the time of Archbishop Stratford. But the main thing to be Consider'd in this Council is the Resolution of the Bishops and Prelates, who declar'd the Act of the Parliament Preceding, in the Banishment of the Spencers, ⁹ Null, and Void in Law, because it was done without their Consent, who as Peers of Parliament ought to have Concurr'd in it; and the next Parliament, both Re-cited, and Allow'd, of what they had done. In the Writ of Summons for this Council, there are some things very particular, which do not Occur in any Other Forms. I shall therefore instead of Observing them here, take the shorter Course of inserting the Mandate its self into the ¹⁰ Appendix, and there leave it to such are minded to reflect upon them.

Thus passed this Year; but I must not go on to the next without taking Notice of a Remark which Dr. A. seems to have been fond of, and in which he is, nevertheless, more than one Way, utterly Mistaken. I will set it down in his own Words. "Now then, tho' the Premunientes was obey'd Nationally, yet the Clergy that met with the Parliament, acted Provincially; that is, the Clergy of that Province where the Parliament was held, acted as a Synod Convened by their Metropolitan; and the Clergy of the other Province sent their Deputies to the Lay-Assembly to consent for them; but taxed

“taxed themselves, and did all manner of Ecclesiastical Business at home in their Own Province. For Proof of this, he alledges this Instance, and the only One it is on which he founds this Material Observation: “Thus in the Instance before given, Anno 1321. The Clergy of York Province (where the Parliament was held) are only said to have made their Grant in Parliament. But the Clergy of Canterbury Province are not said to have Granted in Parliament, tho’ they met AT THE SAME TIME Provincially, and Consented to the Grant of a Tenth which the Pope had imposed upon them. This is an Instance, which he no less then four several Times insists upon; and twice for the Proof of this very thing; and yet in the whole he betrays an Utter Ignorance of the Truth of that Matter.”

Ibid. p. 233,

In the Year 1319. (for in that Year it was, not in the Year 1321.) the Convocation of Canterbury met upon the Fryday after the Octaves of Easter; but would not Grant the King a Tenth, unless the Pope Consented to it. The Convocation being Risen, and a Messenger sent to Avignon, at the King’s Charge, for the Pope’s Allowance of their Subsidy; the Parliament met at York about a fortnight after: There the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses Agreed to a Subsidy of an xviiith; of all the Lay-Lands, and Possessions of the Realm. The Clergy had at this time a double sort of Rents, and were taxed after a double manner for them. Their Lay-Fees, but especially those of a latter Title, were Asses’d in Common with those of the Laity in Parliament, and there they Agreed with the Laity to the Imposition that was laid upon them. Their Antient Demeans, but especially their Spiritualities, the States in Parliament medled not withal: Those the Clergy themselves Asses’d; and that commonly in their Own Separate Convocations.

This was the Case in the Instance before us: The Clergy of the Province of Canterbury now Assembled in Parliament at York, had in their Convocation a fortnight before at London, agreed to give the King a Tenth, if the Pope Imposed it, and sent a Messenger to him for that Purpose. In Parliament they Consented to the Lay-Tax; but having Reason to believe that the Pope would grant the King the Tenth, which he desired, upon them; they Guarded this Grant in Parliament with this Proviso, that if he did Charge them with such a Tenth, then they should not be Obligated to pay the xith and xviiith out of such Lands and Tenements for which they should be Rated to that Tenth, and out of which they were wont to pay to it. This is the truth of the Case as far as the Province of Canterbury was Concern’d in it.

As for the Clergy of York, Two Convocations had been held for the like Subsidy in that Province: One after Hilary; the Other about Midlent. In this latter I take their Tenth to have been granted to the King; not in the Parliament, as Dr. A. without any Good Warrant from the Writ which he refers to, Reports. That Writ was dated July the 19th, after all these Meetings were over. It recites to the Archbishop of Canterbury, how that by his Advice (who therefore was it seems at Parliament) “and by the Advice of his whole Parliament, it was concluded that he should advance with an Army against the Scots. That this being not to be done without a great Expence, a Tenth of the Clergy of York, an Eighteenth of the Goods of the Community, and a Twelfth of the Cities and Burroughs had been Granted to him; and that the Pope had more-over given him a Tenth upon the Clergy of Canterbury. The rest of the Writ is to get a present Advance of Money hereupon, and is not material to our present purpose.”

Vid. Regist.
Henr. Prior.
Cant. fol. 210.

This is the Recital; and it takes in the several Grants in Order as they were made; but determines not either, when, or where, they were made. First the Clergy of York gave a Tenth (as I suppose in their Convocation of Midlent:) Next the Laity, their Subsidy; in the Parliament of York: And lastly, the Pope his Tenth; according to the desire of the Clergy of Canterbury, in their Convocation after Easter. And all this according to the Usage of those times; which was for the Clergy to tax their Own Spiritualities, not in Parliament, but in Convocation; by themselves, and in a full Meeting of the Province. But what is there in all this to favour Dr. A’s Principles? * “That the Parliament Clergy of the Province where that Great Council met, acted as a Synod? A thing utterly false; and never to be made out by any One Instance to be true. * That the Clergy of the Other Province, came not to it themselves selves, but sent their Proctors to Act for them: Which sometimes they did, and sometimes they did not; as it fell out for their Convenience, or not, to do it. * " That the Clergy of the Province of Canterbury (in this Instance)

" granted not in Parliament: Whereas with Reference to their Lay-Fees, 'tis evident they did grant there; and for their Others, neither did the Other Province Grant in Parliament any more then they; at least it does not yet appear that they did. * " That the Clergy of Canterbury met at the same time
" Provincially. Whereas 'tis plain that they met twelve Days before; and the same Persons, (as the Archbishop particularly) sate in both. * " That " there they consented to a Tenth which the Pope had imposed upon them; When, on the Contrary, they would not Grant a Tenth without the Pope's Consent, but Agreed to One upon that Supposition, and delegated One of their Body to go to him, for his Allowance and Confirmation. All these Errors has this Author committed in this One Instance; which at last amounts to nothing more than this, which directly overthrows his Pretences; * That the Clergy of each Province, met separately, by themselves, in Convocation; * Whereas they came All together, Nationally, to Parliament. * That the Parliament, and Convocation, sate Severally from One another, without any Dependance of the One upon the Other: * That they Taxed their Lay-Estates all together, in Common, with the Laitie in Parliament; but severally, and by themselves, Assess'd their Own Spiritualities, Provincially, in Convocation. In short, * That the Province of York had no Dependance on that of Canterbury, but freely Granted a Tenth by their Own Authority, at the same time that the Other Province would not do it without the Pope's Imposition.

But I proceed to the next Year, where we shall farther see the Falseness of Dr. A's Principles, as we have now done the Weakness of the Proofs by which he endeavours to support them. The beginning of this Year the War of Scotland continuing, and the King's Necessities being encreased thereby, another ¹ Parliament was called to meet at York, three Weeks after Easter. To this the Clergy were again Summon'd both by the Præmunientes in the Bishop's Writ, and by a Provincial ² Writ to the Archbishop, as before. This the Archbishop Executed on his Suffragans; they on their Inferiour Clergy. Before the Session of this Parliament began, the King by Another ³ Letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury prepared the minds of the Clergy to comply with his Necessities; the Effect of which was such as he desired it might be.

Being thus Summon'd to Parliament, the ⁴ Archbishop of Canterbury the Bishops of Norwich, Exeter, Chichester, Bath and Wells, Bangor, St. Asaph, Ely, Worcester, Rochester, and Lincoln, went all in Person out of our Province to it. The Clergy of most of their Diocesses were there also; and (to the utter Ruine of Dr. A's Hypothesis) they there agreed to a Subsidy of five Pence per Mark, out of their Spiritualities, with this Condition; that a Convocation should be Called, as soon as Conveniently it could be done, within the Province, to confirm the Grant which those who were at the Parliament had, as much as in them lay, made of it. This, I hope, will fully satisfy this Author, that the Clergy not only went to the Parliament out of their Province, but sometimes gave Subsidies there too; and only Reserved the Confirmation of them to the fuller Body of the Provincial Convocation; in which it was now become the Usual, as it was indeed the most Reasonable method, to determine of such Matters. In pursuance of this Agreement, the Convocation was ⁵ Assembled soon after, on the Wednesday after Trinity Sunday: It met intirely about this Affair; insomuch that the ⁶ Non-Exempt Clergy of Lincoln giving their Consent at Home, to the Subsidy which had been before Granted, were thereby Excused from the Trouble of coming at all to it.

The ⁷ Clergy of York were before-hand with our Province in this matter. They met in Convocation there the Munday seven-night after the Parliament began, May the 10th; and that expressly for this End, to grant a Subsidy to the King; as the Mandate for their Assembling shews.

Upon the Sunday after St. Martin, November the 14th, another ⁸ Parliament was called, to meet at Rippon, but held at York. To this the Clergy were not called, either by the Diocesan or Provincial Writs; tho' the Commons were, as their Writs for their Expences shew. In this Parliament the Laitie Granted a large Aid to the King; a Tenth of the Community, and a Sixth of the Cities

Cities and Burroughs. The very last day of this Parliament (to convince Dr. K. EDWARD A. that no Convocation of either Province met with it) the King issued ^{the 11d.} out his ¹ Writs, for both the Convocations to meet; the One at Lincoln, the ¹⁶ Rot. Claus. Other at York, with all convenient speed. In these the King Avows his ¹⁶ Edw. II. m. End in Calling them, to be to get a Supply from them; which he therefore ^{20.} dors. App. presses them with all Earnestness to grant to him. But having given an Aid ^{pend. ad Ann.} but just before, and the Two Years Tenth Granted by the Pope being still ^{1322.} Running on, they desired to be Excused from obliging themselves to any more at that time.

This was the Resolution of our Clergy in their Convocation at ² Lincoln ^{Vid. Append.} the Morrow after Hilary, January the 14th. And the same was the Answer ^{ad Ann.} of the Other ³ Province in theirs at York, January the 26th. In the mean ³ Registrum. while, here we see plainly two Parliaments held, and three Convocations; all ^{Melton. fol.} at different times from One Another; and without any Dependence in their ^{462.} Meeting upon Each Other. The Design of these Convocations, is declar'd to be for Aid to the King; which I hope may serve to justify my Assertion, that this was the great End for which our Kings Called these Meetings; and the main Use which they made of them, being Assembled.

I cannot conclude this Year without Observing ⁴ that Walsingham speaks ⁴ Wals. p. 119. of a Third Parliament which met this Year in Lent; and in which he tells us many things were done. If this were so, here is another Parliament without any Convocation, that I know of, in Either Province to Attend upon it.

The Year following, 1323. the King Summon'd A Council of his Lay- ^{Seal. 36.} Lords at Westminster on the Octaves of Hilary. He had held a ^{1323.} Great Coun- ⁵ Mc. Lam- cil at Nottingham, in November, where it was Resolved to call, not a Par- ^{bet h. Num.} liament, but a separate Meeting of the Barons, and a Convocation of the Cler- ^{cclxxxv. fol.} gy of Either Province: The Lay-Convention to meet at Westminster; ⁶ the ^{57. b. Vid.} Convocation of One Province at York; of the Other at St. Pauls London; ^{Append. ad} and All upon the same Day, the Octaves of Hilary. What the Design of ⁶ Rot. Claus. these several Assemblies was, the Writs speak not: They only mention in ¹⁷ Edw. II. m. General, quadam pro decore S. Ecclesie Statuq; & Honore Regni; Concerning ^{31. dors. Ap-} which the King wanted their Help and Assent, and that they should shew ^{pendix.} themselves Ready and Willing to help him.

But be the Design what it will, it was soon laid aside, and a new ⁷ Re- ⁷ Rot. Claus. solution taken. For by Writs dated December the 26th, both the Lay-Con- ¹⁷ Edw. II. m. vention, and the Two Convocations of the Clergy were intirely Suspended, and ^{27. dors.} a Parliament Summon'd in their stead to meet Three Weeks after the Puri- ⁸ Regist. Henr. fication. The Archbishops who had Called these Convocations at the King's ^{Prior. Cant. fol.} Command, ⁸ the One to meet at London, on the Octaves of Hilary, the ^{234. Vid.} Day which the King had prescribed, the Other at ⁹ York the Tuesday after ^{Append.} the Purification; again Obey'd in the ¹⁰ Suspension of them.

It was now grown the Custom to Call the Clergy to Parliament by two ⁹ Regist. Mel- ^{ton. fol. 464.} Provincial Writs, as well as by the several Diocesan Summons. And the ¹⁰ Regist. Bur- ^{ghersh. Lincoln.} Clergy were so well used to it, that the King's Writ gave them no Offence, ^{fol. 117. Re-} tho' it were intirely inserted into the Archbishop's Mandate. What was done ^{gist. Melton.} in this Parliament, which sate about Three Weeks, ^{fol. 464. Vid.} Our Historians par- ^{Append.} ticularly inform us: To them I refer the Reader. It is enough that here ¹¹ Prynne's Re- ^{gist. Vol. I. p.} again we have a full Parliament Called, and no Convocation with it; but on the ^{98. Registrum.} contrary, the Convocations called by the King's Order were prohibited to meet, ^{Reynolds, fol.} because that the Parliament was about the same time to be Assembled. ^{235, 236. Ap-}

From this true Account of the Affairs of this Year, it will now be easy ^{pendix. ad} to Rectify the multitude of Errors, which for want of attending to the Truth ^{Ann. 1323.} of these Matters, Dr. A. has fallen into, and built some very Extravagant ¹² Angl. S. Notions upon them. ^{Vol. I. 364.}

¹³ He tells us, "that when the Archbishop Summon'd (the Clergy) in ^{Walsingham,} "Obedience to the King's Provincial Parliament Writ; He did not only do ^{p. 121, 506.} "always just what that Writ Exacted, and no more, but took Occasion some- ^{Adam Muri-} "times from thence, to Cite All those Abbots and Priors, who had no Place ^{muth. Mc.} "in Parliament, in Order to Compleat the Numbers of the Clergy, and ¹³ Rights, &c. "form a Provincial Assembly. Upon this Fundamental Error, he Runs into ^{p. 255.} a great many more Consequential Mistakes, to the End of this Paragraph, which is a piece of Entire Fancy, without either Truth, or Ground on which to

K EDWARD build them. For indeed the Archbishop did no such thing : When He Executed the King's Writs, he did it according to the Letter of them, and Summon'd no Other Persons but what the King Called to Parliament. If he thought fit to hold a Council, at the same time, it was by Other Mandates that he held it; not in the Execution of the King's Writs.

But we will Examine his Proof of this New Assertion. " Thus Anno 1323. when the Parliament met in ¹ Octab. Hilarij, and the Pramunientes went out (for the Writ has it whereby that Parliament was Prorogued) the Archbishop at the King's Instance, Expressed in his Second Writ with the Clause Nos Nolentes (a Copy of which for the Prorogation of this Parliament, is in ² Regist. Henr. Prynn. Vol. I. pag. 98.) Summon'd not the ² Parliament Clergy alone, but All such as Composed a Provincial Council.

1. What a heap of Mistakes are here Crowded together into a very few Lines? " When the Parliament met in Octab. Hilarij. Will this Author give me leave to tell him in the first place, that that Convocation never met at all; but was by Writs dated December the 26th, above three Weeks before the time it should have met, intirely put off.

2. Again, The Convention called to meet at Hilary, was no Parliament. Let ³ Dr. A. look again into the Writ of Summons to which he Refers : He will see it was only an Assembly of the Lay-Barons, who were designed to have been then Convened.

3. By Consequence, 3dly. There was no Pramunientes went forth with those Writs : The Writs to the Temporality, to be sure had it not. Those to the Spirituality, were meerly for a Convocation; and to let him see that there was no Pramunientes in them, He may please in the Appendix to take a View of the very Writ by which they were Called.

4thly. This Parliament, never Summon'd but in this Authors Fancy, was by Consequence not Prorogued neither, to Three Weeks after the Purification : But the King, who designed to have had three distinct Assemblies of the Temporality, the Clergy of Canterbury, and the Clergy of York; at Westminster, London, and York; thought it better to Unite them all together into One Parliament, at the time before-mentioned; and therefore Suspended altogether their Separate Meetings, and Required them to Assemble in One Common Council.

For the same Reason, 5thly. There was no Clause of Nos Nolentes; issued out for that First Meeting after Hilary : It was called by another sort of Writ; in which that Clause neither had, nor could have had any Room.

In short, 6thly. The King Order'd the Two Archbishops to call their Provincial Clergy together. They did so, and therein Literally Obey'd the very Words of the King's Writ; which was not, as He imagines, for a Parliamentary Convention, but for a Separate Provincial Convocation.

Dr. A. having upon Occasion observ'd a great many Mistakes (as he thinks) of mine, in a few Lines, which shall hereafter be Consider'd, concludes with this Generous Challenge on my behalf : " ⁴ I defy any Man to make MORE Mistakes, in So few Words, As Dr. W. has done. A Critick in Words, would have said, THAN Dr. W. has done. But that is not material. I ought in Justice to give him the Precedency in this, who is so Ambitious of it in all other Respects; and shall therefore submit it to the Reader, to judge whether there be not a Man in the World, whom he ought to know (tho' I fear He never will know Him) that can Commit as many Mistakes, in as few Words, as 'tis possible for Dr. W. with all his Ignorance, and Ill-luck too, to do.

The next Year affords but little to Our present Purpose : ⁵ Three Weeks after Michaelmas a Parliament was called to Sarum; Whether held there, I cannot tell. If Mr. Prynn has been exact, the Writs of Expences for the Knights who came to it, mention Westminster as the Place of its Assembly. None of the Lesser Clergy were called to it, nor does it appear that any besides the Bishops were at it. Two Other Great Councils were held this same Year : ⁶ One to meet at Winchester the Second Sunday in Lent; the other at Westminster, on the Octaves of Easter. The former met not, but was Adjourn'd to the Latter; Whether that assembled, I cannot tell. As for Ecclesiastical Synods, I meet with none this Year of any kind, and shall therefore pass on, without more delay to the next.

In this, a Parliament occurs on the ¹ Morrow after St. John Baptist: The Bishops with the Parliamentary Abbots and Priors, were Summon'd to it, but no Clause for the Lower Clergy to come with them. But that was Supplied in the Other Parliament of this Year; which was held at Westminster in the ² Octaves of St. Martin, November the 18th, and sate about a fortnight. To this the Church of ³ Lincoln sent its Proctors, with three several kinds of Procuratorial Letters; the Entry of which is thus made, That of these One was more Restrained, et Si Utendum: To be insisted upon, and only Used if it might be. The Other was Aliquantulum Restrictum, but not like the former, and to be Used, Si de alio non Possit Evadi. The third was more General, but by no means to be Used, nisi in Causa valde necessaria. The Difference consisted in these Words, after the Empowring Clause, which enabled them to Consent in their Names, to what should be ordained in Parliament; "Quatenus ad Ea facienda de jure artari poterimus, & debemus. Proviso quod iidem Procuratores, vel Eorum Alter, nulli contributioni facienda, Nobis consentiant, vel consentiat, Inconsultis. The first Proxy had both these Limitations: The Second only the latter of them: The third had neither.

This may be of Use to shew, what it was that made the Clergy so uneasy in their going to Parliament; and withal prove, that hitherto, they did not only Return their Proctors thither, but that their Proctors also went and Acted on their behalf there.

I observe only this One thing more, in this Year; That tho' here was an unquestionable Parliament Assembled, yet no Convocation in either Province met with it; or, in Dr. A's New Phrase, ATTENDED UPON it.

We are now come to the last Year of that Unfortunate Prince King Edward the Second, in which much Business was done, but of little Concernment to Our present Debate. The Archbishop had for some Affairs Relating to the Church, and in Obedience to the Pope's Command, called a Council of his Province to meet fifteen Days after Michaelmas. The King designing at the same time to hold a Great Council at Stamford, ⁴ Commanded the Archbishop to put off his Synod, that it might not interfere with that intended Meeting. The Archbishop accordingly Prorogued his Council, to the next day after All-Souls, November the 3d. Whether it met then, I cannot tell: In the Margin of the Archbishop's Register there is set an Alia Prorogatio; but the Instrument to which it refers has nothing to that Purpose. About the latter End of December, ⁵ the Archbishop called his Provincial Council to meet at London the Fryday next after Hilary, January the 17th. This was held purely upon an Ecclesiastical Account; The Summons has somewhat very particular in it, and may for that Reason deserve the place which I shall give it, accordingly, in my Appendix.

In this Interval a Parliament was called to meet fifteen Days after ⁶ St. Andrew the middle of December; and from thence was Prorogued, to the Morrow after Epiphany, January the 7th. All was now in Confusion: Nothing done after a Regular or Orderly manner. Yet amidst all this Confusion, this may be Observed, that with neither of these Parliaments was any Convocation Summon'd; nor did any meet in either Province.

That the Lower Clergy were not only still Summon'd, but continued upon that Summons to go to Parliament, we have such clear Proofs from the Authentick Instruments relating to this present Parliament, that it may not be amiss to take some notice of them. The Archbishop of Canterbury (as we have seen) gave but a very short notice to his Suffragans for the calling of the Provincial Council, which I have said was held at London the Fryday after Hilary.

⁷ The Proctors for the Diocese of Lincoln were already chosen, and deputed to Parliament; and the Bishop thought it a Grievance to his Clergy to Assemble again upon such short Warning. But yet considering that their Labour and Charge might much be eased if instead of chusing New Proctors, they sent Powers and Instructions to the Proctors already order'd to Parliament, to act for them in the Council, He proceeded to the Execution of it. Now as this shews that the Lower Clergy of that Diocese appear'd still in Parliament; so have we another Authentick Record to prove, that those of Lichfield did likewise. In one of whose ⁸ Registers belonging to the Cathedral, I find this Minute entred; iii Kal. January 1326. "It was Agreed by the Chapter of Lichfield that Mr.

K. EDWARD ^{the III.} "John Clarel Proctor of the Chapter in the Parliament at London, shall have allowance of the Days from the Beginning of the Parliament, till the Clergy shall be Licensed to depart; — And the Parliament began the Morrow after Epiphany; 1326. What was done in these two large Dioceses, we may justly conclude was done in All the Others: And the Procuratorial Letters filed in Parliament, and lately discover'd in several Bundles in the Tower, sufficiently shew, that they did continue many Years after this to Assemble, not in two imaginary Convocations (as Dr. A. pretends) but in One National Body with the Other Estates, in Parliament.

And now to sum up the whole of this Reign: From what has been said, it appears; * That the Clergy hitherto continued not only to be Summon'd to Parliament, but actually to come to it, and do Business in it. * That to this they were called sometimes by the Premunientes only, sometimes by that Clause, enforced by Provincial Parliamentary Writs, to the Archbishop of each Province. * That by these Writs, the same Persons were Summon'd, and that to the same Assembly, and for the same Purpose, that they were by the Premunitory Clause to the Bishops; * Nor did the Archbishop in the Execution of them, ever Call any Other Persons, but the Parliamentary Clergy only, to meet in Obedience to the King's Command. * That however the Clergy, at first, Remonstrated against their being Summon'd, after this manner, by the Archbishops to Parliament, yet before the End of this Reign, they freely submitted to it, and made no more Exceptions against it. * That during this whole Period, it does not appear that the Provincial Convocations of the Clergy were either wont to be held at the same time with the Parliament, or otherwise looked upon as any ATTENDANTS upon it. * That sometimes there were Convocations in the same Year, and often none; in which nevertheless One, or More Parliaments, were held. * When there were Assemblies of Both Kinds in the same Year, sometimes they met near to, but oftner at a Greater Distance from the Parliament, but NOT ONCE hitherto CONCURRENTLY WITH IT. In a Word, * That the avow'd Design, and End of the King, in Desiring, or Ordering the Assembling of these Convocations, was to Obtain Supplies of the Clergy: For this they met, and little more than this was done by them, when they came together. Let us see how these things stood in the long Reign of his Son.

King EDWARD the III.

1327.

This young King was scarce well settled in his Government, before the Scots began to give him a Disturbance upon the Borders. Having spent the Summer in his Engagements against them, and wasted his Treasure, he was forced to Assemble a Parliament at ¹ Lincoln for New Supplies: This he Order'd to meet there September the 15th: And to bring the Clergy the better to it, He not only Cited them by the Premunientes in the Bishop's Writs, but pursued the Custom which his Father had begun, of Calling them by two Provincial Parliament Writs, directed to the Archbishops, for their several Provinces.

² Regist. Reynolds, fol. 207. Tho' these Writs were Executed by both the ² Archbishops; yet the Clergy came but in a small Number to the Parliament. Those ³ of York alledged that their Metropolitan could not Compel them to go out of their Own Province. And tho' those of Canterbury had not the same Excuse, yet ⁴ the Greater part of the Bishops and Clergy went not to it. The Smallness of the Number which appear'd there, furnish'd them with the Excuse which they desired of not Granting the King any thing out of their Spiritualities in Parliament. This was what the King would willingly have brought them to; and they as Industriously declined. All that was done therefore at that Parliament, as to this Matter, was to agree that the Clergy of each Province should meet in a Convenient time within their Respective Provinces in Convocation, and there deliberate of the Supply that was demanded of them.

To hasten this, the King issued out his ⁵ Letters to the Archbishop of Canterbury whilst the Parliament was yet sitting at Lincoln, to Assemble his Convocation at Leicester: Regist. Reynolds, fol. 207. ⁶ See the Appendix ad Ann. 1327.

convocation,

vocation, as soon as possible at Leicester; and Required him to be Himself in Person there, and to Use all possible Diligence to get a suitable Aid of his Clergy. He wrote in like manner to the Archbishop of York for his Province, which he Order'd to Assemble for the same End.

And now the Convocations, which had not been called either to meet with, or Attend upon the Parliament, were both Assembled by this Order of the King to that Purpose. That of our Province met at Leicester, the Place which the Royal Writ had assign'd on the Wednesday after All-Souls, November the 4th, about Six Weeks after the Parliament was Risen. That of York met sooner, upon Munday, October the 12th. And first the Clergy there agreed to Grant a Tenth to the King. Afterwards our Province did the same at Leicester; at this time following, not Guiding, much less Over-ruling, the Acts of the Other. Not long after this the Archbishop of Canterbury died; November the 16th; and was in a few Days succeeded by Simon Mepham, who was Chosen into his place the 8th of December following.

Upon the Sunday after the Purification, a 2 Second Parliament met at York. The Clergy were doubly Summon'd, as before, to it. But having so lately been supplied, neither did the King desire any Convocation to meet with this Parliament, nor did any, in either Province, Attend upon it.

The next Year a great many Parliaments were Assembled: One at 3 Northampton, three Weeks after Easter: A 4 Second at York, the Sunday after St. James: A third at 5 Salisbury, on the Sunday after the Quindene of Michaelmas: And a 6 fourth, by Adjournment from Salisbury, at London, on the Octaves of the Purification: And the Clergy were Summon'd to every one of them. Yet not one Convocation appears to have sate in either Province, or to have Attended on any of these four Parliaments.

On Fryday, January the 29th, the Archbishop of Canterbury held his 7 Provincial Council at London; in Pursuance of the Determination of the Church Canons, and at the instant Admonition of the Pope to that Effect. In the Execution of the Archbishop's Mandate a little difference arose between the Chapter of Lichfield, and the Archdeacon of Stafford, of which some Notice must be taken. 8 The Bishop of Litchfield had Commanded the Archdeacon by his Letters Mandatory to Cite and Premonish the Chapters of the Archdeaconry of Stafford to appear at this Council. The Chapter of Litchfield was of Opinion that this Command Extended not to them, because that neither the Chapter, nor Chapter-House, were within the Archdeaconry of Stafford. And besides, by Immemorial Custom, the Chapter was to be Cited only by the Dean, or his Delegate; and the Mandates for such Citations, to be directed immediately to them, for that End: Upon which they Protested in Presence of a Publick Notary, that they would not Obey the Archdeacon's Premonition, unless, or any father than, they were bound of Right to do it, and so as not Prejudice the Custom before-mention'd. The Council being thus Summon'd, met; and made some Ecclesiastical Constitutions of no great Importance, which may be seen in the Second Volume of our English Councils.

Anno 1329. A Great Council was held at 9 Windsor the Sunday after the Feast of St. Mary Magdalen, July the 23d. To it were Summon'd the Bishops, Abbots, and Priors, as Usual: But the Lower Clergy were not called. Upon the Sunday before the Feast of Pope Gregory, March the 11th following, a 10 full Parliament was held, and the Clergy by double Writs, were called to it. The Archbishop Summon'd them to Appear before himself, in the Cathedral Church of Winchester, on the Day that the Parliament was to meet. And so far departed from the latter Methods of Execution; and Return'd to the manner which had first been used, while the Clergy were not yet satisfied with the Lawfulness of such a Citation. But they were Summon'd to appear before him for the 11 Business of the Parliament; In Obedience to the King's Parliament Writs, Recited in the Mandate; "To treat with him, and the rest of the Prelates, concerning the Urgent Affairs of the Church and Realm, which were more at large to be Treated of in Parliament. This I take to have been All that the Lower Clergy were wont to do at those K. EDWARD Meetings: They treated with the Prelates, of what concern'd them; and having so done, the Bishops acted both in their Own, and their Clergies Names, with the Other Estates in Parliament.

But tho' here again was a full Parliament Assembled, yet did no Convocation sit this Year in either Province; nor by Consequence was the Doctrine of ATTENDANCE (that New-found Priviledge of the English Clergy) yet known, at least we are sure it was not yet Practised by Them. For Proof of which, I must observe, that about Three Days before that Parliament rose, the King issued out his Writs dated March the 18th, to both the Archbishops, to call their Clergy together in Convocation on the Munday next after the Feast of Tyburtius and Valerianus, April the 16th, about a Month after that Parliament was Dissolved. The Occasion of Calling these Convocations, was to Represent to the Clergy the Dangers of the French War, then ready to break out, and to induce them to Grant the King a proportionable Supply for the Prevention of them.

This Reason the ² Archbishop of Canterbury doubted not to insert at large out of the King's Writ into his Own Mandate. It seems neither our Princes nor our Metropolitans were ashamed to own the Supply of the King's Necessities to be the Cause of their Assembling of these Convocations; how much soever the bare Report of this Matter, moves some Mens Indignation now; who indeed have no Reason to be Content that the Truth should be discover'd, for fear least in time it should prevail too. A Misfortune that, should it happen, would utterly overthrow their Designs, and leave their Cause as Defenceless, as it is false.

Whether this Convocation granted any Supply, I much doubt: Our Registers are silent in that Case; and the Pope this Year granted the King a ³ Tenth upon all the Ecclesiastical Benefices of England, Wales, and Ireland, to continue for four Years; and be Equally divided between them both. From this Payment the King Exempted such small ⁴ Benefices as exceeded not the Value of six Marks per Annum, which he Order'd should not be assess'd for any Tenth to his Use.

In July following a Great Council was held at ⁵ Osney; and another (by our Historians called a Parliament) at ⁶ Nottingham, October the 15th. After both a formal Parliament was Assembled the ⁷ Munday after St. Catharine, November the 26th, yet no Convocation met with any of All these.

⁸ Sect. 42. 1331. ⁹ Ibid. p. 161. 162. ¹⁰ Ibid. p. 163.

The Beginning of the next Year, 1331. A ⁸ Parliament was call'd to meet the Morrow after the Quindene of Easter: But by Writs dated March the 23d, was intirely put off. Another was called to meet at ⁹ Westminster the morrow after Michaelmas. In the Writ of Summons an Extraordinary Clause was added, requiring the Bishops to be Exact to their Day, and to Premonish their Clergy to be there at the same time, that so the Parliament might be ended as soon as possible, and the People be put to the less Trouble and Expence. The Words run thus ¹⁰ "Because that heretofore, the Common Affairs of our Kingdom

¹⁰ Et quia ante hæc tempora, Communia REGNI nostri Negotia, propter aliquorum PRÆLATORUM & MAGNATUM absentiam, qui ad CONVOCATIONES & PARLIAMENTA HUIUSMODI non ad dies Statutos, sed diu postmodum Venerunt, frequenter retardata fuerunt, ad Commune Damnum Populi Regni nostri.

"have frequently been Retarded thro' the Absence of some of the Prelates and Great Men, who have not come to THESE KIND of Convocations, and Parliaments at the days appointed, but a long time after; We will and Enjoyn. — From this Expression of this Brief, ¹¹ Dr. A. raises this double Inference; "that these (Two) Assemblies the Convocation and Parliament, were used long before this time to Assemble Concurrently: And Secondly, That the Premonish'd Clergy, so Assembling in Convocation, were yet Reckon'd to be of the Parliament.

Now in this he either plays with Words, and means nothing at all, or if he does, his Inference is as far from a just Reasoning, as it is contrary to History and to the Truth.

¹¹ Rights, &c. p. 332, 333.

If by CONVOCATIONS and PARLIAMENTS he means, the Assemblies of the Clergy, and Laity, called by the Parliamentary Writs; (as 'tis plain they are here to be understood, and in these kind of Instruments are often called;) ad Convocationes & Parliamenta HUIUSMODI; No body doubts but that from the time that the Premunientes was inserted into the Bishop's Writs, the Clergy thereby Summon'd, were wont to Assemble Concurrently with the Parliament; for indeed they were a Considerable part of the Parliament. Nor is it questioned by any, but that the Clergy so Assembling by the King's Premonition in Convocation, if he will needs call it so, were reckon'd to be of the Parliament; A proper Member and Estate of it.

But

But if by Convocation, he means the Provincial Assemblies of the Clergy, called by the Archbishops of Each Province; and consisting not of the Parliamentary Clergy only, but of the Whole Body of the Regular and Collegiate Clergy usually Summon'd to those kind of Assemblies, (as we now understand the Word) I think no Consequence can be more Rambling than this; that because in the King's Writ, the Parliament is called by the Double Name of Convocation, and Parliament; by the One with particular Regard to the Ecclesiastical, by the Other with Respect to the Secular Parts, of it; and both the Clergy and Laity are mentioned, as Summon'd, and Coming to it: Therefore it had been the Custom, time out of mind, for the Provincial Assemblies of the Clergy (of which not one Word is said) to meet at the same time with the National Parliament; and the Clergy meeting in One, are to be accounted as Members of the other.

On the Octaves of Hilary another Parliament, or Great Council, was held at Westminster. And on the Munday next after the Feast of Pope Gregory, a fourth. In the Writ of Summons to that, another Extraordinary Clause was inserted, with Relation to the Prelates; "that without some evident Necessity, the King would not Excuse their Personal Attendance, nor accept of any Proctors in their stead. But where amidst all these Parliaments, and State Councils, are Dr. A's Co-attending, Provincial Convocations? Those I must leave to him to Nominate; for indeed my Collections furnish me not with One in Either Province all this Year.

Among other things proposed to the Consideration of this last Parliament, One was that of the King's Voyage to the Holy Land; and of preserving the Peace of the Realm in order thereunto. ³ Of this the King Charged the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and other Great Men to Consult. But being advised that it did not properly belong to them to give their Counsel for keeping of the Peace, and punishing the Breaches of it; the Prelates, and Proctors of the Clergy, went apart by themselves to deliberate of the things proposed to them. "After which it was ordained by the King; the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and other Great Men, the Knights of Counties, and the Commonalty, that a Sentence ordain'd by the Prelates and Clergy should be Pronounced against the Breakers of the Peace, &c.

Now as this shews that the Clergy were not only Summon'd, but came to the Parliament, and voted in it; So does it seem to intimate after what manner they proceeded there. They debated with the Prelates; and therefore in matters of Treating, we find Notice taken particularly of them. But when the States came together, the Prelates alone seem to have Voted for them, and therefore in those Cases we meet with no mention of any Other.

This Parliament Assembled the Munday after the Feast of St. Gregory, March the 16th. Upon the Saturday following, the King gave leave to the Knights of the Shires, the Citizens and Burgesses, Summon'd to the said Parliament; and also to the Clergy, to go home; but Order'd that the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and Counsellors should tarry longer. I mention this, to shew that the Lower Clergy, as Opposed to the Prelates, were present at this Parliament; and that therefore the Proctors of the Clergy before mention'd, must be properly understood, of their Delegates, and Representatives, there.

On the 4th of September the next Year, the Archbishop of Canterbury held a Provincial Council at St. Pauls London. It presently brake up without doing of any Business, as a Learned Author informs us. The Provosts and Archpriests as well as Archdeacons, were called to it: Nothing else Remarkable in it. Five days after this the Parliament began at Westminster, September the 9th. That also had soon done its Business, for it rose in four days time.

On Fryday before the Feast of St. Nicholas, December the 4th, a New Parliament sate at York. It was adjourn'd from thence to Munday, and so to Tuesday; before it entred upon Business, and yet broke up the Fryday following. The Cause of this suddain Recess was the Absence of several of the Bishops and Prelates, and of the Other Great Men. For which Reason this Parliament was not Dissolved, but Prorogued to the Octaves of Hilary at the same place. And then again it sate but Seven Days, and so was Dismissed. With all these Parliaments we find no Convocation held in Either Province; so little was the Doctrine of ATTENDANCE yet grown into Request. But the Truth was,

K. EDWARD the four Years Tenth Granted by the Pope upon the Clergy, was not yet Expired. The King therefore had no Reason to think that He should get any Money of them, and for this Reason he did not Require the Archbishops to Convene them.

In all these Writs, as they are Copied by Sir William Dugdale, we see no Præmunientes; nor can I find that any Provincial Writs were issued out to the Bishops to Call the Lower Clergy to Parliament. How the Omission came, I know not; but from the Procuratory Letters still remaining among Our Records, deliver'd in by the Clergy at Parliament; it appears that they were present at them. In the first of these Parliaments a Fifteenth and Tenth were Granted to the King, and therefore we may be sure they had a Summons to come to it.

In the next at ² York, the Prelates and Clergy are said to have treated together; and Fryday after in full Parliament when the Result of the Debates of the several Estates apart was to be laid before the King, the Prelates, by themselves, gave in an Account of their Treating. The Subject was about the Archbishop of Canterbury's carrying his Cross in the Province of York, which the King by his Writs had forbidden the Archbishop of York to hinder him in; (as at the ³ Parliaments before, he had in like manner Prohibited the Archbishop of Canterbury, to hinder the Archbishop of York in his Province.) And the Parliament agreed that the King's Business should not be delay'd, or hindred, upon any such Account.

It was towards the latter End of the Year 1333, before the next ⁴ Parliament was held; viz. February the 21st, being the Munday before the Feast of St. Peter in Cathedra. To this the Lower Clergy were Summon'd both by the Diocesan, and Provincial Writs: The Archbishops Summons, in the Vacancy of that See, being directed to the Prior of Canterbury for this time.

The last part of the Four Years Tenth being now Running on, the King began to think it time to Call the Clergy together in Convocation, for the Continuance of their Subsidy. And accordingly by his ⁵ Writs to the Archbishops dated October the 6th, He commanded the Archbishop of Canterbury to Assemble his Province at London upon Munday after the Octaves of St. Martin; the Archbishop of York his, at York, Munday after the Feast of St. Katharine.

Had these Convocations met at the time which the King appointed, they had both fate, and might probably both have been dismissed too, in November this Year: Whereas the Parliament was not called till the beginning of January, and met not till almost the End of February following. But the Archbishop of Canterbury dying within a Week after these Writs were issued out, the King was obliged to follow his first Precept with a ⁶ New One dated November the 18th following. Having been forced by this Accident to change the time for the Meeting of One of the Convocations, He thought fit to Enlarge Proportionably that of the Other too; and by a Writ of the same Date, called both to meet at the same time, the One at Northampton, the other at York; upon the Munday after Epiphany, January the 19th, six Weeks, at least before the Parliament was to sit.

The End of these Convocations was Consilium & Auxilium: But Money was the main, indeed the only true Reason, that prompted the King to call the Clergy together. For this I refer to the King's ⁷ Writs, which plainly intimate as much. Whether the Clergy of Canterbury met hereupon, I cannot tell: The Province of York did, upon the ⁸ Munday after the Octaves of Epiphany; but what they did, or whether they came to any Resolutions there, I am not able to say.

And now, after Forty Years Fruitless Search, we are at last come very near to the thing that we have been looking for; a Parliament held with a Convocation almost Attendant upon it: And because this is a matter of a more than Ordinary Concern to our present Argument, it will become me to give a full, and exact account of it.

The King being in great want of Money to carry on his War against the Scots, by his ⁹ Writ dated at New-Castle upon Tyne, June the 12th, command- ed the Archbishop of York to Summon a Convocation of his Clergy, to Treat of,

of, and Consent to, a Competent Aid, to be laid upon them for His Use. ^{K. EDWARD the III.}
By other Writs dated at Northampton, July the 23d, He gave the same Command to the Archbishop of Canterbury with Relation to our Province, that He had before done to the Archbishop of York with Respect to the Other.

Between these two Summons, the King had held a ² Great Council at Nottingham, and there Resolved to Assemble his Parliament at London with all convenient speed. In pursuance hereof the next Day after the Convocation-Writ went out for the Province of Canterbury, the ³ Parliamentary Writs were dated at Reading, for the Parliament to meet at Westminster on the Munday next before the Exaltation of the Holy Cross, September the 19th. To this the Clergy were Summon'd, both by the Præmunientes Clause in the Bishop's Writs, and by two Provincial Writs dated the same Day to the Archbishops.

The Case now with Relation to the Parliament, and Convocation, stood thus: The Archbishop had Three Writs from the King; One for a Convocation, which left both Place, and Time, to his Own Choice and Direction. Two for the Parliament, in which both were Limited, to meet at Westminster, September the 19th. By the first, He was to Assemble the whole Body of his Provincial Clergy: By the two Last, those only who had been wont to come to Parliament. Let us see how he proceeded in Obedience to All these.

By a ⁴ Mandate directed to the Bishop of London, He took notice, "how much it had been his Wish ever since he came to the Archbishoprick to free his Clergy from these Laborious, and chargeable Vexations; and to keep them in Ease, that so they might the better Attend upon the Service of the Great King of Kings. But that now the Urgent Affairs which concern'd the Church, the King and Kingdom, and the King's Writs, Obliged him to Call them together. These Writs he Recites, and then goes on; and declares, how that having hereupon advised and treated Diligently with certain of his Brethren and Others, and being Unwilling, as far as he could help it, to put the Clergy to a Double Trouble and Expence, He had Resolved to make his Convocation as easy as possible to them. To that End, he first Summons them to Parliament, as the King Required, September the 19th. And then, in Obedience to the Other Writ, He Cites them to Convocation, the Munday Seven-night after, September the 26th: In the One to treat of such things as should come to be handled in Parliament by them: In the Other, "to treat of those things which were mentioned in the King's Convocation Writ, and to Consent to what should thereupon be Unanimously Agreed."

Here now we see how this Parliament, and Convocation, came to meet so near to one Another. It was not that the Parliament had any Right to be Attended on by the Clergy, or the Clergy any Obligation to Attend upon the Parliament: These are New-Lights, lately struck out by the Happy Invention of One who professes to trace out New-ways, and not servilely to follow Old Notions. No, but the Good Archbishop was desirous to spare the Trouble and Charge of his Clergy, as much as He could, and therefore he freely held his Convocation at St. Pauls London within a Week of the Parliament; when it was in his Choice, to have called it to a Place a Hundred Miles off London, and Three or Four Months Afterwards, had he thought fit so to do.

But to see how unluckily all things here happen'd at this Juncture. The Parliament met September the 19th: The Convocation September the 26th. Who would not have thought, that, be the Occasion of it what it would, here should have been however an Instance of a Parliament with a Contemporary Convocation? Yet as near as they met, that fate not a Minute together. The Parliament held but Four Days; and so there was an End of the Clergies Parliamentary Session. And it was Three Days after, before the Convocation Began: So that here were two as Distinct Meetings IN FACT (the thing which Dr. A. so much Ridicules) as if Three Years, instead of Three Days had pass'd between them.

Thus went Matters in the Province of Canterbury: In that of York the Distance was still Greater; for there the Convocation met not till the 24th of October; above a Month after the Parliament was risen, and not much less after the Other Convocation was broken up.

The Convocation being thus Assembled at St. Pauls London, granted the King a Tenth. This, our ² Historians, who are not nice in their Distinctions in these Cases, speak of as done in Parliament; And with them the Author of the Antiquitates Britannicae; from whose Expressions therefore on these Occasions no Argument can be drawn to prove either the Parliamentary Right of the Clergy; or the Convocations to be a part of the Parliament; as ³ Dr. A. sometimes very weakly endeavours to do. But where a Cause is in Distress, all Arts must be used: And as the Politick ⁴ Italian once observed to his Friend, who charged him a little Severely for using now and then such wretched Sophistical Arguments as he had done in Defence of the Romish Church; "He was to be read by Men of All sorts, and therefore it was Necessary to have Arguments of All Sizes, that might be suitable to all Capacities."

I add but one thing more; That the whole Business of these Convocations was for Money: A Truth that will all along stare Dr. A. in the Face, and shew either his Ignorance, or Disingenuity, in his Intemperate Railing upon me for that, which the whole Course of our History speaks Openly, and Loudly, and Plainly, to Us.

Upon the very first Day of the next Year, being Sunday in Midlent, March the 26th, A ⁵ Great Council was held at Nottingham. There a Parliament seems to have been Agreed upon; for by Writs dated ⁶ April the 1st following, the King Summon'd it to meet at York on the Morrow after the Ascension, and by double Parliamentary Writs, Required the Lower Clergy to come to it.

Upon Munday next after Midlent Sunday, He held ⁷ another Parliament at Westminster, March the 11th. And again by Double Writs called the Clergy to it. In the Execution of the Provincial Parliament Writ, the Archbishop cited the Clergy to appear before himself at ⁸ St. Pauls, to treat of the Parliament Affairs. This was now the Method which was ⁹ commonly taken: And there, I conceive, the Lower Clergy met, treated of the Affairs of the Parliament with their Bishops; and so by them sent their Resolutions to Westminster, without Ordinarily appearing themselves in Person there. In the Archbishop's Writ of this Year, the ¹⁰ Abbots were inserted; and those also Summon'd to Parliament by Him. This Assembly of the Parliament Clergy before the Archbishop at Pauls, the Mandates call by the Name of a Convocation. And such a Convocation as this, from the time that the Clergy were called to Parliament, as often as the Præmunientes was inserted into the Bishop's Writ, always was, and is, and ought to be, Summon'd with the Parliament: Because indeed, this Convocation is no Other but the Estate of the Clergy in Parliament; One of the first, and chiefest Estates of it. But to Confound this Assembly of the Clergy, with the particular Convocations of each Province; and from an Identity of Name, infer an Indentity of Nature; Rights, Powers, and Priviledges, in utterly distinct Congregations, must be the Effect either of Great Ignorance, or of Errant Sophistry; as from the Acts of the last Year, in which these Two Convocations were held by different Writs and Mandates, at different Times, and with different Members, from One Another, does plainly, and demonstratively appear. And Dr. A. may as well say that the Bishops sit in the same Capacity in the House of Lords, and in the Jerusalem Chamber, at this Day; as pretend that the Clergy Summon'd by the Parliament, and Provincial (not Parliamentary Provincial, which have long been out of use; but Convocational-Provincial) Writs, were the same Assembly, or ever had, or ought to have had, the same Rights, and Priviledges, and Powers, as such.

But I Return from this Remark, which yet ought to be often made, and duly Consider'd, as being in truth the only thing that can raise any Difficulty in this Case. Two Parliaments were held this Year, and the Clergy called, as Members, to both of them. But no Convocation met in either Province, to pay their Homage to, and Attendance, upon them.

Sect. 47.
1336.

The Clergy of the Province of Canterbury there agreed to give the King a Tenth: So there was no need of any farther Assembling of Them; and for those of York, who, according to Dr. A's Scheme, ought to have been at Work at home upon the same Business; we shall presently see how the King proceeded with them.

Whether the Archbishop of York came not to this Parliament, or that his Clergy were not present in any suitable Numbers there; but certain it is, that tho' tho' the Province of Canterbury gave the King a ¹ Tenth there, those of the other Province did not agree to it. To make up this defect, the King issued out his ² Writ to the Archbishop of York the 26th of the same Month, about a Week after the Parliament was risen, to call a Convocation of his Province before Whitsuntide, therein to obtain a suitable Supply of his Needs. The Archbishop ³ Obey'd, and order'd his Convocation to meet on Munday the 6th of May; at a sufficient Distance from the Parliament in March before.

But against this Dr. A. will except: † He tells us the Clergy of Canterbury who made this Grant to the King, were not (as I affirm) the Parliamentary, but Convocation Clergy; and from thence maintains this Paradox; that Our Records mention the Convocation Clergy, as of the Parliament and in it. In answer to this Account, shall I appeal to the Words of the King's Writ; or shall I rather desire Dr. A. to tell us when the Convocation to which He ascribes this, was called? By what Writ from the King? By what Mandate from the Archbishop? And in what Rolls, or Registers we may find some account of either? Till this can be shewn, it may suffice Us to take the King's Words as they lie in his Summons to the Other Province; "That the PRELATES and CLERGY of the Province of Canterbury had already granted him One Tenth of their Ecclesiastical Goods, (not in their Convocation at St. Pauls London; but) in PARLIAMENTO NOSTRO apud WESTMONASTERIUM; the only Meeting to which they had been called for a Year before; or to which they were called for Six Months after.

About Whitsuntide the King held a ⁴ Great Council at Northampton; There it was agreed to send Ambassadors into France to treat about Other Matters, and Particularly about their going to the Holy Land. The King of France instead of making up his differences with our King in Order thereunto, openly declar'd his Resolution to Oppose him, and to assist the Scots against him. To prepare against these Dangers the King called his Parliament to meet at ⁵ Nottingham the Munday after St. Matthew, September the 23d. And by his Parliamentary Provincial Writ, as well as by the Premunitory Clause in the Bishop's Writs, Summon'd the ⁶ Lower Clergy of the Province of York to come to it. The Archbishop Executed this Writ, and Summon'd the Clergy of his Province to come to the Parliament at Nottingham at the time appointed, according to the Tenour of it.

The same day that the King thus Commanded the Archbishop of York to call his Clergy to Parliament at Nottingham; another ⁷ Writ was issued forth to the Archbishop of Canterbury, to call a Convocation of his Province to meet at Leicester, within the Province of Canterbury; the Munday after Michaelmas Day, September the 30th, a Week after the Parliament was to meet at Nottingham. In this Writ he took Notice of his Parliamentary Summons, and Commanded the Archbishop to Obey both the One, and the Other.

These two Assemblies of the Clergy, Convened by such different Writs, the Parliamentary, and Provincial; to meet not only in different Places, but in different Provinces; consisting of different Members, the Convocational, and Parliamentary Clergy; to come together at different Times; Every Reasonable Person must allow to have been both in Law, and Fact, different Conventions, or Convocations of the Clergy. The One was evidently a part of the Parliament, and consisted of the Parliament Clergy of Both Provinces. The Other was only a Provincial State-Assembly, of the Clergy of the Province of Canterbury. But was this Convocation at Leicester called to Attend upon this Parliament at Nottingham? So it might have been thought by those who are willing to turn all things to their own Hypothesis. But then this unlucky Parliament at Nottingham should have sate a little longer: Whereas rising upon the ⁸ 27th of September, it was Dissolved Three Days before that Convocation met, or by Consequence had any Legal Being, in which to pay its ATTENDANCE upon it.

The End of this Convocation was Money: 'Tis a Note that will come often into Dr. A.'s Ears, in the Prosecution of our History; if it grates upon them, he must blame the King's Writs, not my Report of them. And accordingly a ⁹ Tenth was there given to the King, to supply his Needs, and to prevent the Danger with which both the Nation and Church were threatened.

In November following another ¹ Parliament was called to meet at York upon Hilary day, and the Clergy again were both by the Provincial and Diocesan Parliament-Writs Summon'd to come to it. But by New Writs dated ² December the 10th, it was Prorogued to the Octaves of the Purification, and from thence to ³ Munday after St. Matthias, when it fate about Eleven days.

Such were the great Assemblies of this Year, and from the Account thus truly given of them, it appears that tho' there were two Sessions of Parliament, and two Prorogations; yet not One Convocation met Concurrently with either, or in the New Phrase ATTENDED upon the Lay Assembly. But here then Dr. A. interposes, on the behalf of his Concurrent, and Parliament-Attending Convocations: And I must stop so long, as to consider the Mistakes, which he still goes on to fall into, as to these Matters. He is enquiring when the King's Writ to the Archbishop for a Provincial Convocation (as we properly understand that Word;) began? ⁴ "At what time precisely, those Writs to the Archbishop for a full Convocation (so he calls it, because consisting of a great many more Members than the Parliament Convocation of the same Province did) to be held CONCURRENTLY WITH a PARLIAMENT, began to be practised, I have not found. The Eldest that has yet come to my hand is of the 10th Edward 3d, when the Parliament was called to meet at Nottingham, and the same day another Writ issued to the Archbishop of Canterbury to call the Clergy of his Province to Leicester; seven days afterwards. That this was not the first Instance, that of the Eighth of this King, before mentioned, shews. But in that I blame him not; he pretended to no more but to offer this, as the first he had met with; and it is not far from the first that ever was. That which I Condemn is, his calling this a CONVOCATION that met CONCURRENTLY with the PARLIAMENT, which fate neither at the same PLACE, nor at the same TIME; nor in the same Province, but met at Leicester, some days after the other had been held and Dissolved at Nottingham.

The next Year is full of extraordinary Proceedings, and Affords the first Instance that ever was, of a Convocation Assembling by the Authority of the King's Writ, during the Session of a Parliament. It is true, there is one great Defect in it; that the Convocation of the Other Province met not till after the Parliament was risen. But I will fairly Represent the matter of Fact, and shall then leave it to Dr. A. himself to judge whether his Cause gets, or loses by the Transactions of this Year.

Two ⁵ Great Councils the King had held towards the beginning of the Year, one at Stamford the morrow after Ascension day; the other at Westminster the Munday after St. Margaret, July the 21st. But these I shall not need to insist upon. Upon the 18th of August the King issued out his ⁶ Writs for the holding of a Parliament at Westminster the Fryday before Michaelmas, September the 26th. He was now engaged in a double War with France, and Scotland, and in order to the better carrying on of his Affairs, was ready to pass over the Sea in Person. But before that, he desired to hold his Parliament, and to make the best Provision of Money that he could for his extraordinary Occasions. The ⁷ same day He issued out other Writs to the Archbishops for the Assembling of the Convocations of the two Provinces. That of Canterbury he order'd to meet the day after Michaelmas; the fifth day after the Parliament; the other of York, the Thursday after the Octaves of Michaelmas, October the 9th.

That these Great Assemblies might come together with the better Disposition to Aid him in his present Urgent Necessities; He issued out other Letters, three days after, to the Two Archbishops, and to all the other Bishops of England, to call the Clergy of their several Diocesses together, on a day named by him, and to declare the Justice, and Danger of his Cause to them, as set forth in a Schedule sent to them for that Purpose. What he thus did by the Bishop of every Diocese, with respect to the Clergy, he at the same time did, by Select Commissioners to the Laity of every County, and with their Commissions to this Purpose, he sent Letters of Credence to the People, to hearken to them, in what they should deliver on the King's behalf.

The Clergy, and People, being thus prepared, seem to have met with the better Disposition to Answer the King's Expectation. The Parliament ⁸ fate but seven, or nine Days; yet in that time it granted a ⁹ Tenth, and Fifteenth, the

the One upon the Burroughs, the Other upon the Community of England. ^{K. EDWARD the III.}
 Upon the 30th of September, the day appointed by the King, the Convocation of Canterbury met at St. Pauls London: Thence it Adjourned to St. Brides by Fleetbridge, and there agreed upon a (Triennial) 2 Tenth to be raised on their Spiritualities to the King's Use. In this they made such dispatch that they seem to have passed it the 3 second day of their Meeting; while the Parliament was yet sitting.

In the Province of York the Archbishop first Summon'd his own Diocesan 4 Synod to meet on the Wednesday next after the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin, September the 10th: 5 Then he order'd his Convocation to Assemble the next Court-day after the Feast of St. Martin, about the 12th of November, almost Six Weeks after the Parliament, which met at Westminster, was risen. In this Convocation that Clergy likewise Granted a Three Years Tenth to the King; and so far followed the Pattern which those of the Other Province had set to them. On the 6 Morrow after the Purification another Parliament was called, but I cannot find that any Convocation was Assembled in Either Province with it; and considering what they had before Granted, we may be confident that none was. So that all then that can at last be said of this Year is this; That the King freely Assembled the Convocation of Canterbury a few days before his first Parliament rose; The Convocation of York, as many after it was Dissolved: And with his Next Parliament which met in February, and sate Eleven Days, he Assembled neither the One, nor the Other at all. This was the matter of Fact; let Dr. A. 7 make the best He can of it.

The Year following several Parliaments were Called, and Two, if not more, were held. The first was Summon'd to Northampton, on 8 the Morrow after St. James, July the 26th. The Clergy were called as Usual, by the Premunitory Clause, tho' for want of a Provincial Summons, but few of the Lower Order came to it. In this Parliament they agreed that the King should have the half of their Wool at a low Price; and tho' the 9 Clergy were there but in a small Number, yet the Prelates agreeing to the same for them, the King Exacted it of them.

Solutionem vero lanarum Expresse Negarunt.—Polychron. Mf.

To convince Us that there was no Convocation Attending upon this Parliament, the King about Two or Three days after it was risen, issued out his 10 Writs at Northampton for the Convocations to meet, that of Canterbury, October the 1st; that of York, the morrow after St. Matthew, about ten days before it. The Archbishop of Canterbury obey'd as to the day, but not as to the Place; he called them by his Vicar General the Bishop of Chichester, himself being Abroad, to 11 St. Bride's Church London; * and there they Agreed to shorten the Terms of paying in their Tenths, for the King's Use, and to give another Tenth besides the Three which they had Granted the Year before; but expressly refused to the Payment of their Wools which the Laity had obliged themselves to.

The Archbishop of York 12 enlarged the time which the King had appointed for his Convocation; and held it (whether by Chance, or Concert with the other Province, I cannot tell) on the very same day that ours met.

Not long after these Convocations another 13 Parliament was called in the Quindene of Michaelmas. Whether it sate at all, or what it did, I am not able to say. But within a Month after a Third was Summon'd to meet the Morrow after Hilary; and from thence (I conceive) was Prorogued to the Morrow after the Purification; when it met, and sate about a fortnight, as the 14 Writs for Expences shew.

To every one of these Parliaments the Clergy were called; to the Second, by the Provincial, as well as the Diocesan Writs. But tho' there were so many Parliaments this Year, yet was there but one Convocation held in either Province, and

K. EDWARD and that not in Attendance upon any of them, but in the Interval between the the III^d. First, and Second; Called after the former was risen, and rising before the latter met.

Seft. 50. While the last of these Parliaments was sitting, the King issued out his 1339. Writs for the holding of a Convocation in the Province of York; which there-Rot. Claus. fore must have met, either at the End of this, or at the very beginning of 13 Edw. III. the Year following. It recites how that the Convocation of York being called
p. 1. m. 35. to meet some time before, together with that of Canterbury, had refused to
d. Appendix. grant any thing to the King, tho' the Other Province had both given a New Tenth, and shortned the time of Payment of the Second Year of the Triennial Disme granted before by them; and that this was made known to them. The Clergy of York, had not yet, it seems, learnt, or were not yet so well Versed as they should have been, in Dr. A's Rule, of their Obligation to follow whatsoever those of this Province thought fit to do before them.

But the King's Writ goes on, and Summons them thereupon to meet a Second time, by themselves, without any Convocation on our side to keep pace with them; and this not to Attend upon any Parliament, or to present any Grievances, or to do any other of those fine things which Dr. A. talks of: No, but plainly to consider of the Necessities of the Realm, and of what the Clergy of our Province had done, and to make at least as Liberal, if not a more large Grant out of their Ecclesiastical Goods, than the Clergy of Canterbury had done out of theirs. This the King's Writ declares, and from thence, with Dr. A's leave, I would infer, that the Design of King Edward the III^d, in calling of this Convocation, was neither better nor worse, than what I had before truly, and as I hoped inoffensively said, to get Money of the Clergy.

On the ² Quindene of Michaelmas following another Parliament was called to meet at Westminster. It sate Seventeen Days, and much Business was done by it. Among other things taken Notice of in the Rolls of it; this was one,
³ "that Letters should be made out under the Seal of the Archbishop of Can- ⁴ terbury, and the Other Prelates, Earls, and Barons, in that Parliament, to the ⁵ Archbishop of York, and the Clergy of his Province, to Excite them to make ⁶ a Convenient Aid for the Guard of the Marches of Scotland, and to inform ⁷ them how that the Clergy of the Province of Canterbury, had made Conve-
⁸ nient Aid for the Cause aforesaid.

In order hereunto it was ⁴ farther agreed in the same Parliament, that Writs should be issued out for the Two Convocations to meet, the One at St. Pauls London, fifteen Days after Hilary, the Other at York a Week after. A Parliament was also agreed to be Summon'd on the Octaves of Hilary; so that the Assembling of these Meetings was settled in an Extraordinary manner, by Order of Parliament; which I conceive sufficiently shews that the Convocati-
⁹ ons were not then wont to meet of Course with, or, as it is now Phrased, to ¹⁰ ATTEND upon, the Parliament.

This matter being thus settled, the King accordingly, November the 16th, sent out his ⁵ Writs for the Meeting of the Parliament, on the Octaves of ⁶ Hilary. And on the 28th of the same Month two ⁶ other Writs for the Meet-⁷ ing of the Convocations: Of that of our Province, January the 27th; of that of ⁸ York, February the 2^d following. The ⁷ Convocation of our Province met at ⁹ the time which the King required. That of York (if I mistake not in my ¹⁰ Application of an ⁸ Instrument of Proxy, without a Date) came not together
¹¹ till the Octaves of the Purification: They both met during the Session of Par-
¹² liament; the Convocation of our Province granted the King a ⁹ Tenth, February
¹³ the 17th; upon Condition, says ¹⁰ Walsingham, that the Clergy should not be ¹⁴ burthened with any other Contribution, at that time: That of York, a ¹¹ Two ¹⁵ Years Tenth, as by the Orders for the Collection of it, appears. It seems that ¹⁶ Province did not always follow, but did sometimes come short of, sometimes ¹⁷ exceed (as this Year) what that of Canterbury did.

Thus passed this Year: Two Parliaments sate in it; with the Former, no Con- ¹⁸ vocation at all met; with the Latter, it was held, by the Express Agreement of ¹⁹ the King, and at the Desire of the Lords, and Commons in Parliament; not ²⁰ as an Assembly that was either Obliged, or Accustomed, to be held a-Course, ²¹ whenever the Parliament sate. ¹² Dr. A. therefore when he took Notice of this Instance to prove the Convocation to be a Meeting Co-incident with the Parliament,^{K EDWARD the III.} put a manifest Fallacy upon his Reader; and from what was done, after an Extraordinary Manner, at One time, infer'd a Customary Practise, not to say a Legal Right, for what was to be constantly done at All times. He might more justly have drawn another Conclusion from the same Instance, had he been so minded, to prove the Parliament to have been an Attendant upon the Convocation, it being first Agreed to hold a Convocation, Rot. Parl. N. 24. and then Order'd (after that was resolved) to call the Parliament, N. 25. But the truth is, the whole Resolution was Extraordinary: And the Agreement made at the Request of the Commons, and by the Advice, and Consent of the Lords, to hold these Two Meetings, at that time, together, does the more evidently prove that at Other times they were not wont to be so held; as indeed when that very Parliament sate which did order this, no Convocation, in either Province, was sitting with it.

The last Parliament was scarcely risen before^{Sect. 51.} another was Summon'd, by Writs dated February the 21st, to meet the Wednesday after Midlent-Sunday;^{1340.} that is, if I compute aright, March the 29th. This Parliament sate the longest that ever any Parliament hitherto did, till almost the middle of May.^{Dugd. Sum- monit. Parl. p. 208, 209.} About the End of which a² Second was called, to meet July the 12th. To both these the Clergy were Summon'd; to the former by the Provincial Parliamentary, as well as by the Diocesan Parliamentary Writs: To the latter, by the Bishop's Præmunientes, if not by the Other also. Yet with neither of these Parliaments did any Convocation sit in either Province; so that the Attendance which we met with One Instance of, the last Year, was totally laid aside, and forgotten in this.^{Ibid. p. 211.}

Indeed in the Province of York, a³ Convocation was held towards the End of the Year. The Archbishop being dead, and the Dean out of the Province; the Chapter of York Summon'd the Clergy of that Province to meet at York, December the 11th. They met accordingly, but what they did, or for what they were called, I am not able to say.^{3 Regist. Dec. & Capit. Sed. Vac. fol. 79.}

Besides these Assemblies of the Church and State, a Third there was, which met October the 2^d: But that being only a Great Council; I shall not insist upon it. It is enough that this Year again the Parliaments and Convocations sate at such a Distance from One Another, as utterly destroys Dr. A's Hypothesis, of their mutual COINCIDENCE, and ATTENDANCE of one upon the other.

The next Year we meet with a very buisy⁴ Parliament: It began April the 23^d, and sate till⁵ Whitson-Eve, May the 26th. Many Ordinances were made in it, and some such as the King was not afterwards very well pleased withal. Yet in all this Year no CONVOCAION that I can find in either Province met with, much less ATTENDED upon this Long, and Active Parliament, as the Modern stile is.^{1341. Dugd. Sum- monit. p. 214. Rot. Parl. 15 E. III. n. 43.}

And yet⁶ Dr. A. produces this very Parliament, to prove that the Convocation-Clergy are spoken of, as OF the PARLIAMENT, and ACTING IN IT. "In⁶ Rights, &c. p. 332, 335. "the 15th of *Edward the III*d (says⁷ he) N. 19. tho' Archbishops, and Bishops only are Named, yet in the Note of the King's Answer, N. 26. they are called generally, PETITIONS of the Clergy. This well deserves our Notice, because it gives us a true Account how the Parliament Prelates came to Act in Parliament for the whole State Spiritual. For that being at hand always was Consulted, and Advised with, in every thing that related to them, and the Result of those Debates was, by the Lords Spiritual, laid before the Parliament. I agree with Dr. A. The Clergy in those Times were at hand, whenever the Parliament met. The Bishops and Prelates Advised with them, and then deliver'd the Sense and Votes of their Clergy, as well as their Own, in Parliament.^{Ibid. p. 340.}

But who were the Clergy that made up this State Spiritual, and were always thus at hand upon these Occasions? Not the Convocation of Canterbury (as we now understand the Word Convocation;) for that was but a PART, of the STATE SPIRITUAL, and Commission'd only for ONE PROVINCE. The Convocation of York, was not usually so near at hand to be Advised with on every turn by the Prelates, of what was doing in Parliament. This Clergy then was the Clergy Summon'd by the Parliament Writs; the National Body of the Church-

K. EDWARD Representative called by the King, together with their Bishops, to Parliament. the III^d. This Clergy were duly Summon'd; and hitherto were wont to come pretty duly too upon their Summons. They were a proper Part, and State of the Parliament: With these the Bishops Advised; Their Sense they deliver'd: In their Name, as well as in their Own, the Bishops Acted. But this Parliamentary Convocation, as I have sufficiently shewn, was very different from One, nay from Both the Provincial-Convocations: And was often Called, and Met too, when the Other were both Called, and Met, and Acted distinctly, at the same time.

¹ During the Session of this very Parliament, the Abbot of St. Austin's Bristol, sued for an Exemption from coming to Parliament. The King granted it to Him; but with this Condition, which shews that the Proctors of the Clergy, called by the Præmunientes, as yet came pretty duly to these Councils; Ita tamen quod Ipsi (this Abbot and his Successors) Procurator. ad hujusmodi Parliamentis & Concilia Mittend. per Clerum, Consentiant; & ut moris est, pro Expensis Contribuant Eorundem. Pat. 15 Edw. III. Part. 1. m. 13.

To omit Other Instances already observed: In 1339, this Parliamentary Convocation (the National Clergy of both Provinces) met at Westminster, January the 20th: The Convocation of the Province of Canterbury, not till a Week after at St. Pauls, January the 27th; the Convocation of York, yet later, February the 9th, and at a greater Distance, at St. Peters York. The Clergy sat distinctly in All these, nay and Acted so too: They granted a Ninth to the King in the Parliament at Westminster, and a Tenth at the same time in the Convocations at London, and York.

If therefore by the Convocation (in the Equivocation of which Word all Dr. A's Refuge lies) he means the National Parliamentary-Convention of the Clergy of the whole Realm, I know no body that denies but that they constantly then were, as still they are, Summon'd to every Parliament, and made a Part of it. They were called by the Bishops Writs, and sometimes by the Archbishops too, to every such great Assembly; and as yet they came, (tho' not in a very full body) to it, and acted, after the manner that, I think, he truly says in it. But if by the Convocation, he means the Provincial Assemblies of the Clergy, usually called by that Name, and consisting not only of the Parliamentary, but of many Others of the Regular and Collegiate Clergy not Summon'd to Parliament, I deny that either any such Convocation met in either Province with this Parliament, or was at all Consulted with, or Acted for, by the Prelates in it.

The 19th of October being the Morrow after St. Luke, the Archbishop of Canterbury held his Provincial Council. This ² Dr. A. himself allows to have been a proper Ecclesiastical-Synod; and should have told us in Consequence thereof, that the Lower Clergy were only ³ INVITED to it, not SUMMON'D, as Necessary and Proper Members of it.

I say nothing of the ⁴ Great Council held this Year, July the 11th, nor of that Summon'd to meet the Morrow after the ⁵ Close of Easter, the next Year, and from thence adjourned to the Munday after St. Mark, with which I have no present Concern. The Assembly called to meet the Wednesday next after the Feast of St. Edward the Confessor, October the 16th, tho' stiled only a Great Council, has yet all the Formality of a Parliament, and most of the Parliamentary-Members were Summon'd to it. But yet in the End of the Roll of that of the foregoing Year, it is Expressly noted, that none was held in the 16th of this King. This Meeting was Summon'd by ⁶ Writs dated September the 12th, and the Clergy were called as usually by the Præmunitory Clause to it.

About a Month before these Summons were issued out for this Council or Parliament, the King had order'd the ⁷ Archbishop of Canterbury to Summon his Convocation to meet at St. Pauls London, six Days after Michaelmas. By Other ⁸ Writs dated September the 30th, he gave the like Command to the Archbishop of York to call his Clergy to Pomfret, the Munday next after St. Andrew, December the 2d; but by a Second Order, ⁹ ten days after, changed both the Place and Time, to the Morrow after the Conception of the Blessed Virgin, December the 9th, at York.

The Archbishop of Canterbury having Received this Command, called his Clergy accordingly, to meet at London the third day after ¹⁰ St. Faith, October the 9th, and so brought it still nearer to the time that this Council was to meet. Here therefore Dr. A. may fancy he has again found somewhat very like a Parliament with an Attending Convocation: I shall not Dispute that matter with him; 'tis enough that whatever the Convocation of this Province were, that of York paid no such Homage to this State-Council, but met in December; long after K. EDWARD the III. d. that Assembly was probably Dissolved. Indeed there was about that time another Select Council, the Morrow after St. Lucie December the 14th. Dr. A. if he pleases, shall Compound the Matter; and the Convocation of Canterbury shall Dugd. Summ. Parl. 220. be this Year Attending upon One, that of York upon the Other; always remembering, that both the Convocation of Canterbury, and that of York, were Dissolved, before either of the State Councils were begun.

Our Archbishop being thus Obligated to call his Clergy together upon a double Account for the State-Convocation, and the Parliamentary-Council, resolved 2. October the about the same time to hold an Ecclesiastical-Council too. He issued out his 14th. Mandates for both, the 3 same day; for the One by Virtue of the King's Writ, 3. x. Kal. Dec. for the Other by Authority of his Own Metropolitcal Power. These Mandates Memorand. were not only distinct Orders, but of a different Kind too. In the One, the Lower Clergy were Necessarily Required to appear before the Archbishop in Convocation: In the other they were only Premonished as they had been the Year before. IF THEY WOULD, IF THEY THOUGHT IT FOR THEIR ADVANTAGE, IF THEY HAD ANY BUSINESS THERE, they might come; or if they thought Good, they might tarry away. Tho. Beck. Episc. Linc. fol. 1.

In this Council, several Church-Canons and Constitutions were made; but the Archbishop had yet more of this kind to do; and therefore towards the End of the Year, he held another Provincial Council, in Presentia Comprovincialium Episcoporum, says the Cotton MS. viz. March the 20th, and therein Publish'd those other Constitutions which we find in the 4 Second Volume of our English Councils. 4. Spelm. Concil. Vol. II. p. 581.

The next Year following the 5 Parliament met on Munday fortnight after Easter, April the 28th. It sate about three Weeks, and much Business was done by it; especially with Relation to Provisions, from the Court of Rome. Seft. 53. 1343. If any Convocation of either Province met about this time, I have not had the fortune to light upon it; and I must beg leave to think, till I shall be better informed, that none was held this whole Year. Dugd. Summ. Parl. p. 222.

I say nothing of the Great Council held in 6 September, the same Year. On the Quindene of Easter, Anno 1344. at Another the like Council 7 it was agreed, "That for several Great Affairs touching the Government and Safety of the Realm of England, which could not be determin'd without a Parliament, as it was then said, a Parliament should be Summon'd, and that the Archbishop of Canterbury should hold a Convocation of the Prelates and Others of the Clergy of his Province at St. Pauls London, the Morrow after Trinity, to Treat, Say, and Ordain what should seem best to be done for the Execution of the said Affairs. 1344. 6. Apud Westm. die Mercur. prox. post Festum Nativit. B. M. V. Memorand. Tho. Beck. Episc. Linc. fol. 41. 7. Rot. Parl. 18. Edw. III. num. Vid. Ap. pend. ad Ann. 1344. 8. Apud Dugd. Summ. Parl. p. 224, 225. 9. Rot. Claus. 18. Edw. III. Par. 1. m. 14. Dorso.

In pursuance of this Resolution the King first, by his 8 Writs dated April the 20th, Summon'd the Parliament to meet at Westminster on the Octaves of Trinity, June the 7th; and by a Second 9 Writ to the Archbishop of Canterbury, dated two days after, commanded him to cause his Convocation to Assemble at London, on Munday the Morrow after Trinity, May the 31st. The Writ runs in the Common Form; That the King was desirous to have the Council, and Aid of his Clergy, and therefore required them to be ready at the day appointed to Treat with such as should be Deputed by him, if himself were not Personally present there; vestrumque Consilium & Auxilium impensuri, as the Words of the Writ are, the meaning of which we now very well understand.

Having thus Summon'd both the Parliament and Convocation of the One Province, he lastly issued out a 10 Third Writ above three Weeks after, to the Archbishop of York to call the Convocation of the Other to meet the Wednesday after the Feast of St. Barnabas, June the 16th, in the same Form, and for the same Ends that he had called that of Canterbury, before. 10. Rot. Claus. Ibid.

The Clergy being thus Summon'd by these several Writs to Parliament and Convocation, 11 met accordingly in both. And first, Those of our Province agreed to grant a 12 Three Years Tenth to the King; the Clergy of York agreed to the like Subsidy, and differed only in the times of Paying of it. 11. Jura Cleri. p. 62. 12. Registrum Wulstan. Episc. Wigorn. fol. 170.

This Tenth thus agreed upon in Convocation, was declared by the Prelates and Proctors of the Clergy in Parliament; 13 and in Consideration thereof, the King, at their Desire, Confirm'd several of their Petitions of Right to them, and caused his Charter of Confirmation to be drawn at their Request thereupon. *13. Edw. III. num.

It was necessary to Observe this Procedure, to clear a little Difficulty which Dr. A. had raised, for want of distinguishing aright in this Case. He observes p. 342, that the Author of the Ant. Brit. speaks of the Clergy granting in Convocation, as if they Granted in Parliament; Rex Parliamentum tenuit; In Eo Clerus Ei concessit Decimas Triennales. He spake truly in what he said: ² For the Clergy having agreed to this Subsidy in Convocation, declared it by the Prelates, and their Proctors, in Parliament: As in our Latter Times, the Subsidies of the Clergy were doubly Passed, both in Convocation, and Parliament; and yet the Provincial Meetings of the Clergy, at Pauls, and York, were never the more a proper Part, or Member, of the Parliament which sate at Westminster. They sate, they Acted distinctly then, as they did in our Own Times; only meeting at the same time, the Concession made in the One, was Reported, and Declar'd in the Other, now; as after the 25th of King Henry the VIIIth, what was granted in Convocation, was commonly Brought to, and Confirmed by Authority of Parliament.

Another Notion Dr. A. has started, and would confirm from the Rolls of this Parliament; that the Clergy sometimes spoken of in those Rolls, were not the Parliamentary Clergy, coming by the Premunientes Summons thither, and constituting the Estate of the Clergy there; but the Convocation-Clergy, ³ who acted with the Lords, and Commons, as the Spiritual Community of the Realm. To prove the Falsity of this in the present Instance (so often already shewn in several other of his Allegations to the same purpose) I shall need only to observe that the Clergy which the Roll speaks of, were the Clergy of the Realm; La Clergie de son Roialme, Rot. n. 23. The Clergy of both Provinces, Num. 24. But now the Lower House of Convocation of the Province of Canterbury, could in no Wise be called the Clergy of the Realm in Parliament. As for the Convocation of York that met within its own Province, at 150 Miles Distance from the Place of this Parliament. The Lower House of that Convocation therefore could not appear here, or joyn with the Convocation of Canterbury in these Requests. But the Truth of the Case was this: The Clergy in their several Convocations had granted the King a Three years Tenth. The Bishops and Prelates made Report of it in Parliament. Then in the Name of the Clergy of the Realm, as well as their Own, they prefer'd the Petitions entred upon the Parliament-Roll: Which being Granted by the King, they desired for their farther Security to have this Grant pass'd under the Great Seal, and the Aid taken Notice of, which they had agreed to, in Consideration of it. In the Recital of this Grant, (made in the Two Convocations) the Procurators of the Clergy are mention'd; in all the Rest, only the Prelates, or the Clergy, at large, without coming to Particulars. These Procurators therefore are not Represented in this Roll, as doing any thing in Parliament, but are only taken notice of for what they had done, not there, but in their several Convocations before. This I take to be the Truth of this Matter; and for this I appeal to the Roll its self; let Dr. A. shew the contrary from it, if he can.

But ⁴ he has a farther Use yet to make of this Procedure, viz. to prove the Dependence, and that not only in Spirituals, but Temporals too, of the Province of York, upon that of Canterbury. It was for this Reason, he tells us, "the Convocation of Canterbury was first held, in order to set the President, which it was Expected the Other Province should almost implicitly follow. I shall not stop to Examine the ⁵ Falseness of this Remark, and do right to that Injured Province, which had the same Freedom both in its Conciliary and Convocational Acts, as Ours had, and knew as well, when it was fitting, how to insist upon them. I shall reserve this Point to a Particular Debate, and thereat Once put together all the Scatter'd Observations which this Author has been able to Muster up in Prejudice to their Liberties. At present I shall only take Notice of One from the Rolls of Parliament the 13th of this King, in which, he says, it occurs, "That the Archbishop of Canterbury and other Nobles (the King's Commissioners in his Absence) should Require the Archbishop of York to Contribute for the Defence of the North, as they (i. e. I suppose as the Archbishop of Canterbury and his Clergy) had done."

in the Grants
of 1337,
1339. &c.

What a strange Story has this Author made of a plain Matter of Fact, nothing to the Purpose? The Case, as it stands upon the Rolls, is this: The King had the Year before got a Subsidy of the Clergy of Canterbury, but those of York had, it seems, refused to Grant any Aid to him.

For

For this they were called together a second time in Convocation, as I have before observed: What they did then, I am not able to say. The Parliament sitting fifteen days after Michaelmas, the Archbishop of York, and his Clergy, seem to have been stopped from coming to it, by the troubles in the North; and therefore "it was accorded, and assented unto in the said Parliament by all the PEERS and COMMONS there Assembled (I recite the Words of the Roll)" Ret. Parl. 13 "that Letters be made under the Seals of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and of the Other Prelates, Earls, and Barons, being in this Parliament at Westminster, and sent to the Archbishop of York, and to the Clergy of his Province, to EXCITE them to make a Convenient Aid for the Guard of the Marches of Scotland, and for the King's other Business mentioned in those Letters— and how the Clergy of the Province of Canterbury had made Convenient Aid for the Cause aforesaid." the III. d. Edw. III. num. 16.

This is the Matter of Fact, and it shews Us these Three Mistakes at least in Dr. A's Report of it. 1st, That this Letter was written not by the King's Commissioners, in his Absence, but by All the Prelates, Earls, and Barons, in Parliament Assembled; with the Assent of the Commons. 2^{dly}, That here was no REQUIRING at all in this Case, tho' One would have thought a whole Parliament concurring, might without Offence have done as much as that would have amounted to. But they contented themselves with a softer Expression, and more Agreeable to the Liberty of the Subject; De Les EXCITER, To EXCITE them to such an Aid, was all that the Baronage pretended to; and to Represent to them qu'il leur COVIENDRA, that it would BECOME them to Grant it: A form of Respect, not of Subjection; and that from the Parliament of England, not from the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury. 3^{dly}, That the mention of what the Province of Canterbury had done, was designed not to Conclude, but to Animate and Encourage them to a like Grant: That if they of Canterbury who were remote from the Danger, had yet Contributed to the Removal of it, much more would it besit those of York, who were next to it, to follow their Example, and to give an Aid for their Own Defence.

And now what could have been Alledged more contrary to his Assertion, than this piece of History, when fairly, and fully Represented? The Clergy of Canterbury had Granted an Aid to the King: The whole Parliament desired that those of York should do likewise. On Dr. A's Principles their Letter must have run after this Manner, to acquaint them with what those of this Province had done, and to put them in mind of their Obligation, to follow their Example; and, in short, to Will and Require them so to do. But here all is quite Otherwise: The whole Baronage write, the Commons desire; yet all Ends in an Excitement to Give; in a Representation of the Reason they had to expect this from them. But still they left it to them, and pretended not either by the Example of the Other Province, or their Own Authority, to impose any thing upon them.

But I must not insist on a Point here, which I shall probably take Occasion particularly to handle hereafter. The Sum of this Year is this, that here were two different Assemblies of the Clergy called to Parliament, and to Convocation. These were Summon'd at different Times, to different Places, and by different Writs. The Clergy themselves distinctly Met, and Acted in both of them. In this only Dr. A. is in the Right, that they were All, in some Measure, Contemporary with One Another: The King who in Other Years had freely Called the Parliament, and Convocation, at different Times, having now thought fit, by the Advice of his Council, to Assemble them, as freely, at the same Time, this Year.

The next Year following, there are no Summons of Parliament upon Record; but in an Antient ² Register of the See of Worcester, there is a Writ Enter'd, by which a Parliament is said to have been Called to meet at Westminster, the Morrow after the Purification. This Writ is dated by the King at Rockingham Castle, November the 26th. Regni 19^o. It Summons only the Baronage, but takes no Notice of the Lower-Clergy, or Commons. The same Year there was a ³ Council of the Bishops of the Province of Canterbury, Summon'd to meet at St. Pauls London, about the 4th of May: It consisted only of the Provincial Bishops; Dr. A's Inferiour Prelates and Clergy being again omitted. The same Year, 1346, a Parliament was held on Munday after the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin, Sept. the 11th. To this the Archbishop of York, being not in a Condition to come in Person, by reason of the Troubles in the North; he was required by the King to send a sufficient Proxy to Act in his stead, and that in the very Writ of Summons: Which, being a rare Example, I have inserted a Copy of it, (Omitted by Sir William Dugdale) into the Appendix. The ¹ Archbishop Obey'd; and by his Procuratorial Letters, dated the last of August, deputed his Proxies accordingly.

In this Parliament, among other things Resolved, One was this, ² That the Religious should be taxed among the Laity in Parliament, for such Lands for which they had not been wont to pay Tenths, before the 20th of Edward the 1st, and for the rest should be Charged with the Clergy, as they had been accustomed before to be.

About ³ three days before this Parliament Assembled, the King by his Writs Order'd the Archbishops to Summon their Convocations; that of Canterbury the Munday after the Translation of St. Edward, October the 16th: That of York the Munday after St. Lucie, December the 18th. The ⁴ Archbishop of Canterbury called his Clergy accordingly: But in York a delay happen'd; for by a new ⁵ Writ dated November the 6th, that Circumstance was Omitted, and the Archbishop left at Liberty to take his Own Time. He Summon'd them to meet upon the Munday next after the Conversion of St. Paul, January the 29th, as by this Mandate, dated December the 9th, does appear.

Here therefore tho' both the Parliament, and Convocations met, yet the Doctrine of ATTENDANCE again fail'd. With the Parliament after Easter no Convocation at all was held. That of September rose the 18th of the same Month: But the Convocation of Canterbury met not till the 16th of October following; and that of York above three Months after, January the 19th.

But I must not quit this Year without taking notice of a Judicious Remark made by ⁶ Dr. A. upon a certain Passage in the Parliament held in September before-mention'd. He had advanced a Point, which he says, "his Adversaries seem to Grant, that the Convocation was a Meeting Co-incident with the Parliament. If he means that it sometimes met, by Chance, at the same Time with it, I do not deny it: But if he would persuade Us that it is a Meeting that always was, or ought to be, held at the same Time with the Parliament; I have not only deny'd, but sufficiently disproved it. Among other Authorities to prove this, One is drawn from the Rolls of this Years Parliament. A strange Authority, to prove the Convocation to be an Assembly Co-incident with the Parliament, from the Rolls of a Parliament, which had no Convocation held at the same time with it! But let us hear what it says: ⁷ "XX E. III.

"the Bishops are commanded to Certify into Chancery the Names of all Aliens, their Benefices, and Values; before, or at the next Convocation, WHICH WAS

"TO SIT WITH THE NEXT PARLIAMENT.

Thus Dr. A. Confidently Recites the Order: But does the Parliament Roll speak thus? No, it does not, nor did it mean any such thing. It refered to the Convocation which had been Called a few days after the Parliament met, and which was to sit in our Province about a Month after the passing of this Order. The Words of the Roll, as himself delivers them in the French, are these; "That they should Certify, as he Reports it, before the day of the Convocation of the Clergy, (not a Convocation Uncertain, to be called hereafter to ATTEND upon a Parliament no body knew when; no, but the Convocation which was at that time Summon'd to Assemble by a Determinate Day) "or then at the latest. This was the Convocation of which the Parliament spake: A Convocation so far from being an Attendant upon that, or any Other Parliament, that in the very Mandate by which it met, the Archbishop took notice of the ⁸ Parliament as sitting before he Called it, not as to sit Concurrently with it. Dr. A. therefore could not have Chosen a more Unlucky Instance to prove his New-Theory by, than this; which had he been willing to Understand it, plainly proves the Contradictory to his Assertion, that the Convocation then Summon'd, was not to be held with the Parliament, but to meet at a Time quite different from it.

In the Close of this Year a ⁹ Great Council was held at Westminster, March the 3d, which having mention'd, I shall not insist any farther upon it.

The next Year two Parliaments were Call'd; the One the ¹⁰ Morrow after Hillary, which sate a whole Month; the Other to the ¹¹ Munday after Midlent-Sunday, March the 31st, 1348, and sate about a Fortnight. But the Clergy had in their their last Convocation before Granted a Three-Years Tenth to the King, so that there was no need of any present Supply from them; and for all Other Concerns, they were called to these Parliaments with the Laity by their Bishop's Writs, and therefore the King thought not fit to put them to a Fruitless Trouble in that Case.

But tho' there was no Convocation held with either of these Parliaments, yet a ¹ Provincial Council was Assembled by the Archbishop of Canterbury to meet in Our Province the first Court-Day after the Feast of St. Jerome, in the beginning of October. The Design of this was purely Ecclesiastical; Pro Corrigendis Excessibus, & Moribus Reformandis, as the Words of the Mandate for Summoning of it, run. It was called by the sole Authority of the Metropolitan; the Lower Clergy were INVITED, not, as in the Convocation Mandates, CITED to it. The Deans and Priors of Cathedral Churches, the Regular Abbots and Priors, and Archdeacons, might come si eis Utile Videatur; the Chapters, Convents, and Clergy might send their Proctors to it, si sua prospexerint interesse; & Causas vel Negotia habuerint in hujusmodi Provinciali Concilio tractanda: The Prelates of Exempt Churches, might be present, si Voluerint. But Necessity was laid upon none but the Bishops: They only were the Essential Members of these Synods, and therefore they only continued, when they sate, to be Summon'd Peremptorily to them. The Lower-Clergy were rather Indulged in this Case, than Required: It was a Favour that they were invited, no Fault in them not to come, to those Councils.

Towards the latter end of the Year ² 1348, a Parliament was called to meet at Westminster, the Munday after Hillary. The Writs were in the usual Form, excepting only that here (as in that of 1346) the Archbishop of York was Excused from Coming himself, and required to depute a Proxy in his stead. Yet in the Bishop of Worcester's Writ there is a singular Clause which ought to be taken Notice of. He had, it seems, Obtain'd a General Liberty from the King of not coming to Parliament. But the King in the present Instance Suspended this Privilege, and required his Attendance "Quacunque Concessione Vobis pro Immunitate Vestra de non Veniendo ad Parliamenta nostra prius Concessa non obstante". To this the Clergy were Summon'd, as was usual, by the Preliminary Clause; but the Pestilence then raging in London, this ³ Parliament was Prorogued till fifteen days after Easter 1349, and, by ⁴ Second Writs, suspended for the same Reason till a New Call.

The Plague at this time raged not only in London, and the Places thereabouts, but in many other parts of the Realm; if at least I may depend on a Minute taken out of the Bishop of ⁵ Wells's Register, whereby he Indulges his People during the time of the Pestilence, when Priests could not be had, to Confess to Lay-men, vel etiam Faminis. But tho' none of these Parliaments met, yet twice the King seemed Resolved to have had them sit; but of any Convocation that should have sate with either of them, we have not the least Intimation.

In the the Province of York a Convocation was Summon'd, by order of the ⁶ King's Writ, to meet at York on Fryday in Whitson-Week, June the 13th, 1348. The Parliament which met the beginning of this same Year, March the 31st, was risen two Months before; the next should not have met till January, i. e. till about Seven Months after; so that here could have been no Pretence for any Dependence of the One upon the Other. As for our Province, whether by reason of the Pestilence's raging in it, the Convocation, as well as Parliament, was Suspended; or that Archbishop Stratford dying this Year, and two other Archbishops within the Compass of the next following; the State of Affairs was in such Confusion, as made it proper to delay such an Assembly for the present; but so it was, that no Convocation, that I can find, met in either of these Years, in our Parts, tho' two Parliaments were called, and one Convocation held in the Other Province.

But I must go yet farther, for the next Year following a ⁷ Parliament was not only Summon'd to meet on the Octaves of the Purification, February the 9th, but met, and sate three Weeks. ⁸ In it was made a Famous Act against the Provisions of the Court of Rome, and some ⁹ Other things were Attempted by the Commons, against the Rights of the Church, particularly in the Point of Excommunications, tho' not Assented to by the King and his Council. Yet with all this busy Parliament, EDWARD the III. liament, in which the Church was so much Concern'd, no Convocation met in either Province; so that here again Dr. A's New Doctrine of ATTENDANCE, appears to have been utterly contrary both to the Law, and Practise of these Times.

1351. To make this Matter the more clear, let me observe, that on ¹ March the 1st, (the day on which this Parliament rose) the King issued out his *Writ*s to the Archbishop of Canterbury to Assemble the Convocation of his Province, in as short a time as he could. In that Writ he tells him how that he had Declared to himself and Others in this present Parliament, the Burdens which lay upon him, which without the help of his Subjects he was not able to support. He recites how that for this Reason, he had demanded of him, and his Clergy, a fitting Subsidy, for the Support of those Burdens; and therefore that he now Required him to call them together in Convocation, and there to declare his Needs to them, and to induce them Effectually to Grant him such a Subsidy, and to Certify him what it was that they Granted, and at what times it was to be paid.

ac Onera nobis propter hoc incumbencia, Vobis & aliis in Præsenti Parlamento nostro existentibus plenius exposuimus, Vos non Latet. Ad quorum Onerum supportationem absq; Adjutorio fidelium nostrorum non sufficimus sicut scitis: Per quod aliquod Subsidium Congruum in supportationem tantorum Onerum à Vobis & aliis de Clero, &c. Et expositis eis dictis Negotijs, ibidem, ipsos ad aliquod Competens Subsidium nobis in auxilium Supportationis dictorum Onerum concedendum cum Efficacia inducat, &c.

² Regist. Iſtip. In Obedience to this Writ the Archbishop by his ² Mandate dated March the 9th, Summon'd his Convocation to meet on the Munday next after the Quindene of Easter, May the 2^d. They met, and ³ Granted a Double Tenth; one absolute, the other upon this Condition, that before the Terms of its Payment their Grievances should be wholly Reformed by the King's Authority.

Having thus taken order for the Convocation of our Province to meet, May the 2^d, He next Summon'd that of ⁴ York to Assemble about a Month after Easter for the same End. The Archbishop Assign'd the ⁵ Wednesday before S. Dunstan, May the 18th; when they met accordingly, and the very next day made a Grant of a Two Years Tenth, as those of the Other Province had done before.

About Eight Months after these Convocations were risen, the ⁶ King held his next Parliament on Hillary day, January the 13th. In this the Grievances of the ⁷ Clergy were Represented to the King, by the Archbishop and Bishops for themselves, and the whole Clergy; and a favourable Reply was made to them. But the Two Years Subsidy of the Clergy before Granted, had taken off all need of any farther Convocations to meet at this time, and so this Parliament also was held without any.

But here ⁸ Dr. A. interposes and tells us that the Clergy for whom the Archbishop, and Bishops Petition'd, were the Convocation-Clergy. If by the Convocation-Clergy he means the Parliamentary-Clergy, Summon'd by the *Parliamentary Writ*s, as Representatives of the Body of the Clergy of England, I do not deny, nor can it reasonably be doubted by any, but that these were a proper Part, and Member of Parliament. They were Summon'd together with the Bishops and Prelates, as one of the Three Estates of it; and as such they both went to it, and Acted in it. This therefore is nothing to the Purpose: But if by the Convocation-Clergy he means the Provincial Clergy of the Two Convocations, as we now speak of them, it is certain he is mistaken; for the Convocations sat by themselves the May before; at those Meetings they gave the King a Two Years Tenth, and that being now running, they were not called at all with this Parliament.

In this Parliament, a Grant of a Disme and Quindisime, being made to the King; ⁹ Dr. A. thought he had thereby found another Proof, of what no body denys, that the Parliamentary-Clergy in these times came to Parliament. But he has since been satisfied, that these Grants were both made by the Laity, and not as he supposed, one by the Clergy, the other by the People. To Retract this Error as softly as may be, we are in the ¹⁰ Additions Advertised to blot out the whole Paragraph without any reason given why we should Omit it. What therefore he concealed, I take the Liberty to Observe; because it was not only Impertinent, which it would have been, if true; but because it was False too, as Dr. A. himself is now satisfied that it was.

Anno 1352. A ¹ Great Council was held at Westminster the day after the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin; but no Parliament or Convocation that I can find this Year.

Anno 1353. Another such ² Council met on the Munday after St. Matthew, and much Business was done in it. But the whole number of the Commons being not Called, nor the Lower Clergy Summon'd to it, we find the very ³ Council its self distinguishing its Acts from those of a Parliament, and desiring that what was then done, might be Confirm'd by Authority of the next Parliament to be Assembled.

To that Parliament I now pass, called by the King the end of the same Year, but not sitting till the beginning of the next, ⁴ April the 28th. Here the Ordinances of the last Great Council, relating to the Staple, were Confirm'd; and the doing of this was declared to be One End of calling this Parliament. With this State-Council, according to the new Doctrine of Convocational-Attendance, the Provincial-Assemblies of the Church ought to have been Convened: But that any such Meetings were held Concurrently with it, I cannot find, and must therefore leave it to Dr. A. to shew that there were.

The next Year the Parliament was ⁵ first called to meet on Thursday, the day after St. Martin, November the 12th, but was ⁶ Prorogued to the Munday after St. Edmund the King, November the 23d. Then it met, and sate Seven Days; and Granted to the King a Subsidy of xls upon every Pack of Wool.

Having thus Summon'd the Bishops, Prelates, and Clergy to Parliament; He by ⁷ Other Writs Summon'd the same Bishops and Prelates, with the Convocation-Clergy, to meet at a different Time, and different Place, for such Service of the State as fell under their Cognisance, in Convocation. Now this so plainly distinguishes the Parliamentary-Convention, and the Provincial-Convocation of the Clergy, from one another, and so evidently proves them to be different Assemblies, that He must be resolved to be deceived who does not see their actual Distinction, in Fact, as well as Law, from one another.

Westmonast. die Jovis in Crastino S. Martini prox. fut. tenere; & Vobiscum, & cum Prelatis, Magnatibus, & Proceribus, &c. Colloquium habere & Tractatum.—Et quia expedit quod Negotia predicta qua Salvationem & Defensionem Regni nostri sic contingunt salubriter & efficaciter cum bona & matura Deliberatione deducantur, Vobis mandamus Rogantes quatenus Omnes Episcopos & Abbates, necnon Decanos & Priores tam Ecclesiarum Cathedralium, quam Collegiarum, Exemptos & non Exemptos, Archidiaconos & totum Clerum vestre Provinciae apud Ecclesiam S. Pauli London. die Lunæ prox. post dictum festum S. Martini: (In the Other Province) die Lunæ in Crastino S. Nicholai, &c. apud Ecclesiam B. Petri Ebor. Convocari faciat.

If these Assemblies met according to this Summons, it must then be Granted that they came as near as well they could in time, tho' yet none sate, at the same time, with the other. The Convocation of Canterbury met on Munday, November the 16th. On that day seven-night the Parliament sate November the 23d. On the same day fortnight (a Week after the Parliament was risen) the Convocation of York was held.

And yet, tho' this be so evident a Proof of the Distinction of these Assemblies from one another, Dr. Atterbury doubts not to alledge this very Instance, nay, and this very Reason too, for the Confounding of them. So strangely different are we not only in our Principles, but in our ways of defending those Principles too, that what the One thinks to make the most strongly for his Point, the Other of us accounts to make the most forcibly against it. But let us see how he manages this Matter. ⁸ "This also, says He, deserves Notice in many of ⁹ Rights, &c. them (the Convocation-Writs) that they went not out only at the same time with ¹⁰ the Parliament-Writs (He should have said were SOMETIMES issued out ¹¹ NEAR ¹² the same time that the Parliament-Writs were; for that is all that can truly be affirm'd in this Case) ¹³ but mention the Holding of a Parliament in their Pre-ambles, as the Ground of their Issuing; that so the CLERGY, according to THEIR DUTY, MIGHT RESORT to it.

That which Dr. A. would have, if I take him aright, is this; That the Reason why these Convocation-Writs were sometimes issued out near the time that the Parliament-Writs were, was, to Oblige the Clergy thereby to come the more duly, and in greater Numbers, to Parliament. An Assertion in which I cannot tell whether the Falseness, or Absurdity of it, be the Greater. Let the Reader judge, from his Own, that is, the present Instance.

K. EDWARD
the III^d.

On the 20th of September the King sent out Writs for calling a Parliament to meet the day after St. Martin, November the 12th. By those Writs he Summon'd the Archbishops, and Bishops of All England; with the Cathedral Deans, and Priors; the Archdeacons; the Capitular, and Diocesan Parliament-Clergy; the Parliamentary-Abbots and Priors, to come to Westminster on that day to his Parliament.

By Other Writs dated September the 25th, He Summon'd the Archbishop, and Bishops of the Province of Canterbury, the Abbots, Deans, and Priors, as well of Collegiate, as Cathedral Churches, Exempt, and not Exempt; the Archdeacons and Clergy of that Province only, to meet at St. Pauls London, the Munday following. Those of the Other Province to meet at St. Peters York, December the 7th, almost a Month after the Parliament was to meet at Westminster.

He mention'd his having called a Parliament, and to the End the Matters which he had to propose, might the more Maturely be Deliberated upon, declared his Resolution of having a Convocation of Each Province too; in which, as well as in his Parliament, they might be treated of.

Let us now put this together: Here are two Convocations Summon'd to meet at London, and York; a Parliament to meet at Westminster. These Convocations met, One of them a Week before the Parliament, and (if it sate at all) in all Probability rose before the Parliament sate. The other met not till a Week after the Parliament was up. They agreed neither in Time, Place, nor Members, with one another: And yet these Convocation-Writs were design'd (if Dr. A. may be Credited) to Oblige the Clergy to come more duly to the Parliament. That is to say, the Prelates and Clergy of Canterbury were called to St. Pauls London, November the 16th, in Order to secure their Attendance at Westminster, November the 23^d: And which is yet more apparently, tho' not more really, Absurd, Those of York were Summon'd to be at York, December the 7th, in order to their RESORTING MORE DULY to the PARLIAMENT at WESTMINSTER November the 23^d, which had sate a fortnight, and was risen a Week before.

Sect. 58.

To such hard shifts, will an Ill-cause sometimes put even Witty-Men in the Defence of it! But I proceed: The next Year, tho' it affords us neither Convocation, nor Parliament, yet presents us with a Provincial Council in Each Province; The End of which, I dare not say, was to Grant a Subsidy to the King; this I may say, that it was the main thing which being met, was done in both.

The ² Council of our Province was called to meet at St. Pauls London, May the 16th. And the Process of it was this. The first day being taken up in matters of Form; On the second the King's Messengers came, and Prohibited them in the King's Name to do any thing in Prejudice of himself, or his Kingdom. This was commonly done in Councils called by the Archbishop, but never in Convocations held at the King's Command. Then the Commissioners demanded for the King a Six Years Tenth, to be paid within the Compass of Three Years.

The third and fourth day, were spent in Exhibiting, and Receiving of Petitions. The fifth, the Archbishop being indisposed, the Bishop of Lincoln, by his Commission continued the Convocation to the next day. On Saturday, the 6th of their Session, Petitions were read, and so they were Prorogued to the Munday following. Then the Clergy presented their Answer to the King's Demand, to the Archbishop and Bishops, to this Effect. " ³ That whereas in the LAST CONVOCATION of the Prelates and Clergy of the said Province, certain great Grievances were proposed, and shewn to lye upon the said Clergy, a Remedy of which was desired of the King; and upon that, and other Conditions, a Two Years Tenth was Granted to him; but that neither in that, nor OTHER PARLIAMENTS since held, was any Remedy ordain'd, tho' the Tenth were both paid: For this, and other Reasons, there alledg'd, they desired to be excused from Granting any thing at this time.

ad Celebrandum Concilium Provinciale juxta SS. instituta Canonum Congregatis, supplicat humiliter & devote Clerus Cantuariensis Provinciae, &c. IMPRIMIS; Cum in Ultima Convocatione Praelatorum & Cleri Ejusdem Provinciae certa enormia Gravamina dicto Clero illata, proposita fuerunt & Ostensa, super quibus petatum fuit a Domino nostro Rege Remedium, & sub certis Conditionibus—Et inter caetera, quod in Proximo ex tunc Parlamento Reformatio fieret Eorundem, idem Clerus concessit dicto Domino Regi Decimas Biennales; sed interim in Praedicto & Aliis Parliamentis quae ex tunc Citra fuerunt, licet dicta Decima sit Soluta, nullum omnino certis Remedium Ordinatum, &c.

I have inserted this Petition of the Lomer-Clergy to shew ; that since the Year 1351, the time of which they speak, tho' several Parliaments had been held, yet no Convocation had met : And therefore that 'tis probable, the Convocations called the last Year, never Assembled, but were by some Second Writs, which are not now Extant, revoked, before the Execution of the first. This the Silence of our Registers, as to those Convocations, in both Provinces seems to confirm ; and therefore that the New Doctrine of a Concurrent Convocation necessary to be held with every Parliament, is here in Terms Contradicted by the Clergy of our Province. However the next day they consented to a Tenth ; the one half Absolute, the other on the Condition that their Grievances should be Redress'd.

This was the Work of our Synod : That ¹ of York met the 3d of June following : And in like manner Granted the King a Tenth, "sub spe Emendationis & Reformationis Gravaminum ; and upon certain Conditions, express'd in the return made of their Grant to the King.

But to leave these Councils, and go on to the Transactions of the next Year. On the Munday² after Easter Week, that is, if I compute aright, April the 17th, the Parliament met. It sate almost Three Weeks ; the Clergy being called as usual to it. Thus the Year began with a Parliament, and so it Ended too ; for on the ³ Munday after the Purification, a Second Parliament met, and sate again another Three Weeks, the Clergy being Summon'd, as before, to it.

With the former of these Parliaments the King Summon'd the Convocations of both Provinces to have met. He Order'd the Archbishops to call their Clergy together to ⁴ London and York, the morrow after St. George ; a Week after the Parliament was to begin. But Our Archbishops were not yet sufficiently instructed in the Modern Doctrine of Attendance, to Obey him so Punctually as they should have done in this particular ; and therefore so order'd the matter that the Parliament had but very little of their Company. In short ; The Parliament met April the 17th : The Convocation of our ⁵ Province met not, till the 26th, (the middle of its Session) and in the other ⁶ Province, the Convocation sate not till the Fryday after the Ascension, May the 29th, almost a fortnight after the Parliament was dismiss'd.

In the Letters ⁷ Mandatory to the Bishop of London for holding of this Convocation, the Archbishop did not insert the King's Writ : as it had been usual to do, but only made mention of it. In the Preamble he sets forth the Cause of this New Assembly, and what had moved him to the calling of it. He Extols the King's Success in his Wars, and acknowledges the Benefits which the Church had reaped from his Labour and Dangers. He takes Notice of the King's Desire, in Order to the putting an End to them, to Consult with his Clergy, and how he had thereupon issued out his Writ to him to call them together. And then adds, that ⁸ " He accounting the King's Desire to be Reasonable, and being " willing, as much as in him lay, to comply with his Wishes, had the more " readily proceeded to hold a Convocation, in that therein he was promised a " Satisfactory Answer to their Petitions made in their last Convocation.

res ideo quantum cum Domino poterimus annuere Votis suis, tanto promptius ad Convocationem Cleri nostri super premissis loco & tempore infra scriptis faciendam processimus, quatenus in Eadem nobis promittitur Grata Responsio ad Petitionem & Supplicationem nostras.

Had it now been Customary, to hold Convocations Concurrently with every Parliament, as some of late pretend, how came the Archbishop to preface his Mandate after this strange manner ? Or what Account can we give of his deferring it, till the Parliament was above half over, first, and then to give such Reasons as these, why he proceeded to call it at all ? Let Dr. A. put what Glosses he pleases on this Years Convocation, which is another of his Instances to prove the Pretended Right of their Attendance upon every Parliament : But sure I am, neither the Delays of the Archbishops in this Case, nor the Reasons now Recited, from One of their Mandates, for the meeting of the Convocation at this time, can be Reconciled with this Doctrine, and that therefore we must conclude it is not true.

To this Parliament at Westminster, April the 17th, the ⁹ Chapter of York sent up their Proxies to treat and consent to such Things as should there be Ordain'd by the Common Council of the Realm. These Procuratorial Letters were

K. EDWARD ^{the III^d.} dated at York the 2^d of April before. Let Dr. A. consider whether those must not have been IN FACT two different Assemblies, for the One of which that Chapter sent up their Proctors to Westminster, to act with the Estates of the Realm in April: In the other of which, their Proctors went no farther than to their Own Chapter-House, nor Acted with any but their own Provincial Bishops and Clergy, the Month following.

But not to add any more about this first Parliament; what shall we say to that which sate in February following? There was no Attending-Convocation Summon'd in either Province; but the Parliament met and sate by its self, without any Provincial Assemblies of the Clergy to keep it company.

The next Year following, I meet with no Publick Assemblies either of the Church, or State. Anno 1359. the King being about to pass over the Seas, by his ¹ Writs dated at Sandwich, October the 10th, Summon'd a Great Council to meet at Westminster the Sunday before St. Martin, November the 10th.

Presently after this Council was up, two ² Provincial Writs went out to each Archbishop to Summon the Convocations of their Respective Provinces, with all Convenient speed. ³ The Archbishop of Canterbury made an Apology in his Mandate for calling his Clergy so often together, and inserted the Writ intirely into it. He order'd them to meet at ⁴ St. Pauls London, January the 28th. On February the 4th they granted a Tenth to the King; and that, I suppose, was all that was done by them.

Anno 1364. A Parliament met on ¹⁶ Munday in the Octaves of Hillary: It sate above a Month; reduced the Custom upon Wool, to a more moderate rate; and and ordain'd that all Other Impositions should cease. But as the King had ^{K. EDWARD} now no need of any Aid from his Clergy, so neither did He call any Convocation ^{the III.} to meet; nor do I find that any was held this whole Year in either Province.

The next Year, neither Parliament, nor Convocations, that I know of, met: ^{1366.} The Year following, 1366. The ^I Parliament sate May the 4th. The Occasion of ^{Ibid. p. 271.} it was to resolve what the King should do, if the Pope should cite him to Rome, or otherwise proceed against him, for Homage, or Tribute, on the Pretence of King John's Surrender of the Realm to Him. Another Famous Cause was also transacted in this Parliament, between the two Universities, and the Fryar's Mendicant. But the King had no need of Money, and therefore as the Parliament made but a short Session, so it does not appear that the Convocation of either Province met with it, or at any other time this whole Year.

The next Year, for ought I can yet find, pass'd without either Parliament, or Convocation. ^{Sect. 62.} Anno 1368, a Parliament was held ^{1368.} May the 1st, and sate about Three Weeks: In it a Subsidy was Granted to the King, by an Encrease of the ^{Ibid. p. 273.} Customs upon Wool, Fells and Skins; but no Money was given by the Laity, nor was any demanded of the Clergy, nor by Consequence any Convocation held this Year.

But tho' the King, having no need of their Aid, called not the Clergy to Convocation, yet the ³ Archbishop of Canterbury being oppress'd with Debt Summon'd ³ Regist. Lang- those of his Own Diocese to a Synod, the day after King Edward, and there ob- ^{ham. Arch.} tain'd six Pence in the Mark of them, towards the Relief of his Needs. We have now for some time pass'd on without much Business to insist upon: ^{1369.} Parliaments have often met for the Benefit of the Publick; but the Convocations have been intermitted, thro' the little Occasion the King had for their Aid. But here we shall again begin to fall into the History of them; and by the different Times of their Assembling from that of the Parliaments of the same Years, no less discern their Independency on those State-Meetings; than by their not coming together at all for some Years past, tho' Parliaments were constantly held, we have seen it before.

On the ⁶ Octaves of Trinity, May the 27th, the Parliament of this Year was ⁶ Dugd. Sum- held: It sate a Fortnight, and Confirm'd some New Customs again to the King. ^{monit. Whether the King desired some farther, and greater Supply of the Clergy, or wanted to have what was last Granted sooner paid in, than the Terms of the Grant before made allow'd of; but so it was, that for one or other of these Ends, the Clergy were again called together the beginning of this Year: But it was not to a Provincial Convocation, but to particular Assemblies within their Own Diocesses; in which they seem to have comply'd with the King's Desires. This I gather from a Writ of the Bishop of Winchester to the Archdeacon of Surrey, in which He Recites, "that the Religious and Secular Clergy having Ecclesiastical Goods and Benefices in that Archdeaconry, being lately called before his Commissaries, and having the King's Necessities and Expences declared to them, granted a certain Subsidy of their Goods and Benefices to be speedily paid, the several Sums of which, with the Persons by whom they were Granted, were set down in the Schedule thereunto annex'd: He therefore gave Directions, by that Mandate for the Collecting and Levying of it. This Writ was dated, July the 26th; and implies this meeting to have been held not long (probably the Month) before.

About the End of the same Year 1370, a Parliament was called to meet the first Munday in Lent, upon the Feast of St. Matthias, February the 25th. In this an Aid of 5000*l.* was Granted to the King, to be Levy'd at a certain rate upon every Parish. Upon this, and the other Affairs which came before it, this Parliament sate long, to March the 28th, before it brought its Business to an End. On March the 27th, at the very End of this Parliament, the King issued out his Writs for the Two Convocations to meet, and that again expressly for Granting a farther Supply to him.

There can hardly be any thing more Demonstratively evident in History, than this Summons is in Opposition to Dr. A's Hypothesis. The Parliament had sate a Month upon Publick Business: The last day but one of it, the Convocations were Summon'd; and met, the one about a Month, the other almost four Months, after. It is plain therefore that they were not Attendants upon that Parliament. Nor were they any more upon the next (whether Parliament, or Council) which met at Winchester on the Octaves of Trinity following. The Convocation of Canterbury met the Thursday after St. George, April the 24th. The Convocation of York, on Thursday, July the 10th. Between these the Parliament of Winchester was held, June the 1st. It met above five Weeks after the Convocation of Our Province, and as many before that of the other.

Here therefore are two Parliaments more without any Concurrent Convocations; tho' the Convocation of each Province met within a moderate Distance of them both: And these Convocations were expressly called by the King for Aid; the Great End which our Princes always had for the Summoning of them. In these Convocations they Agreed to give the King a Subsidy of 5000*l.* The Province of Canterbury undertaking first for their Proportion of it, and that of York coming afterwards into the like Concession with them.

And now would one not wonder, after the Account which I have here given of these Meetings, that notwithstanding such clear Evidence to the contrary, Dr. A. should yet alledge this very Parliament, as he had done that of 1369 before, in Proof of his Assertion; and maintain the Vos & ALII in PARLIAMENTO EXISTENTES to whom the King had declared his Burdens, to be the Archbishop and Convocation? This is I think to carry the Paradox to the highest Degree of Assurance. For what, was the Convocation sitting with the Parliament; and did the King declare his Wants to a sitting Convocation, in order to have a Convocation called to supply them? Was the Convocation held in February and March, with the Parliament? And again Summon'd by New Writs, while it was yet sitting, to meet about a Month after, to grant the Aid, which the King had before told them He stood in need of? To what Absurdities does an Indefensible Cause sometimes drive Witty Men? But how then did the King make the same Declaration to those of the Other Province? Were they called up up too from their Convocation at York, to hear the Account of the King's Wants in Parliament at Westminster? For the King's Writ speaks in the same manner to them that it does to the Clergy of Canterbury. And indeed we cannot better interpret the meaning of what he said to one, than by his Words to the other. They run thus: "Qualiter Negotia tam Nos & Statum Regni nostri Angliæ, quam necessariam defensionem Eiusdem Contingentia, ac Onera Nobis propter hoc incumbentia PROCURATORIBUS VESTRIS ac PRÆLATIS in ULTIMO PARLIAMENTO NOSTRO existentibus, &c." The King in Parliament declared His Needs to the Bishops and Clergy of Both Provinces, who were called, and came to the Parliament, and to the Proctors of those who were Absent. These were the Vos & ALII, of whom his Writs speak: No others were meant by it; no others, besides the Parliament-Clergy, were Assembled, in either Province, at that time.

The next Year a Parliament was called to meet a Fortnight after Michaelmas; but Prorogued to the Morrow after All-Souls Day, November the 3d. It sate till the 23d of that Month; and several things were moved in it, wherein the Interest of the Church was concern'd. Yet I cannot find that any Convocation met at all this Year: So that here again the new Hypothesis of the Convocations Parliamentary Attendance fail'd.

Nor did it any less suffer by the Proceedings of the next Year, 1373, in which the Parliament was Assembled, the Morrow after St. Edmund the King, November the 21st. On St. Andrew's Eve, 4 November the 29th, the King gave leave to such as would to go away. After which he allow'd Two Days more for the Delivery of Petitions, and order'd those who would, to sue out their Wages. For this many of the Members of the Lower-House tarry'd yet Ten Days longer; tho' the Parliament was effectually broken up from the time that the King Licensed the Members to depart. It was in this Case somewhat as in that of his 45th Year; when the answers to the Commons Petitions were not made whilst the Parliament sate, but were drawn up by the King's Council after it was risen.

About the End of this Parliament, the Convocation of our Province, which had before sate the 30th of May without the King's Writ, now met again by Vertue of it, December the 1st. It continued a Week, and granted a Tenth to the King. For this the King called it: And this was the main of what was done in it. They gave in indeed their Grievances, and pray'd a Redress of them; and Courtney Bishop of Hereford declared that He consented not to the Tenth for his Diocese, but upon Condition that they should be Remedied. But this was not the thing which the King had in his View in the calling of them, nor did any Great Effect follow upon these sort of Customary Demands.

The Archbishop of York dying, after the King's Writ was issued out for the Convocation of that Province, a Second was made to the Dean and Chapter as Guardians of the Spiritualities; and thereupon a Convocation Summon'd by the Chapter alone, the Dean being abroad beyond the Sea. This delay'd the Assembling of this Province, which by this means came not together in Convocation till the Munday after the Purification, two Months after the Parliament was risen.

The next Year following passed without any Publick Assemblies, either of the Church, or Realm. Anno 1375, a Parliament was Summon'd to meet, February the 12th, but by Writs dated January the 20th, was put off till the Munday after St. Gregory, March the 17th. Five Weeks after this Parliament began, the King by the Advice of his Parliament Order'd the Convocations of the two Provinces to be Assembled. The Occasion of his Calling them, He expressly declares to have been for the Supply of his Needs: A thing that I must often beg leave to put Dr. A. in mind of. The Archbishop of Canterbury Order'd not his Convocation to meet at London till the beginning of June: But neither did he suffer it to sit then, but by Prorogation continued it to the K. EDWARD ^{the III.} 23^d of June, about a fortnight before that long Session ended. Whether it sate then I cannot tell, nor is it worth the while to dispute it. This is plain, that had the King thought of calling this Convocation to Attend this Parliament, He would not have defer'd the Summons till the Parliament had sate so long; nor would the Archbishop have put off its Assembling Five Weeks first, and after that have Prorogued it farther for Three Weeks more, till that Great Council was just ready to rise.

It is true some Copies of the Rolls of Parliament, instead of St. Gregory have St. George; so have some of our Registers too: And this makes some odds in the Computation. But then, as Sir William Dugdale, Mr. Prynne, and Mr. Ryley, with several other Registers, agree in that which I have therefore followed upon their Authority, so be it which it will, the matter is not great: This is plain, that the Convocation of Canterbury did not meet, at soonest, above a Fortnight before the Parliament rose; and after it had sate almost Threescore Days by its self without it.

But the Convocation of York Attended yet less upon this Parliament. It met not till ¹ Munday after the Feast of St. James, July the 28th, almost Three Weeks after the Session of Parliament was ended. I shall only observe farther, that the Chapter of York deputed several Persons, and by different Letters of Proxy, to appear and act for them in these two different Assemblies: By the one dated April the 1st, they Commission'd R. Ravenser Archdeacon of Lincoln, W. de Simthorp, Tho. de Fordeham, Mich. de Ravendale, and Adam de Thorp, to appear in the Parliament at Westminster, the Munday after the Feast of St. Gregory; by others dated July the 21st, (Eleven Days after the rising of the Parliament, and almost four Months after the date of the other) Jo. de Norton, to appear before the Archbishop of York, at York, the Munday after St. James, July the 28th, and to act on their behalf with the Provincial Clergy there. If this does not satisfy Dr. A. that the Parliamentary-Convention of the Clergy held in April this Year at Westminster, and the Provincial-Convocation held at York in July, were IN FACT two different Assemblies, I must give over the Cause; for indeed a more Evident Demonstration I cannot tell how to offer of it.

About the latter End of this same Year, ² another Parliament was Summon'd to meet at Westminster fifteen Days after Hillary, January the 27th. A ³ Fortnight after this Parliament was called, the King issued out two other Writs, to the two Archbishops for Summoning their Convocations; and that again Expressly for Aid, in the same Words as before. The Archbishop of Canterbury appointed His Clergy to meet the day after the Purification, a Week after the Parliament began. From thence they sate on together, and the Convocation which met a Week after the Parliament, to make up its time, continued to sit as much beyond it.

Now as this sufficiently shews the Independency of these Assemblies upon one another; so it must be observed that the ⁴ Convocation of York, here again, as before, met not till near two Months after the Parliament was risen. So that if this Duty, or Privilege, (I know not which I ought to call it) of Attending on the Parliament be a Right of the Convocation, 'tis, as Dr. A. seems sometimes to intimate, the Right of the Convocation of our Province alone; for there is yet no Proof that it ever was the Right, or so much as Practise, of the other.

But Dr. A. has here some things to offer from the Parliament of 1376, which he thinks may favour his Cause. The point which he lays down is this, that the ⁵ "Convocation-Clergy are spoken of, as of the Parliament, and Acting in it. And for Proof of it, he refers us to two Passages of the Parliament 50 E. 3. "The Commons of Tividale, as well Religious as Secular Prayen. But what would Dr. A. conclude from hence? Not I hope that these Commons-Religious of Tividale, were the Convocation-Clergy, or the Commons Secular of Tividale, the House of Commons? That would be Ridiculous to suppose: But the Commons of that Country brought in their Petition to the Lower House of Parliament, and they presented it, as they did the City of London, and many other particular Towns, and Persons Petitions, to the King in Parliament.

His next Instance is yet less to the Purpose, if possible, than the foregoing: ⁶ "The Commons of the Diocese of York complain of the outrageous taking of the Bishop and his Clerks for Admission of Priests to their Benefices. Now these Commons, to make this Instance pertinent to Dr. A's Purpose, must be the Convocation

Convocation of York. The Words 'tis plain imply no such thing; and as for K. EDWARD the III. the Matter of Fact, the Convocation of York, as I have shewn, met not till Three Weeks after this Parliament was risen; so that all this Divination must be as False, as it is without Ground.

But Dr. A. goes on: In the same Year a Constitution of Simon Islep is said to be made, "de Consilio & Consensu Fratrum Nostrorum in Parlamento presentium, & procuratorum Absentium." Does this Gentleman consider what He writes? A Constitution of Simon Islep made in Parliament, 50 E. III. who died in the fortieth of that King, ten Years before that Parliament sate? That would be Extraordinary. But we will allow of his Mistake: It was made Anno 1351, and in haste he took the Anno 51 for the Year of the King, which was a part of that of our Lord. What does he infer from it? Why, "this Decree, he says, we must believe pass'd in Convocation, and that Meeting therefore was then esteem'd Parliamentary; for why else should the Bishops, when Acting in their Convocational Capacity, be spoken of as present in Parliament?"

What a Company of Inferences are here to prove nothing but the perpetual Errors of him who made them? This Decree we must believe pass'd in Convocation? Why must we believe this? Did the Archbishops in those days make no Decrees, either with, or without, the Consent of his Brethren, but only in Convocation? Dr. A. will not for shame say so. But what if it had been done there? How would that have infer'd that the Bishops Acting in Convocation, must have been esteem'd to act Parliamentarily? The Archbishop, with the Consent of such of his Bishops as were come up to the Parliament, and of the Proctors of those who were absent, made the Decree of which we are speaking: This is all that the Words imply. They say nothing of what Capacity they Acted in; nor favour any such strange Notions as this Author advances. In short, to lay aside our Own Arguing, and come to plain Matter of Fact: No Convocation was then sitting; This order was made, February the 18th; on March the 1st following the King's Writ went forth for calling the Convocation. It sate not till May the 2d, almost Three Months after this Decree was made: And how they could act in their Convocational Capacity in Parliament in February, when no Convocation met till May, I shall leave it to Dr. A. himself, on Second Thoughts, to tell us.

And thus are we come to the End of this long Reign: Let us now stop a little, and take a short Review of the History of it, and see what the State of Affairs, as to the Points under Debate, was in it.

Sect. 66.

1. Dr. A. affirms, that the Clergy broke off their Attendance on the Parliament intirely under this Reign, and absolutely Exchanged it for their own Provincial Assemblies. But, on the contrary, it appears, that this Attendance was not only still Exacted by the King, but was still paid by the Clergy; who apparently continued to come to, and Act with the Prelates in Parliament. And I cannot but wonder, what should move an Author, who would be thought to be an Advocate for our Parliamentary Rights, to add so much more time, than in truth he ought, to the otherwise too long Disuse of them.

2. Dr. A. cannot hear it said, without Indignation, that the Great Design of the King in calling the Convocations of the Clergy was to obtain a Supply of his Urgent Needs from them. Yet this both the King's Writs, and the Archbishop's Mandates, fully declare to be the Truth; and to them I appeal to determine this Point between us.

3. Dr. A. concludes that the Convocations of the Clergy were (in this Reign) perfectly Parliamentary-Convocations. That whenever a New-Parliament was Summon'd, a Convocation was Summon'd to meet with it: That both these sate Concurrently with one another: Whereas, upon enquiry it appears, that these two Assemblies had no manner of Relation to, or Dependance upon each other. Abundance of New-Parliaments were called, and no Convocation in either Province called with them. Sometimes Convocation-Writs were issued out the last Week, or Day; sometimes a Week, or Two, after the End, of the Parliament; as if it had been on purpose to Contradict this Hypothesis, and to shew that they were not to be Concurrent with, or Dependant the One upon the Other.

It could hardly have been thought, but that in Fact it appears so to be, how few Convocations, and Parliaments, in this long Reign did chance to

K. EDWARD meet together. ¹ Twice only in these fifty Years, did the Two Convocations sit at the same time with the Parliament. ² Even the Convocation of our Province met but six times in all this Reign, within any part of the Parliaments Session, and that of York in none of them Concur'd with it. Of those six, ³ Two, if not Three, are so Circumstantiated, as utterly to overthrow his Hypothesis; and make more against, than for, his Opinion. In short the History of this Reign, from one end to the other, plainly asserts the Prerogative of the Crown, as well as the Rights of the Clergy; and shews that as the one did still keep up their Parliamentary Interest, and come to those Great-Councils, and fill up the State of the Clergy there; so the other did Summon Convocations whenever he thought fit, either at the same time with his Parliaments, or at any Other, as it seem'd most for the Convenience of his Affairs to do it.

Nor is Dr. A. at all more happy in his By-Points, than he is in his main Fundamental Assertions: Truth does equally Desert him in the One, and in the Other; for I am unwilling to say that he has equally Deserted the Truth in both.

4. The Province of York is represented by him as a kind of Subordinate Province, which has no Rights, or Authority of its Own, but is obliged almost Implicitly to follow whatever its Masters on this side Trent shall think fit to prescribe to it. But the History of this Reign shews that they were not such Slaves as he would make them. ⁴ That they did sometimes set an Example to Us, instead of taking it from Us. And sometimes when we went before them, yet, for all that, refused to follow our Pattern.

5. The Right of the Lower Clergy to a Place, and Voice in Ecclesiastical Councils, as well as in State-Convocations, is another considerable Point, asserted by Dr. A. A Great Canonist is Reviled, after no Ordinary manner, for contradicting this Notion; and not foreseeing at almost Three Hundred Years distance, what Paradoxes would come into this Author's Head to maintain, several Ages after he wrote. But here we see an abundant Conviction both of his Error, and his Uncharitableness. To Convocations we find the Lower-Clergy Summon'd, as proper and necessary Members of them. But to Councils, they were only Invited; Admonish'd to come, if they thought Good; Promised to be Admitted if they Petition'd for Admittance; but not Required to be present, nor threaten'd to be treated as Contumacious if they were not. Nay, and many times they were not so much as invited, but the Bishops met alone, and acted without them. This is plain in Opposition to Dr. A's Unjust Reflections upon that Great Man, only for his own Mistake: And may deserve to be consider'd by some Others, who have unawares espoused his Error, tho' not his Passions; and too implicitly followed him, both in his Notion, and in his Censure.

King RICHARD the II.

Sect. 67.
1377.

But not to insist any farther upon these Remarks: Let us proceed to enquire how things stood in the next Reign, and whether that will afford us any Proofs of such Matters, as 'tis certain hitherto we have met with no Footsteps of.

King RICHARD being come to the Crown, June the 21st, On the 4th of August following issued out his Writs for the Parliament to meet, a fortnight after Michaelmas, October the 13th. To this Parliament the Clergy were not only Summon'd by the Bishop's Parliament-Writ, but continued to come too. ⁶ Infomuch that at this very time the Archdeacon of Richmond, in the Other Province, being detain'd by his Affairs, so that he could not come in Person to this Parliament, was forced to send his Proxy to it, to appear there, and to Consent to what should be done, on his behalf.

In this Parliament a large Number of ¹ Petitions were presented by the Clergy to the King. They were tender'd in the Name of the Prelates and Clergy of the Provinces of Canterbury and York; that is to say, of the Clergy of the Realm Summon'd by the King to this Parliament. And tho' I cannot say with some, that this is a certain Proof that the Lower-Clergy were then in Parliament, (because ² 'tis certain Petitions were prefer'd in the Names of those who were no Members of that Great Council, nor yet Called to it) yet I think it is a fair Presumption; and being added to the two things before observ'd, that the Clergy were still

Called

Called to Parliament, and that we see the Archdeacon of Richmond, tho' out of the Province, and at so great a Distance, was yet forced to depute a Proctor to excuse his Personal Absence from it, will warrant us to conclude against Dr. A's Suggestion, that the Lower-Clergy had not yet exchanged their National Attendance in these Councils, for a Provincial Meeting in their Own Respective Convocations.

K. RICHARD the II.

The King having thus Summon'd his Parliament, upon August the 4th, on the 29th of September following, that is to say above Eight Weeks after, issued out two Provincial-Writs to the Archbishops for calling the Convocations of their Respective Provinces. And because we are now entring upon a Reign, in which these Assemblies of the Clergy came somewhat nearer together, than ever they did before; it may not be amiss to make some Remarks once for all here, to clear the Matters under Debate for the Twenty Years which are to follow in it.

First then, it must be consider'd, that by the Writs of August the 4th, the King Assembled his Parliament, and Commanded the Bishops of both Provinces, to order their Respective Clergy to come to it, at a determinate Time, and to a certain Place; at Westminster, October the 13th. Thus was the Parliament-Convention of the Clergy fix'd, about two Months before any Orders were given to Assemble the Provincial-Convocations.

On September the 29th. The Writs going out for the Convocations to meet; the King leaves both the Time, and Place, to the Archbishop's Direction: Only proposes thus much with Relation to both, that the Archbishops should cause their Clergy to meet at St. Pauls London, and at St. Peters York; after their usual manner, within as short a time, as they conveniently could. In these therefore a different Place is proposed from that of the Parliament, and no time at all Limited for their Meeting: Which sufficiently shews, that the National-Convention, and Provincial-Convocations of the Clergy, were intirely distinct Assemblies, both in the Eye of the Law, and even in Fact too.

Rot. Claus. Rich. II. m. 31. Dorso.

The design of these Convocations was purely to grant a Supply to the King: The Writ avows it to be the End for which they were Called, and I hope it will be no Crime in me to affirm what the publick Instruments of the Realm warrant me to say.

Unde in Salvationem Status Ecclesie Sancte & Regni ac populi

prædictæ necessariam defensionem, Sumptus, ac Censur, & Expensas inestimabiles—Effundere nos Oportet. Verum quia de Copia Thesauri vel Bonorum in primordiis nostri Regiminis, nec mirum, penitus alieni, ad ipsorum Onerum & Sumptuum Supportationem absq; juvamine fidelium nostrorum non sufficimus, sicut scitis, Vobis in fide, &c. To call his Convocation. Then it follows.—Et eis dictis Negotiis & periculis ibidem plenius expositis & declaratis, ipsos ad Subsidium in hoc casu Competens & Necessarium in Supportationem dictorum Onerum & Sumptuum nobis concedendi, eo specialius, & cum Efficacia quâ magis sciaveritis, vel poteritis, tanta Necessitate causante inductis, & partes Vestras ad hoc Effectualiter apponatis: Nos in Cancellaria nostra de quantitate subsidii illius, & de terminis Solutionis Ejusdem Certificantes.

The Convocations being thus Order'd by the King, were accordingly Summon'd by the Archbishops: That of our Province to meet on Munday, November the 9th, a Month after the Parliament began, and not three Weeks before it Ended: That of York, December the 1st, three days after the Parliament was risen.

Regist. Sudbury Cant. fol. 41. Regist. Alex. Nevell Ebor. fol. 6. b.

Here therefore it is plain, even to Demonstration, that three different Assemblies of the Clergy met this Year: A National Assembly, with the Parliament at Westminster, October the 13th: A Provincial Convocation of the Province of Canterbury at St. Pauls London, November the 9th: And another of the Clergy of the other Province at St. Peters York, December the 1st.

It appears by the Rolls of Parliament, that the Parliament rose, November the 28th; and that they had before their rising made their Grant to the King. And what that was, and after what manner it was pass'd, the same Rolls thus deliver to us. "The Lords and Commons grant to the King two Fifteenths

And pray, that as well this, as the Money de les dismes ore a Granters par la Clergie d' Engleterre, should be assigned to certain Treasurers. So that the Parliament had plainly granted two Fifteenths and Tenths to the King, the 28th of November; and that before the Clergy in Convocation, had granted any thing.

What therefore ¹ Dr. A. tells us, that the Clergy this Year gave a Tenth, on Condition that the Commons (so he reports it, but the Register speaks more properly, Domini & Communes Temporales) gave a Fifteenth, must needs be a Mistake, tho' the Register of Archbishop Sudbury does, I confess, speak to the same Purpose. The Error may perhaps arise from hence, that the date iiii^o Non. Decembr. should have been iv. Kal. This will reduce it to the very Day of the Parliaments rising, which was commonly the day of their Grant too; and on which we may suppose the Clergy did not certainly know, how much, or after what manner they would Grant their Supply to the King.

'Tis true, for some occasion or other, of which we can give no certain Account, the Commons were kept a Week after the End of the Parliament, before they had their Writs of Expences signed; and they were allow'd that time into their Attendance. But their Grant being made on the 28th of November, it can hardly be thought but that the Clergy must have known it before the 2^d of December: And therefore we cannot suppose that they should have made their Grant on such a Condition, as the very Terms of the Parliaments Aid had before prevented.

If in a Matter of this kind I may be allow'd to offer my Conjecture I should think, that the King kept the Parliament from separating till the Convocation of our Province had agreed, not only to the Subsidy which he desired, but to the Time which he propos'd of paying of it. The King's Affairs required a speedy Supply: The Laity were willing to comply with the Publick Needs; and, at their Instance, the Clergy of Canterbury agreed to pay in their two Tenths before the 1st of March. The Archbishop of York and his Prelates, who were at the Parliament, we are told, consented to do likewise. But the Clergy of that Province were not willing to comply with this Proposition. ² The King therefore wrote down Letters, not only to the Archbishop, but to the Chief of his Clergy also, to induce them to a Compliance, in this Particular. "He charged them "with what they had agreed to at the Parliament: He insinuated to them the "Memory of their former Actions; how they of the Province of York, in the "time of his Grandfather King Edward the III^d, had always used to be as ready, and forward to help the Crown, as the Clergy of Canterbury: And therefore pray'd and required them not to disappoint Him now. He urged them "with the Consideration of the Publick Good; and bade them take heed that "any Evils that might arrive for want of a speedy Supply, were not laid to "their Charge.

Sect. 69.

³ Rights, &c.
p. 339.

Dr. A. who never fails to make the most of his Proofs, infers Abundance of Conclusions from this Letter, in which I cannot agree with him. The ³ first thing which he would insinuate, and for which indeed he alledges it is to shew, that what the Clergy granted in Convocation, was look'd upon by the King to have been granted in Parliament. But this, in his Sense must be impossible: For the Parliament was dismiss'd, November the 28th: The Convocation of Canterbury did not grant till the 5th of December; nor that of York till about the same time in January following. Either therefore by the Tenths, and Fifteenths here spoken of, and said to have been granted in Parliament by the Clergy, and Laity, we must understand those which the Parliament did themselves Grant; or if we take in those of the Two Convocations, they must be said to have been granted in Parliament, not that they were absolutely given there (for that he himself will not say;) but as they were promised by the Parliamentary Prelates and Clergy; who often made their Grants, as far as concerned themselves in Parliament, of what was afterwards nevertheless to be passed in Convocation; and thereby the more easily carried what the King desired in that Assembly.

⁴ Walsingham.
p. 184. Anri-quit. Britann.
p. 253.

This we are sure was the Case not long before, Anno 1369: And our ⁴ Historians therefore speak of what was granted in the Convocation in February, as given in Parliament the May before. And I make no doubt but that for this Reason what was solemnly pass'd in the Two Convocations, being promised before by the Principal Members of them in Parliament, is here said to have been granted there. This is plain that the Archbishop of York, and the Prelates of his Province, had agreed to Anticipate the usual time of Payment, whilst they were at the Parliament, before ever their Convocation met; and we need not doubt but that they had also agreed to the Tenths that were to be Granted, as well as to the Terms at which to pay them.

It

It is not therefore because that the Convocation was then accounted a Part ^{K. RICHARD the II. d.} of the Parliament, that what was done in the One, was sometimes said to be done in the Other: But because what was afterwards more fully agreed to, and pass'd in Convocation, had before been resolved on, by the Prelates, and Clergy in Parliament, (tho' it could not be totally concluded there) therefore in such Cases, the Grant was spoken of as made (for so indeed it was) in Parliament; notwithstanding that it was afterwards to be brought before the Convocation, and there be agreed upon by those, who had no Place, nor Voice in Parliament.

From that part of this Letter which says, "that the Archbishop of York and the other Prelates of his Province who were at the Parliament, agreed to the time of paying these Tenths; ' Dr. A. makes this Second Inference: " No ^{Rights, &c.} mention of the Lower-Clergy of York Province; because they at THAT TIME ^{P. 339.} were NOT PRESENT, but HOLDING a CONVOCATION at HOME, together with all the Prelates of their Province who were not Barons of Parliament. This is another Consequence forged purely out of his own Brain. The Convocation of York was not sitting at the time of this Parliament; and therefore the Lower-Clergy were not at THAT TIME holding a Convocation at home. On the contrary, the Clergy of that Province were present at this Parliament, as both their Parliamentary-Petitions shew; and the apparent Instance of the Archdeacon of Richmond, puts it out of all doubt.

Yet once more: Because to insinuate the more into them the King took notice of their wonted Readiness to assist the Government; How they had been accustomed to do in like manner, and as well, on such Occasions, as the Province of Canterbury had been; Dr. A. infers another Conclusion, as weak as either of the Preceding, that "the Convocation of York, was look'd upon as under some kind of OBLIGATION to FOLLOW the PATTERN SET by THAT of CANTERBURY. Let him draw Conclusions as he pleases: They are Innocent things, and will never much hurt the Rights and Liberties of the Province which he would enslave by them. But let him not mis-represent Matters of FACT to do it by. The Words of the Letter He thus renders; That he (the King) "had written to the Archbishop of York, praying and requiring him (in Consideration of that Agreement in Parliament, and ACCORDING TO THE CUSTOM ESTABLISH'D IN EDWARD THE III^d's TIME, FOR THE PROVINCE OF YORK TO DO ALWAYS AS THAT OF CANTERBURY DID) to take Effectual Care that all his Clergy did their Duty in this Respect.

Sect. 70.

Here now is a Rule set out, on which to bring that Province into Subjection; and to oblige it to follow all the Orders, and Practices, of that of Canterbury. No Liberty is left them, of Deliberating, or Dissenting: Not so much as the Right of Disposing of their Own Money, the great Privilege and Birth-Right of every English-man, if Dr. A. may be believed. This is a great Hardship; and for which they are beholden to the Good-will of this New-Antiquary. But does Dr. A. think to blind Men's Eyes, that they should not see the Foulness of such a Translation? The Words of the Letter, except One, of which I doubt, are in English, these. Having taken notice of some among them who notwithstanding the Great Necessity, and apparent Peril of the Realm, would delay the paying of their Tenths; He tells the Abbot, to whom he wrote, That he had thereupon written to the Archbishop of York, "Praying and Requiring him, that considering the things above-said, and how the Province of York had been Accustomed (or wont) in the time of his Grandfather--- to do in like manner, and as well, as those of the Province of Canterbury had done, he would so manage, and agree Matters between Himself, and his Clergy, that the Tenths might be paid the 1st of March, or very soon after.

These are the Words of that Letter; and the Design of them was plainly this. The King to insinuate into the Affections of those of that Province, and to gain his Point upon them, after many other Reasons urged, takes notice of their past Readiness to promote the Publick Good. How in the time of his Predecessor, they had been wont to do in like sort, and as well, as the Other Province did; and therefore he hoped they would do so now, in the first Instance of his Reign. But for "a CUSTOM ESTABLISH'D in Edward the III^d's time for the Province of York, to do ALWAYS as that of Canterbury did, 'tis all Fiction; such a Misrepresentation of a Record, as nothing but a Charitable Supposition of his

his being mistaken in the Understanding of the Old French, if that, can Excuse.

To clear this Matter yet farther, and shew how little it makes to any of his Purposes when truly Represented, I shall take the Liberty of pursuing more particularly the History of this Grant, in the Province of York, tho' otherwise of no Consequence to my main Design. The Archbishop called his Convocation, as I have before said, to meet at York before his Commissaries, on Tuesday the first of December. Being met, they refused to conclude upon any Subsidy, notwithstanding all the Arguments that the Commissioners could use to induce them to it. Hereupon they Prorogued the Convocation to Munday, January the 4th; when the Archbishop himself being present, urged all the several Considerations specified in the King's Writs, and all other Reasons that he himself could think of, to induce them to such a Grant as was desired.

Had the Archbishop, or Clergy been acquainted with that Notable Agreement of which Dr. A. speaks, made in King Edward the III^d's time; all this Trouble on both sides might have been spared. One short Word had done the Business; "Thus much, the Clergy of Canterbury have granted, to be paid at such a time; and you know the Obligation which you lie under to follow their Example. But these were Notions which our Forefathers knew nothing of; and therefore we ought not to wonder, if they did not act by them.

After long Debates, and much arguing, they at last agreed to a Two Years Tenth, and so far follow'd (with much ado) the Pattern of the Other Province. But in the Terms of Payment they widely differ'd. They agreed to pay One whole Tenth upon the 3^d of May next following: The other at Two Payments on the last of November, and the 25th of March, after. It was upon the Occasion of this delay that the King wrote to the Archbishop of York, and to the chief Prelates of the Province, those Letters of which Dr. A. Cites One, which was sent to the Abbot of Selby. In what Terms that to the Archbishop of York was composed, I cannot tell: But by the Report which the Archbishop made of it, none of those things upon which Dr. A. the most insists, are to be found in it. He tells the King, in his Answer, that He had received his Letter by which He press'd him in Consideration of the Duke of Lancaster's Voyage, and of the Other Nobles, agreed upon in the last Parliament, to procure the hastning of the Two Years Tenth; and in order thereunto to call his Clergy again together, and Labour this Affair with all Dilligence. That accordingly on the 22^d of March (Three Weeks after the time of Payment set by those of the other Province) he had held another Convocation; and caused the King's Letters to be publickly read to them, and press'd them with the Consideration of the present Dangers to which the Kingdom was exposed; and with such Other Arguments as might be likely to move them to conform themselves to the Grants of the Prelates, and Clergy, of the Province of Canterbury. That the Result was, that considering the necessary Defence of the Church, Kingdom, and People; and being willing to please the King by complying with his Desires in the Beginning of his Reign; they did agree to pay their Two Tenths, sooner than they had before proposed; the One upon May-day, the Other on the Feast of St. Margaret, the 20th of July following.

This is the plain Account of this Affair, from the Archbishop's Certificate, which, for the Confirmation of my Report, I have placed intire in the Appendix. And now let any Man of Conscience judge, what is there in all this that looks like that Slavish Obligation, which Dr. A. would so injuriously lay upon our Neighbour Province? Where are there any Arguments drawn from his pretended Agreement to induce them to comply with the King's Desires? Any the least hint given, that ever any such thing was thought of on either side? The King urges them with the Consideration of the Duke of Lancaster's Voyage, which called for a more speedy Supply, than they had designed. To this the Archbishop added, the Dangers to which the Realm was exposed; but of their Obligation to do as the Other Province had done, not a Word does appear. The Clergy themselves comply'd, out of regard to the Publick Safety, and the desire they had to Gratify the King in his Demands, at his first coming to the Crown. But neither do they give us the least Cause to think, that they had any Apprehension of an Obligation lying upon them, servilely to follow the steps of the Other Province. The more Thanks ought we of this Province to pay to him for the Discovery;

Discovery! And the less Reason have we to wonder at his making the Convocation of Canterbury to be the Parliaments Attendant; it being of no great Moment when such a little Depending Province met, as had nothing to do, but to take its Measures from the Other; and humbly to submit to whatever that should think fit to impose upon it.

This Useful Letter to the Abbot of Selby, as Dr. A. has managed it, He places under the Second of King Richard the II. For what reason I cannot imagine. The Circumstances of the Grants made both by the Parliament and Convocation; The Month in which it was written; The Great Circumstance of it, concerning the Duke of Lancaster's Expedition; All shew that it belongs to his first Year: And there is no date in the Register, by which to justify his placing it in the Second.

The next Year the King held his Parliament at Gloucester, the Wednesday next after the Feast of St. Luke the Evangelist, October the 20th. To it the Clergy were called by the Premunitory Clause, and by the Proxies return'd from the Dean and Chapter of York to it, we may reasonably suppose that that Clause was not only Executed, but Obey'd too, by the Clergy who were at the greatest Distance, and might therefore the most easily have been Excused. It sate a whole Month; and much Business was done by it. On the Munday after the Purification, a Great Council was also held; and of the Clergy, almost all the Prelates, as well Abbots as Others, were present. Yet during this whole Year, no Convocation was Assembled in either Province, so that the Doctrine of Attendance, here again, notoriously fail'd.

latz siben Abbees come Autres, Ducs, Contees, Barons, Bannerets, & autres Sages du Roiaume.

But one thing there was done during the Parliament of Gloucester, which will deserve to be taken notice of. On the 16th of November, the Parliament rose: The same day, the Archbishop of Canterbury went apart with his Suffragan Bishops into one of the Chambers of the Abbey; and there holding a Provincial Synod with them, made an Order concerning the Salaries of Priests; which from his Register is Published in the Second Volume of our Councils. This was another Remarkable Transaction; and from both together I shall leave these two Observations to every indifferent Persons Consideration; * That here was a long and a busy Parliament, held, and no Convocation with it: * And at the Close of this Parliament an Ecclesiastical Synod of Bishops only; no Presbyters, no Regular Prelates, called into a part of it.

The next Year begins with a Parliament, which was Summon'd to meet a Fortnight after Easter, and accordingly was held on Munday, April the 25th. To this Parliament the Dean and Chapter of York deputed their Proxies: The Prior of Worcester, provided for one to excuse Him, if need should be, for that the King's Writ, however it came to pass, was not Executed upon him. In the Diocese of Lincoln, a Tax was laid upon the Clergy for the Wages of their Proctors, as well for their Attendance on the Parliament, as in the Convocation. All which being put together, does in my Apprehension sufficiently shew, against Dr. A's Assertion, that the Clergy still continued to come to Parliament, as well as to Convocation; and did not think the One, any Excuse, or Exemption, to free them from going to the Other.

Insuper vestram Amicitiam imploramus, si nunc in instanti Parlamento—aliquid de Persona nostra sit tractatum, —Nos meliori modo quo Vobis placeat excusare—scientes quod Comparere in hoc Parlamento non fuimus Premuniti: Sed Comparend. personaliter nunc in Convocatione Cleri 9 Maij prox. futur. Dominus noster Episcopus per quoddam Mandatum nos Premunivit. Had Dr. A. been by this Prior, he would have taught him better, than to make such a difference between one of these Assemblies and the other; and have told him that being in Reality both but One, One Premonition was enough for him.

Four days after this Parliament began, the Convocation of York was opened. The King by Writs of the 16th of March had order'd each Archbishop to call his Provincial Clergy together, at a Time, and Place to be appointed by them. The Archbishop of York, fix'd April the 29th. The Archbishop of Canterbury, May the 9th; both within the time of the Parliamentary Session. How long the Convocation of York continued, I cannot tell. By the Archbishops Certificatory of their Grant dated June the 20th, it should seem to have sate late in that Month, and so to have continued a pretty while after the Parliament was ended. But ours of Canterbury tho' it began so late, yet rose before the Parliament; The

About the ² middle of January following a Second Parliament was Summon'd, and held. It continued to the Beginning of March; and by way of Loan, granted a farther Subsidy to the King. By Writs dated December the 2^d, the King Summon'd the two Convocations, after the same manner that he had done before. The ⁴ Archbishop of Canterbury Cited his Province to St. Pauls London, the Saturday after the Purification: It sate till the End of February, and so began almost Three Weeks after the Parliament, and was Dissolved a few days before it. But in the Other Province, this State Attendance, which else had been most Current this Year, unfortunately fail'd. For ⁵ that Archbishop Assembled not his Convocation till the 4th of April; above a Month after the Parliament had been risen. Both these Convocations were called expressly for ⁶ Aid: And I cannot find by the best Accounts I can get of them, that any thing else was done by them.

On Munday after All-Saints day, November the 5th, 1380. another ⁷ Parliament was held at Northampton. It sate till about a Week in December; and was then Dissolved. In this Parliament, a considerable Sum of Money being demanded of the Commons, they ⁸ came into the Parliament, and made this Offer, that if the Clergy would bear the Third Part of the Charge, they would grant to the King a 100000*l.* in the way of the a Poll-Tax: So that the Laity should pay 100000 Marks, and the Clergy, who Occupied a Third Part of the Kingdom, 50000. And therefore pray'd the King and his Lords, that they would desire the Clergy to hasten the Term of their Council, and Assembly; and for this time take upon them the Charge of the 50000 Marks. To this the Clergy reply'd, that their Grant was not ever made in Parliament, nor ought to be: That the Laity, neither ought, nor could Constrain the Clergy; nor the Clergy them. That therefore the Commons should be charged to do their Part; and they might be sure the Clergy would not be wanting in theirs.

The Parliament had almost sate out its time, before the Archbishop of Canterbury thought fit to call the Clergy to Attend upon it. His Convocation, order'd by the King's ⁹ Writ of September the 28th, to meet either at Northampton, or at any other Place, and at such Time as the Archbishop should think fit, came not together till the ¹⁰ 1st of December. The Business of it, being to grant a Subsidy, the Clergy dispatch'd it in a very little while. They agreed upon it December the 5th. And so rose after all, a day before the Parliament ended.

If it be needful to prove the Parliamentary Convention of the Clergy which began November the 5th, and held till December the 6th, to have been in FACT, as well as LAW, a different Assembly from the Provincial-Convocation which met not till the 1st of December, and, as I take it, rose upon the 5th; the different Proxies of the Prior, and Convent of Worcester, may, I think, supersede the Need of any other Arguments in this Case. Which were not only signed at different times; the One October the 14th, the other November the 25th; but expressly the former for them to appear in Parliament, the latter in Convocation. But because there is something particular in that of the Prior, dated October the 4th, which in One Instrument contains a Proxy for both these Assemblies, I will give it a place in the ¹¹ Appendix; and thither refer those who yet need to be convinced of the Distinction of these two Meetings from each other, to take a View of it.

The Convocation of our Province, met but a few days before the end of the Parliament; yet still it met within the time of its Session; and that is enough to give Dr. A. a handle to assert the Attendance, how short soever it were, of the One upon the Other. But here again, the dilatory Proceedings of the Archbishop of York, quite spoil'd the Hypothesis: His Province met not till ¹² January the 10th; that is, not till five Weeks after the Parliament was ended. These Convocations, like all the rest, were called expressly for ¹³ Subsidies: If Dr. A. can tell us any other Ground for which they were Summon'd, let him take his time to favour Us with the Discovery of it.

If

If not let him once for all ingeniously confess, that this was the End, and the only End the King had in calling of them.

In the Year following, 1381, a Parliament was Summon'd to meet at ¹Westminster on the Munday next after the Exaltation of the Holy Cross, September the 16th; but by new Writs dated ²August the 22d, was Prorogued till Sunday, November the 3d, the Morrow after All-Souls day. Being met at the Time appointed, it ³continued sitting till the 13th of December following, when it was Adjourn'd to the Fryday before the Conversion of St. Paul, January the 24th; and from thence sate till February the 25th.

This was the State of the Parliament of this Year: Of which tho' there were two such Sessions as I have now observed, yet I cannot meet with any Convocation that was held in either Province with them. It is true, that a few days before the Resumption of this Parliament after its Adjournment; the King issued out his ⁴Convocation-Writs to the Archbishops, dated January the 14th, to call their Provincial Clergy to their Respective Convocations. But neither in Archbishop Courtney's Register, nor yet in Archbishop Nevills, nor in the many Others which Record the Affairs of these Times with great Exactness, can I find any Execution of them, or that any Process was made upon them. It may be Archbishop Courtney, who scrupled so much as to have his Cross carried before him, or to do almost any thing that belong'd to his Archiepiscopal Jurisdiction, before he had received his Pall from Rome, (which was not till May following) excused himself to the King as to the holding of a Convocation for the present, which till they had received their Pall, we know the Archbishops in those days accounted it unlawful to do; and the Meeting of the Clergy being thus put off in One Province, the King suspended their Assembling in the Other also.

No sooner was the Pall deliver'd to the Archbishop, and all things now removed that might give any scruple to his tender Conscience, in the Point of Duty and Obedience to his Spiritual Father and Patron, the Pope; but he immediately set himself upon the Great Work of proceeding against Hereticks, who now began, under the Conduct of Wickliffe, to infest the Church. For this he appointed a Court, I cannot properly call it a Council, of certain Select Bishops; of Doctors, and Batchellors of Divinity; and of the Canon, and Civil Laws; to meet the 17th of May in the Monastery of the Preaching Fryars, London; and there Published certain Conclusions the 21st of the same Month, and proceeded against certain Persons, who were suspected, or otherwise charged with the defence of, what they called Heresy. The Process of what was here done being Publish'd in our Councils from the Archbishop's own Register, I shall not need to insist any longer upon it.

It is not impossible, but that Dr. A. who knows so well how to turn every thing to his Advantage, may be willing to make the happy Concurrence of this Meeting with the ⁶Parliament, which began about ten days before at Westminster, a Convocation-Attendant upon it. But indeed it was so far from that, that it was not so much as an Ecclesiastical Provincial Council; but only a Select Consistory of Bishops, and Doctors, Learned Men chosen by the Archbishop to be his Assessors, and Counsel, in his proceeding against Heresy; and was continued by him in several Places and Sessions, till the 1st of July: As by a ⁷Copy, yet unpublished, of their Proceedings in the Cotton Library, may more fully appear.

I shall therefore take the Liberty notwithstanding this small Convention, to affirm that we have here another Parliament held, and no Convocation at all Assembled in either Province with it. The next which met was upon the ⁸Octaves of Michaelmas the sixth of October following. It continued sitting nineteen days; and that again without any Convocation, in either Province, to Attend upon it. Yet before the meeting of this Parliament, the King by his ⁹Writs to the Archbishops, dated September the 14th, required them to Assemble their several Convocations, and they both of them did Summon them according to his Command.

The first which met, was that of our Province: The King, according to the usual Form, had left the Archbishop to his Liberty to Summon his Clergy to St. Pauls London, or to any other Place, as well as on such a Day, as he should think fit. The Archbishop having at the same time a Design to make a strict Enquiry into, and Process against Heresy, in the University of Oxford, resolved at once to answer both the King's purpose, and his Own; and accordingly required his ¹⁰Clergy to meet in the Monastery of St. Frydeswide there, November the 18th, about a Month after the Parliament was risen.

the 11d.

Will Dr. A. give me leave, before I proceed, to Ask him only in this Case: Was not the Parliamentary Convention of the Clergy, which met at London October the 6th, and sat there till October the 23d, and was then Dissolved; both in Law and FACT, a different Assembly, from the Convocation which met November 18th at St. Frydeswides Oxon: and Sat there till the 26th of the same Month, and was then Adjourn'd to London in the Octaves of Epiphany following? Yet these both met in the same Province, and were Summon'd by the same Writs, in point of Form; that all the Other Convocations of those times were. But I proceed:

pendix.

The Convocation being Called by the King Expressly for a ¹ subsidy; (which runs thro' the whole Body of the Kings Writ,) did accordingly grant him an Aid, tho' but a small One, of half a Tenth. But the Archbishop had Other Work to do; and I must beg leave to give a distinct Account of it, to Prevent any mistake that may otherwise be made about it.

I have often before Observed, that tho the Lower Clergy were Proper and Necessary Members of our State Convocations, yet they were not so of our Provincial Church Councils. To keep up the Distinction of these Meetings from One another, it was the Prudence, as well as Custom, of former Archbishops, when they were minded to transact any Ecclesiastical Affairs, at the same time that they were Called to Do the King's Business, to Issue out separate Mandates of a Different Form; the One in Execution of the King's Writs to hold a Convocation; the Other by their own Metropolitocal Authority, to Convene a Church Synod.

This Method of proceeding, kept up a sensible Distinction between the One and the Other, tho' both sat perhaps in the same Week, and Consisted in good measure of the same Persons, only called after a different manner, to be present in both. But Archbishop Courtney thought such a Summons to be Needless: He looked upon it to be enough, that having his Suffragans present with him (by whatsoever Means) he Authorized them by his Command to Act as a Synod with Him, Exclusive of the other Members of the State-Convocations; and so made them as Effectually a Provincial Council by his Order, and Direction, as if he had sent a Previous Mandate to them to that Purpose.

34. a.

Here therefore we must observe how this Same Meeting treated of Different Matters, and Proceeded after a different Manner upon them. ² Being Assembled in the Chapter-house of St. Frideswide Oxon, November the 18th, the Certificate of the Bishop of London for Summoning the Convocation was read. Then the King's Treasurer presented his Letters of Credence from his Master; which being Read, he Declared the Dangers of the Kingdom, and Demanded a Subsidy in the King's Name, of them. When this was done, the Archbishop Proposed to Them the Two General Causes of their Assembling, namely for Correcting of Excesses, and Reforming of the Injuries done to the Church; and for Granting a Competent Subsidy to the King.

This was the Business of the 1st Day: On the 2d, the whole Convocation being Come together, the Archbishop Commanded the Proctors of the Clergy that they should meet in some decent, and fitting Place, and there Treat of those Things. The Lower Clergy being thus Set to work upon their Convocation Business; ³ the Archbishop committed his Place with Authority of Compelling by Ecclesiastical Censures, to the Bishops of Sarum, Hereford, &c. to Enquire into such as Taught, or Maintain'd, the Heretical Opinions which he had before Condemn'd, and to CERTIFY HIM of what they should discover in the Premises.

They Enquired accordingly, and several being brought before the Archbishop, in Synod, Abjured their Heresies. Thus were the Affairs of this Assembly Carried on; and it being the First Instance in which I find any Church-business to have been done by the Bishops in Convocation after a Synodical Manner, without the Previous Authority of a Synodical Mandate, meerly by the Direction and Command of the Metropolitan after they were met in Convocation, I thought it the more needful to give this distinct Account of it. Archbishop Sudbury, not long before, had done something of the same kind in the Parliament at Gloucester; and what he did with his Bishops when Called by the King to Parliament, without any Mandate at all from him; Archbishop Courtney now, more Regularly, did with the same his Suffragan Bishops, Assembled, not only by the King's Writ, but his own Mandate, in Convocation.
 In the mean time what was done by Them both in the One, and the Other, was not only a Synodical Act, but was done in a Synodical Assembly: The Archbishop, and Bishops, were the only Persons, who passed the Decree about the Salaries of Priests in the One, and for the Condemnation of Heretical Propositions, in the Other.

 at Westminster, ⁵ February xxiiij, and continued to March the 10th. But the Convocation of our Province met by Adjournment, from Oxford, at London, on the

The Clergy of our Province having in this Last Meeting Granted another half Courtney, fol.

 a Week after, Jan. xxviii. issued out a ⁷ New Writ to the Archbishop of York, to Call a Second Convocation of his Clergy, and to prevail with them to do likewise. 7 Rot. Claus. 6.
 This Writ being thus Timed, about a Month before the Parliament was to meet; Ric. ii. par. 1.
 might have passed with Dr. A. for an Attending Convocation, regularly Summon'd m. 3. Appenin order to that End; but that all the Circumstances of it plainly shew, that dix. Ad Ann.
 the sole Reason which the King had to call it, was that the Other Province had granted him a Second Subsidy, and therefore he hoped, by this new Assembling of them, to Get the like of the Clergy of York. The Writ has many things remarkable in it, and this among the Rest; That the Archbishop hav-

RICHARD ing Assembled his Clergy, "ut est Moris, after the usual Manner, and Declared the II. "to them as well the Dangers before mention'd, as the Grant of One Tenth made "by the Clergy of the Province of Cant. as aforesaid; should induce them to Grant
 "the like Tenth, or some Other Competent, and Equivalent Subsidy, for the Sup"port of his Expences, with all the Care that he could.

It is not impossible but that Dr. A. may from hence infer that the Clergy of York were under some kind of Obligation to do as those of Canterbury had done before them. But I believe, all Indifferent Persons will Conculde the Quite contrary; that tho' the King did indeed Expect that one Part of the Clergy of the Realm should be as ready to Assist him as the Other, yet their Example was only a Motive to Induce, not a Law to Compel them, in such Cases: Like the King's Dangers before spoken of, it was to be used by the Archbishop as an Argument to perswade them to Grant the Same, or some other Equivalent Aid, to that which Those of the Other Province before had Granted; but not as a Declaration of what in Duty, not only to the King, but to the Clergy of Canterbury, their Superiors and Directors, they were bound to do.

When this Convocation met; how long it sate; and what it Granted; I am not able to say. Most probably it is that it Assembled the beginning of February; and Granted the Other Half Tenth which was design'd: But in this I speak by Conjecture only, having no Authority to Guide me in these Particulars.

 such as he tells us they now constantly were. But the Archbishop understood not this *Registrum Servile Doctrine; and therefore delay'd their Meeting till the ⁴ Second of December; Courtney Arch. when they met, and made a Grant of two half Tenths, the One Absolute, and Cant. fol. 78. a. the Other Conditional; which, with a Deliberation upon another Grant demanded on behalf of the Pope, was all that was done in this Congregation.

1384. The very beginning of the Next Year, on ⁵ Friday after St. Mark, April the 29th
 *Dugd. Sum- another Parliament was held at New-Sarum. It followed the Example of the last monit. Parl. p. Parliament before, and ⁶ Granted a Subsidy with this Condition, that the Clergy 319. should do likewise. With this Parliament a ⁷ Convocation was called to meet
 *Rot. Parl. 7 in our Province on the Feast of St. John ante Portam Latinam, May the 6th, and Ric. ii. par. 2. so to have sat concurrently both in Time, and Place with it. And tho' the ⁸ num. 11. Archbishop here again took a little more Liberty to delay his Convocation, than *Rot. Claus. 7 Dr. A's Cause can well allow of; yet he held it at the Place of the Parliament; Ric. ii. m. 12. In the Church of St. Mary Sarum; and that on the xxth of May, a Week before dorso. the Parliament Rose. But was this done as a matter of Right, to pay Attendance
 *Registrum on the Parliament? Or was it for the Convenience of the Bishops and Clergy Courtney fol. who were to meet there? Let the Summons of the other Convocation made by the
 79. a. King at the same time inform us; which was appointed by ⁹ Writ to meet upon *Rot. Claus. the Morrow after the Translation of St. Thomas the Martyr; July the 8th, Six Supr. cit. Weeks after ther Parliament was Risen. The Proceedure was Rational, and carries its own Evidence along with it: The Clergy of our Province being to meet at the Parliament, no time could be so proper to save their Trouble, and Expences, no Place so Convenient, as about the time, and near the Place of the Parliaments Sessions. But the Clergy of the Other Province being to come so far to Parliament, could not with any Convenience hold their Provincial Convo- cation, till after their Return; and therefore their Session was to be Adjourned till such a time as they might be supposed to have been got back to their own Province, in which they were to meet.

What the Business of these Convocations was, for which the King called them, His Writs speak. He wanted Money, of them, and for that he Assembled them. They drew up their Grievances, and gave a half Tenth; and this is all that I can find was done by them.

On the Morrow after St. Martin, November the 12th, the Parliament sat again: and the King Summon'd our Convocation to meet within a few days of it, November the 17th. The Archbishop put it off to the 1st of December: and yet even so they sat for several Days together. The Great Transaction of this Convocation was the Protestation of Archbishop Courtney in full Parliament, against the Condition which the Commons had now the Third time been putting in to their Grants, in Derogation of the Rights and Liberties of the Clergy; namely, "that they would give such a Subsidy to the King, Provided that Convocation granted so much, or after such a manner, as they thought fit to prescribe. Against this the Archbishop Remonstrated in a very remarkable Manner; and because I do not find any Entry of it in the Rolls of this Parliament, I shall the rather give it a place in my Appendix, as I find it Recorded in the Archbishops Register, among the Acts of this Convocation.

The Archbishop being Gratified in what he desired as to this matter; the Convocation Granted two half Tenths; the One Absolute, the Other on Condition that the King himself went on the Expedition against the French. But the King's Necessities were not thus satisfied; and therefore a New Convocation was called about the middle of January, for a farther supply of them, to meet before Midlent. The Archbishop being concerned at this, used all Possible Endeavours to divert the King from Calling another Convocation so soon after the foregoing. He wrote to Him with Great Earnestness to With-draw his Writ: He acquainted him how they had been forced to Refuse any Contribution to the Pope, till after the time of their Grant to himself should be Expired. He shew'd him that nothing New was offered to induce the Clergy to any farther Grant which had not been Consider'd by them before. He wrote, in like manner, to the Chancellor, and Treasurer; to the King's Confessor, the Bishop of Landaff; and to the Bishops of London, Winchester, and Exeter, who were then at Court; Exhorting them to do what they could to perswade the King off from this Convocation.

But the King Persisted in his Resolution; and as I conceive, by New Writs dated February the 24th, Required the two Archbishops to Assemble their Clergy the One at London, the Other at York, the Monday before the Feast of St. George, April the 17th. The Archbishop Obey'd; and called his Convocation accordingly to meet at St. Pauls the Morrow after the Invention of the Holy Cross, May the 4th. But in Testimony of his Dissatisfaction he came not to it, but Commissioned the Bishops of London, and Winchester, to Preside in his stead in it. They Continued the Convocation to the Monday after Corpus Christi day, and then, by order of the Archbishop, it was Dissolved by them.

About the beginning of June, the King held a Great Council of his Lords at Reading. But the Archbishop of Cant. being upon several Accounts displeased at the Kings's Proceedings, appeared not at that, any more than he had done at the Convocation before.

Continuat. Polychron. MS.

With these last Convocations no Parliament was Called, but they were Assembled by themselves, for the King's Occasions; and thereby shew Us, that when they met with the Parliament, it was only because the King thought fit that they should do so. The Fryday before St. Luke. October the 20th a New Parliament was held: And to the Comfort of Dr. A. the King's Needs, (which in this whole Reign were very pressing) prompted him to issue out his Writs on the same Day, to Call a Convocation with it. Dr. A. has been pleased to affirm, concerning these Assemblies, that even when the King left the Time wholly to the Archbishop, so that by the Tenor of the Royal Writ, He might Summon his Convocation when he pleased, yet still it was understood that the Archbishop was to be concluded to the Time of the Parliament sitting; or as near to it as might be. This was the Result of his own Fancy; and not founded either upon Law, or History. For indeed so far was the Archbishop from accounting himself confined ned in the Time of his Summons when the King left him at Liberty, that even when he fix'd a Day to him, he did not think himself obliged by it, but took any Other Day that he thought more Convenient for his Assembly.

I might have offer'd several Instances of this before; but it is not too late to do it now; and we have here a Sufficient Evidence to confute his Notion, and confirm my Assertion, in this particular. The King by his Writs assigned the Eve of St. Simon and Jude, October the 27th for the Day on which both the Convocations should meet; the one at London, the other at York. But the ¹ Archbishop of Cant. deferr'd his till the Sixth of November; which being within the Session of Parliament, Dr. A. will not perhaps be very Angry at it. That which is more Cross to his Purpose, was the ² Archbishop of York's Delay; who went beyond the King's Day almost Three Months; and held not his Convocation till the Morrow after Hilary, January the 14th, above five Weeks after the Parliament had been Dissolved. I will only add that these Convocations were wholly called for Subsidies; and I know of no Other Business that they did besides Granting of Them.

On the ³ 1st of October the next Year, a Parliament was held, which sate long; and did much; Not being Dissolved till the 27th of November following. About three Weeks after the Writs were sent out for this Parliament, ⁴ the Convocation Writs were dispatched to the two Archbishops to Assemble the Clergy of their Respective Provinces at London, and York, upon the xiiith of October following. What the Archbishop of York did in pursuance hereof, I am not able to say. But the Archbishop of Canterbury, enlarg'd the time to the 5th of November; so that his Convocation met not till above five Weeks after the Parliament was Assembled; and the Parliamentary Convention, by Consequence, begun. But 'tis enough for Dr. A. that it sate, however, within the time that the Parliament sate; let us see therefore how diligently it pay'd its Attendance, tho' late, upon it.

From the ⁵ 5th of November the Archbishop, after a little treating about the Business for which they were call'd, Prorogued them to the 8th. From thence by Commission, to the 10th; And from the 10th of November, to the 3d of December, a Week after the Parliament was Risen. So that in all this long Parliament of almost threescore Days, the Convocation met but three times, and that chiefly in Order to its being Prorogued to a farther Session. On the third of December they made their Grant to the King of a Tenth: One half absolute, the other with Conditions. And in the form of their Grant, having complain'd that the Clergy were more than ordinarily Oppress'd with these kinds of Exactions, they added; ⁶ "That nevertheless considering that they were assur'd by their Bishops that there was a pressing Necessity which required their Granting what they now gave, and withal, that the King upon the Mature Advice of his Noble Council in PARLIAMENT lately ENDED, at the Instance of the COMMUNITY OF THE REALM OF ENGLAND, specially deputed by the said King for the better Government of himself and his Kingdom, would employ what they gave, to the Publick Use, the said Clergy, do Grant, &c.

in Parlamento ultimo jam Elapso, ad instantiam Communitatis Regni Angliæ, per Eundem Dom. nostrum Regem pro suo, & Regni sui Regimine meliori specialiter deputati, Summam, sibi nomine Subsidii concedendam, in Usus pro defensione Regni & Ecclesiæ Angliæ magis Necessarios & Utiles converti faciet & Expendi—Concedit idem Clerus, &c.

These are the Words, of the Clergy's Grant in this Convocation: and two things may I conceive be fairly inferr'd from them; That if the Parliament were now Over, notwithstanding the Convocation was still sitting, then the Convocation is no part of the Parliament, nor was so accounted by them: And 2dly, That if the Commons in Parliament be the Community of the Realm of England, then the Convocation Clergy are no part of it; but at most the Community of the Clergy of that Province by whom they are deputed, and for whom they Act.

On ⁷ Munday the day after the Purification, a Long and Violent Parliament began: which continued by Sessions, and Adjournments, from thence to the 4th of June. ⁸ Its first Session held till Fryday March the 20th. From thence it was adjourn'd to a Fortnight after Easter: and so continued on (with another Adjournment, as I conceive, for Whitsuntide) till the beginning of June. It is not my concern to Enquire what was done, in all this time there. One thing only only I must Observe, because it will help to Clear a Matter of Fact, wherein the Clergy of the Other Province ought to have right done them.

the 11d.

The Convocation of the Province of Canterbury had the last Year granted two half Tenths to the King; but that of York, had, as I apprehend, refus'd to grant any thing at all. There was now a kind of Proportion Observ'd between the Clergy and Laity in these Matters; so that the One gave (tho' freely, and of their own accord yet) in such a Measure as was answerable to what had been granted by the Other. I have before observed, at the beginning of this Reign, How the Commons endeavour'd to draw the Clergy by an express Agreement thereunto. They put it as a Condition into their Grants, that they gave so much upon Condition that the Clergy should give so much, as they thought proportionable to it. And tho' Archbishop Courtney justly Excepted, and protested against this, as an undue Imposition upon the Clergy, and contrary to their Liberty which they had always enjoy'd of Giving as they thought fit; yet by a kind of tacit Consent the Clergy did observe the Rate which the Laity set, and make their Concessions, in some measure, suitable thereunto.

In the Parliament of the last Year the Laity had granted one half Disne, and one Fifteenth to the King; and another half Fifteenth, upon certain Conditions. The Clergy of Canterbury Gave two half Tenths, One Absolute, the other Conditional. But the Clergy of York seem to have given nothing, notwithstanding what both the Parliament, and the other Convocation had done. Upon this the Commons prefer'd a Petition to the King against them in Parliament; Praying that two half Tenths might be Levy'd upon them to the King's Use; and that if they refus'd to pay them, the King would please to Command Proclamation to be made, that none of his Liege Subjects should do Service to them, on pain of being put out of the King's Protection.

Rot. Parl. i. f.
Ric. ii. num.

The Petition was severe, and took a sure way to oblige them to a Compliance: But yet Rigorous as it was, it does not once hint at any Obligation which lay upon them to do as the Province of Canterbury did before them; Or move for any formal Punishment to be inflicted upon them, for not Obeying the Direction of their Masters on this side Trent. In short; they went upon the Principle of Common Equity, that the Burden of the Government ought to fall equally on all parts of the Kingdom, and that One should not refuse to do, what the Others found it needful to Comply with, for the Publick Good.

But let us hear the King's Answer, "One half Tenth, says he, is already Granted: And the King has wrote for the Grant of the Other: And in Case that they Refuse to give it, the King will order Remedy by the Advice of his Council. The Province, it seems, understood its own Freedom: First, it Gave nothing, notwithstanding what the Other had done. Then being pressed again, it gave but half a Tenth: And tho' the King had Written to them, yet the Other half Tenth was not given by them, when the Clergy of the Other Province made their New Grant this Year, as by the Declaration of that Convocation, we shall presently see.

To pass therefore from the Parliament, to the Convocation: By 2 Writs Dated January 12th. The Convocations of Canterbury and York were Summon'd to sit the 10th of February following. The Archbishop of Canterbury enlarg'd the time to the 26th of that Month: How that of York was held, or whether it was held at all, I cannot tell. The Archbishop could hardly Assemble it before he Came to the Parliament. In this Parliament he was Challenged, and Convicted of High Treason. That any Other Writ was issued out for a Convocation to the Guardians of the Spiritualities, do's not appear, neither by the Rolls of the Tower, nor by the Registers of that Province: And upon all these Accounts I am apt to think that the Summons fell, and the Convocation met not at all in pursuance of it.

As for the Convocation of our Province, It met, as I have before said, February the 26th, Three Weeks after the Parliament began. It sate but till the Fourteenth of March; and so Ended almost a Week before the first Session of the Parliament: And I think by both shew'd its self to be an Assembly utterly Independent upon it. That it Resumed its Session again after Easter, or Sate any of that time from the Middle of April, to the beginning of June, in which the Parliament again sate; I cannot find: Tho' not only the Archbishop's Own Register has preserved the Minutes of this Convocation, but the Extracts of those of five Other Churches are now before me, which All make Mention of the Session of it which I have now been accounting for.

Here therefore I must again implore Dr. A's Assistance; Either to shew me that some Convocation Met, and Acted, with the Resumption of this Parliament, for about two Months; Or to Acknowledge, which is the truth, that there was no such dependance of, or Connexion between, the One and the Other, as he has Asserted; but is yet (and I doubt will always be) to prove by any sufficient Argument either of Law, or Fact in this Particular.

The Clergy in this Convocation gave the King a half Tenth; but upon this Condition, among Others, which may further help to satisfy Dr. A. that the Clergy of York had no such Servile Dependance as he pretends, or that of Canterbury;

On the Morrow after the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin, September the 9th, 1388 the next Parliament was held at ² Cambridge. It sate to the 17th of October, and gave the King a xvth for the support of his Wars. The Scots were at this time entred in a Hostile Manner into England: To Oppose whom the Presence of the Bishops of the Other Province being thought necessary; the King by his Writs dated at ³ Northampton August the 20th, expressly excus'd their coming to it.

The same Day that this Parliament was Summon'd, ⁴ Other Writs were issued out to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Guardian of the Spiritualities of the Archbishoprick of York, for holding a Convocation in either Province. The Day appointed was the Munday after the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin, September the 14th. The Place, the Church of St. Mary in Cambridge, or any other which the Archbishop should chuse. The ⁵ Archbishop appointed it to meet at London October the 12. almost five Weeks after the Parliament began, and but five Days before it rose. Whether it be probable that he would have thus Exceeded not only the Term prescribed by the King's Writ, but, as he might reasonably have thought, the whole Session of the Parliament too, had he been of Dr. A's Opinion, and accounted the one to be a Necessary Attendant upon the Other; and which, for that Reason, ought to be held Concurrently with it; I shall submit it to any Indifferent Person to judge.

The Archiepiscopal See of the Other Province was, tho' not properly Vacant, yet under a present Suspension, Equal to a Vacancy. The Translation of Arundel Bishop of Eli, by the Popes Authority, to it, soon removed all Difficulties in that Particular. He was translated thither in September this Year: and so prevented the Convocation of that Province sitting by the Writ, directed to the Guardian of the Spiritualities, at the same time that the Other was sent to the Archbishop of Cant. A ⁶ New Writ therefore was sent to the Archbishop himself, Dated December the 18th, and in Vertue thereof, a Convocation was Called to meet at York, ⁷ January the 24th, more than twelve Weeks after the Parliament was risen.

On the 20th of October, three Days after the Session of Parliament, the Clergy of our Province granted the King a Tenth. For this they were ⁸ Expressly Called by the King; and this was the main, if not only, Business that they did, being met in Convocation. The Clergy here having made such a Grant, the Archbishop of York thought himself concerned to take Care that his Province which had shewn its self but too backward before, under its late Archbishop, should not fail to Act to the Kings Satisfaction now. For this End his Official (the Archbishop himself being not at leisure to attend upon it) prefaced his Mandate for the Convocation which was called to meet there in January, as I have said, to this Effect, which for the better Asserting of the just Rights of that Province against against Dr. A's bye Attaques, I shall particularly Recite. "Whereas our Venerable Father and Lord, the Archbishop, has long since intimated to Us by his Letters, that the Prelates, and Clergy of the Province of Canterbury, presently after the Parliament held at Cambridge, did freely Grant a Tenth to the Illustrious Prince, our Lord the King, out of their Ecclesiastical Benefices, and also of their Temporalties annexed to their Spiritualties, for the Support of the manifold Burdens which lie upon himself and his Kingdom, and that he was troubled with daily Clamours upon the Concessions of this Tenth; and considering how the said Clergy of Canterbury did also EXCEED the Province of York in the Payment of a Half Tenth, which has not YET BEEN GRANTED in ANY Wise in the SAID PROVINCE; least any Perverseness of delay in the Granting of this Tenth to our Lord the King, should hereafter redound to the Fault or Injury of the said venerable Father (which God forbid) he has particularly Order'd Us, who are his Vice-gerent, tho' unworthy, to Call together the Prelates and Clergy of the said Province, in Order to the making of such a Grant, that an Equality of the Gratitude of his Clergy, and especially in the first beginning of the said Venerable Fathers administration, may be accounted to make a full Recompence to our Lord the King, Temporalibus Spiritualibus annexis, illustrissimo Principi & Domino nostro Regi ad [Onerum] Supportationem sibi, & Regno Suo multipliciter incumbendum, Unam Decimam liberè concesserunt, quod super hujusmodi Concessione Decimæ in sua Provincia concedenda Clamoribus turbatus Cotidianis; attendens qualiter dictus Clerus Cantuariens. in Solutione Medietatis unius Decimæ Provinciam Ebor. Præcesserunt, quæ nedum in Provincia prædicta adhuc quovis modo est Concessa; Ne hujusmodi Decimæ concedendæ dicto Domino nostro Regi Retardationis Protervitas in dicti Ven. Patris culpam seu injuriam, quod absit, redundari poterit in futurum; Nos, qui Ejus Vices, licet immerito, gerimus, specialiter Ordinavit ad Convocandum Prælatos & Clerum dictæ Provinciæ super hujusmodi Concessione faciend. ut Equipollentia Gratitude Provincial' & præcipue in dicti Ven. Patris primordiis ipsi Domino nostro Regi plenarie Recompensari Censeatur.

This is the Sense, and almost the very Words of the Archbishop's Mandate; and they clearly shew the Case of the Two Provinces, as to the matter of Subsidies, to have been this; That the Clergy of both were wont to Act upon Equal Terms, and to Give alike to the Government: And that either Province thought it had a just Reason to complain of the Other, if being alike concerned in the Welfare of the Realm, and alike obliged to Promote its Peace, and Security; the one should Refuse to give its Share, or go about to Ease it Self, by casting a greater Burden upon the Other. But for any Obligation of Right; for any Custom fixed, or established in the time of King Edward the III^d, that the Province of York should be bound, in any wise, to follow the Example of that of Canterbury, any more than that of Canterbury the Example of the Other, 'tis a piece of Dr. A's Kindness and Civility to that Province, for which they Owe him their particular thanks. No Author, that I know of, ever pretended any such thing before; nor will any Antiquary that understands the true History of these Matters, ever pretend to do it hereafter.

The next Year the 2^d Parliament met on Munday after the Feast of Hilary, about the Middle of January. It sate till the 3^d Second of March, and made among others, two Brisk Laws in Derogation to the Popes Authority: The One against Provisions; the Other against bringing over of any Summons, Sentences, or Excommunications, upon the Account of the Making or Executing the said Statute. To cover themselves against the Proceedings of the Court of Rome, or else in Secret Compliance with its Excesses, the Archbishops in their Own, their Prelates, and Clergies Name, made Protestation in open Parliament against all such Statutes as were pass'd in Restraint of the Papal Power, or contrary to the Liberties of the Church. 4 Their Protestation was Admitted, Read, and Enrolled by the King's Command; notwithstanding it was made in direct Opposition to the Authority of the Crown, and the Acts of that Parliament.

Here now we have a Long, and a bold Parliament; but where shall we find the Concurrent Convocations of Canterbury and York? Let Dr. A. point them out to us; for tho' we have here as full and exact Entries both upon the Rolls of the Tower, and in the Registers of our Archbishops and Bishops, and their Cathedral Churches, as in any part of our History, yet I have not met with the least intimation of any.

The same was the Case the Year following: The 5th Parliament met of the 12th of November 1390. It continued till Saturday December the 3^d. Yet in all this Year, any more than in the last, I can meet with no Convocation in either Province; and do therefore conclude, that none at all was held either with this, or the foregoing Parliament in either. On the 12th of February ¹ Jo. de Malvern, a diligent Observer of these kind of Assemblies, tells us a Great Council was held at Westminster, and continued to the 15th of the same Month, which being not elsewhere taken notice of, that I know of, I thought it not amiss to give this short hint of it here.

We have now pass'd two Years without any Provincial Assembly of the Clergy to meet either Concurrently with the Parliament, or upon any Other Occasion. We must begin this with a Provincial Council: And that ² tho' call'd without any Writ from the King, or upon any State Designs, yet consisting of the same Members that our Convocations were wont to consist of. This Dr. A. ought to be pleased with; it being one of the First plain Instances of this kind of Summons that I have met with. But the Reason of it is obvious: The main Business of this Council was to deliberate upon a Subsidy for the Pope, which being to come out of the Revenues of the Lower Clergy, they were therefore to be called to Assent to it, as well as to be Obliged to the Payment of it. That therefore the Lower Clergy were cited to this Council, we are not to ascribe it to any Right they had of being present in such Assemblies, or rather to any Obligation (for so they accounted it) that lay upon them to be Constrained to Come to them; but to the particular Business which was here to be done in favour of the Pope; which could not be done without their Consent, nor their Consent be any where so Effectually Given as in a Provincial Synod.

This Council the Archbishop Summon'd to Assemble at St. Pauls London, ³ April the 17th: A Subsidy was Granted to the Pope by it; and a Constitution Renewed against ⁴ Stipendiary Priests, by the Archbishop, with the Consent of his Synod.

On the ⁵ Morrow after All-Souls the King held his Parliament at Westminster, and ordered the Convocations of both Provinces to meet about the same time with it. Had the Archbishops duly observed the day which the ⁶ King appointed, the Clergy had met in Convocation within Ten Days after the Laity in Parliament; and so might have sate almost Three Weeks concurrently with them. But all went Cross in this Particular, to the utter Ruine of the Doctrine of Attendance. ⁷ The Archbishop of York, being Lord Chancellor of England, and not in a Condition of Presiding in his Convocation, Ordered it to meet, by his Vicar-General the Munday after St. Clement, November the 27th; but by the ^{*} Proxy of the Church of Durham dated November the 28th, it seems not to have been held, before the 4th of the next Month. The ⁸ Archbishop of Canterbury delay'd his yet longer; till the 9th of December; a Week after the Parliament was Dissolved. So little Regard had either the One, or the Other, of these Great Primates, to the Session of the Parliament, in their Execution of the King's Writs, and the Issuing out of their Own Mandates thereupon.

The Cause of these Convocations was meerly to Grant an Aid to the King: ⁹ So the Writ of Summons declares, let Dr. A. be never so angry at it. Accordingly being met, they gave, in Each Province, a half Tenth to him; and did nothing else that I know of in them. When these Grants pass'd, I cannot precisely tell; but the Convocation of York being held Thirteen Days before that of Canterbury, I may venture to Say that here the Lesser Province set the Example, which the Greater (without any Derogation to its Rights, or Liberties let me speak it) as much followed, as at Other times that of York was wont to do.

The Convocation of our Province sate not the Last Year, till some Days after the Parliament was Dissolved: This Year the Doctrine of Parliamentary Concurrence and Attendance fail'd in both Provinces, and that more Eminently than it did in that One, on our Side, the Year before. ¹ On the 23d of July, the King issued out his Writs for a Parliament to meet at York the day after the Translation of St. Edward the King, October the 14th. This by ² Second Writs of September the 8th, was put off till a New-Summons: Which accordingly the King not long after sent out for a ³ Parliament to meet at Winchester on the Octaves of Hilary, January the 20th. This Met, and continued till ⁴ February the 10th. and then was Dissolved.

About

About a Month after these Writs went out for this Parliament, two ¹ Provincial Writs were sent; To the Archbishop of Canterbury, to Assemble his Convocation at Winchester, or elsewhere, on the Morrow after the Purification: To the Archbishop of York to hold his at St. Peters York, the Munday before the Feast of St. Peter in Cathedra, February the 17th. The Purport of these ² Writs was for Aid to the King; The Constant avow'd Cause of his Assembling of them.

Upon the Receipt of these Writs, the ³ Archbishop of Canterbury according to his usual Custom Summon'd his Convocation to meet, not at WESTMINSTER, but at London; Not the Day after the Purification, February the 3d; But on St. Matthias's Day, February the 24th. But before the Sitting of this Convocation, He seems to have Adjourned it yet farther: For by the ⁴ Proxy of the Chapter of Worcester, Signed there, February the 23d; it appears that the Convocation was not to sit till March the 3d, a Week Later still.

If this Account be true, we must then conclude that the Convocation of our Province met not till three Weeks after the Parliament was Risen. But the Convocation of York sat yet Later: It was called by the King's Writ to meet, February the 17th; a Week after the Session of Parliament was ended. And the ⁵ Archbishop appointed it, the Munday after the Feast of St. Gregory, March the 17th, and so put no less then five Weeks distance between them.

Here therefore what ever Attendance Dr. A. may fancy there was in this Case, to be sure there was no Concurrence: The One Convocation was not called to sit by the King till a Week after the Parliament was dissolved, and the Archbishops so order'd Matters, that they both sate at a much Greater Distance from it.

Nor was the Case much different the next Year: when the ⁶ Parliament met a Fortnight after Hilary, and continued till about the Sixth of March: The ⁷ Convocation of our Province, sate not till the Middle of May 1394. above two Months after: And that ⁸ of York, ordered by the King's Writ to meet on the 1st of March; the Week that the Parliament Rose; I suppose, came not together at all before it.

The Year following the Fortunes of Dr. A. are somewhat bettered: The Archbishops who commonly delayed the time of holding their Convocations, and by that means brake their Concurrence with the Sessions of Parliament, now conspired to bring them All together; and that after a very unusual manner. A ⁹ Fortnight after Hilary the Parliament sate this Year, as it had done the last. It continued till about the Middle of February, and was then Dismiss'd. The ¹⁰ Convocation of our Province called by the King's Writ to meet on the 5th of February, on the Feast of St. Agatha, met precisely on the day appointed; above a Week before the Parliament Rose. It out-sate it but three Days; and, so was in a very great Measure Concurrent with it. That of York was called by the King to meet the day after Matthias; and had it met accordingly, would have been altogether held after the Parliament was Risen. But the Archbishop, this Year, by an extraordinary Conduct, ¹¹ anticipated the day which the King Appointed, and Ordered it to meet the Tuesday after the Purification, in the middle of the Parliamentary Session.

Which of these Convocations, this time, set the Example to the Other, 'tis not hard to Guess: The Convocation of York as it met first, so it undoubtedly concluded soonest. The Clergy on our side not finishing their Grant till the 17th of the Month, two days after the Parliament was ended. I shall not need to observe that the ¹² King called the Convocations, both of this and the last Year, solely for Aid: That had been the Course throughout this whole Reign; without any one Instance that I know of to the Contrary. But from the Acts of our Convocation Dr. A. will give me leave to transcribe this short Minute: ¹³ That "being assembled in the Chapter House at Pauls, the second Day of their Meeting, they treated together super PRINCIPALI CAUSA hujus Synodi; of the PRINCIPAL CAUSE of their SYNOD; and at length dismissing the Clergy to the Cloyster under the Chapter-house, the Clergy caused a Schedule to be written concerning the Manner and Form of Granting One Tenth to the King.

the II. d.

This was the Language of the Convocation, as well as of the King, in those days. The Granting of a Tenth was allow'd by them to be the Principal Cause of their Assembling, even when they had another, which no doubt they thought a very Great Affair, before them; Namely, a Petition to the Archbishop of Canterbury their Primate, and to the Archbishop of York, at that time Lord Chancellor of England, for the effectual Prosecution, and Punishment, of the Lollards; the chief Objects of the Clergies hatred in those Days. When Kings, and Convocations, speak after this Manner: When the One in their Writs Call the Clergy together purely for Aid; and the Others Own That to be the Principal Cause of their Assembling; under the Shelter of such Authority, I may hope to cover my self from Dr. A's Passions; or if I cannot, yet at least may be allow'd to put no more Value than they deserve upon them.

But I must not conclude this Year, without taking notice of some other * Meetings of the Convocation of York; antecedent to that which sate with the Parliament, and has been already Mentioned. On May the 23^d a Proxy was issued out from the Church of Durham to Three Persons to appear for the Convent in the Convocation, to be held at York June the 1st. On the 11th of July, another was Granted for the Prior and Convent, in another Convocation to be held there, the 20th of the same Month. And again on Michaelmas day, September the 29th, a 3^d went out to the same Effect; for a Convocation of the Clergy to be held at York, the 1st of October following. What these Assemblies were held for, or what they did; I am not able to say. But having this, tho' but a short Account of them, I could not proceed without making some Mention of them.

The next Year, we have nothing to stop us; Neither Parliament nor Convocation, that I can find, being called within the compass of it. It was towards the End of the Year 1396 that the King Summon'd his Parliament to meet on the

By Writs directed to² the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury first, and afterwards to the³ New Archbishop of Canterbury, and by Mandates issued out from both of them; The Convocation of the Province of Canterbury met at London, February the 19th, about a Week after the Parliament ended. But it did but barely meet that day: For the Archbishop being now to be Enthroned, Prorogued the Convocation another Week by the Bishop of Exeter his Commissioner, and at the same time Lord Chancellor of England, till the 26th of the same Month. In this Convocation, the University of Oxford presented its Grievances to the Archbishop: Some Conclusions of Wickliffe were also tender'd by its Doctors, and the sense of the Synod desir'd upon them.

How these Matters proceeded, the Acts of the Convocation breaking off here, I am not able to say. Half a Tenth was granted to the King by the Clergy; as by the Writs for Collecting of it does appear. The Convocation of the Other Province was Summon'd by the King to Assemble at York, on Munday after the Feast of St. Matthias the Apostle, February the 26th, a Fortnight after the End of the Parliament; tho' we should suppose it to have sate on the very day that the King prescribed; so that neither this Year were the Parliament, and Convocations at all Concurrent with one Author. If Dr. A. shall pretend, that however they had a Relation to the Parliament which met the Month before, he will give me leave to say, that not a Word of this appears in the King's Writ: And the Archbishop's Mandate speaks quite contrary to it. He tells the⁴ Clergy that “tho' he earnestly desired at his first coming among them to keep the Prelates and Clergy of his Province from Chargeable Labours, yet he was forc'd by the Difficult Affairs which concern'd the Church and Realm, now newly arising, to Call them together against his Will; and that to this End he had also received the King's Writ.

What a strange sort of Preface would this have been upon Dr. A's Principles? Did not the Archbishop know that a Parliament being Summon'd in November before, and almost ready to meet e're his Mandate went out, the Convocation was, of Course, to ATTEND upon it; and therefore that no Apologies were to be made for for a Matter which both Custom, and the Constitution of our Government, had before this rendred Sacred, and Unalterable? Or could he think that his Clergy should read without Smiling, such an Affected, and Unseasonable Declaration of his Tenderness to them, in a Point in which their CHIEFEST RIGHTS were at Stake; and when not to have been Call'd to Convocation, would have been One of the GREATEST CRIMES that a New Archbishop could have Committed against them? This I think must be allow'd to have been reasonable upon Dr. A's Principles. Yet the Archbishop we see declared his Unwillingness to hold his Convocation, even when a Parliament was to Sit. He made an Apology for it; and shew'd the Necessity he was under, not for Attending on the Parliament (that never entred into his Thoughts) but for the necessary Affairs of the Church and Realm, and in Obedience to the King's Writ, of doing of it: And by all this has sufficiently intimated that this Necessary Conjunction of Parliaments and Convocations, was a Mystery yet unknown to him. The late Practice had indeed brought them oftentimes very near to one another in Fact; but He was not aware of any Law, or Obligation, that lay, either upon upon the King, or Himself, so to Continue this Practice for the time to Come.

But to return to what Remains of the History of this Reign: The Year following the King Summon'd his Parliament to meet at Westminster on Munday September the 17th. There it continued to sit till Saturday, September the 29th and then adjourn'd to Shrewsbury, on the Quindene of Hilary following. There it proceeded till the last of that Month, and so was finally Dissolv'd. About a Month after this Parliament was first Summon'd, the King by his Writs commanded the Archbishops to Call the Convocations, tho' not at any Great Distance from it, yet neither at all Concurrently (as Dr. A. would have us believe) with it. For that of Canterbury he assign'd St. Pauls London, October the 1st. For that of York, St. Peters York, October the 10th. Both after the Rising of the Parliament; which was on Michaelmas Day, September the 29th, as I have before observ'd.

By the Procuratorial Letters of the Church of Durham it appears that the Convocation of York met upon the same day that the King had appointed for it. There was another Convention of the Clergy held in the same place, five days before, as appears by the same Proxy; which enabled the same Persons to serve for the Convent in both. It is probable that the One was a Provincial Council for Church Affairs; as the other was certainly a State Convocation, called by the Authority of the King's Writ, for Aid and Assistance. That of our Province the Archbishop put off till the 8th of October: before which time his Troubles in the Parliament coming on, and his Banishment closely following thereupon, I suppose the Convocation fell with him, and did not meet at that time at all.

The Clergy of York, had in their Convocation granted half a Tenth to the King. To get the like or a greater Supply of our Province, the King by a New Writ (as I conceive) to his New Archbishop, caused the Convocation of the Province of Cant. to be held March the 2d, and obtained a Tenth and a Half Tenth of it. In none of these Sessions was any Regard had to those of the Parliament; which at its first Assembling rose Eight days before Our Convocation; Ten before that of York were to meet. In its second had no Convocation at all to sit near it in One Province; nor did any in the Other, meet, till above a Month after its Session was at an End.

It was necessary for me to observe with some Exactness the times of this Parliament, and these Convocations Sitting, not only for the better settling of the point in hand, but to shew withal the Disingenuity of an Instance, which after many Others as little to the purpose, Dr. A. has alledg'd to prove this Proposition

“That (in our antient Rolls) the CONVOCATION CLERGY are represented as Of the Parliament, and ACTING in it. On these he lays great Weight: and tells us that “the very STRESS OF THE DEBATE lies here. Let us see therefore what his present Instance speaks to this purpose. “21 Ric. 2. the Clergy of both *Pro-*vinces appoint a Common Lay-Proctor to Consent for them to some matters done in Parliament, which they could not lawfully be present at.— This *In-*strument is by Order Enroll'd; and the Right therefore which the PRELATES and INFERIOR CLERGY there Claim, of being of Every Parliament, and Acting in it, is by the King, and his Great Council, who order'd this Enrollment, *Ad-*mitted and Affirmed.

This is Dr. A's Proof; now to make it Pertinent to his Purpose, we must thus Explain it from the Terms of the Proposition which was to be prov'd, and which we have seen was this; "that the Clergy here meant, and Spoken of, in "this Roll were the CONVOCATION-CLERGY: And therefore the Right of the Convocation to be OF the PARLIAMENT, and to ACT IN IT, is hereby Admitted, and "Affirmed. This Dr. A. must allow to be the only way to make this Passage any thing to his Purpose; For as to the Bishops and Clergy called by the King's Writs to Parliament, He well knows that I am so far from denying them a Right to be OF that Great Body, and to ACT IN IT; that I contend against him, that they still continued both to be Summon'd, and to Come to it; and had not yet exchang'd their Right of meeting Nationally with the Temporality in Parliament, for a Solitary Provincial Assembling by Themselves, in their own several Convocations.

Rot. Parl. 21
Ric. ii.

But now this the Circumstance of the time when this Proxy was made, compared with that of the Convocations Assembling, shews to be impossible. ¹ On Munday, September the 17th the Parliament met: On Tuesday the 18th, the Speaker required that the Clergy should constitute a Proctor, and the Prelates agreed to it. This being done, they immediately impeach'd the Archbishop of Canterbury, and made such dispatch in it; that on the 25th of the same Month, They demanded Judgment against him. This Proxy then was made the 18th of September. But the Convocation was not Summon'd to meet till the 8th of October following; that is, till Twenty days after this Proxy was Agreed to. And how the Convocation-Clergy should be OF the PARLIAMENT, and ACT IN IT, twenty days before they came together, I shall leave it to Dr. A. upon farther Consideration to tell us.

To add yet more: The Convocation-Clergy by the Nature of their Summons, and Dr. A's own Confession, met Provincially: That of Canterbury at St. Pauls London; That of York, at St. Peters York. But this Proxy was made by the Clergy in a National Assembly; the Archbishops, Prelates, and Clergy of both Provinces joyn'd in it; and therefore the Clergy who made it could not have been the Convocational, as he pretends, but must have been the Parliament Clergy, as I affirm.

Will Dr. A. give me leave to add but One thing more in Contradiction to the Use he makes of this Instance, and I shall trouble him no farther at this time about it. I do not doubt but that the Inferior Clergy have at this day a Right to be Called to Parliament: I am perswaded that at the time of which we are now speaking, they did Actually Come to it; but yet, for all that, I very much Doubt, whether they had any thing to Do in the Business of this Proxy, to which Dr. A. makes bold to Intitule them, and that for these following Reasons.

Rot. Parl. 21
num. 9.

1st. The Ground on which the Speaker Required that the Prelates, and Clergy, should constitute a Proctor to Act for them, was this, ² "That Divers Judgments, and Ordinances, had been Repeal'd, and Annull'd, for this Reason that "the State of the Clergy was not Present in Parliament at the making of them. Now the only Case in which the State of the Clergy were wont to leave the Parliament, was in the Case of Judicial Proceedings: Where any thing was to be try'd that might reach to Life, or Blood; and at which they alledged that by the Law of the Church they could not be present. Such therefore of the Clergy only can here be reasonably understood, as by the Nature of our Constitution ought to have been present in such Cases, and had a Right to Judge in Parliament in such matters. But now this, I am sure, Dr. A. will not say the Lower-Clergy ever had: And therefore he must allow that they could not be meant by the Clergy spoken of in this Roll, who were to constitute a Proctor for that End.

Now to this, 2dly, The whole Process of this Matter agrees: For the Speaker having, upon the Ground before mentioned, Pray'd that "the King would "Command the Prelates and Clergy to make a Proctor, with sufficient Power to "Consent in their Name to All Things, and Ordinances to be Justified in this "Parliament, the Roll adds; that thereupon ever Spiritual Lord should fully "declare his Opinion: Upon which the LORDS SPIRITUAL being severally Examined, did Generally Agree to Commit their full Power to One Lay Person; "Namely, Sir Thomas Piercy Knight, and Delivered a Schedule to the King containing their said Powers. Here we see who the Prelates and Clergy before spoken of were; They were the Lords Spiritual; No Others are once mention'd, or hinted at on this Occasion. But it may be they acted for the Lower Clergy, as well as in their own Right? At Other times they often did so; but upon this Occasion, I think, they did not: Let us go on with the Roll, and see in what Quality they now Acted, and upon what they founded their Right of making such a Proctor, as they were here Allow'd to do. "We Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury; and Robert Archbishop of York, and the Prelates, and Clergy of both Provinces, "having, a Right by Virtue of our Churches, and the Temporalities thereof, to be "Present in Singular the Parliaments of our Lord the King, and Realm of England, and of Treating, and Acting in the same, do Give full Power, &c. This I take to be a Plain Declaration of the Ground on which they founded their Right: That it was by Virtue of their Temporal Baronies, annexed to their Churches, that they Claim'd a Common Power of Judicature with the Other Lords in Parliament, and thereupon now appointed Sir Thomas Percy to Act for them, in such a Judicial Capacity in which their Dignity in the State, gave them a Right to Act; but the Canons of the Church forbad them to Exercise that Right.

But tho I do therefore doubt, upon the Grounds before mention'd, whether Sir Thomas Percy were Designed in this Case to Act for the Lower Clergy, at all, yet I will not deny but that the Words of His Proxy may have been so framed as to reach to the Lower Clergy too; so that should he have done any thing, on that Occasion, in which they might have had a Right to Consent, He should have been Empower'd to Consent for them. It has been always usual in such kind of Instruments, to Grant Powers in a much larger Manner, than the immediate Occasion of them perhaps required. The Bishops Commission'd him in the Name of the Clergy, as well as of the Prelates: And the Commons Required a Proctor for the Estate of the Clergy; of which Estate, it cannot be doubted, but that the Lower-Clergy were a Part. And if he did consent not only to Judgments but Ordinances too, (as the Roll Speaks) in which the Consent of the Clergy was to be given, I shall not deny but that he therein Acted for them as well as for the Prelates. All that I affirm is this, that in Voting in such Judicial Cases, as were transacted in that Parliament, and for which this Proxy was made to Him, He Acted for the Bishops, and Prelates, only, not for the Parliament-Clergy; and yet much less for the Convocational Clergy, who had nothing to do with such Matters.

Upon the whole then; these two things may, I conceive, be justly Replied to this Instance of Dr. A. First that it is at least a Disputable Question, whether the Inferior Clergy were Really at all concerned in the Proxy to which he Refers. But should that be Otherwise (for I prescribe to no Mans Judgment in these Matters) yet that, Secondly, It is out of all doubt, that the Clergy there spoken of must have been the Parliamentary, not the Convocation-Clergy: The National Convention of the Clergy of the whole Realm, Summon'd by the Premunitory Clause to Parliament; not the Provincial Assembly, of either part of it, which met not till about Three Weeks after this Proxy was Granted.

The next Year we find no Parliament summon'd, nor any Convocation of the Province of Canterbury: Yet on the ¹ Second of January, the King by special Writs called a Select Ecclesiastical Council to meet at Oxford, the Munday after St. Paul's day, to debate of some things which touch'd the State of the Church, and to give the King their Advice, together with the University, Concerning them.

But to leave this Council, and consider the Convocation of the Other Province, which was Summon'd not long after it. The Clergy of those parts, had (as I before Observed) Granted to the King a Half Tenth in their last Convocation; but thro' the death of the Archbishop, and some Other Interruptions, the King it seems had not yet been Legally certified of it. And therefore on the ² 1st of August, He Issued out a Writ to the New Archbishop, Reciting his former Order for a Convocation, and Requiring him, if the Convocation had met, and Granted any thing to him, to make Certificate of it; Or, if not, to call one to meet on the 1st of September, and to induce them to Agree to a Competent Supply for him.

³ The Archbishop made his Return as Commanded; and upon the Receipt of it, a new Writ was issued out to him dated January the 27th, to cause the said Subsidy to be speedily Collected, and Paid, according to the Tenour of their Grant in that behalf.

On the same day another ⁴ Writ was made out for a New Convocation to be held at York, on Munday in the 3d Week in Lent. The Archbishop deferr'd it a Week later, and Order'd it to meet at Beverley, March the 11th. The Business of This, as of all the Rest, was for more Money. Those of our Province had at their last Meeting Given a Tenth and Half, to the Half Tenth only of the Clergy of York. They were therefore a Tenth behind in their Grants; and tho' the King did not charge them, as if Dr. A. had been of his Council he would not have faild to have done, to Consider their Duty, and the Custom Establish'd in the time of his Grandfather King Edward the III. for those of York to do always whatever the Clergy of Canterbury should think fit to do before them; Yet they knew that both the King, and the Clergy of Canterbury, did Expect that they should bear an Equal Share of the Publick Burdens, and not Ease themselves, at the Expence of their Brethren. This was the true Reason why the Convocation of the Other Province was now Assembled, at a time when neither any Parliament met, nor were the Clergy, on this Side, Called together: And it shews withal the Freedom of the King in Assembling of these Conventions; that he had a Legal Right to do it whenever he thought Convenient, whether at the time of the Parliament, or at any Other; And that again, The Convocations either of Both the Provinces together; Or only of One by its self; as he should judge it most Expedient for him to do.

But I must not close up this Year without Observing that there was another Convocation of the Clergy of that Province held at York, antecedent to any which I have yet mention'd, and of which all the Account I can give is this: That by Procuratory Letters dated June the 16th 1398, the Prior of Durham empowered one of the Residentiaries of the Church of York, with Others, to appear in his stead the 20th of the same Month, before the Honourable Mr. Richard Clifford Dean of York, and Keeper of the Privy Seal, who was to be sent thither by the King, to treat of certain Matters and Affairs which concerned the State of the King, the Realm, and Church of England; together with the Other Prelates called and Premonished to come thither by the King's Letters under his Privy Seal. This is all that I know of this Meeting; and the Instrument from which I took this, the Reader will find in the * Appendix; being the only Information I have met

To draw to an End of this unfortunate Reign: All was now in Confusion, and the King himself but an Honourable Prisoner; Subject to the Direction of those who had him in their Hands. In this State, ¹ Writs were Issued out for a Parliament to meet on the last of September 1399, in which he was to Resign his Crown. ² A Fortnight after this Parliament was Called, the Convocation of our Province was Summon'd to meet, tho' I do not find that there was so much as any Pretence of a Royal Mandate for it. Archbishop Arundell tho' he were returned with Lancaster into England, and had the chief Menagement of the Great Work which was then to be done; yet being not put into Possession of the Administration of his Archbishoprick, which the Pope, as well as King, had Given to another; the Mandates for it went out in the Names of the Prior and Chapter of Canterbury. The pretence of Summons was "pro utilitate Reipub. & tuitione jurium & libertatum Ecclesie atq; Regni." And the Order to the Clergy ran, to appear before Themselves, or before the most Reverend Father in God, the Archbishop of Canterbury, who was then in their Eye, and gave the Secret Directions for this Assembly. What the Design of this Convocation was, it is not hard to Guess: And I shall hereafter give a more particular Account of it. I shall only now observe that it was Summon'd to meet on the 6th of October, The very day on which King Henry the IVth's First Parliament was to be held: And we need not doubt but that it was from the first design'd, in Dr. A's New-Phrase to ATTEND upon the Parliament of the Rising Prince, not to accompany that of an Unhappy King, who was in one Day both to Open his Parliament, and to be Deposed by it.

To come therefore to that Great Council, with which I shall close up this Chapter: It met, as appointed, the Morrow after Michaelmas, and sate but One day; but in that Day it did a great deal of Business: It Deposed One King, and Made Another; and by a New Summons was Ordered to meet again, under its new Prince, the 6th of October, the very same day to which the Convocation had at first been Called. Here therefore was a most exact Concurrence between the State, and the Church Assembly: Tho' the latter being summon'd so long before, it may be questioned to which of these Parliaments its Attendance ought Legally to be ascribed; whether to that for which it was Called; or to that with which

which it Sate and was, I believe, designed from the beginning to Sit? But we will Suspend these Speculations till we come to the Survey of these Matters: And, at present, take only a short Review of what pass'd in this Reign, and so conclude this Chapter.

the 1st.

And 1st. From the History of this Reign, it plainly appears that the Lower Clergy still continued to come to Parliament, and had not, as Dr. A. is pleased to tell us, exchanged their Right of Sitting Nationally in that Great Council, for his imaginary Attendance in two Provincial Convocations. This is clear from the Parliaments of 1377, and 1379; (to say nothing of that of 1397) and to them I refer for the truth of it.

Sec. 85.

'Tis true, their Business was now reduced to a meer matter of Consent. Their Writs which heretofore cited them to Do as well as to CONSENT to what should be DONE by Others, from the 5th Year of this King, Ran only in the form of CONSENTING, without any allowance of a Power to ACT as before. But still for this Consent, they were not only Summon'd to Parliament, but they Came too; and, by their Bishops, did Consent to what was done there.

2^{dly}. Tho' Dr. A. be certainly deceived Himself, or I am sure would Impose upon Others, in what he advances concerning the strict Concurrence in point of Time between the Parliaments and Convocations of these Reigns: Yet thus far he must be allow'd to be in the Right, that under this Weak, and Necessitous Prince, they came nearer to One another, than ever they had before been wont to do. Great were the Wants of this King; and Constant his Demands both upon the Clergy and Laity for the Supply of them. For this Parliaments, and Convocations were frequently Assembled; and often times very near to, tho' not intirely at the same Time with, One Another. But still even under this Government, Weak as it was, the Rights of the Crown were preserved; and, the Independency of the One of these Assemblies upon the Other, to the Confusion of D. A's Hypothesis, abundantly demonstrated.

To Recapitulate this Matter in short, as it stands in the History before delivered, and as I do conceive it truly pass'd, during this Reign.

1. In the Two Twenty Years of this Prince, SEVEN Parliaments there were with only One Convocation Concurrent; and that oftentimes but in a very little Part of the Sessions too; In the Years, 1377, 1379, 1380, 1384, 1385, 1388, 1391.

2. With NINE Other Parliaments there was no Concurrent Convocation at all, in Either Province: Namely in the Years 1381, 1382, (Two Parliaments) 1383, 1392, 1393, 1396, 1397, (Two Parliaments.)

3. FIVE Parliaments were held, and No Convocation held in the same Years with them: Viz. Ann. 1378, 1381, 1389, 1390, 1393.

4. FOUR times Convocations were held, and No Parliaments called with, or near them: Ann. 1377, 1385, 1394, 1398.

In the Two and TWENTY Years therefore of this Prince, Dr. A's Hypothesis fails FIVE and TWENTY times; And that I think is abundantly Sufficient to Shew, that it was no Rule in this Reign, much less the settled Establishment of our Constitution, for the Parliament, and Convocation to Sit Concurrently with One Another.

But 3^{dly}. That the Design of this King in Calling these Convocations was wholly, and purely, on the Account of Money, to get Supplies from the Clergy, is so Evident, that let Dr. A. turn himself into whatsoever Forms he pleases, 'tis not in his Power either to Mistake, or Mis-represent it. The King's Writs speak it fully and openly to Us: The Acts of our Convocations shew it: And both demonstrate the intemperate Revilings of this Un-christian Writer against me for affirming of this Certain, and Evident Truth, to have as little of Justice, as they have of a Spirit either of Charity, or Integrity, in Them. This therefore I do here Once more Affirm, and I Affirm it with all that Assurance, that Truth and Innocence oblige me to do; That this was the main End for which our Kings were wont to Call these Convocations; and this was the main Business, that was generally done by the Clergy at these Meetings.

And these are such Assertions as are directly Opposite to the Scope, and Tendency of his Hypothesis: I add, in Opposition to One of his Bye-Points as he calls it; 4^{thly}. That from what has been before observed in this Reign it appears, That the Convocation of York, is not at all Dependiant either in its Assembling

K. HENRY the IVth. bling or Acting, upon that of Canterbury; so that it should be Obligated to Do, whatsoever our Province, thinks fit to Do before it. This is a Servitude which no Writer, that I know of, ever before pretended to impose upon that Venerable Body; and the Grounds of it are so Weak, that I am confident no Writer hereafter will ever Joyn with him in the like Attempt. And this very Reign affords us three Instances at least, to Confute his Pretences; Ann. 1377, 1387, 1388: And to them I refer for the Confirmation of what I here Assert on their behalf.

To conclude this whole Chapter: We have now Examined the State of our Parliaments, and Convocations for above a Hundred Years. We have Seen at what times they have Both been held; and tho' I dare not say that no Sessions of Either have escaped me; yet as I have not been wanting in my Diligence to discover them, so I do hope, that but few have. However, from what has been Observed, this Conclusion I will be bold to draw, let Dr. A. Refute it, if he can; "That, in all this time, there was no manner of Dependence of our Convocations upon the Parliament; but the King was at Liberty to Call Both whenever he pleased; and lay under no Obligation either of Law, or Custom, to Assemble the One, as Often as he should think it fitting to Call the Other."

C H A P. VIII.

The History of the Assemblies of the Clergy pursu'd, from the first of King HENRY the IVth, to the 25th of King HENRY the VIIIth. That neither during this Period did the Convocation ATTEND upon the Parliament, as Dr. Atterbury affirms: Whose farther Arguments in Proof of it, which fall within the present Period, are Examined and Answer'd.

SECT. I.

Hitherto we have enquir'd into that part of this Period in which Dr. Atterbury tells us the Two Convocations were the Closest Attendants upon our Parliaments; and in which indeed, according to his Principles, we had Reason to have expected that so they should have been. For if this were the Ground of their Attendance, as he pretends it was, ¹ that the Clergy desir'd to Exchange their coming Nationally to Parliament, according to the Premunitory Summons, for a distinct Assembling of themselves, in each Province, at the same time; and the King Accepted the One in lieu of the Other: If in Consequence hereof, they were accounted, even when they met in their own several Convocations, to sit no less by the ² Kings Parliamentary Writs, than by the Archbishops Provincial Mandates; and to be tho' not a ³ STATE of the PARLIAMENT, yet an ESTATE of the REALM ASSEMBLING with the PARLIAMENT: What could we Conclude less than that we should have seen them as Constantly, and Closely, Attending upon the Body to which they were thus nearly related, as these Principles require; and as indeed the very Notion of a PARLIAMENTARY ATTENDANCE does of its self imply. And accordingly all the Other Principles which Dr. A. so industriously advances, and so often inculcates, lead to the same Opinion. * That the Clergy mention'd in the Parliament Rolls, are to be understood of the Clergy in Convocation. * That the same Rolls speak of the Convocation Clergy as Of the PARLIAMENT, and ACTING IN IT. * That the Convocation is a Word of Art signifying a MEETING of the CLERGY in TIME of PARLIAMENT. * That as such it has been held to be an Assembly ⁸ ESSENTIAL to our CONSTITUTION. * That, at first, it met very near at the same Time with the Parliament: And tho afterwards ¹⁰ (about the time of King Henry the IVth) a greater Liberty was indulged, and taken; yet in Henry the VIIIth's time, things came about again into their ORIGINAL COURSE; which therefore must have been at first, as we know it has been since, for the PARLIAMENT and CONVOCATION WRITS, to Go out TOGETHER; and for both to Sit within a few Days of, and so continue to sit in Concurrence, with one Another.

Nor is this any more than what Dr. A. himself elsewhere in plain Terms tells ^{K. HENRY} us; when speaking of the first beginning of the *Convocation Writ*s, he has ^{the IVth.} these most remarkable Words to this purpose: "This gave birth to the ^{Rights p. 44.} Custom of issuing out Two CONVOCATION WRITS when a NEW PARLIAMENT ^{Compare pag.} was to be chosen: Which tho' set on foot before, yet SETTLED NOT INTO A ^{258. "These} RULE till some Years after Edward the IIIrd was in the Throne; and then it was ^{"Writs for a} PRACTISED AS DULY and REGULARLY, and in much the same manner, As It Is ^{"full Convo-} AT THIS DAY. The Consequence which, if true, must I am sure be this, ^{"cation Grew} that from King Edward the IIIrd's time, to King Henry the IVth's, whenever ^{"now the Com-} a Parliament was Summon'd, the Convocation was duly, and regularly, Called with ^{"mon firm; it} it; and met, as it now does, either exactly at, or at least very near, the same ^{"being a mat-} Time that the Parliament Assembled. ^{"ter of Ordi-} ^{"nary Prac-} ^{"tice to send}

"them out CONCURRENTLY with Those for a Parliament; in Edward the Third, and Richard the Second's ^{"Reigns: And still [Addit. p. 56. Whenever they went out] the Convocation was (as in the Preceding Instances)} ^{"Generally order'd to ATTEND a FEW DAYS SOONER, or LATER than the Parliament did, and not Precise-} ly on the Spot, where the Parliament Open'd, but at some Church, or Chapter House near it. Thus Dr. A. But ^{"least his new Addition of (whenever they went out) should be extended farther than we may suppose he design'd it; take his own Interpretation of that, Rights, &c. p. 250. Where speaking of the same Writs, he tells us, "That they} have been Regularly issued out, as often as a New-Parliament was Called, from the Latter End of Edward the IIIrd till Now, with FEW EXCEPTIONS to the Contrary; and with NONE from the first dawn of the Reformation in Henry the VIIIth's Reign down to this Present. And from THIS ANTIENT CUSTOM (as antient ^{"as the Compleat Settlement of our Constitution) the Clergy think themselves intitled to be Summon'd to As-} semble, and to SIT PROVINCIALLY, WHENEVER a NEW PARLIAMENT MEETS.

How truly Dr. A. has herein represented the Custom of the Preceding ^{Sect. 2.} Reigns as to these Matters, the plain Deduction which I have made of these Two Assemblies from Year to Year; and the short Table wherein I shall at one View present the Reader with a Prospect of this whole Period, when I have gone thro' those which yet remain to be considered, may suffice to shew. In the mean time to the Confusion of this bold Pretender, let me once more repeat here what I have before abundantly prov'd, That after the best Enquiry I have been able to make, but twice only can I find that in the long Reign of that very Edward of which he speaks, the two Convocations met at the same time with the Parliament; and in the Reign of his Successor King Richard the second, not many more. So DULY, and REGULARLY were these two Assemblies call'd together, during those Seventy Years! And such a Wonderful CONCURRENCE was there in the Meeting of them; "with FEW EXCEPTIONS to the Contrary.

I now proceed to the latter part of this Period, in which Dr. A. tells us, ^{Sect. 3.} that these Conventions were held "WITH A LATITUDE: pag. 75. And again; ^{"Rights, &c.} "That a greater Liberty was indulged and taken, p. 259. The meaning of which he ^{pag. 75. 259.} thus elsewhere discovers to us, with the Time from which he dates this change: ^{p. 48. "This was the usual distance (between the Meeting of the Parlia-} ^{"ment and Convocation) throughout Edward the IIIrd, and Richard the IIrd's} ^{"Reigns; till Henry the IVth began to Enlarge it: In, and After whose time,} ^{"the Clergy held their Assemblies DURING, and (he would have said, Or) NEAR} ^{"the Sessions of Parliament, but not Thoroughly Concurrent with Them: The} ^{"Archbishop, it seems, affecting Independency, and the King, who above all things} ^{"desir'd to stand well with the Clergy, favouring Him, and Them, in that respect;} ^{"and giving way to their being CALL'D LATER, or DISMISS'D SOONER, than the} ^{"Laity. This is the Account which Dr. A. Gives us of the Remainder of this} Period. Many are the Remarks which might justly be made upon it, but I shall content my self with this One; that if this be true, then we must conclude, that Archbishop Arundell, and his Clergy, were so far from thinking this Doctrine of Attendance to be a Right or a Privilege, that they us'd all their Interest to break off from it; and even Dr. A. himself is so far from Censuring them therein, that, as if he were of the same Mind, He tells us, that the King FAVOUR'D Him, and Them, in that respect: That is, He gave them leave to depart from their Great Right, and Privilege, of Parliamentary Attendance. A Royal Condescension, which I never thought Dr. A. would have Esteem'd, or Call'd a FAVOUR!

But to leave the Reflection, and come to the Thing its self, which we are to examine: The Convocations, He tells us, from henceforth met, tho' not Concurrently with the Parliament, as before; Yet DURING, or NEAR the SESSIONS of it. The Former of these Limitations carries no difficulty with it; For we generally know when the Parliament Rose, as well as when it began; and so shall easily discover how far the Matter of Fact is true, in that respect. But what shall we say as to the Latter of them? Or how shall we determine when a Convocation sits near the Session of Parliament? That I dare not undertake to determine; but must leave it to every One to judge of it as He thinks fit. Only I would ask Dr. A. if he please, Whether when the Convocation sate not at the SAME TIME with the Parliament, but only NEAR it; (Perhaps a Month, Two, or Three, before, or after it;) It still, nevertheless, continued to ATTEND UPON IT? And to what Ends, Purposes, or Advantages, to the Church or Realm, it did so ATTEND? Here therefore Dr. A. and I shall more easily agree; than we have yet done. I affirm that the Convocation in these times, was no ATTENDANT upon the PARLIAMENT; nor did either constantly, or necessarily sit at the same time with it. That the King and the Archbishops had an undetermin'd Power over both; and might, as they thought fit, either Summon both together; Or call the One, without being Oblig'd, by the Nature of our Constitution, to Assemble the Other. Dr. A. agrees that this is so far true, that from Henry the IVth's time, the Convocation met sometimes, DURING the SESSIONS of PARLIAMENT, and sometimes only NEAR it, that is to say, at ANOTHER TIME, and NOT DURING the SESSIONS OF PARLIAMENT: So that as far then as 130 Years Desuetude can break a Custom; supposing that there had been such a Custom before (which yet I have prov'd there was not) this Custom must have been destroy'd: And what a Custom disused for above a 100 Years is Good for in Law, I shall humbly submit it to the Learned in our Laws to determine.

K. HENRY

But however this Dr. A. stands to, that there was still tho' not a strict Attendance paid by the Convocations upon the Parliament, yet such a near Relation kept up between them; that whenever a New-Parliament was Call'd, a Convocation was to meet, either precisely at the same time with it; or, at least, within a little Distance of it: And that by the very Nature and Terms of our Constitution. Here therefore I take to be the point wherein Dr. A. and I shall still continue unfortunately to disagree: For he, unless he will give up his New Principle, must affirm that at every Session of Parliament a Convocation was Necessary to be held, either Concurrently with it, or at least very Near to it; so that without breaking in upon the Constitution of our Government, the One could not be called without the Other: And I, on the other side, must be permitted to Assert, till I shall be better Instructed, That our Kings were no more confin'd in their Prerogative on this side, than 'tis at last, I conceive, agreed, they were on the Other; but that they might, and did often hold their Parliaments, without calling any Convocation at all either with them, or near Them; as well as 'tis Allow'd they might, and did often Summon the the Convocation, without Assembling any Parliament to sit with it.

Sect. 4.

p. 18.

This therefore is the great Point, which I am here to pursue: And for the better clearing of which, there is yet one thing in which I should be glad that Dr. A. would a little further enlighten me. It is his own Observation, 'p. 18. that "till Archbishop Chicheley's time, Convocations were frequently held even "while Parliaments were sitting, without any Other Writ from the King but what "was contained in the Bishop's Summons, with the Clause Premunientes. Which Clause being a Summons to the Time, Place, and Assembly of Parliament; Dr. A. may as well say the Clergy were called to their Bishop's Visitation in Virtue of it; as to their Archbishop's Convocation. But to let that pass; and take what is, or I am sure ought to be his meaning; That in Arundel's, and Chicheley's time (to look no farther) Convocations were often held by the sole Authority of our Metropolitans, without any Writ from the King for the holding of them. The Question which I would ask, upon this Supposition, is this: Whether in such Cases where the Metropolitan, of his own accord, Summon'd his Convocation, without any Writ from the King, He did it by Authority of any Law, or in pursuance of any Obligation; which, by the Nature of our Constitution, lay upon him, to hold his Convocation, as often as the King Called his Parliament? Or whether He freely Summon'd it at his Own Pleasure, because he thought it Expedient so to Do?

If Dr. A. shall say that He held it freely, when he might have Omitted it; because he thought it Expedient, not because he was bound to do it; Then I conceive it will follow, that All those Convocations which we shall hereafter meet with, (whether of those Two Archbishops, or any Others) which were Summon'd mon'd by the Metropolitan alone, without the King's Writ, are not to be computed among those Parliamentary Convocations of which we are now discoursing; Which he tells us are Essential to our Constitution; necessary to be held in time of Parliament, or near to it; and to the Calling of which therefore, at such times, either the King, or the Archbishop, or some body, should be Oblig'd.

If to avoid this Inconvenience Dr. A. shall think fit to affirm that in Case the King did not issue out his Writs for Summoning the Convocations, whenever he Called a Parliament, the Archbishop of each Province was, by our Constitution, Oblig'd to Summon them without it; then I would beg leave to Enquire farther; How our Archbishops came to be so forgetful of their Duty in this Particular, as in all the Preceding Reigns, it is evident that they were? When nothing was more common than to see Parliaments held, without any Convocations Called either by the King, or by the Archbishops, to Attend upon them? How One Archbishop came oftentimes to Call his Convocation, and the Other at the same time, not to Assemble his; since both lay under the same Legal Obligation? Nay, which is yet worse, How when the King appointed the proper time for its Assembling; sometimes within the Session of Parliament, at others very near it; The Archbishops, as if they had resolved to be perverse, on purpose, to break in upon our Constitution, put off their several Convocations at their own Pleasure, till the Session was over; it may for some Weeks, or Months after it; of all which I have given several Instances already, and shall add many more in the Prosecution of this Period.

Till therefore it shall be shewn that our Archbishops lay under a Legal Obligation to Assemble their Convocations by their Own Authority, as often as the Parliament met, if the King fail'd to issue out his Writ to them for that End; I must be allow'd to conclude, that whenever they did Assemble them, at their Own Motion, and not by the King's Writ; They did it Freely, and Voluntarily; not because they were Obliged, but because they thought it Convenient so to do: And that all such Convocations therefore are to pass for nothing in this dispute, as not meeting to Attend upon the Parliament, but in Obedience to the Archbishop's Authority; because their Primates thought fit, of their own Choice, to Assemble them, when it was in their Power, without any Offence against our Laws, or Government, either in Church or State, to have let it alone.

Having said thus much both to shew what the Great Point which I am here to consider is, and to prepare the way for the Prosecution of it; I shall need add very little with Relation to those Secondary, and Subordinate Questions, which I have before said, are no less in dispute between Us. These continue in great measure the same still, that they were before; and therefore what I have before observ'd, may suffice for the Stating of them.

Dr. A. affirms that the Clergy left off to come Nationally to Parliament about the beginning of King Edward the III^d's Reign: I have Proved already that they continu'd to come to it till the End of King Richard the 2^d: And shall go on to prove that they came in like manner, (tho' in lesser Numbers every Year than Other) to the time of King Henry the VIth. How much longer, if at all longer, I shall hereafter Enquire.

Dr. A. denies that the chief End which our Kings had in Calling these Convocations, was for their Aid; so the Writs speak; that is to get Mony of Them, as well as of their Lay Subjects. He puts himself into the highest Indecency of Passion that it was possible for him to do, upon the very Mention of it: And Excels even his Own self in a way, of which tho' I may hereafter give some Specimen to my Reader, I shall forbear to call by its proper Name. Yet this I have before shewn to be undoubtedly true; and I must beg leave still to Continue in the Assertion of it.

Dr. A. in his Zeal, not for the Church of England, but the Church of Canterbury, Labours to bring the Other Province into a Servile Subordination to, and dependance upon Our Convocation; for what Reason I cannot Imagine more than for this One, that ours is Bigger than theirs. But this I have already proved to be an Unwarrantable Invasion of their Provincial Rights; and shall, as I proceed, still continue to shew by more and more Arguments that it is so.

But these are only our lesser Differences: The Main Points on which the Cause between us turn, are; Whether the Two Convocations, are by our Constitution a Necessary Attendant upon our Parliaments, and have for these Four Hundred dred Years past been so accounted? Whether in Consequence hereof, whenever a Parliament has been Summon'd, the Convocations have been constantly Call'd at the same time; and fate either during the Session of the Parliament (as in Edward the III^d, and Richard the II^d's Reign, He affirms that they did) or Near it; which is all that he will venture to affirm of the following times, to King Henry the VIIth, or VIIIth; for he does not very well know, which of the two to pitch upon. In Opposition to both, I affirm, that there never was any such necessary Relation between the Parliament and Convocation by the Rules of our Constitution: That they were Assemblies not only intirely Distinct from, but Independent upon One Another: Which our Kings Called at their own Pleasure, either at the same Time with, or at a different Season from, Each Other, as Themselves thought fit; and as the Urgency of their Affairs prompted them to do. Let us see which of these Opinions the History of the Times, which we are now about to Pursue, will best Agree withal.

King HENRY the IVth.

Seft. 7.

I before took notice how the last Parliament of that Unfortunate Prince to whom King Henry the IVth succeeded, was held at Westminster the day after Michaelmas; and a Convocation called, by the Authority of the Church of Canterbury, to meet at St. Pauls London the Week following. The Parliament being met and all the Estates of it having agreed to the Deposition of that Prince, the day of their Meeting; they resolved upon certain Commissioners, as their Proctors, to be sent to Him to the Tower, in the Name of All the Estates, to acquaint him with what they had done, and to give back their Homage and Fealty to him. On the part of the Clergy two Persons were appointed; and that, as Sir William Thyrning told the King when he was come with the Other Commissioners to Him, in this manner; "The Bishop of Seint Asse for Archbishops and Byshops; "and the Abbot of Glastenbury for Abbots and Priours, and All Other Men of Holy Church, Seculers, and Rewelers. That these Other Men of Holy Church must have been the Clergy ² Summon'd by the King's Writs to that Parliament, and together with the Bishops, and the Parliamentary Abbots and Priors, constituting the Estate of the Clergy of the whole Realm there; is too plain to need any Proof. For as for the Convocation of this Province, that was not yet Assembled; but was to meet a Week after: And it does not appear that any Convocation at all was call'd at this time in the Other. The Persons then whose Proctor, upon this solemn Occasion, the Abbot of Glastenbury was, must have been the Parliamentary Abbots and Priors; the Deans and Priors of the Cathedral Churches, the Archdeacons, and Capitular, and Diocesan Proctors: Who by the King's Writ were call'd to this Parliament; and either Actually were, or were look'd upon to have been Legally present at it.

And yet as plain as this is, Dr. A. has not doubted to bring this very Instance to prove this rash and dangerous Assertion; "That the Convocation Attended the Parliament as One of the Three Estates of the Realm. An Assertion which Himself thought it necessary in the next Leaf to qualify; yet still leaves it as bold as it is false: "That the Inferior Clergy tho' Meeting and Consulting apart from the Parliament (in Convocation) yet were still reckon'd to belong to it; "and to be (in some Sense, and to some Purposes) a Member of it: And together with the Prelates of the Upper House to compose (not indeed One of the Three Estates of Parliament; but however) an Estate of the Realm Assembling Joyntly with the Parliament, and Oblig'd by the Rules of our Constitution, to Attend Always upon it. This is a Notion intirely New; such as, I believe, neither our Antiquaries, nor our Lawyers, ever met with before: And according whereunto that Great Council is Composed, of the Three Estates of Parliament, the Lords, Clergy, and Commons; and of the two Convocations, as Another Estate, not indeed of Parliament, but of the Realm, Assembling joyntly with the Parliament; and Oblig'd, by the Rules of our Constitution, to Attend always upon it.

What strange Extravagances would this Author put upon Us for History and Law? That the Clergy are a State, the Chiefest Estate, of Parliament, and properly a Member of it, we have hitherto been told; nor does this Author himself (altogether) deny it. For what End or Purpose should the same Clergy be another Estate, not of the Parliament but Attending upon it? Let us hear how he else-elsewhere Expounds, and Comments upon this Jargon. "The Words Mem-ber of Parliament may be taken differently, as they signify either an Essential part of the Legislature, whose Consent and Authority is necessary to All Laws: Or a part of the Great Body of Parliament Assembled by the same Writs, at the same time with it; but to some Special Intents and Purposes prescrib'd by our Con-stitution. In the former Sense the Clergy are not, nor for some Hundreds of Years have been; In the latter, as they Always were, so they still, I presume, are, a Member of Parliament.

K. HENRY the IVth.
Rights, &c.
pag. 273.

O worthy Defender of the Rights, Liberties, and Priviledges of the English Clergy! Thus at once to Give up the Greatest of all their Civil Rights, and pronounce them neither now to be, nor for some Hundred of Years to have been, an Essential Part of the Legislature. But will this Author then tell me, to what purpose Our Statutes are still said to be Enacted by the Lords Spiritual, as well as Temporal, and Commons, in Parliament Assembl'd? Do not They Sit, and Vote, and make Laws, in their Ecclesiastical Capacity; and as the great Remainder of the State of the Clergy, still more fully Call'd, tho' not still Assembling, and Acting in Parliament? Now this was the Common Stile even when the Lower Clergy continued to come thither. The Bishops consulted with them apart, and in Their Votes, the Suffrages of the whole State were look'd upon to be included. And either there are not now Three Estates in Parliament; or I am sure if there be, the Clergy must be allow'd to be still, as they ever were, One of Them. The whole Body, by the King's Writs, have a Continu'd Right to be there. The Bishops, by their constant Exercise of it, have practice as well as Right, on their side; and, as Bishops, do both Sit and Act there. But some Men think that the whole Estate of the Clergy is included in Lower Dignitaries, and Proctors: And that because the Bishops alone Sit in Parliament, the Clergy cannot be said to be so much as a State of it.

Well! to admit of this Treacherous Stab from the Pen of a true Churchman; How stood the Case heretofore? Then, at least, I hope the Inferior Clergy, were an Essential part of the Legislature. So his words imply; and so I presume he would be understood. But how then does he tell us, that the same Clergy Always were a Member of the Parliament in his Other Sense, in which they still are so? Was the State of the Clergy at once both an Essential Member of the Parliament, and no Essential Member? A part of the Legislature, whose Consent, and Authority, was Necessary to All Laws; and at the same time, no such part, but only Assembled, at the same time with it, to some special Intents and Purposes prescrib'd by our Constitution? This is his Scheme; but I am pretty sure could never be the Model of Ours, or of any other wisely Establish'd Constitution.

But we will proceed with his Account of this Matter; for indeed it is very Entertaing. "In the Former Sense the Clergy are not, nor for some Hundred of Years have been; In the latter, as they Always were, so they still, I presume, are a Member of Parliament: Not an Intrinsick Member, if I may be allow'd so to speak, or an Estate of Parliament; but only an Extrinsick part of it; or an Estate of the Realm, Call'd with the Parliament Always, and Attending upon it. Now this, supposing the Clergy not to be (as he kindly supposes, or rather affirms that they are not) a proper Estate of the Parliament, I can make a shift to understand. But what shall we do with it again in the Elder Times of our Constitution; when the Clergy were an Intrinsick Member of Parliament by his own Confession: How were they then, only an Extrinsick part of it? Yet this he Asserts; For, as they now are, so they Always were (they are his own Words) in this Sense, a Member of Parliament. Let him interpret this Riddle that can: For my own part I look upon it to be nothing but meer Banter; a Heap of Words, without either truth or meaning.

In the mean time tho' we cannot decypher his Notions, we can easily see thro' his Aims; and what it is he would be at. He told us before, p. 64. That the Clergy in Convocation were not only in some Sense, but to some Purposes too, a Member of Parliament. And what those Purposes are we are elsewhere more fully informed. "They have a Particular right of Petitioning, and Ad- vising, within their Proper Sphere. With them Decrees about Matters Spiritual (and who can tell what Matters some Men may account Spiritual? Or how far that Pretence may be Carried?) "ought regularly to begin. And thus the Clergy tho' no part of the Legislature (for in his good Affections to them on that

K. HENRY side He is most religiously constant) “ nor concern’d Directly in the Great Affairs of State transacted in Parliament (in Ordine ad Spiritualia I suppose they may have a Concern, in his Opinion, in them also) “ may yet in Other Respects, and to Other Purposes, be properly reputed, and stiled, a Member of Parliament.

Shall we take his meaning yet more plainly from another place? It is then this: ‘ That “ the Parliamentary Interest of the Lower Clergy is now reduc’d (as to say the truth he tells us, it was fit it should be) to Matters Ecclesiastical; “ and such things as concern either Religion, or their Order. This if Dr. A. will give me leave to use a Philosophical Term, as he before did in the same case; is the Object of the Clergies still remaining Parliamentary Power; and is large enough, as it may be menaged. Let us see how far their Interest goes in these Matters? “ And, in this Sphere, I conceive, they still move, and are still “ a Parliamentary Assembly; whose Consent is Regularly to be had to All Laws Relating to Faith or Church-Discipline, whenever the Parliament shall please to “ Enact Any. Dr. A. goes on with Other Rights of a lesser Rank; but I shall leave the Reader himself to peruse them. It is enough that we are told thus much plainly, that without the Consent of the Lower House of Convocation, the two Houses of Parliament cannot, Regularly, pass any Laws which have any Relation to Faith, or Church Discipline: A Privilege which I shall then believe we have a Right to, by our Constitution, when I shall see my Lords the Judges, or rather the Lords and Commons in Parliament, Authoritatively Affirm, what, I doubt, this Writer had no Commission from them to Declare.

But I have been led too far, with these Notions; and must return to the Fact that gave Occasion to the Pursuit of them. Dr. A. at large reciting the Speech of the Chief Justice Thyrning to King Richard, which I before mention’d, wherein he takes Notice of the Commissioners, which together with himself were deputed from the Parliament to him; ² pretends that the Abbot of Glasfenbury was Proctor, not for the Clergy Summon’d by the King’s Writ to Parliament, but for the Convocation Clergy; and from thence Infers that the Convocation Attended the Parliament, as One of the Three Estates of the Realm; and that this is the Language of our Publick Records as to this Matter. Now this I affirm, in the present Instance, to be utterly false, whether we consider the Record its self which he here Alledges, or his Own Notion in this particular.

In order hereunto, Status & Communitates prædicti, the same States of Parliament, unanimously constituted, and Deputed, certain Commissioners to pronounce the Sentence of Deposition against him. ⁷ This being also done; the said States (dicti Status) being willing that nothing should be wanting that might, or ought to be required, in this Case; Unanimously Nominated the same Persons, whom they had made their Commissioners before, now their Proctors, to Go to the King, and to Resign up their Homage, and Fealty, to him.

Upon this Occasion, the day following, (the Parliament being now Dissolv’d, and a New One Summon’d the same day) those Commissioners went to the late King

King in the Power; and in the Name of them All, the Lord Chief Justice made ^{K. HENRY the IV.} that Speech, the beginning of which Dr. A. has recited, to Him.

"Sire: It is wele knowe to zowe, that there was a Parliament Somond of "All the Estates of the Reaume for to be at Westmynster, and to begynn on
 "the Tuesday in the Morne of the Felt of Seint Michel the Archaungell, that
 "was Yesterday; bycause of the which Somons All the Estates of this Lond
 "were there Gadyr'd.

Will Dr. A. give me leave before we go farther to observe: that the States of the Realm, and the States of the Parliament, in the Opinion of this Grave Judge were all One: All the Estates of the Reaume were Summon'd to Parliament; and, by virtu of that Summons, All the Estates of this Lond were there Gadyr'd. 'The Rights, &c. distinction of an Estate of Parliament, and an Estate of the Realm Call'd with the pag. 273. Parliament, but not Part of the Parliament; was it seems not yet made, or at least not yet understood by the Greatest Sages of the Law. But I proceed.

"The whiche States hole made thos same Persones that comen here to zowe
 "Nowe her Procuratores.

What can be more plain than this Declaration? The Estates of the Realm Summon'd to Parliament; The Estates of this Land Coming to Parliament by virtue of this Summons; Those Estates who in Parliament, the day before, Deposed the King, by these very Persons, whom they made their Commissioners for that End; now sent them, as their Proctors, to the King to acquaint him with what they had done, and to give back their Fealty to Him.

But where all this while are our Convocation Clergy? The King Call'd no such Meeting to Assemble with this Parliament. In the Province of York there was none at all Assembl'd. In that of Canterbury, a Convocation was indeed Summon'd by the Church of Canterbury; but it was Summon'd to meet October the 6th. And all this was done at Westminster, September the 30th, Six Days before the Clergy of this Province were appointed to Assemble in their Synod at Pauls, and where they cou'd not have assembled then, by Virtue of their First Summons, had that depended on the concurrent Summons of the Parliament, that Parliament being Dissolv'd.

It is plain then that the Record is against Dr. A's new Pretensions: Nor are his own Principles any less. The Convocation Clergy were not (he tells us) a proper Estate of Parliament. But the Estates which Commission'd these Men, were certainly, in the utmost Sense, a proper Estate of it. The Convocation Clergy were only an Extrinsical Member: ('Tis a New Term found out to Express a New Notion by;) but the Clergy here spoken of were an Intrinsical One; or they could never have met with the Other Estates at Westminster, and there have done, what in that Parliament was done by them. The Parliamentary Power of the Convocation Clergy, is limited by him to Things Spiritual; to such as concern Religion, or their Order. Whether the Deposing of Kings comes within the Compass of either of these, I must leave it to him who set the Bounds, to Interpret; as one that best knows the true Extent of Them: But I should think that to be a Matter, if not beyond the skill of a Convocation to advise in, Yet certainly of too high a Nature for their Jurisdiction to Extend to it.

But to leave this Melancholly ungrateful Subject; and proceed to the Affairs of the New King. ^{Sect. 9.} On the 6th of October the Parliament met; but the King being not yet Crown'd, it was, on the same day, adjourn'd to the Tuesday seven-^{Dugd. Sum-} night following; the day after the Coronation. Then it Re-Assembl'd, and con-^{monit. Parl.} tinu'd to sit till the 19th of November; the last day that I find mention'd in the ^{pag. 357.} Rolles, and which the Writs of Expences shew to have been the last of the Parliament.

The same day on which the Parliament began,^{Pryn. Regist.} the Convocation met according to ^{Par. 4. p. 455.} its Summons; but the Archbishop being Employ'd in the former, the latter was continued by the Prior of Canterbury till the Morrow after. Being then Assem-^{Regist. Arun-} bled, the Earls of Northumberland and Westmorland, with Sir Thomas Erpingham ^{d. l. 1. Par. fol.} the Kings Chamberlain, came to them; "not (say they) as Other Commis-^{51. a.} sioners have been wont to do, to Demand a Subsidy for the King; but to thank them for their Prayers on his Behalf: To promise them that he would not Ask any Aid of them but in Case of an Evident Necessity; and then, he hoped, they would shew themselves liberal, and kind to him. And that for himself he should endeavour so to behave himself towards the Clergy, as to give them Cause to love him still more, and to pray more devoutly for him.

K. RICHARD the III. of This, as of all the Rest, was for more Money. Those of our Province had at their last Meeting Given a Tenth and Half, to the Half Tenth only of the Clergy of York. They were therefore a Tenth behind in their Grants; and tho' the King did not charge them, as if Dr. A. had been of his Council he would not have faild to have done, to Consider their Duty, and the Custom Establish'd in the time of his Grandfather King Edward the III. for those of York to do always whatever the Clergy of Canterbury should think fit to do before them; Yet they knew that both the King, and the Clergy of Canterbury, did Expect that they should bear an Equal Share of the Publick Burdens, and not Ease themselves, at the Expence of their Brethren. This was the true Reason why the Convocation of the Other Province was now Assembled, at a time when neither any Parliament met, nor were the Clergy, on this Side, Called together: And it shews withal the Freedom of the King in Assembling of these Conventions; that he had a Legal Right to do it whenever he thought Convenient, whether at the time of the Parliament, or at any Other; And that again, The Convocations either of Both the Provinces together; Or only of One by its self; as he should judge it most Expedient for him to do.

But I must not close up this Year without Observing that there was another Convocation of the Clergy of that Province held at York, antecedent to any which I have yet mention'd, and of which all the Account I can give is this: That by Procuratory Letters dated June the 16th 1398, the Prior of Durham empowered one of the Residentiaries of the Church of York, with Others, to appear in his stead the 20th of the same Month, before the Honourable Mr. Richard Clifford Dean of York, and Keeper of the Privy Seal, who was to be sent thither by the King, to treat of certain Matters and Affairs which concerned the State of the King, the Realm, and Church of England; together with the Other Prelates called and Premonished to come thither by the King's Letters under his Privy Seal. This is all that I know of this Meeting; and the Instrument from which I took this, the Reader will find in the * Appendix; being the only Information I have met with for this Convocation.

To draw to an End of this unfortunate Reign: All was now in Confusion, and the King himself but an Honourable Prisoner; Subject to the Direction of those who had him in their Hands. In this State, ¹ Writs were Issued out for a Parliament to meet on the last of September 1399, in which he was to Resign his Crown. ² A Fortnight after this Parliament was Called, the Convocation of our Province was Summon'd to meet, tho' I do not find that there was so much as any Pretence of a Royal Mandate for it. Archbishop Arundell tho' he were returned with Lancaster into England, and had the chief Menagement of the Great Work which was then to be done; yet being not put into Possession of the Administration of his Archbishoprick, which the Pope, as well as King, had Given to another; the Mandates for it went out in the Names of the Prior and Chapter of Canterbury. The pretence of Summons was "pro utilitate Reipub. & tuitione jurium & libertatum Ecclesie atq; Regni". And the Order to the Clergy ran, to appear before Themselves, or before the most Reverend Father in God, the Archbishop of Canterbury, who was then in their Eye, and gave the Secret Directions for this Assembly. What the Design of this Convocation was, it is not hard to Guess: And I shall hereafter give a more particular Account of it. I shall only now observe that it was Summon'd to meet on the 6th of October, The very day on which King Henry the IVth's First Parliament was to be held: And we need not doubt but that it was from the first design'd, in Dr. A's New-Phrase to ATTEND upon the Parliament of the Rising Prince, not to accompany that of an Unhappy King, who was in one Day both to Open his Parliament, and to be Deposed by it.

To come therefore to that Great Council, with which I shall close up this Chapter: It met, as appointed, the Morrow after Michaelmas, and sate but One day; but in that Day it did a great deal of Business: It Deposed One King, and Made Another; and by a New Summons was Ordered to meet again, under its new Prince, the 6th of October, the very same day to which the Convocation had at first been Called. Here therefore was a most exact Concurrence between the State, and the Church Assembly: Tho' the latter being summon'd so long before, it may be questioned to which of these Parliaments its Attendance ought Legally to be ascribed; whether to that for which it was Called; or to that with which

which it Sate and was, I believe, designed from the beginning to Sit? But we will Suspend these Speculations till we come to the Survey of these Matters: And, at present, take only a short Review of what pass'd in this Reign, and so conclude this Chapter.

the 1st.

And 1st. From the History of this Reign, it plainly appears that the Lower Clergy still continued to come to Parliament, and had not, as Dr. A. is pleased to tell us, exchanged their Right of Sitting Nationally in that Great Council, for his imaginary Attendance in two Provincial Convocations. This is clear from the Parliaments of 1377, and 1379; (to say nothing of that of 1397) and to them I refer for the truth of it.

Scct. 85.

'Tis true, their Business was now reduced to a meer matter of Consent. Their Writs which heretofore cited them to Do as well as to CONSENT to what should be DONE by Others, from the 5th Year of this King, Ran only in the form of CONSENTING, without any allowance of a Power to ACT as before. But still for this Consent, they were not only Summon'd to Parliament, but they Came too; and, by their Bishops, did Consent to what was done there.

2^{dly}. Tho' Dr. A. be certainly deceived Himself, or I am sure would Impose upon Others, in what he advances concerning the strict Concurrence in point of Time between the Parliaments and Convocations of these Reigns: Yet thus far he must be allow'd to be in the Right, that under this Weak, and Necessitous Prince, they came nearer to One another, than ever they had before been wont to do. Great were the Wants of this King; and Constant his Demands both upon the Clergy and Laity for the Supply of them. For this Parliaments, and Convocations were frequently Assembled; and often times very near to, tho' not intirely at the same Time with, One Another. But still even under this Government, Weak as it was, the Rights of the Crown were preserved; and, the Independency of the One of these Assemblies upon the Other, to the Confusion of Dr. A's Hypothesis, abundantly demonstrated.

To Recapitulate this Matter in short, as it stands in the History before delivered, and as I do conceive it truly pass'd, during this Reign.

1. In the Two Twenty Years of this Prince, SEVEN Parliaments there were with only One Convocation Concurrent; and that oftentimes but in a very little Part of the Sessions too; In the Years, 1377, 1379, 1380, 1384, 1385, 1388, 1391.

2. With NINE Other Parliaments there was no Concurrent Convocation at all, in Either Province: Namely in the Years 1381, 1382, (Two Parliaments) 1383, 1392, 1393, 1396, 1397, (Two Parliaments.)

3. FIVE Parliaments were held, and No Convocation held in the same Years with them: Viz. Ann. 1378, 1381, 1389, 1390, 1393.

4. FOUR times Convocations were held, and No Parliaments called with, or near them: Ann. 1377, 1385, 1394, 1398.

In the Two and TWENTY Years therefore of this Prince, Dr. A's Hypothesis fails FIVE and TWENTY times; And that I think is abundantly Sufficient to Shew, that it was no Rule in this Reign, much less the settled Establishment of our Constitution, for the Parliament, and Convocation to Sit Concurrently with One Another.

But 3^{dly}. That the Design of this King in Calling these Convocations was wholly, and purely, on the Account of Money, to get Supplies from the Clergy, is so Evident, that let Dr. A. turn himself into whatsoever Forms he pleases, 'tis not in his Power either to Mistake, or Mis-represent it. The King's Writs speak it fully and openly to Us: The Acts of our Convocations shew it: And both demonstrate the intemperate Revilings of this Un-christian Writer against me for affirming of this Certain, and Evident Truth, to have as little of Justice, as they have of a Spirit either of Charity, or Integrity, in Them. This therefore I do here Once more Affirm, and I Affirm it with all that Assurance, that Truth and Innocence oblige me to do; That this was the main End for which our Kings were wont to Call these Convocations; and this was the main Business, that was generally done by the Clergy at these Meetings.

See the Appendix
throughout
this Reign.

And these are such Assertions as are directly Opposite to the Scope, and Tendency of his Hypothesis: I add, in Opposition to One of his Bye-Points as he calls it; 4^{thly}. That from what has been before observed in this Reign it appears, That the Convocation of York, is not at all Dependiant either in its Assembling

K. HENRY the IVth. bling or Acting, upon that of Canterbury; so that it should be Obligated to Do, whatsoever our Province, thinks fit to Do before it. This is a Servitude which no Writer, that I know of, ever before pretended to impose upon that Venerable Body; and the Grounds of it are so Weak, that I am confident no Writer hereafter will ever Joyn with him in the like Attempt. And this very Reign affords us three Instances at least, to Confute his Pretences; Ann. 1377, 1387, 1388: And to them I refer for the Confirmation of what I here Assert on their behalf.

To conclude this whole Chapter: We have now Examined the State of our Parliaments, and Convocations for above a Hundred Years. We have Seen at what times they have Both been held; and tho' I dare not say that no Sessions of Either have escaped me; yet as I have not been wanting in my Diligence to discover them, so I do hope, that but few have. However, from what has been Observed, this Conclusion I will be bold to draw, let Dr. A. Refute it, if he can; "That, in all this time, there was no manner of Dependance of our Convocations upon the Parliament; but the King was at Liberty to Call Both "whenever he pleased; and lay under no Obligation either of Law, or Custom, "to Assemble the One, as Often as he should think it fitting to Call the Other.

CHAP. VIII.

The History of the Assemblies of the Clergy pursu'd, from the first of King HENRY the IVth, to the 25th of King HENRY the VIIIth. That neither during this Period did the Convocation ATTEND upon the Parliament, as Dr. Atterbury affirms: Whose farther Arguments in Proof of it, which fall within the present Period, are Examin'd and Answer'd.

Sect. 1.

Hitherto we have enquir'd into that part of this Period in which Dr. Atterbury tells us the Two Convocations were the Closest Attendants upon our Parliaments; and in which indeed, according to his Principles, we had Reason to have expected that so they should have been. For if this were the Ground of their Attendance, as he pretends it was, 'that the Clergy desir'd to Exchange their coming Nationally to Parliament, according to the Premunitory Summons, for a distinct Assembling of themselves, in each Province, at the same time; and the King Accepted the One in lieu of the Other: If in Consequence hereof, they were accounted, even when they met in their own several Convocations, to sit no less by the Kings Parliamentary Writs, than by the Archbishops Provincial Mandates; and to be tho' not a STATE of the PARLIAMENT, yet an ESTATE of the REALM ASSEMBLING with the PARLIAMENT: What could we Conclude less than that we should have seen them as Constantly, and Closely, Attending upon the Body to which they were thus nearly related, as these Principles require; and as indeed the very Notion of a PARLIAMENTARY ATTENDANCE does of its self imply.

And accordingly all the Other Principles which Dr. A. so industriously advances, and so often inculcates, lead to the same Opinion. * That the Clergy mention'd in the Parliament Rolls, are to be understood of the Clergy in Convocation. * That the same Rolls speak of the Convocation Clergy as Of the PARLIAMENT, and ACTING IN IT. * That the Convocation is a Word of Art signifying a MEETING of the CLERGY in TIME of PARLIAMENT. * That as such it has been held to be an Assembly ESSENTIAL to our CONSTITUTION. * That, at first, it met very near at the same Time with the Parliament: And tho afterwards ¹⁰ (about the time of King Henry the IVth) a greater Liberty was indulged, and taken; yet in Henry the VIIIth's time, things came about again into their ORIGINAL COURSE; which therefore must have been at first, as we know it has been since, for the PARLIAMENT and CONVOCAION WRITS, to Go out TOGETHER; and for both to Sit within a few Days of, and so continue to sit in Concurrence, with one Another.

Nor is this any more than what Dr. A. himself elsewhere in plain Terms tells K. HENRY us; when speaking of the first beginning of the Convocation Writs, he has the IVth. these most remarkable Words to this purpose: "This gave birth to the Custom of issuing out Two CONVOCATION WRITS when a New PARLIAMENT was to be chosen: Which tho' set on foot before, yet SETTLED NOT INTO A RULE till some Years after Edward the IIIrd was in the Throne; and then it was PRACTISED AS DULY and REGULARLY, and in much the same manner, As It Is AT THIS DAY. The Consequence which, if true, must I am sure be this, that from King Edward the IIIrd's time, to King Henry the IVth's, whenever a Parliament was Summon'd, the Convocation was duly, and regularly, Called with it; and met, as it now does, either exactly at, or at least very near, the same Time that the Parliament Assembled.

them out CONCURRENTLY with Those for a Parliament; in Edward the Third, and Richard the Second's Reigns: And still [Addit. p. 56 Whenever they went out] the Convocation was (as in the Preceding Instances) Generally order'd to ATTEND a FEW DAYS SOONER, or LATER than the Parliament did, and not Precisely on the Spot, where the Parliament Open'd, but at some Church, or Chapter House near it. Thus Dr. A. But least his new Addition of (whenever they went out) should be extended farther than we may suppose he design'd it; take his own Interpretation of that, Rights, &c. p. 250. Where speaking of the same Writs, he tells us, "That they have been Regularly issued out, as often as a New-Parliament was Called, from the Latter End of Edward the IIIrd till Now, with FEW EXCEPTIONS to the Contrary; and with NONE from the first dawn of the Reformation in Henry the VIIIth's Reign down to this Present. And from THIS ANTIENT CUSTOM (as antient as the Compleat Settlement of our Constitution) the Clergy think themselves intitled to be Summon'd to Assemble, and to SIT PROVINCIALLY, WHENEVER a NEW PARLIAMENT MEETS.

How truly Dr. A. has herein represented the Custom of the Preceding Reigns as to these Matters, the plain Deduction which I have made of these Two Assemblies from Year to Year; and the short Table wherein I shall at one View present the Reader with a Prospect of this whole Period, when I have gone thro' those which yet remain to be considered, may suffice to shew. In the mean time to the Confusion of this bold Pretender, let me once more repeat here what I have before abundantly prov'd, That after the best Enquiry I have been able to make, but twice only can I find that in the long Reign of that very Edward of which he speaks, the two Convocations met at the same time with the Parliament; and in the Reign of his Successor King Richard the second, not many more. So DULY, and REGULARLY were these two Assemblies call'd together, during those Seventy Years! And such a Wonderful CONCURRENCE was there in the Meeting of them; "with FEW EXCEPTIONS to the Contrary.

Sect. 2.

I now proceed to the latter part of this Period, in which Dr. A. tells us, that these Conventions were held "WITH A LATITUDE: pag. 75. And again; "That a greater Liberty was indulged and taken, p. 259. The meaning of which he thus elsewhere discovers to us, with the Time from which he dates this change: p. 48. "This was the usual distance (between the Meeting of the Parliament and Convocation) throughout Edward the IIIrd, and Richard the IIrd's Reigns; till Henry the IVth began to Enlarge it: In, and After whose time, the Clergy held their Assemblies DURING, and (he would have said, Or) NEAR the Sessions of Parliament, but not Thoroughly Concurrent with Them: The Archbishop, it seems, affecting Independency, and the King, who above all things desir'd to stand well with the Clergy, favouring Him, and Them, in that respect; and giving way to their being CALL'D LATER, or DISMISS'D SOONER, than the Laity. This is the Account which Dr. A. Gives us of the Remainder of this Period. Many are the Remarks which might justly be made upon it, but I shall content my self with this One; that if this be true, then we must conclude, that Archbishop Arundell, and his Clergy, were so far from thinking this Doctrine of Attendance to be a Right or a Privilege, that they us'd all their Interest to break off from it; and even Dr. A. himself is so far from Censuring them therein, that, as if he were of the same Mind, He tells us, that the King FAVOUR'D Him, and Them, in that respect: That is, He gave them leave to depart from their Great Right, and Privilege, of Parliamentary Attendance. A Royal Condescension, which I never thought Dr. A. would have Esteem'd, or Call'd a FAVOUR!

But to leave the Reflection, and come to the Thing its self, which we are to examine: The Convocations, He tells us, from henceforth met, tho' not Concurrently with the Parliament, as before; Yet DURING, or NEAR the Sessions of it. The Former of these Limitations carries no difficulty with it; For we generally

rally know when the Parliament Rose, as well as when it began; and so shall easily discover how far the Matter of Fact is true, in that respect. But what shall we say as to the Latter of them? Or how shall we determine when a Convocation sits near the Session of Parliament? That I dare not undertake to determine; but must leave it to every One to judge of it as He thinks fit. Only I would ask Dr. A. if he please, Whether when the Convocation sate not at the SAME TIME with the Parliament, but only NEAR it; (Perhaps a Month, Two, or Three, before, or after it;) It still, nevertheless, continued to ATTEND UPON IT? And to what Ends, Purposes, or Advantages, to the Church or Realm, it did so ATTEND? Here therefore Dr. A. and I shall more easily agree; than we have yet done. I affirm that the Convocation in these times, was no ATTENDANT upon the PARLIAMENT; nor did either constantly, or necessarily sit at the same time with it. That the King and the Archbishops had an undetermin'd Power over both; and might, as they thought fit, either Summon both together; Or call the One, without being Oblig'd, by the Nature of our Constitution, to Assemble the Other. Dr. A. agrees that this is so far true, that from Henry the IVth's time, the Convocation met sometimes, DURING the SESSIONS of PARLIAMENT, and sometimes only NEAR it, that is to say, at ANOTHER TIME, and NOT DURING the SESSIONS OF PARLIAMENT: So that as far then as 130 Years Desuetude can break a Custom; supposing that there had been such a Custom before (which yet I have prov'd there was not) this Custom must have been destroy'd: And what a Custom disused for above a 100 Years is Good for in Law, I shall humbly submit it to the Learners in our Laws to determine.

But however this Dr. A. stands to, that there was still tho' not a strict Attendance paid by the Convocations upon the Parliament, yet such a near Relation kept up between them; that whenever a New-Parliament was Call'd, a Convocation was to meet, either precisely at the same time with it; or, at least, within a little Distance of it: And that by the very Nature and Terms of our Constitution. Here therefore I take to be the point wherein Dr. A. and I shall still continue unfortunately to disagree: For he, unless he will give up his New Principle, must affirm that at every Session of Parliament a Convocation was Necessary to be held, either Concurrently with it, or at least very Near to it; so that without breaking in upon the Constitution of our Government, the One could not be called without the Other: And I, on the other side, must be permitted to Affert, till I shall be better Instructed, That our Kings were no more confin'd in their Prerogative on this side, than 'tis at last, I conceive, agreed, they were on the Other; but that they might, and did often hold their Parliaments, without calling any Convocation at all either with them, or near Them; as well as 'tis Allow'd they might, and did often Summon the Convocation, without Assembling any Parliament to sit with it.

Sect. 4.
p. 18.

This therefore is the great Point, which I am here to pursue: And for the better clearing of which, there is yet one thing in which I should be glad that Dr. A. would a little further enlighten me. It is his own Observation, 'p. 18. that "till Archbishop Chicheley's time, Convocations were frequently held even "while Parliaments were sitting, without any Other Writ from the King but what "was contained in the Bishop's Summons, with the Clause Pramunientes. Which Clause being a Summons to the Time, Place, and Assembly of Parliament; Dr. A. may as well say the Clergy were called to their Bishop's Visitation in Virtue of it; as to their Archbishop's Convocation. But to let that pass; and take what is, or I am sure ought to be his meaning; That in Arundel's, and Chicheley's time (to look no farther) Convocations were often held by the sole Authority of our Metropolitans, without any Writ from the King for the holding of them. The Question which I would ask, upon this Supposition, is this: Whether in such Cases where the Metropolitan, of his own accord, Summon'd his Convocation, without any Writ from the King, He did it by Authority of any Law, or in pursuance of any Obligation; which, by the Nature of our Constitution, lay upon him, to hold his Convocation, as often as the King Called his Parliament? Or whether He freely Summon'd it at his Own Pleasure, because he thought it Expedient so to Do?

If Dr. A. shall say that He held it freely, when he might have Omitted it; because he thought it Expedient, not because he was bound to do it; Then I conceive it will follow, that All those Convocations which we shall hereafter meet with, (whether of those Two Archbishops, or any Others) which were Summon'd mon'd by the Metropolitan alone, without the King's Writ, are not to be computed among those Parliamentary Convocations of which we are now discoursing; Which he tells us are Essential to our Constitution; necessary to be held in time of Parliament, or near to it; and to the Calling of which therefore, at such times, either the King, or the Archbishop, or some body, should be Oblig'd.

K. HENRY
the IV.th.

If to avoid this Inconvenience Dr. A. shall think fit to affirm that in Case the King did not issue out his Writs for Summoning the Convocations, whenever he Called a Parliament, the Archbishop of each Province was, by our Constitution, Oblig'd to Summon them without it; then I would beg leave to Enquire farther; How our Archbishops came to be so forgetful of their Duty in this Particular, as in all the Preceding Reigns, it is evident that they were? When nothing was more common than to see Parliaments held, without any Convocations Called either by the King, or by the Archbishops, to Attend upon them? How One Archbishop came oftentimes to Call his Convocation, and the Other at the same time, not to Assemble his; since both lay under the same Legal Obligation? Nay, which is yet worse, How when the King appointed the proper time for its Assembling; sometimes within the Session of Parliament, at others very near it; The Archbishops, as if they had resolved to be perverse, on purpose, to break in upon our Constitution, put off their several Convocations at their own Pleasure, till the Session was over; it may for some Weeks, or Months after it; of all which I have given several Instances already, and shall add many more in the Prosecution of this Period.

Till therefore it shall be shewn that our Archbishops lay under a Legal Obligation to Assemble their Convocations by their Own Authority, as often as the Parliament met, if the King fail'd to issue out his Writ to them for that End; I must be allow'd to conclude, that whenever they did Assemble them, at their Own Motion, and not by the King's Writ; They did it Freely, and Voluntarily; not because they were Obliged, but because they thought it Convenient so to do: And that all such Convocations therefore are to pass for nothing in this dispute, as not meeting to Attend upon the Parliament, but in Obedience to the Archbishop's Authority; because their Primates thought fit, of their own Choice, to Assemble them, when it was in their Power, without any Offence against our Laws, or Government, either in Church or State, to have let it alone.

Having said thus much both to shew what the Great Point which I am here to consider is, and to prepare the way for the Prosecution of it; I shall need add very little with Relation to those Secondary, and Subordinate Questions, which I have before said, are no less in dispute between Us. These continue in great measure the same still, that they were before; and therefore what I have before observ'd, may suffice for the Stating of them.

Dr. A. affirms that the Clergy left off to come Nationally to Parliament about the beginning of King Edward the III^d's Reign: I have Proved already that they continu'd to come to it till the End of King Richard the 2^d: And shall go on to prove that they came in like manner, (tho' in lesser Numbers every Year than Other) to the time of King Henry the VIth. How much longer, if at all longer, I shall hereafter Enquire.

Dr. A. denies that the chief End which our Kings had in Calling these Convocations, was for their Aid; so the Writs speak; that is to get Mony of Them, as well as of their Lay Subjects. He puts himself into the highest Indecency of Passion that it was possible for him to do, upon the very Mention of it: And Excells even his Own self in a way, of which tho' I may hereafter give some Specimen to my Reader, I shall forbear to call by its proper Name. Yet this I have before shewn to be undoubtedly true; and I must beg leave still to Continue in the Assertion of it.

Dr. A. in his Zeal, not for the Church of England, but the Church of Canterbury, Labours to bring the Other Province into a Servile Subordination to, and dependance upon Our Convocation; for what Reason I cannot Imagine more than for this One, that ours is Bigger than theirs. But this I have already proved to be an Unwarrantable Invasion of their Provincial Rights; and shall, as I proceed, still continue to shew by more and more Arguments that it is so.

But these are only our lesser Differences: The Main Points on which the Cause between us turn, are; Whether the Two Convocations, are by our Constitution a Necessary Attendant upon our Parliaments, and have for these Four Hundred

dred Years past been so accounted? Whether in Consequence hereof, whenever a Parliament has been Summon'd, the Convocations have been constantly Call'd at the same time; and fate either during the Session of the Parliament (as in Edward the IIIrd, and Richard the IIrd's Reign, He affirms that they did) or Near it; which is all that he will venture to affirm of the following times, to King Henry the VIIth, or VIIIth; for he does not very well know, which of the two to pitch upon. In Opposition to both, I affirm, that there never was any such necessary Relation between the Parliament and Convocation by the Rules of our Constitution: That they were Assemblies not only intirely Distinct from, but Independent upon One Another: Which our Kings Called at their own Pleasure, either at the same Time with, or at a different Season from, Each Other, as Themselves thought fit; and as the Urgency of their Affairs prompted them to do. Let us see which of these Opinions the History of the Times, which we are now about to Pursue, will best Agree withal.

King HENRY the IVth.

Señ. 7.

I before took notice how the last Parliament of that Unfortunate Prince to whom King Henry the IVth succeeded, was held at Westminster the day after Michaelmas; and a Convocation called, by the Authority of the Church of Canterbury, to meet at St. Pauls London the Week following. The Parliament being met and all the Estates of it having agreed to the Deposition of that Prince, the day of their Meeting; they resolved upon certain Commissioners, as their Proctors, to be sent to Him to the Tower, in the Name of All the Estates, to acquaint him with what they had done, and to give back their Homage and Fealty to him. On the part of the Clergy two Persons were appointed; and that, as Sir William Thyrning told the King when he was come with the Other Commissioners to Him, in this manner; "The Bishop of Seint Asse for Erchbysshops and Byshops; and the Abbot of Glaftenbury for Abbots and Priours, and All Other Men of Holy Church, Seculers, and Rewelers. That these Other Men of Holy Church must have been the Clergy ² Summon'd by the King's *Writ*s to that Parliament, and together with the Bishops, and the Parliamentary Abbots and Priors, constituting the Estate of the Clergy of the whole Realm there; is too plain to need any Proof. For as for the Convocation of this Province, that was not yet Assembled; but was to meet a Week after: And it does not appear that any Convocation at all was call'd at this time in the Other. The Persons then whose Proctor, upon this solem Occasion, the Abbot of Glaftenbury was, must have been the Parliamentary Abbots and Priors; the Deans and Priors of the Cathedral Churches, the Archdeacons, and Capitular, and Diocesan Proctors: Who by the King's Writ were call'd to this Parliament; and either Actually were, or were look'd upon to have been Legally present at it.

And yet as plain as this is, Dr. A. has not doubted to bring this very Instance to prove this rash and dangerous Assertion; "That the Convocation Attended the Parliament as One of the Three Estates of the Realm. An Assertion which Himself thought it necessary in the next Leaf to qualify; yet still leaves it as bold as it is false: "That the Inferior Clergy tho' Meeting and Consulting apart from the Parliament (in Convocation) yet were still reckon'd to belong to it; and to be (in some Sense, and to some Purposes) a Member of it: And together with the Prelates of the Upper House to compose (not indeed One of the Three Estates of Parliament; but however) an Estate of the Realm Assembling Joyntly with the Parliament, and Oblig'd by the Rules of our Constitution, to Attend Always upon it. This is a Notion intirely New; such as, I believe, neither our Antiquaries, nor our Lawyers, ever met with before: And according whereunto that Great Council is Composed, of the Three Estates of Parliament, the Lords, Clergy, and Commons; and of the two Convocations, as Another Estate, not indeed of Parliament, but of the Realm, Assembling joyntly with the Parliament; and Oblig'd, by the Rules of our Constitution, to Attend always upon it.

What strange Extravagances would this Author put upon Us for History and Law? That the Clergy are a State, the Chiefest Estate, of Parliament, and properly a Member of it, we have hitherto been told; nor does this Author himself (altogether) deny it. For what End or Purpose should the same Clergy be another Estate, not of the Parliament but Attending upon it? Let us hear how he else-elsewhere Expounds, and Comments upon this Jargon. "The Words Member of Parliament may be taken differently, as they signify either an Essential part of the Legislature, whose Consent and Authority is necessary to All Laws: Or a part of the Great Body of Parliament Assembled by the same Writs, at the same time with it; but to some Special Intents and Purposes prescribed by our Constitution. In the former Sense the Clergy are not, nor for some Hundreds of Years have been; In the latter, as they Always were, so they still, I presume, are, a Member of Parliament.

K. HENRY
the IVth.
Rights, &c.
pag. 273.

O worthy Defender of the Rights, Liberties, and Privileges of the English Clergy! Thus at once to Give up the Greatest of all their Civil Rights, and pronounce them neither now to be, nor for some Hundred of Years to have been, an Essential Part of the Legislature. But will this Author then tell me, to what purpose Our Statutes are still said to be Enacted by the Lords Spiritual, as well as Temporal, and Commons, in Parliament Assembled? Do not They Sit, and Vote, and make Laws, in their Ecclesiastical Capacity; and as the great Remainder of the State of the Clergy, still more fully Call'd, tho' not still Assembling, and Acting in Parliament? Now this was the Common Stile even when the Lower Clergy continued to come thither. The Bishops consulted with them apart, and in Their Votes, the Suffrages of the whole State were look'd upon to be included. And either there are not now Three Estates in Parliament; or I am sure if there be, the Clergy must be allow'd to be still, as they ever were, One of Them. The whole Body, by the King's Writs, have a Continu'd Right to be there. The Bishops, by their constant Exercise of it, have practice as well as Right, on their side; and, as Bishops, do both Sit and Act there. But some Men think that the whole Estate of the Clergy is included in Lower Dignitaries, and Proctors: And that because the Bishops alone Sit in Parliament, the Clergy cannot be said to be so much as a State of it.

Well! to admit of this Treacherous Stab from the Pen of a true Churchman; How stood the Case heretofore? Then, at least, I hope the Inferior Clergy, were an Essential part of the Legislature. So his words imply; and so I presume he would be understood. But how then does he tell us, that the same Clergy Always were a Member of the Parliament in his Other Sense, in which they still are so? Was the State of the Clergy at once both an Essential Member of the Parliament, and no Essential Member? A part of the Legislature, whose Consent, and Authority, was Necessary to All Laws; and at the same time, no such part, but only Assembled, at the same time with it, to some special Intents and Purposes prescribed by our Constitution? This is his Scheme; but I am pretty sure could never be the Model of Ours, or of any other wisely Establish'd Constitution.

But we will proceed with his Account of this Matter; for indeed it is very Entertaining. "In the Former Sense the Clergy are not, nor for some Hundred of Years have been; In the latter, as they Always were, so they still, I presume, are a Member of Parliament: Not an Intrinsic Member, if I may be allow'd so to speak, or an Estate of Parliament; but only an Extrinsic part of it; or an Estate of the Realm, Call'd with the Parliament Always, and Attending upon it. Now this, supposing the Clergy not to be (as he kindly supposes, or rather affirms that they are not) a proper Estate of the Parliament, I can make a shift to understand. But what shall we do with it again in the Elder Times of our Constitution; when the Clergy were an Intrinsic Member of Parliament by his own Confession: How were they then, only an Extrinsic part of it? Yet this he Asserts; For, as they now are, so they Always were (they are his own Words) in this Sense, a Member of Parliament. Let him interpret this Riddle that can: For my own part I look upon it to be nothing but meer Banter; a Heap of Words, without either truth or meaning.

In the mean time tho' we cannot decypher his Notions, we can easily see thro' his Aims; and what it is he would be at. He told us before, p. 64. That the Clergy in Convocation were not only in some Sense, but to some Purposes too, a Member of Parliament. And what those Purposes are we are elsewhere more fully informed. "They have a Particular right of Petitioning, and Advising, within their Proper Sphere. With them Decrees about Matters Spiritual (and who can tell what Matters some Men may account Spiritual? Or how far that Pretence may be Carried?) "ought regularly to begin. And thus the Clergy tho' no part of the Legislature (for in his good Affections to them on that HENRY ^{the IVth.} side He is most religiously constant) “ nor concern’d Directly in the Great Affairs of State transacted in Parliament (in Ordine ad Spiritualia I suppose they may have a Concern, in his Opinion, in them also) “ may yet in Other Respects, and to Other Purposes, be properly reputed, and stiled, a Member of Parliament.

¹ Ib. pag. 351. Shall we take his meaning yet more plainly from another place? It is then this: ‘ That “ the Parliamentary Interest of the Lower Clergy is now reduc’d (as to say the truth he tells us, it was fit it should be) to Matters Ecclesiastical; “ and such things as concern either Religion, or their Order. This if Dr. A. will give me leave to use a Philosophical Term, as he before did in the same case; is the Object of the Clergies still remaining Parliamentary Power; and is large enough, as it may be menaged. Let us see how far their Interest goes in these Matters? “ And, in this Sphere, I conceive, they still move, and are still “ a Parliamentary Assembly; whose Consent is Regularly to be had to All Laws “ Relating to Faith or Church-Discipline, whenever the Parliament shall please to “ Enact Any. Dr. A. goes on with Other Rights of a lesser Rank; but I shall leave the Reader himself to peruse them. It is enough that we are told thus much plainly, that without the Consent of the Lower House of Convocation, the two Houses of Parliament cannot, Regularly, pass any Laws which have any Relation to Faith, or Church Discipline: A Privilege which I shall then believe we have a Right to, by our Constitution, when I shall see my Lords the Judges, or rather the Lords and Commons in Parliament, Authoritatively Affirm, what, I doubt, this Writer had no Commission from them to Declare.

But I have been led too far, with these Notions; and must return to the Fact that gave Occasion to the Pursuit of them. Dr. A. at large reciting the Speech of the Chief Justice Thyrning to King Richard, which I before mention’d, wherein he takes Notice of the Commissioners, which together with himself were deputed from the Parliament to him; ² pretends that the Abbot of Glastenbury was Proctor, not for the Clergy Summon’d by the King’s Writ to Parliament, but for the Convocation Clergy; and from thence Infers that the Convocation Attended the Parliament, as One of the Three Estates of the Realm; and that this is the Language of our Publick Records as to this Matter. Now this I affirm, in the present Instance, to be utterly false, whether we consider the Record its self which he here Alleges, or his Own Notion in this particular.

⁵ Ib. num. 16. The Archbishop of Canterbury, ⁵ “ Cui Ratione Dignitatis & Prærogativæ Ecclesiæ sue Cantuar. Metropolitana, in ea parte competit Primam Vocem habere inter Cæteros Prelatos & Proceres Regni, demanded of the States whether they thought good to admit of this Renuntiation? They Accepted of it, and farther agreed that for avoiding of all Scruples, and Sinister Suspicions, the chief Articles against the King, should be publicly read at large, in open Parliament. ⁶ Which being done, and the Crimes, and Defects, therein contain’d seeming to All the States, who were generally, and particularly, interrogated thereupon, to be a sufficient Ground for the Deprivation of the King; Omnes Status prædicti, All the States aforesaid, unanimously Agreed to proceed to his Deprivation.

In order hereunto, Status & Communitates prædicti, the same States of Parliament, unanimously constituted, and Deputed, certain Commissioners to pronounce ⁷ Ib. num. 53. the Sentence of Deposition against him. ⁷ This being also done; the said States (dicti Status) being willing that nothing should be wanting that might, or ought to be required, in this Case; Unanimously Nominated the same Persons, whom they had made their Commissioners before, now their Proctors, to Go to the King, and to Resign up their Homage, and Fealty, to him.

Upon this Occasion, the day following, (the Parliament being now Dissolv’d, and a New One Summon’d the same day) those Commissioners went to the late King

King in the Power; and in the Name of them All, the Lord Chief Justice made ^{K. HENRY the IV.} that Speech, the beginning of which Dr. A. has recited, to Him.

"Sire: It is wele knowe to zowe, that there was a Parliament Somond of
 "All the Estates of the Reaume for to be at Westmynster, and to begynn on
 "the Tuesday in the Morne of the Fest of Seint Michel the Archaungell, that
 "was Yesterday; bycause of the which Somons All the Estates of this Lond
 "were there Gadyr'd.

Will Dr. A. give me leave before we go farther to observe: that the States of the Realm, and the States of the Parliament, in the Opinion of this Grave Judge were all One: All the Estates of the Reaume were Summon'd to Parliament; and, by virtu of that Summons, All the Estates of this Lond were there Gadyr'd. 'The Rights, &c. distinction of an Estate of Parliament, and an Estate of the Realm Call'd with the pag. 273. Parliament, but not Part of the Parliament; was it seems not yet made, or at least not yet understood by the Greatest Sages of the Law. But I proceed.

"The whiche States hole made thos same Perfones that comen here to zowe

"Nowe her Procuratores.

What can be more plain than this Declaration? The Estates of the Realm Summon'd to Parliament; The Estates of this Land Coming to Parliament by virtue of this Summons; Those Estates who in Parliament, the day before, Deposed the King, by these very Persons, whom they made their Commissioners for that End; now sent them, as their Proctors, to the King to acquaint him with what they had done, and to give back their Fealty to Him.

But where all this while are our Convocation Clergy? The King Call'd no such Meeting to Assemble with this Parliament. In the Province of York there was none at all Assembl'd. In that of Canterbury, a Convocation was indeed Summon'd by the Church of Canterbury; but it was Summon'd to meet October the 6th. And all this was done at Westminster, September the 30th, Six Days before the Clergy of this Province were appointed to Assemble in their Synod at Pauls, and where they could not have assembled then, by Virtue of their First Summons, had that depended on the concurrent Summons of the Parliament, that Parliament being Dissolv'd.

It is plain then that the Record is against Dr. A's new Pretensions: Nor are his own Principles any less. The Convocation Clergy were not (he tells us) a proper Estate of Parliament. But the Estates which Commission'd these Men, were certainly, in the utmost Sense, a proper Estate of it. The Convocation Clergy were only an Extrinsical Member: ('Tis a New Term found out to Express a New Notion by;) but the Clergy here spoken of were an Intrinsical One; or they could never have met with the Other Estates at Westminster, and there have done, what in that Parliament was done by them. The Parliamentary Power of the Convocation Clergy, is limited by him to Things Spiritual; to such as concern Religion, or their Order. Whether the Deposing of Kings comes within the Compass of either of these, I must leave it to him who set the Bounds, to Interpret; as one that best knows the true Extent of Them: But I should think that to be a Matter, if not beyond the skill of a Convocation to advise in, Yet certainly of too high a Nature for their Jurisdiction to Extend to it.

But to leave this Melancholly ungrateful Subject; and proceed to the Affairs of the New King. ^{Sect. 9.} On the 6th of October the Parliament met; but the King being not yet Crown'd, it was, on the same day, adjourn'd to the Tuesday seven- ^{Dugd. Sum-} night following; the day after the Coronation. Then it Re-Assembl'd, and con- ^{monit. The same day on which the Parliament began, ^{Pryn. Regist.} the Convocation met according to ^{Par. 4. p. 455.} its Summons; but the Archbishop being Employ'd in the former, the latter was ^{"Regist.  "ners have been wont to do, to Demand a Subsidy for the King; but to thank "them for their Prayers on his Behalf: To promise them that he would not Ask "any Aid of them but in Case of an Evident Necessity; and then, he hoped,
 "they would shew themselves liberal, and kind to him. And that for himself
 "he should endeavour so to behave himself towards the Clergy, as to give them
 "Cause to love him still more, and to pray more devoutly for him.

In this Convocation¹ the Archbishop declared to the Clergy how that there were several Knights of the House of Commons who were not well affected towards them. That he chiefly fear'd their Speaker, Sir Jo. Cheney: and therefore advis'd, and desir'd, that they should so menage themselves, as not to give them any just Cause of Complaint against them. Upon this the Acts for Residence, and against Pluralities, were made.

² Upon Wednesday the 8th of October, the Archbishop and Bishops, debated by themselves separately from the other Prelates. And because it seem'd difficult to the said Archbishop and Bishops, to Assemble All the Prelates and Proctors, to draw up such Articles of Grievance, as might be fit to be Offer'd on behalf of the Clergy; He Deputed Five Persons for that Work.

At their next Meeting, October 11th; The Archbishop, Bishops, Prelates, and Proctors of the Clergy being Assembled in the Chapter-house at St. Pauls, the Archbishop, and Bishops, withdrew to the Chappel of the Blessed Virgin; and there treated together of certain Articles of what was to be Reform'd both by the King and the Pope; whose Collector they sent for to them, to be present at their Deliberation. Then they sent for the Rest of the Clergy, to Open their Grievances before them. ³ This they did, by one of their Body, Mr. Jo. Maydenbeth, who humbly, in their Names, besought the Archbishop and Bishops, to provide some seasonable Remedy therein.

The Archbishop Prorogued the Synod to the 15th of October. And because the Articles of Grievance were not yet fully finish'd, He commanded that "in the mean time, the said Proctors of the Clergy should deliberate farther upon them; and at their next Meeting, if they would, propose them fully to Them.

⁴ This was the common Method of proceeding in those times, and not peculiar to this Assembly. In the Convocation of 1402, we find much the same Course taken that was here done: "Because the Archbishop (say the Acts) thought it would be too hard a Task for the Prelats and Proctors of the Clergy to be gathered together (for drawing up their Articles of Grievance) De-mandavit eis; He Ordered them to go together in some private place, and there choose out certain fitting Persons to draw up the the said Articles. They obey'd: and so the Inferior Prelates and Proctors of the Clergy being gather'd together in the Room under the Chapter-house, chose Thirteen Persons for that Purpose: And then the Archbishop continued the Convocation from the 30th of October, to the 6th first, then to the 8th, and 10th of November; these Twelve only meeting, in the mean time, for the Purpose for which they were chosen.

But I return to our Present Convocations: What was farther done at this Meeting, or how long it continued I cannot tell. At the next Session, the Articles of Grievance were propos'd, and an Entry is made of them in the Register. But the Acts of the Synod break off here, and so leave us, for the rest, in the dark, Only the Chronicle of St. Albans tells us, that it was Agreed to Petition the King that the Course of Law in the Ecclesiastical Courts might not be hindred by Prohibitions and Writs of Quare Impedit, so that probably the Articles of Grievance being settled, were by the Archbishop and Bishops presented to the King; and this was all that was done at that Meeting.

It cannot be doubted but that here Dr. A. will look big upon Us, and tell us that this was a perfect Concurrent, Attending, Convocation. I do agree that there was a Provincial Assembly of the Clergy held at the same Time with the Parliament; but I must withal put Him in Mind too, that it was Call'd only by the Ecclesiastical Authority; and that before the Summons of the Parliament it concurr'd with, so that it could have no legal Dependence upon it. And as for the Other Province no such Convention was held in it, at least the Records of that Province have not yet afforded me any hint that there was.

In the last Convocation the King demanded no Money of the Clergy, but if the Chronicle of St. Albans may be rely'd upon, it was not long before he did it. He sent out Supplicatory Letters to all the Clergy for a Subsidy, Equal to One Tenth; and it being his first Request, the Clergy thought it necessary to Comply with it.

Upon the 9th of September, Anno 1400, another Parliament was ⁶ Summon'd to meet at York the Wednesday next before the Feast of All-Saints. But by ⁷ Other Writs Dated October the 3^d, was Prorogued to the Octaves of Hilary, and then then Order'd to meet at Westminster. It continued till the 10th of March; what It did in Matters pertaining to the Church, I shall in some measure have Occasion hereafter to Enquire into.

K. HENRY
the IVth.

About the same time that this Parliament met, the Archbishop of Canterbury Summon'd his Provincial Synod to Assemble at London for Church Affairs; And which therefore I look upon to have been properly an Ecclesiastical Council, not a State Convocation.² In the Mandate for Summoning it, we find nothing of the Affairs of the King and Kingdom; but all turns upon the Foot of Church Business. At the Opening of the Synod, the Archbishop Expounding the Causes and Affairs, for which he celebrated his Provincial Council, commonly called a Convocation of the Clergy; mentions these two; ³ "Pro Reformatione Defectuum, ac præcipue pro Inquisitione Hæreticorum. Accordingly upon these two, the chief Business of the Council terminated: ⁴ First Sautre was Sentenced and Degraded; ⁵ and by Order of the King, at the Advice of the Lay Lords in Parliament, was burnt. Then others were Conven'd, and Try'd for Heresy: After that some Constitutions were made in Matters relating to the Church: ⁶ * Against the Violators of Churches: About the Habits of Clerks, &c. There was indeed a Tenth and Half given to the King; but that we know was after done in Church Councils, as well as in State Convocations. In short, the Assembly was held by the Sole Authority of the Archbishop; And in the Other Province, no such Meeting at all appears to have been had. For all which Reasons I look upon this Synod to have been a proper Ecclesiastical Council; held only for the Convenience of the Bishops and Prelates; and the better dispatch of the Churches Affairs, at the same time that the Parliament met. And therefore shall not doubt to affirm, till I can see some Reason to change my Opinion, that whatever the last did in Fact, this Parliament sate without any Convocation, in either Province to Attend upon it.

But this Notion will not please Dr. A. he has other Uses to make of the Concurrence of these two Assemblies; and what those are I proceed to Enquire. Now the First is indeed a very strange one; namely to prove that the Convocation Clergy, upon solemn Occasions, during the Sessions of Parliament, came to the House of Lords, and Attended upon the King, together with the States of Parliament. And this he pretends ⁷ "the following Passage implies; Whereupon the King's declaring the Bishop of Normich's Pardon from the Throne, it is said "that the Archbishop with his Brethren, the Abbots, and Priors, and the Clergy "there Assembled, most humbly Kneeling, thank'd his Majesty for his Royal "Grace and Goodness. — By which whether the Convocation Clergy be meant "cannot (says He) I think well bear a doubt: It being very Improbable that "those few Inferior Clerks, who were of the King's Council, or Otherwise Call'd "up to the House of Lords should be only intended.

pag. 57, 58.

I have already taken Notice of this Instance; and shewn Dr. A. such a Defect in it, as will not easily be accounted for. The Convocation for the sake of the Parliamentary Affairs, was Prorogued by the Archbishop from January the 29th, to February the 12th. Eleven days after this Prorogation, and Three before the Clergy were to meet again; upon February the 9th this Transaction in the Parliament fell out. How could the Convocation Clergy be Call'd to the Parliament, who were under an Actual Suspension of their Assembly; and, as appears by the Acts of that Synod, met not till the day Assigned them by the Archbishop?

But who then were the Clergy of which the Roll speaks? The Record tells us, — ⁸ la Clergie illeoges esteantz, the Clergy there being, and Gives no other Character of them. At the hearing of such a Cause it cannot be doubted but that a great many Clergy-Men of all sorts; Some out of respect to the Bishop, Others for Curiosity, were present: tho' not Call'd thither, nor therefore properly Assembled there. The Lower Clergy were Premonish'd to come to that Parliament: and being Summon'd at the same time to the Archbishop's Council we cannot doubt but that a Great Part of them must have been near at hand; and ready to Attend upon the Affairs of Either, as they should be directed by the Archbishop and Bishops to do. To these, for ought we know, some Intimation may have been given, that they should appear in a Considerable Number at the hear-

⁸ Rot. Parl.

K. HENRY ^{the VIth.} ing of this Cause. However it were; all the Clergy who were there when the King thus freely forgave the Bishop of Norwich, joyn'd with the Archbishop and Bishops in thanking the King for it: But for the Clergy of the Convocations, being Assembled in the Upper House, 'tis all Dr. A's Fancy: They had nothing to do there, nor does the Roll speak one Word of their Coming thither.

In the mean time, here we see again a Separate Priviledge for the Convocation of One Province, that in which the Parliament Sate; and that such as the Clergy of the Other could never enjoy: It being impossible for the Clergy assembled in Convocation at York concurrently with the Parliament, to attend the Parliament at London, or to attend it in that Capacity, supposing they should suspend their Meeting at York; which yet it is very unlikely they should do for the sake of attending at such an inconvenient Distance.

Señ. 11.

There is yet another Use which Dr. A. makes of this Convocation and Parliament: He affirms the Convocation Clergy to be spoken of by our Rolls as Of the PARLIAMENT, and ACTING in it. And for this he brings, among Others, the following Proof. "2 Henry the IVth. c. 15. 'The Statute against the Lollards sprung from a Remonstrance made to the King, Ex parte Prælatorum & Cleri Regni sui Angliæ, in præsentì Parlamento: as the Preamble speaks. And again it is said "in the Body of it, Super quibus quidem Novitatibus & Excessibus superius Recitatis Prælati, & Clerus supradicti, ac etiam Communitates dicti Regni, in eodem Parlamento existentes dicto Domino Regi supplicaverunt." And at their Request, the King enacts Ex assensu Magnatum, & aliorum Procerum ejusdem Regni, in dicto Parlamento existentium — So that the Prelates and Barons, the Commons and Lower Clergy, are alike here said to be present in Parliament. Let us allow it: Even that alone will shew that the Clergy here spoken of were not the Clergy of the Convocation of Canterbury, but the Clergy of the Realm, Summon'd to this Great Council; and possibly (by the accident of the Archbishop's Synod; if not otherwise) present in some considerable Numbers at it.

But Will Dr. A. give me leave to ask him, why, in his report of this Case, He left the Original Roll, quoted by him in the Other instance, to recur to one of the most Unaccurate Copies, that perhaps he could have chosen of it. ³ Sir Robert Cotton had Observ'd (and that too was a Book which he had by Him when he Wrote) "that the Prints of this Order did far swerve from the Record not only in Form, but in Matter also. And this One would have thought should have been a Caution to any Ingenious Writer not to have trusted to them, Especially when the Record was at Hand to him. Shall I be excused if I say that it was Interest misled him; the Record would not come up to his Design, and therefore he was rather for a Faulty, but more pertinent Copy of it.

To set then this Matter too in its true light; The matter of Fact was this. A Petition was presented to the King ⁴ in Parliament "Ex parte (says the Roll) vestrorum humilium Oratorum Prælatorum & Cleri vestri Regni Angliæ. Who presented it we are not told; This we know that the Prælati & Clerus Regni Angliæ, were the Persons in whose Name it was presented; and those could not be the Prelates and Clergy of the Convocation of Canterbury (who alone sate with this Parliament) but must be understood of the whole Body of the Prelates and Clergy of England.

He reports it: These Words [in Præsentì Parlamento] refers not to the Prelates and Clergy, but to the Place, and Assembly in which the Petition was Presented, on their behalf; Cum Domino Regi, & ex parte Prælatorum & Clero Regni sui Angliæ in Præsentì Parlamento sit Ostensum, &c.

⁵ The Roll 11 Hen. 4. n. 9. Speaks after the same manner. It calls it L'Estatute fait l'an de vre Regne Seconde, al' Requeste des Prælats & Clergie de vre Roialme d' Engleterre.

⁶ Rot. Parl. 2 Henr. iv. num. 48. "The Petition thus framed, set forth to the King the great Encrease of those whom they there call'd Hereticks: What their Grievances were with respect to them; and what they desir'd for the Redress of them. It was all along in the Name of the Clergy as it began, no mention of the Communitates Dicti Regni, joyning with them; no Hint of their being in Eodem Parlamento Existentes: On

⁷ See his Additions pag. 57, which Dr. A's Old Proof, and ⁷ new Comment, lays all its Strefs. Having recited the Petition of the Prelates, and Clergy of the Realm; The Record goes on, to this effect; ⁸ That these Petitiones "Prælatorum & Cleri, our ⁸ Note: that according to the Record, the Prelates and Clergy first Petition "Quod nullus de Cætero — sub Gravi Pena per dictam Regiam Majestatem, ex Assensu Magnatum & aliorum Procerum in dicto Parlamento existentium ordinand. predicare præsumant, &c.

Sove-

Then it follows: "Quas quidem Petitiones Prælatorum & Cleri D. noster Rex de Consensu Magnatum & aliorum Procerum Regni sui in Præsenti Parlamento existentium concessit — Et Statuit, &c. Rot. Parl. 2 Hen. iv. num 48. As for the Words on which Dr. A. founds his Argument, they are not at all in the Roll.

"Sovereign Lord the King, by the Consent of the Great Men, and the Other K. HENRY Lords in the present Parliament, Granted, &c. This is the Sum of that Matter, the IVth. let Dr. A. now say how he will frame any Argument to his purpose upon it.

The next Year the King¹ Summon'd not his Parliament till the Munday next before the Purification of the Blessed Virgin. ^{Scct. 12. 1401.} It fate not then; but by Other Writs dated the 12th of January, was absolutely Dissolv'd. ^{1 Dugd. Summon. Parl. p. 361.}

The last Year the Archbishop of Canterbury having Assembled his Provincial Council at the same time that the Parliament was sitting; the King got a Subsidy of a Tenth and Half of them. But the Province of York had not yet been conven'd since he came to the Crown; nor had he yet obtain'd any such Grant of them. ^{2 Regist. A-rundel. Par. 1. fol. 552. b.}

To supply this Defect, no sooner was the Parliament well Risen, and the Bishops and Prelates of that Province return'd home, but the King follow'd them with a Writ for a Convocation to be Call'd before Ascension-day, and that expressly to grant a Competent Aid and Subsidy to Him. I speak the Words of the Writ; and Dr. A. must be content, whether he will or no, to bear with them. The Archbishop Obey'd as to the Substance of the Writ, tho' he Exceeded the Time of it. ^{3 Rot. Claus. 2 Hen. iv. m. 1. Dorfo. —} He called his Clergy to meet at York, the day after Corpus Christi; the beginning of June; where being assembled, they departed from Dr. A's rule; and Granted a Tenth only; tho' our Province had given a Tenth and Half before. ^{Quia sicut dare scitis ad Subsidium & Supportandum sumptuosa & immensa Onera}

— absq; Fidelium Ligeorum nostrorum Adminiculo non sufficimus nec Valemus, &c. The King Requires the Bishop to call the Clergy of his Province to Convocation; Et ipsos in hoc Parte, ex Causa prædicta, ad Subsidium in hoc Casu Competens & Necessarium, in Supportationem dictorum Onerum nobis Concedendum, id Specialius & Efficacius quo magis Sciveritis aut poteritis Sollicite inducat, &c. ^{4 Regist. Scroope Arch. Ebor. fol. 119.}

I have already observed how that the King had Summon'd his Parliament to meet at Westminster the Munday before the Purification. By Other Writs, dated the 4th of January, He required the Archbishops to Assemble their several Convocations upon Munday the first Week in Lent; What was done in our Province in pursuance hereof I cannot tell: But in the Other, I find a Convocation was held the 6 Thursday Fortnight after Easter: and was either adjourn'd to, or met again the Tuesday before the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin; the beginning of September following. ^{5 Rot. Claus. 3 Hen. iv. p. 1. m. 14. dorfo.}

The Year following another Parliament was Summon'd to meet at Westminster the Morrow after the Exaltation of the Holy Cross; September the 15th. But by Other Writs dated 8 August the 14th was Prorogued till the Morrow after Michaelmas, the last day of the same Month. ^{6 Regist. 3m. Decan. & Capit. Dunelm. fol. 4. b. 1402.}

Having thus Summon'd his Parliament, the King the Next Month issued out his Writ to 9 the Archbishop of Canterbury to Assemble his Convocation sometime before the last of September, a Fortnight after the Parliament was then intended to begin. The Archbishop Summon'd his Convocation to meet the 21st of October, three Weeks later then the King appointed, and as much after the beginning of the Parliament. In the Mandate for this Convocation the Archbishop took not the least notice of any Writ from the King; but Call'd it wholly by his Own Authority, and as it seem'd upon his Own Motion. The meaning of which I conceive was this: The Archbishop design'd now again, as at the last Parliament, to hold a proper Ecclesiastical Synod of his Province, for Church Affairs. This he knew would answer the King's End as well as a State Convocation; and therefore laying aside the Writ which he had received, He Assembled a Council about the same time that the King had order'd the Convocation; and that, as we shall see by and by, did his Business as effectually as the Other could have done it. ^{7 Dugd. Summonit. Parl. pag 362. 8 Ibid. p. 364.}

Let me for this Appeal to the 1 Mandate by which this Synod was Assembled; the best Evidence in this Case; which is thus prefac'd; "That it had been, and still was the Wish of the Archbishop to preserve the Prelates, and Clergy of his Province, from Laborious and Chargeable Vexations; and to cherish them in quiet; that so they might the more freely devote themselves to the Service of the most high, the King of Kings. But that now, the Urgent Affairs, which concern'd the State of the Universal Church, forced him this Time, almost against his Will, as well as against the Resolution he had taken up to call together the Prelates and Clergy of his Province. This is an Introduction that I suppose

suppose sufficiently bespeaks the Nature of the Assembly which the Archbishop intended to Convene. It regards not the Parliament; nor the Affairs of the Realm: It mentions no Duty Incumbent upon him to Call them; nor any Right in them to be Call'd, as often as the Great Council of the Realm was to meet. But, on the contrary; it declares the Sense which the Archbishop had of his Clergy's Charge, and Trouble; what disturbance it gave them in the proper Business of their Function, to be thus frequently Summon'd by him to his Council: but that the Affairs of the Universal Church Required him at this time to do it; and therefore he was forc'd, tho Unwilling and against his own purpose, to Summon them.

This therefore I conceive to be the true Account of this Meeting: But if Dr. A. will have it to be a Convocation, and a Convocation Attendant upon the Parliament with which it sate, I must submit; and shall only observe that all this while the Archbishop of York neither Assembled any such Synod in his Province, to wait upon this Parliament; nor seem'd at all aware of any Obligation which lay upon him to do so. But the King had Occasion for their Aid, as well as that of Our Province: And therefore the Parliament being risen November the 25th; and our Council Dissolved two days after: ² On the 12th of the next Month, he issued out his Writ to the Archbishop for the Holding of it, within the Octaves of Hilary. The Archbishop was forced to Obey: ³ so he Assembled them accordingly, January the 15th; at the time which the King had appointed.

Hitherto the Doctrine of Attendance, as far as concerns the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury, on which Dr. A. chiefly, if not alone, founds his Hypothesis, has gone on with some shew of Success: And the Parliaments of this King had some kind of Meeting, or Other, of the Clergy to sit Concurrently with Them. But this Year all went amiss; In the One Province no Convocation at all; in the Other, One at such a remote Distance from the Parliament, that it cannot be in any Wise look'd upon to have met, with any respect to it.

But tho' this Parliament met, and sate Sixty seven days, yet no Assembly of the Clergy of either Province was held during all that time, or in any wise near thereunto. In short the only Assembly of this Year, that I can meet with was, either a Council, or Convocation, held by the Archbishop's Own Authority without any Writ from the King, ⁶ October the 6th, above Three Months before the Parliament sate: in which at the earnest request of the Archbishop, a small Subsidy was granted; as by the ⁷ King's Writ for collecting it, does appear.

But tho' the Clergy had already done so much, yet the King was resolved to press them to do still more. In order whereunto by his Writ dated November the 2d. while he was yet with his Parliament at Coventry, He ordered the Archbishop of York to Call his Clergy again together. Whether the Archbishop of Canterbury had the like Writ, I am not able certainly to affirm: It is most probable that he had. ² "This himself acknowledges, that he Summon'd it at the King's Desire, and at the Earnest Instance of the Lords and Nobles; and for the Urgent Affairs of the Common Wealth, and the Profit of the Church and Realm.

cui multoties cogimur invitari pro Varietate temporum & urgentibus Ecclesie & Regni negotiis, cum Prelatis & Clero nostra Prov. Communem habere Tractatum. Instans enim Reipubl. magna Necessitas, Eorundemq; Ecclesie & Regni Anglie Spectata Utilitas, quas super Agend & Tractand. in Communi ad Presens versari Credimus; Precium etiam Domini nostri Regis, ac Procerum & Nobilium dicti Regni Anglie excitatio & instantia, inevitabiliter Nos impellunt, Prelatos & Clerum nostra Provincie antedictae in proximo Convocare.

It is methinks a wonderful thing, that if our Convocations had been oblig'd, as Dr. A. pretends, to Assemble of Right, whenever the Parliament met; among so many various Reasons as our Archbishops have given in their Mandates, and Excuses as they have made, for their frequent Assembling of them; it should never come into their Minds to Alledge this for One; which, upon this Supposition, would have been of more weight than all the rest; That the King having Summon'd his Parliament, the Clergy were, by the Rules of our Constitution, to be Assembled of course together with it; in Pursuance of their great Right, Power, and Privilege, of Attending upon it. Yet of this in all my Search, I have not met with so much as One single Instance; if Dr. A. has been more fortunate, He will I hope Favour the World with his Discoveries in this Particular.

The Parliament sate at Coventry, October the 6th, and rose November the 14th. On the 24th of the same November our Convocation met: and after four days sitting, Granted to the King a Tenth and Half Tenth: beyond what it had given the May before. The Clergy of York came not together till the 11th of December, and then, to the Confusion of Dr. A's Pretensions, they Granted a Tenth only, notwithstanding the Generous Example which our Province had set them; and which this Author would make us believe they were Oblig'd to follow.

After the large Supplies which both the Clergy and Laity had granted to the King the last Year, we ought not to wonder, if we find neither Convocation nor Parliament, called upon for some time to renew their Grants. It was towards the latter end of the Year 1405: before the King issued out any Writs for either of those Assemblies: And then he Summon'd a new Parliament to sit at Coventry February the 15th. This he soon Adjourn'd by other Writs from Coventry to Gloucester, upon the same day. And by third Precepts changed both place and time, and appointed it to sit at Westminster the first Munday in Lent, which was that Year the 1st of March.

Being thus Assembled, it continued to sit till the 7 Third of April; and then was Adjourn'd to the 25th of that Month; till the Solemn Feast of Easter was over. On the 25th of April it resum'd its Sessions, and continued to 8 June the 19th. Then it was again Adjourn'd to October the 25th; when it met and sate to December the 22d; and so was Dissolv'd.

Here then we have a long, and a Remarkable Parliament; Held at three several Sessions; and twice Adjourn'd. If by our Constitution, the Convocations were then thought to have been a Necessary Attendant upon the Great Councils; we cannot doubt but that they must have more or less been held with this Parliament, throughout this whole Year. We cannot suppose but that the King, the Clergy, the Lords, and Commons, must needs have known what was Essential to the Form of the English Government, in their Own times, as well as any little Pretender to Antiquity now, under the Disadvantage of Three Hundred Years Distance. If therefore neither the King did then Call the Clergy to Attend the Parliament; nor the Lords and Commons require their Attendance; nor the Clergy themselves complain (as some now a-days do) that they were not Obliged to Attend; nor do any Marks occur from whence we have but any Colour of a Reason to believe that they had any such Notions; we ought, I think, without all doubt to conclude, that these are only the late Inventions of a Modern Writer; not the settled Constitutions of former times.

And first; It is remarkable that tho' this Parliament was first called in December; and its last Appointment fixt to the time at which it met, March the 1st, yet the King issued not out any ¹ Writs for the Two Convocations to Assemble till the 19th of March, almost three Weeks after the Parliament sate.

When these Writs were issued out, the time limited for the King for the meeting of the Convocations was within the first of May: But the first Session of this Parliament was over a Month before that, so that here could be no Attendance design'd at this time of the One upon the Other.

The Archbishop of Canterbury having received his Writ, ² appointed his Convocation to meet at London, April the 26th; three Weeks after the First Session of Parliament was Ended; and the next day after the Second was to begin. But before that time came, the Archbishop put it off still longer to the 10th of May; tho' the Parliament was then resum'd, and actually sitting. ³ On the tenth of May the Convocation met; but it met only to be Prorogued first to the 14th, then to the 17th, of the same Month. When the Archbishop coming to them, told the Clergy, that for the Business of the Parliament the Convocation must necessarily be farther Prorogued to the 21st of May; A strange Reason, as well as an Odd Proceeding; according to Dr. A's Principles that the Sitting of the Parliament, and the Affairs thereof, should be the Ground on which to Prorogue a Necessary and Essential part and Member of it.

But tho' he Prorogued the Convocation, yet he set the Lower Clergy to work in the mean time. He Order'd them to meet every day in the Interval, and to Labour about such things as needed Reformation in the Province of Canterbury; and to draw them up into Articles to be hereafter considered when they should come together.

In this State our Extrinsic part of the Parliament continued; till the 8th of June; that is till a few days before the Parliament concluded its Session: Call'd indeed by the Archbishop; but not suffered to sit; and that for fear of interrupting the Business of that Body, of which we are told it is a Member, and for whose sake it was to meet whenever the other did. ⁴ On the 8th of June some of the Members of the House of Commons were sent to the Convocation to represent to them the King's Needs, and the Inability of his Lay Subjects alone to relieve them; and thereupon to desire their help in that particular. The Clergy complied, and Granted a Subsidy, and a Tenth; and so the Convocation was Ended, June the 18th, the day before the Parliament was Adjourn'd. ⁵ Of this Subsidy Great Complaints were made, and that as well for fear of the Future Example, as upon the account of its present Burden. For it brought the Stipendiary Priests, and Friars Mendicants in, together with the Other Religious, who had not been wont to be tax'd before: And who justly apprehended that from henceforth they should bear an Equal Burden with the Other Clergy.

Such was the Case of the Convocation of this Province. In the Other of York, the Clergy met still later, ⁶ July the 12th, and Granted in like manner a Tenth and Subsidy to the King. They made but a short Session: The Certificatory of their Grant being dated the 18th of August: so that probably a very few days Ended the Assembly.

The Convocations having thus made their Grants, which was all the King desired of them, or needed their Assembling for; He took no farther Notice of them all that Year; tho' the Parliament again Assembled in October, and sate till Christmas; An Omission that can never be accounted for upon Dr. A's Principles. So that to put together then, in short, the whole of this Matter; of these three Long Sessions of Parliament; two were without any Convocation at all concurrent with them; and the third had only One of the Convocations Call'd, for I can hardly say, that even that Sate with it.

And now, would not one wonder, that after all this Dr. A. should tell us that the Convocation Clergy joyn'd with the Lay Commons in a Petition; December the 22d; when 'tis certain that both the Convocations were risen, the One in June, the Other in July, or at the latest the beginning of August before? ⁸ "The Commons of the Realm as well Spiritual as Temporal most humbly Pray. And these Commons

Commons were the Lower house of Convocation. But, Sir, pray shew us first that any Lower House of Convocation at all was Sitting at that time, or for some Months before; Or do not put such Glosses upon Us as being Examined, prove nothing but the Ignorance or Insincerity, with which they were made.

There may perhaps seem to be some greater shew of Reason, in the other Instance which he next alledges from this Parliament, to prove 'The Interest' (as he speaks) which the Convocation Clergy at that time had in Parliament. I shall therefore state the Case in his own Words. "The Great Deed of Entail in the 8th of Henry the IVth. by which the Crown was settled on his Heirs Male, and which was witness'd by the Great Men, and by Sir Thomas Typtot the Speaker; in behalf of the whole Body of the Commons recites; "Quod in Parlamento nostro apud Westminster 7^o die Julii Anno Regni nostri vii^o per Nos de Consensu & Avisamento omnium Prælatorum, Magnatum & Procerum, ac Cleri & Communitatis Regni nostri Angliæ fuerit statutum & ordinatum. — And proceeds to make void what had been so ordain'd in these Memorable Words; Nos igitur — ad Instantem Petitionem Eorundem Prælatorum, magnatum, Procerum, Cleri & Communitatis supradictæ, & de Eorum omnium & Singulorum Voluntate & Assensu expressis, nec non nostra & Præsentis Parliamenti nostri Auctoritate, Statutum & Ordinationem Predictam Cassamus, & Adnullamus. — Nec non ad eorundem Prælatorum, Magnatum, Procerum, Cleri, & Communitatis Prædictæ Petitionem & Rogatum, ac de Eorum Consensu concordi & Auctoritate, &c. And this too Pryn (He should have said Cotton) has Abridged in his way without taking notice of these Passages which are so Material and Instructive. The Original Record with all its appendant Seals intire (tho the Deed it self be cancell'd) is preserved still in the Cottonian Library; and Affords a Manifest Proof of the Interest which the CONVOCATION CLERGY, at that time, had in Parliament. For it would be RIDICULOUS to imagine that by CLERGY in this Instrument, thus plac'd between the Lords, and Lay Commons, Any other than the CONVOCATION-CLERGY are intended.

These are Dr. Atterbury's Words; and in Answer to them, I do affirm that the CLERGY spoken of in that Record were not, nor could have been, the CONVOCATION-CLERGY, but the CLERGY Called by the Premunientes to Parliament; and Constituting with the Prelates the whole Ecclesiastical Estate of it. For

1st. Dr. A. himself allows that the Clergy in this Affair, acted as a part of the Legislative Body in Parliament. He censures a * Great Person, for asserting that the 21 of Richard the II^d was the only Time in which the Clergy were mentioned as bearing a Share in the Legislative Power. "And in Answer to his Assertion replies: "I must beg leave to believe the Records before him: One of which [the Instrument of Succession in Henry the IVth's time] has been already produc'd. And his Lordship upon a View of the Words cannot I dare say, doubt whether the CLERGY were in that Instance allow'd a Share in the Legislative Power; for the Succession is said to be settled not only with their CONSENT, but by their AUTHORITY. I do agree with Dr. A. The Clergy in this Case did certainly Act as a part of the Legislative, with the Lords and Commons in Parliament; But then for that very Reason I do Affirm that the Clergy so acting must have been the Parliamentary, not the Convocation Clergy; which he himself at the beginning of that Chapter acknowledged "to be no part of the Civil Legislature, nor to be concern'd, directly in the Great Affairs of State transacted in Parliament: as the Clergy here spoken of Apparently were.

But 2^{dly}. If the Clergy mention'd in this Record were the Convocation Clergy, they must have been the Clergy of the Convocation of Canterbury only: For the Convocation of York met not with any of the Three Sessions of this Parliament, but in the Interval between the 2^d and 3^d, as I have shewn before. Which being so I shall leave it to Dr. A. to judge what a strange Construction must be put upon this Record, after his way of Interpretation; that the Entail of the Crown was made by the Authority of the Prelats, Lords; Convocation of Canterbury, and Commons of the Realm of England, in Parliament Assembled.

Yet farther: 3^{dly}. By the Acts of this Convocation it appears that the Clergy were not Sitting, but under an Actual Prorogation, at the Time that the first Entail here spoken of was made; June 7th. And employ'd by the Archbishop upon other Business; namely to consider of such things as needed Reformation in the

the IVth.

Church; not to come, and make Laws with the Parliament for the State. Let Dr. A. therefore consider; had the Clergy of that Convocation joyn'd in such an Act as this, cou'd we have had a large Diary still remaining upon Record of what was done by them in that Synod, and not the least hint given of so Great, and Famous a Transaction; in which were his Assertion true, they must have been in so Extraordinary a Manner concern'd?

In short; 4thly. And to have done: It is certain that the Clergy who joyn'd in the first Entail, were the very same that afterwards concurr'd in the Annulling of that, and in making the Second in its stead. Now this Second Entail was made in the Third Session of this Parliament, a Fortnight after Michaelmas: But the Convocation which met with the Preceding Session, was Dissolv'd the 18th of June before; and not Resummon'd to meet with this Parliament, at the time when the Entail, produc'd by Dr. A. was finished. The Clergy therefore mention'd in that Record could not be, in this last Instance, the Convocation-Clergy, because that at that time no Convocation was sitting in either Province. And for the same Reason neither were they the Convocation-Clergy before; because the Record expressly says, they were the same Clergy that Concurr'd in both; Eorundum Prelatorum — Cleri, &c. viz. The National Body of the Clergy Summon'd to Parliament; and making up with the Prelates, the Estate of the Clergy there.

It is certain then that Dr. A. is utterly out in his Application of this Record: Give me leave to add that he is no less in his Censure too upon the industrious Mr. Prynne for the Abridgment of it. And I appeal to his own Conscience whether he did not know that a Learned Man Publish'd the Work of Another, not his own Performance: And that the reputed, if not real Abridger of those Records, was the Honourable Sir Robert Cotton; from whose Treasury he drew this Remark, had he known how to make a Right Use of it. For that very Reason, if for no Other, He should have spar'd his Censure at this time: To pass it on that Worthy Person, who was chiefly concern'd, was too odious, even for Dr. A. himself to appear openly in it. To stab him thro' Mr. Prynne's Sides, only added the Crime of Falseness, in Condemning an Innocent Person, for another's Performance, but did not at all Shelter the Memory of Sir Robert Cotton; whose Inscription the Book Carries, and whom therefore every body must know was the Person aim'd at, tho' under another's Name.

While this Parliament was Sitting, the Archbishop of Canterbury at the instant Desire of the King, and his Lords, Summon'd ⁶ a Provincial Council to meet at Oxford. The Occasion of it was the Encrease of Heresy, of which the Archbishop made a large recital in the Preface to his Letters Mandatory for the Assembling of it. The Place he chose for its sitting was Oxford; because of the Assistance they might there have at hand, of the Learned Men of that University.
